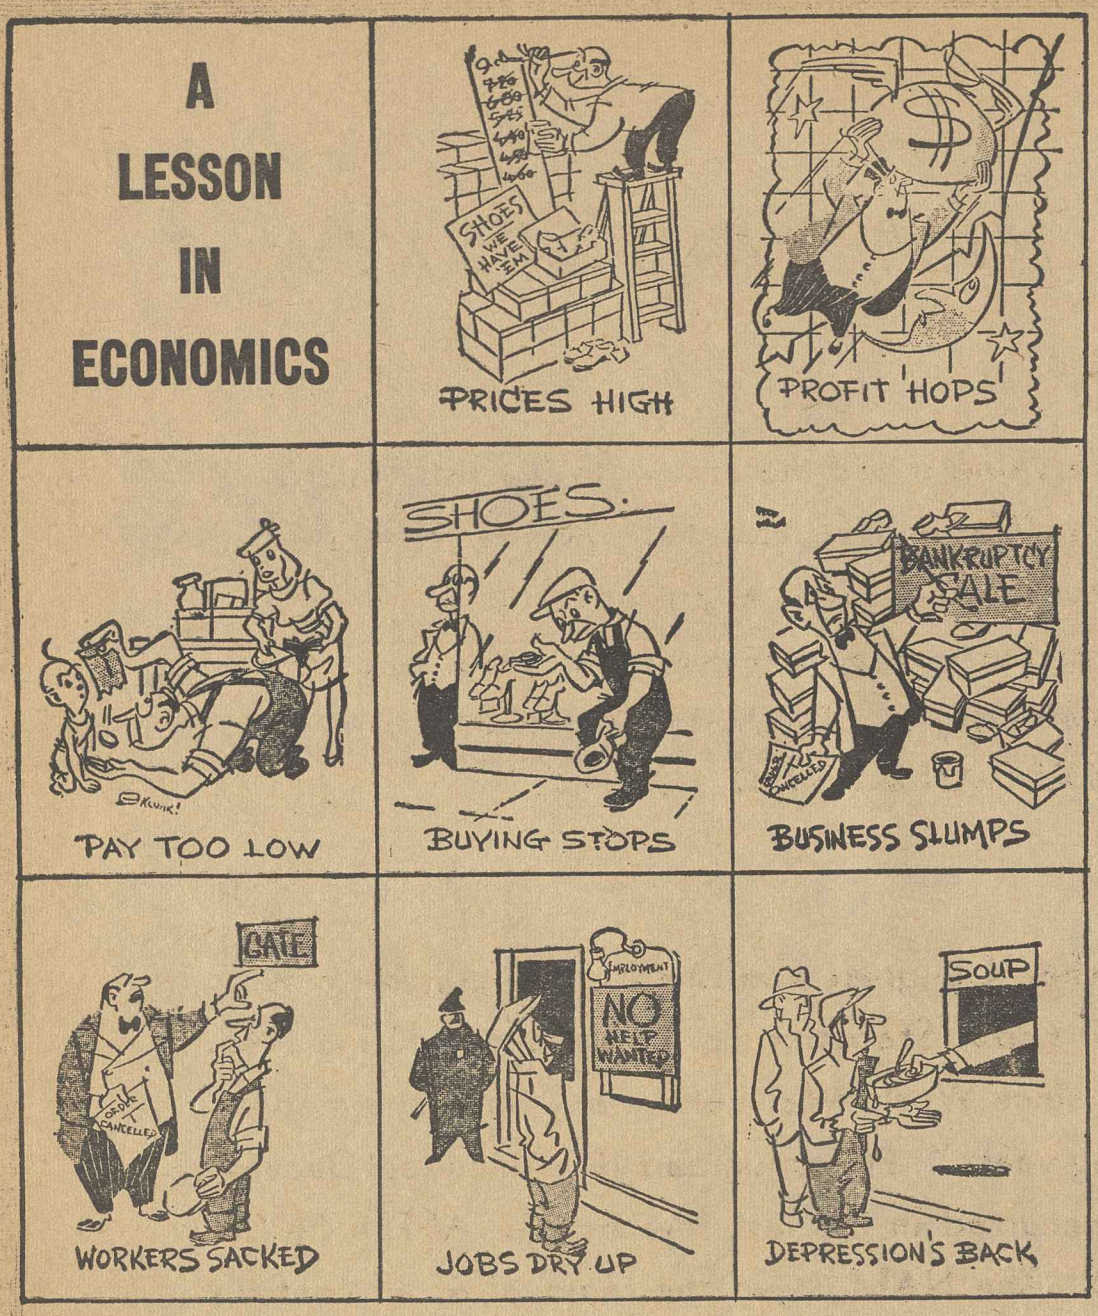
The clipping reproduced above is from one of Big Business' largest house organs. It is the direct opposite of propaganda put out by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers. The NAM says: "The present situation gives no assurance whatever that present levels of profits will continue." The NAM declares that workers are getting enough money and that the problem of the rising cost of living "is not to be solved by distributing the profits of corporations among the wage earners and thereby destroying the nation's productive system." For more about the NAM, see pages 2, 3 and 4.



EVEN BIGGER PROFITS!

IF you've been reading too many front - page stories about the sad, sad story of American industry—practically in bankruptcy, making no profits, unable to pay higher wages—then dry your eyes and turn to the back of your paper.

You'll feel better right away. It looks as though profits will go on and on.

Or better yet, make a habit of reading the Wall Street Journal.

In a January 2 industry-by-industry survey, the Journal finds that things are really in pretty decent shape after all. Here's what it looks like to the New York financial publication:

Automobile production will go up to half-a-million cars a month, the business paper says, and it will continue to be a "seller's market." Demand for electrical equipment will be more than the industry can handle, with General Electric and Westinghouse holding right now a backlog of 1.6 billion dollars worth of orders. The building industry anticipates its busiest year in history.

The petroleum industry enters 1947 with an estimated demand for its products 4% higher than in 1946 and 26% higher than in 1941. Demand for farm equipment is so heavy that dealers can't keep new machinery on their floors.

On the other hand, the Journal warns readers that that old devil "competition" may begin to show his nose again, since "distortions" in prices are taking their effects. It points to the table radio situation ($10-$15 prewar; $25-$40 now) as one of many where prices may tumble as a result of too-steep increases.

EVIDENCE to support the Journal's optimism comes from many sources.

The Dept. of Commerce notes that "business activity, sales and profits" in 1946 were above the best pre-war years. Interestingly enough, the Department ascribes the big price increases not to wage increases—as business propagandists would have you believe—but to "extraordinary demand relative to available supplies."

The United Press, in a year-end summary, reported that a record-smashing four billion dollars' worth of dividends was paid out by American corporations during the year just ended. The coupon-clippers' take went out 125 million dollars ahead of 1945, and topped the previous record year of 1941 by over 50 millions.

The Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Bank found that third-quarter profits, after taxes, for 629 industrial corporations were $676 million. At that rate for the entire year, it would surpass even the previous record year of 1941, when the same 629 firms reported net earnings of over $2.1 billion.

John Small, retired head of the Civilian Production Administration, noted that industrial production has been "at least 50%" above the pre-war level and has "climbed steadily to new peacetime highs month after month."

George Addes, UAW-CIO secretary-treasurer, bore out the optimistic picture with a report of the UAW research department. If the industry granted a 25% wage increase and maintained prices at present levels, it should be able to rake in profits of one billion, 350 million dollars, the report indicated.

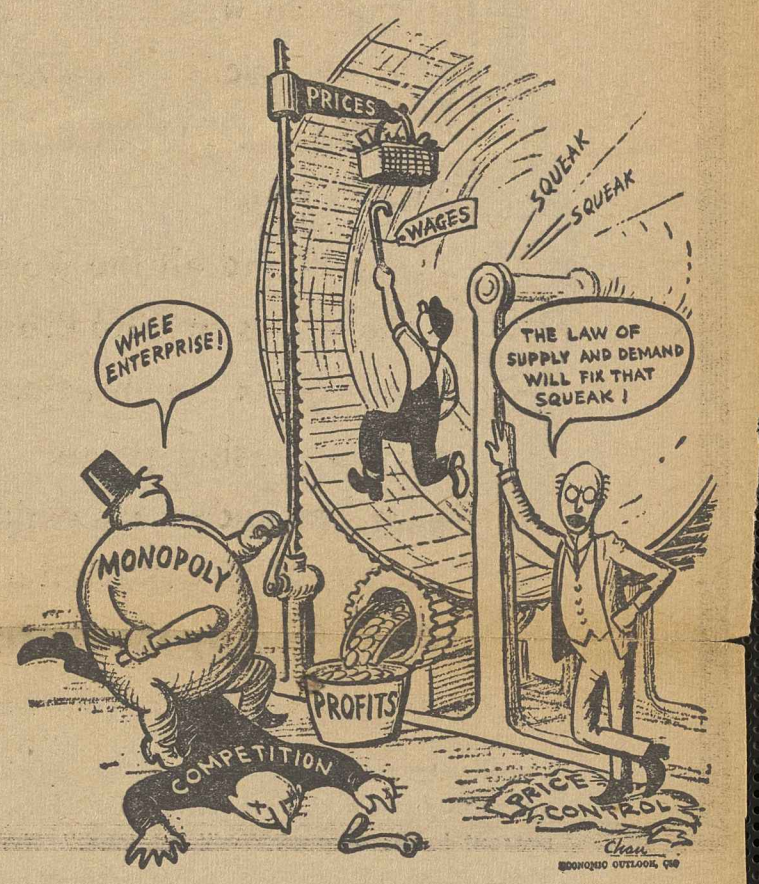
Family Fortunes

Family of 3 Gets by On $74.50 Salary With Aid of Rent-Free Home

Husband Saves by Giving Up Camera Hobby; Margarine Replaces Butter on Table

His Wife Is Also Landlady

Even $74.50 a week isn't enough pay to meet rising prices! The admission came this week from—of all places—the Wall Street Journal, which has been running a series of stories about how Mr. and Mrs. America budget. The Journal's $74.50-a-week man was Mr. K., a Pittsburgh newspaper reporter, with two dependents and rent-free lodging. He has one bright hope for higher pay, the Journal coyly adds—"he is a member of a union which is negotiating for a pay increase"!



Cop Looks the Other Way

ANTI-TRUST WORK LAX

GOVERNMENT enforcement of the 50-year-old Sherman Anti-trust Act was "until recently . . . largely a matter of a policeman looking the other way."

That was one of the conclusions reached in a staff report this week to the Monopoly Subcommittee of the House Committee on Small Business.

The report pointed out that only 200 of the largest nonfinancial corporations own over half of the assets of all nonfinancial corporations in the U. S.

This concentration of power, the report added, "increases the severity of recurring depression."

The report said that huge expenditures of money for public works to provide employment during recessions might better be channelled into anti-trust activity designed to help lessen their impact.

CALLING for a uniform policy toward anti-trust enforcement and more centralized control of the work, the report stated:

"Those who claim that big business, if not interfered with by government, will always maintain a competitive enterprise economy are being just as unrealistic as those small business proponents who would ignore the fact that in most of the key industries size UP TO A POINT is nescessary for efficient operation."

The report stated that in some government agencies there is not only lack of interest in fighting monopoly, but there actually are policies which promote its growth.

"The pressuge against bringing monopoly suits which strike at the roots of the power of great corporations is obviously tremendous," the report said:

"The weakness of anti-trust enforcement is illustrated not only by the lack of an effective program against concentration, but also by the failure to have a systematic follow-up to determine the ecomonic results of anti-trust activities.

"Without a systematic follow-up, there is no assurance that the objectives of the legal action have ben attained, or that they have not been circumvented at some later date."

The report urged Congressional appropriation of more funds for anti-trust enforcement, and the appointment of committees to take responsibility for the work.

Recomended legislation would tighten laws that check mergers of businesses and would provide higher penalties for violations—"for example, twice the monopoly profits."

"This," the report said, "would remove the present oportunity to profit from continuous and deliberate violation of the anti-trust laws."

Reporters 'Bite' Economist

WHEN newspaper reporters "bite" economists hired by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, it's news.

That's what happened in Washington this week when NAM hirling Ralph Robey attempted to counteract the Robert R. Nathan wage report at a free-drink-and-lunch press conference at the fashionable Carlton Hotel.

Robey, who once served as economic adviser to ex-presidential hopeful Alf Landon, used lantern slides to tell the NAM story of how business couldn't afford to pay higher wages.

He admitted that the average wage earner is getting just $1.60 more a week than the "break even" income of $44.23 which is reported by the Bureau of Labor Statistics as necessary for a minimum standard of living.

But the worker's problem of meeting the rising cost of living, Robey asserted, "is not to be solved by distributing the profits of corporations among the wage earners and thereby destroying the nation's productive system."

Reporters asked Robey how his theory of meeting the problem by a reduction of prices would work. They pointed out that prices have risen sharply since the NAM was successful in influencing Congress to wipe out price control.

Robey squirmed and said he believed that prices will fall within six months, but admitted that he did not think "organized" consumer resistance and buyers' strikes would be particularly helpful in starting the trend. He said he did not believe the NAM would support such activity.

Robey went on record in favor of "price control by the housewife." Reporters said it hasn't worked.

FACTS vs. NAM PROPAGANDA

LAST FEBRUARY . . .

The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers said it had the answer to the nation's economic ills. In a full page ad in the Washington Star Feb. 18, the NAM said: "Remove price controls on manufactured goods and production will step up fast. Goods will then pour into the market and, within a reasonable time, prices will adjust themselves naturally . . . This is the way you can get the goods you want AT PRICES YOU CAN AFFORD TO PAY."

BUT . . .

What happened to prices when Congress abolished price controls? According to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics, "price advances during 1946 were greater than in any year since World War I and many times the moderate rises of the three preceding years." Prices jumped 18% since last December — most of the 18% rise occurred in the last few months AFTER PRICE CONTROLS WERE JUNKED. The NAM urged the removal of all controls under the slogan: "For a Better Tomorrow for Everybody."

NOW . . .

The NAM offers the nation some more "good advice." The advice is contained in an attack on the Robert R. Nathan report which warned that the U. S. faces another depression if business hoards profits and refuses to raise wages. This, says the NAM, is wrong. The NAM advises industry to "hold wages steady and thereby keep the way open for competition and buyer resistance to hold prices to proper levels." The NAM, which took the lead in the fight to wreck price control, says that "only . . . keeping the way open for lower prices . . . can serve the public!"

SO . . .

CIO — and all the working people of America — reject the NAM program. In the words of CIO Pres. Philip Murray: "There is no question of the ability of our great corporations to pay increased wages and re-fill the reservoir of our purchasing power. Corporation profits in the last three months of this year just ended are estimated to be three times higher, after taxes, than they were in 1939. When the people do not have sufficient funds to buy the products held by the profiteers, our economic machinery stalls, our prosperity vanishes, almost overnight; all our people suffer."

WHY SO ALARMED?

THERE is no doubt the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers "views with alarm" the Nathan report. It sounds almost frantic in its voluminous replies.

While the NAM cannot dispose of the facts in the Nathan report—at one point it even admits that "Mr. Nathan's statistics and his arithmetic are unassailable"—it does try to muddy the waters.

The NAM says that comparison with other base years than those chosen would produce different results—which is obvious; that estimates are made in regard to profits not yet finally reported—though these estimates correspond with those of all other reliable authorities, on the basis of the most reliable indicators; and that over-all profit figures do not reveal the varying profit positions of different industries and companies—though both Nathan and the CIO emphasized this fact.

But the NAM cannot deny that weekly wages have gone down in the last two years, while prices have risen tremendously and over-all profits after taxes are at a record high. It is these facts which make it frantic. They have a "bite" in them, and people are liable to draw conclusions.

One obvious conclusion is that wages should be raised to maintain the workers' living standards; and that profits are high enough to permit this, without further increasing prices.

The NAM's answer is that wages must be held down; or if they are raised, prices must also be raised. It goes into a cold sweat at the very idea of the workers being paid more out of super-profits.

Yet the NAM report itself expresses "worry" over maintaining present prices in view of consumer inability to pay them; and how it can therefore increase them further it does not explain.

As to the vague hopes expressed of reduced prices, if wages are not raised, skepticism is justified. The hugest price increases were made in the latter part of last year when wages were not generally being raised; and business notoriously charges the highest prices the market will bear in any case.

The NAM is scared of the facts in the Nathan report essentially because it doesn't like the idea of lowering profits a little to pay higher wages. But it needn't get so frantic. After all, a little more public consuming power never hurt business yet.

THE PEOPLE'S CHOICE

IF you don't like a lot of things Congress is going to do this year, don't just say, "Well, that's what the people voted for," and let it go at that.

If the present majority in Congress represented the considered choice of America's 91,634,472 potential voters, it might look like a tough job to change their minds.

But actually, the final figures on the 1946 elections, as compiled by the Associated Press, show that only 35,874,568 Americans voted—39% of the potential total.

Though this is more than the 34.7% vote cast in 1942, the preceding off-year election, whose results were also not so good, it represents a great decrease from the 47,976,263 votes (54% of the potential) cast in 1944, when Roosevelt and many progressives were chosen.

Of the less than 36 million voters in 1946, a substantial minority voted for defeated or elected progressives. Quite a small switch in votes would have resulted in a much more progressive Congress. And a vote as big as that of 1944 would, of course, have produced much more representative results.

As to the labor vote, it is impossible to segregate it from the rest of the vote in most cases. But in New York, where American Labor Party votes are listed separately, the results show an encouraging increase in the labor vote, despite the big decrease in Democratic votes.

The AP summary shows a total of 418,992 American Labor Party votes in 1946, as compared with 334,997 in 1942. This increase is even larger than it appears, since in 1942 the ALP included the present Liberal Party, which in 1946 recorded 118,010 votes separately.

It's none too early to start thinking of how to bring out a bigger vote next time, remembering that just a little more effort will bring very different results.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

ONCE upon a time there were two brothers, a Big Brother and a Little Brother.

When they quarreled over sharing things, their father would tell them: "Share and share alike. Always say, 'One for you and one for me.'"

But one day Big Brother decided that "one for you and one for me" might be all right, but "one for you and two for me" was better.

And because he was bigger and did the dividing, and could wallop Little Brother, he made that rule stick.

As the boys grew up, they came to take it for granted that Big Brother should always get twice as much as Little Brother.

IN THIS way, Big Brother finally got so much that the only way Little Brother could get the things he needed was to work for him and buy from him.

But Big Brother always got two dollars back for each dollar he paid. "Everything fair and square," he'd say, "one for you and two for me."

And to make sure Little Brother did think this fair and square, Big Brother hired a lot of folks to write and shout and sing:

"One for you and two for me,
That's what makes prosperity.
That's the way it's always been,
And that's the way it's got to be."

BUT ONE day, Little Brother met a man who said, "Get wise, Little Brother, organize!"

Little Brother said, "Oh, I see" (that's CIO spelled backward) and he went and asked Big Brother for more dough.

Big Brother was furious. He tried to wallop Little Brother like he used to do. But Little Brother walloped right back.

So Big Brother said: "Okay, you get more dough. But it's still one for you and two for me. For every dollar more you get, I get two dollars more for what I sell."

LITTLE BROTHER did all he could to stop Big Brother from charging more. He showed that Big Brother didn't have to. He went to Congress. He even went on a buyer's strike.

But Little Brother had to eat. So when he started getting thinner, because he couldn't buy enough at the prices which Big Brother kept on raising, he finally figured the only thing left was to ask for more dough again.

He got a good economist to gather all the facts. These showed that Big Brother had so much money he could easily pay Little Brother more without charging more for his goods (just as he could have done before)—by changing his rule to, say, "1¼ for you and 1¾ for me."

It was also shown that Big Brother couldn't raise prices much more anyhow and still sell his stuff; and that everybody would be better off if B.B. paid more, charged less and so had more cash customers.

AND WHAT did B.B. (big business, to you) say to this? Well, read the papers.

The NAM, knocking the Nathan report, says there are only two alternatives (heads I win or tails you lose): Either "hold wages steady;" or "give another round of wage increases and thereby force prices still higher . . . higher, as shown by the experience earlier this year, by just the amount of the wage increase."

That's B.B.'s "one for you and two for me"—either lowered real wages for you, record profits for me; or else, two dollars in price increases for each dollar in increased labor costs, which is what "experience earlier this year" shows.

But there's a third possibility, which the NAM deliberately ignores—a little modification of its "one for you and two for me" rule, by raising wages and lowering prices at the momentary expense of record profits—with the probable result of higher profits in the end from greater demand and greater volume of production.

AS TO the daily papers, the Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion reports that "an overwhelming majority of 89% condemns the Nathan report and Murray's demands for higher pay . . . The press seems amazed and incredulous over the demands."

The very idea of challenging the sacred principle, "One for you and two for me!"

The arguments of the big-business press are just like those of the NAM. What a coincidence!

But the Twohey Analysis detects "an element of fear underlying much of the comment." It speculates whether this may be due, among other reasons, to "belief labor has so much power it can't be stopped, belief profits may be curtailed . . ."

If just this little seed of doubt, as to the eternal inviolability of the one-for-you - and - two - for - me principle, has been implanted in the big-business breast, that's really sumpin!

Tops Since '18

PRICE RISE RECORD

THE American people have been taken for a ride on the biggest wave of price increases since World War I.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics last week reported that prices have risen an estimated 18% since December 1945. In the last six months, prices shot up 15%!

The yearly report came just 11 months after the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers had opened an all-out assault against price controls, which resulted in Congress releasing the reins on practically everything except rents.

The NAM campaign, which worked itself into a frenzy during the summer months when price control was finally abandoned, featured full-page newspaper ads pledging "a better tomorrow for everybody."

THE BLS summary of price trends during the first full year of peace showed that the 1946 upspurt in living costs was greater than for the years 1942-1946 combined. During the war years, there was a price control program and an administration determined to keep it working.

During 1946 the nation was switched over to a socalled normal, peacetime system of free enterprise economy, with the following results:

Retail prices, overall—up 18%, compared to 17% for 1942-1945 combined.

Wholesals prices, overall—up 31%, compared to 14% for 1942-1945 combined.

A breakdown of the year's price trends shows the direct tie-up between politics and prices. During the first five months, all prices rose slowly but steadily, BLS said, "to cover higher production costs or to encourage increased production. Some of these were allowed under the government's new wage-price policy to cover higher wages in such important basic industries as iron and steel and coal." The OPA has since reported that price increases in many cases more than covered costs of wage raises.

In June, as Congress debated renewal of OPA's powers and the future of price control, prices shot up more swiftly than at any other time during the year, and the top was blown off as June 30th passed with no renewal of OPA power.

From mid-June to mid-July retail prices of consumer goods and services rose 5.8%; retail food prices jumped 13.8%, the largest monthly increase on record. The meats and butter which had been held our for weeks appeared in the stores at inflation prices and helped raise the price level.

In July, while Congress still debated OPA's future, BLS said: "Wholesale prices increased 10.1% in July, 1946—the largest monthly advance since BLS began compilation of its comprehensive index in 1890."

The restoration of controls on July 25 did not stop the retail climb either in foods or other commodities. The wholesale drop brought about by OPA's taking control again was made up within six weeks, and prices soared up beyond the June-July figures.

The final stage in the 1946 story was reached as Pres. Truman succumbed to GOP and profiteer pressure and killed virtually all price control by sweeping orders in October and November. Following their issuance, BLS said: "Average prices at all levels of distribution rose to new peaks."

Liberals from practically every profession formed the new Progressive Citizens of America last week at a joint convention in N. Y. City of the Natl. Citizens PAC and the Independent Citizens Committee. Henry A. Wallace (center) talks with PCA co-chairmen, sculptor Jo Davidson (left) and Dr. Frank Kingdom.

NEW POLITICAL GROUP BACKS LABOR RIGHTS

A new political organization entered the field last week when the Progressive Citizens of America was founded at a joint national convention in New York City of the Natl. Citizens PAC and the Independent Citizens Committee of the Arts, Sciences & Professions, and several other independent groups.

Combining the strength of the many community political action groups they represented in some 21 states, the 300 delegates dedicated themselves to a "secure, abundant, democratic America with equal freedom for all."

Number one plank in PCA's detailed legislative program calls for protection and furtherance of the rights of labor.

A strong stand for full employment was voiced by the delegates in the Preamble to the Program for Political Action. "Economic depression," it said, "has in the past been hideous and costly. It was limited enough to be endured. Depression in the future will be total. It will crucify our nation and strike the world prostrate in the shadow of our defeat. The Fight for Full Employment is clearly a Fight for Life. Our generation must make that fight —and win it."

The delegates were one of the most colorful and variegated groups to attend a political convention. The corridors and meeting rooms of the Hotel Commodore, where the two-day sessions took place, were crowded with trade unionists, housewives, lawyers, veterans, actors, writers, churchmen, students, scientists, artists, doctors.

HENRY A. WALLACE, former Vice-President, told the delegates that progressives "could capture three-fourths of the country's vote if we got all-out to get it over to them."

He underscored the apparently widespread conviction that PCA, if it is to be effective, "must move into every precinct in the country to educate the people and control the political machinery."

After analyzing the position of the two major parties, the convention, in its political action program, declared that "we cannot rule out the possibility of a new political party whose fidelity to our goal can be relied upon."

Criticism of the two-party system also came from Wallace, who charged that what we have today is "a fake one-party system under the guise of a bipartisan bloc." To tne rising applause of his audience, Wallace called for an active fight by progressives to win control of the Democratic party machine and if that fails, he indicated that a third party would be the only solution.

In addition to Wallace, Fiorello LaGuardia, A. F. Whitney, president of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen, and Archibald MacLeish, American delegate to UNESCO, addressed the convention.

Whitney, pledging the support of his organization, declared:

"We, the progressive people of the nation, are volunteers in a program to save America from the clutches of fascism and to protect the churches, our institutions of learning and the rights of all of the people against the privileged few."

THE delegates, in approaching labor's problems, resolved to fight for extending and strengthening the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction act and the Wagner act, and to repeal the Smith-Connally act and defeat any measures designed to curtail the rights of labor. The convention voted to support extending the coverage of the Fair Labor Standards Act, upping the minimum wage of 75c and creating a permanent FEPC.

Elected co-chairmen of the PCA were Dr. Frank Kingdon, former chairman of NCPAC, and Jo Davidson, former chairman of the ICC. Broadway producer Herman Shumlin was named secretary and Michael Nisselsen, president of the Amalgamated Bank, treasurer.

Among the 30 vice-chairmen are CIO Pres. Philip Murray, CIO-PAC Dir. Jack Kroll, Whitney, C. B. Baldwin, former executive vice chairman of NCPAC; Hannah Dorner, former ICC executive secretary; Clark Foreman, Robert Kenny, Paul Robeson and J. Raymond Walsh.

Elected to the national board of officers are such figures as Norman Corwin, John Cromwell, Gene Kelly, Orson Welles, Frederic March, Hazel Scott, Gregory Peck, Edward G. Robinson, Moss Hart, John Hersey and Garson Kanin.

FIRESTONE PROFITS

The Firestone Tire & Rubber Co., earned a net profit of $27,682,877 in the fiscal year ending Oct. 31—more than $11 million over its previous fiscal year—according to its annual statement issued December 30.

The profits were calculated after all deductions had been paid, including $71,499,280 in taxes, $11,119,063 for depreciation and after adding $5 million to the reserve fund for contingencies.

MEXICO—LAND OF PROGRESS AND PROBLEMS

By LEN DE CAUX

(Fourth of a Series)

FLYING to Mexico City from the United States, one can glimpse some of the Mexican people's problems even before arrival.

The plane soars over seemingly endless tracts of dry, uncultivated and sparsely inhabited countryside. Aside from the smoke that rises from the industrial city of Monterey, one sees little evidence of factories and industrial communities such as dot the United States landscape.

Then, after a breath-taking climb (the altitude literally catches your breath) over magnificent mountain scenery, the traveler begins to look down on irrigation projects spread out like geometrical diagrams, to see cultivated fields and small towns and oilfields in the distance.

Finally, the plane comes to rest on the outskirts of a great modern city, with some 2½ million inhabitants. It is a beautiful city with wooded boulevards like those of Paris, with fine big office buildings, hotels and department stores, and with auto traffic to match that of any American city.

The advertising billboards and flashing electric signs that illuminate downtown Mexico City more brightly than most U. S. big towns—because the air is clearer and lighter—almost make one forget one is in a foreign city. They proclaim the wonders of Coca-Cola, Goodrich tires, General Electric, Ford, General Motors, and most other big U. S. corporations with goods to sell. Signs advertising Mexican industrial products are few and far between.

Most notable absentees from this parade of Yankee corporations are the U. S. oil companies. For Mexico some time ago decided that its rich oil resources should be the property of its people, rather than of foreign corporations. So all the gas stations and oil ads proclaim the name of PEMEX, the Mexican government oil administration.

MEXICO City is full of contrasts, between the old and the new, the rich and the poor, with little middle-class in between.

There are luxury hotels, like the Reforma, where visiting U. S. business men and movie stars pay $4 up for a single meal—four times as much as Mexico's legal daily minimum wage.

On Chapultepec Heights, there are the palatial modern homes of Mexican profiteers and politicians and rich foreigners, some of which put the fabled Hollywood residences of movie magnates in the shade.

Yet most of Mexico City's people live in slum or near-slum huts and tenements or crowded rooms, with few traces of modern conveniences. They eke out the most modest living on wages that lag far behind the inflated living costs.

The contrasts between Mexico City and the countryside are even more extreme than the city's internal contrasts. A short trip from Mexico City's modern civilization will take one centuries back in social evolution—to districts where millions of Mexican Indians live the most primitive existences—in one-room adobe huts, almost without furniture, going barefoot or wearing only home-made sandals, traveling by burro or ox-cart, and living chiefly on what food they can raise themselves or get by barter.

OPERATING in the midst of all these contrasts is Mexico's labor movement. It fights not only for better wages for the workers but also to abolish the semi-feudal conditions which hold down the living standards of all the people. It works for irrigation and modern mechanized farming; for industrialization and the development of natural resources for the benefit of the Mexican people rather than foreign exploiters; for better housing, greater social welfare and more education; and to protect and breathe life into the democratic institutions won by the Mexican Revolution.

To get a close-up on how the unions function in relation to their members' working, living and social conditions, I paid several visits to local unions and factories in Mexico City.

Among these was the COVE plant, a large factory producing uniforms and shoes for the army. It is operated as a workers' cooperative, and the employes share in the profits at the end of the year in addition to their union scale of wages. Such producers' cooperatives are comparatively common in Mexico, including large farms, bus lines and a variety of other establishments.

On the day I visited COVE, the plant was not operating and the workers were assembling in holiday mood for a parade to pay their respects to the retiring President, Avila Camacho. They were to receive their full day's wages just as if they had been working, I was informed.

I also visited the local head of the union of workers on terials, a government munitio a cooperative foundry, and th of a textile local union, repr some 1,000 workers employe privately owned textile plant, called "El Angel."

THIS textile local union is housed in a two-story building close to the plant, and I was taken at once to the secretary's office on the second floor. The local's officers were eager and proud to tell every detail of the union's activities.

They explained how wage negotiations were conducted and grievances handled. They described the various health, accident and other social insurance benefits with which the union supplements for its members the government social security.

The local's "secretary of foreign relations" was then called from the shop. He came over in his overalls, to ask about U. S. labor conditions and painstakingly to draft a letter in English, conveying his fellow-workers' greetings to CIO workers in the United States.

Next to the secretary's office was the local's "library" and reading room. Its prize exhibit was a donation from the factory owner, a complete set of the Encyclopedia Britannica, in English! No matter how few books a Mexican local union may be able to afford, it usually tries to set aside one room for a library.

The next room was devoted to sports and social activities. It contained shelves of trophies won by the local's teams in "futbol," "beisbol," "basquetbol," tennis and other sports. I was also shown pictures of other union social activities, including hiking excursions, picnics and ski-ing and other winter sports.

Further down the corridor was a large union meeting hall. In it I noticed a blackboard, with signs of reading and writing lessons on it. I was told the local conducted regular classes for its members, as part of the national campaign against illiteracy.

On the ground floor of the local's headquarters was a large entertainment room, with four billiard tables. And, fronting the street, next to the entrance, was a newly opened grocery store run by the local.

This, I was told, was part of the union's campaign against the high cost of living and the black market. Groceries are bought at wholesale rates and sold to members only, with no more than a 1% mark-up to cover the store's overhead.

The local's officers claimed this was the first union store of this kind, though consumers' cooperative stores promoted by the unions are comparatively common.

MEXICAN wages are low by U. S. standards, have lagged far behind increased living costs, and are lower throughout the country than in Mexico City. But the better organized unions have succeeded in raising their members' wages considerably above the general level.

At the abovementioned plant, the union had a minimum wage for unskilled of 6 pesos a day, as compared with the legal minimum of 4½ pesos in Mexico City. It claimed a skilled worker on piece work could make 40 pesos or more a day.

The present exchange rate is 4.85 pesos to one American dollar. So pesos may be roughly translated into dollars by dividing by five. However, outside of tourist haunts, Mexican pesos will buy more in the way of living necessities than would their equivalent in dollars in the United States.

At the munitions plant I visited, the union scale ranged from a minimum of 6½ pesos a day to a possible 35 pesos on skilled piece work. The motion picture workers' union, with a closed shop, has a scale ranging from a minimum of 10 pesos a day to as much as 40 pesos a day.

The telephone workers' union, which has one of the finest new headquarters' buildings I saw, said its scales ranged from 6 pesos a day to 1,000 pesos a month in some of the top categories. The oil workers' union quoted scales ranging from 8 to 40 pesos a day.

The ordinary run of lower-paid government clerical workers in Mexico City earn from 150 to 200 pesos a month, I was told.

Most of the unions I visited reported working hours as being eight a day and 48 a week, though the highly unionized oil workers have a 44-hour week.

THE Mexico City local union of war materials workers has a newly completed three-story headquarters building, large, modern, airy and with a beautiful auditorium. It was financed partly from the workers' dues and partly with the aid of a government subsidy.

In one of its biggest office rooms is a reminder of the many bitter life-and-death struggles fought by the Mexican workers for their union rights. It is a row of separate pictures on glass of some dozen black-clad workers — illuminated from behind by electric light—union members who were shot to death in a demonstration some years ago.

Looking out from the office windows, one saw another reminder of conditions with which Mexican labor still has to contend—an expanse of tumbledown, unsanitary, poverty-stricken shacks—a regular Hooverville.

The union officers said efforts were being made to have this section cleaned up and rebuilt under a slum clearance program, but difficulties were being encountered with the owners. They added that the union had obtained tracts of land from the government and was assisting its members to build their own homes on this land.

There is plenty of evidence of new building construction in Mexico City, but most I saw was for those of higher incomes—a big new down-town hotel, luxury homes on Chapultepec Heights, and extensive suburban apartment-house developments. Complaints are voiced here, as in the United States, that so-called low-cost housing projects have finally proved to be beyond the means of poorer citizens and have actually been occupied by the more well-to-do.

But the most frequently expressed complaint is that graft between government officials, building contractors and real estate interests has sabotaged or checkmated many fine paper plans.

GRAFT—putting the "bite" on someone is the Mexican slang for it—is one of the worst cancers in the country's economic and political life. Deep-rooted in Mexico's past, it has been fed and encouraged by foreign big-business interests that have found bribery often the easiest means of getting their way.

Evidences of conspicuous wealth on the part of politicians and profiteers lead to widespread cynicism among ordinary Mexicans. I was several times told by taxi-drivers and other chance acquaintances, for instance, that it was a good thing President Aleman had appointed several millionaires to his cabinet. "They've made about all they know what to do with," they would say, "so they won't graft as much as would some politician who still has his pile to make."

One of the most popular planks in Aleman's platform is "moralization," by which he means a campaign to clean up graft in government. His record in this regard will be closely watched by the working people.

The many stories of Mexican graft and inefficiency appearing in the reactionary United States and Mexican press should be taken with considerable doses of salt, however.

U. S. big business interests, which resent the expropriation of the oil industry, the extent of government ownership and operation and Mexican laws to protect native labor and industry against foreign exploitation, deliberately promote exaggerated and often lying propaganda along these lines, in the hope of creating richer pickings for themselves in the future.

Meanwhile, Mexican reactionaries and fascists also promote the same kind of propaganda, in an effort to discredit Mexico's democratic institutions and "New Deal" social policies.

VICENTE Lombardo Toledano, president of the Confederation of Latin American Workers (CTAL), to which nearly all the bona fide unions of Central and South America are affiliated, summarized the main aims of the CTAL in a recent statement. Some of these aims may sound strange to unionists in the industrially advanced United States. But they illustrate the kind of steps which labor in economically backward, primarily agricultural countries, subject to the influence of such wealthy and powerful neighbors as the United States, believe necessary to reach the same goals as those of U. S. labor—better wages, working conditions and living standards, and greater democratic freedom.

Latin American labor's program, said the CTAL leader, includes the maintenance and extension of democratic regimes; the elevation of the peoples' living standards; the increase of state income to expand public services; and an inexorable struggle for the political independence of the peoples of Latin America.

"The CTAL," he added, "now proposes the following measures: a basic transformation of our agriculture, with democratic land reforms; division of the big estates; farm

MILK DEAL COSTS PUBLIC $15 MILLION

NEW York consumers will have as much as $15 million grabbed out of their pocketsbooks in January because milk producers manipulated the butter market to protect their profits.

The rooking of consumers was revealed last week when butter prices tumbled 10c a pound in New York, leading a break in the rest of the country.

A bland admission came from the producers' Dairymen's League Cooperative that it had bought more than 500,000 pounds of butter to prevent a threatened market decline which would have pulled down the price of milk.

Here's how the scheme worked: The price of milk each month is based by federal marketing order on the average price of butter and skim milk during the preceding month. The January price is based on the period from Nov. 25 to Dec. 24.

In the week before Dec. 24 a broker for the Dairymen's League paid $50,000 for its butter purchase. This kept the wholesale price of butter at 84½c a pound in New York, at the same time the Chicago market was selling butter at 8c less a pound. Normally the differential between New York and Chicago butter is about 1c.

If the price of butter in New York had been allowed to decline as much as it had in Chicago, the retail price of milk for January would have gone down ½c a quart.

As soon as the January price for milk was established, the Dairymen's League withdrew its support of the butter market and prices went down. Retail prices were lowered to 80c to 82c a pound.

Independent dealers charged that the reason for the fictitious market was that the Dairymen's League found itself stuck with large inventories of storage cream which would have been affected by a drop in milk prices.

A final estimate on the deal added up this way: the Dairymen's League spent $50,000 to save its members $600,000 in milk receipts. Consumers lost $15 million, which they would have saved if milk prices went down. There is no estimate of how much consumers lost through the artificially high butter prices.

Case of the Vanishing Progressives

THE case of the vanishing progressive commentators—a whodunit that you can't hear on the airwaves—is today radio's biggest thriller.

Alibis are plentiful for the gradual disappearance from radio of any political newscaster who does not follow the line of big business. Loss of sponsor, inability to find the right time slot, economy, etc.

But the fact remains that in the past year while the corps of reactionary commentators has remained untouched, more than a score of progressives have been pushed off the air and the remaining handful are close to the brink.

Most recent victims are Johannes Steel, whose departure from WHN on Dec. 27 will end a 10-year career in radio, and Dr. Frank Kingdon, whose nightly broadcasts on the Mutual Broadcasting System's WOR ended Dec. 20.

No sponsor was the reason given in Steel's case, no good time available was the excuse for the dropping of Kingdon. Steel is seeking to finance his return to the airwaves by selling a private newsletter which he hopes may be able to sponsor his air time.

A roll call of others engulfed by radio's trend toward reaction shows the following victims: Steel, Kingdon, William S. Gailmor, Robert St. John, John Vandercook, Don Goddard, Sidney Walton, Hans Jacob, Orson Welles, Quentin Reynolds, Henry Morgenthau, Jr.

WOR, which dropped Kingdon but keeps native fascist Upton Close, Fulton Lewis, Jr., Henry J. Taylor and Gabriel Heatter, has also cut liberal Cecil Brown down to a 5-minute weekly broadcast.

Remaining are J. Raymond Walsh on WMCA, Gailmor with a weekly 15-minute program on WHN, and Raymond Gram Swing on the American Broadcasting Co. network, but all three reportedly regard their future on the airways as extremely uncertain.

THE trend on the west coast has been even more sweeping. Today there are 35 conservatives or reactionaries reaching west coast audiences. The progressive group has been whittled down to four.

One of the most popular commentators forced off the air on the west coast is Sam Balter, dropped by the Mutual network when he exposed the pro-fascist connections of its owner, Col. Robert R. McCormick of the Chicago Tribune.

Typical of the censorship slapped on west coast commentators was an order last summer by KMPC Gen. Mgr. Bob Reynolds to his newscasters never to mention FDR or Henry A. Wallace over the air.

What if Wallace dies, Reynolds was asked. "Just say 'the secretary of commerce,'" he replied.

First big storm warning for the progressives came Nov. 6, 1945, when the Wood-Rankin committee announced it would scrutinize the scripts of seven commentators with a view to holding hearings on their political views.

"The time has come to determine how far you can go with free speech," said a committee spokesman.

Although the congressional committee backed down on hearings, fearing the outcome of a public tangle with the highly vocal commentators, behind-the-scenes pressure proved effective enough.

The radio industry is out after other big game besides spokesmen for a progressive America, however. The Federal Communications Commission's mild restraining influence on radio commercialism and programming has long been the industry's main target.

GOP enemies of the FCC will join in the shooting as soon as the 80th Congress convenes. Expected are a big slash in the FCC appropriation and an investigation of the FCC blue book which sets the rules for radio licensees.

Prosperity or depression in 1947?

It's a matter of "some fateful decisions by responsible representatives of business and industry" during the coming months, according to CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey. Speaking on the final program in a series of America United Broadcasts under CIO auspices, on the NBC network, Carey added:

"The most important decision is whether or not the business interests will be willing to share their unusually high prosperity levels of profits with the consumers and with the workers.

"If they fail to do that, these present profits will operate as a clot in the whole system."

Other speakers on the forum program were Leon Keyserling of the President's Council of Economic Advisors; Asst. Sec. of Labor John Gibson; and Fred Bailey, Washington representative of the National Grange.

Keyserling, noting that the government has pretty well withdrawn from the field of economic activity, predicted that adjustments in both wages and prices must stem from the "collective bargaining process and the wise decisions of management and labor."

To Fight Dictator

WFTU ON THE AIR AGAINST FRANCO

TOP leaders of the World Federation of Trade Unions, meeting last month in Paris, moved quickly to back up labor's position in the UN Economic & Social Council, and authorized WFTU radio broadcasts to help Spanish workers break the Franco dictatorship.

A conference of research directors of important national affiliates of the world labor organization will meet in the French capital during the middle of this month to plan the WFTU's program for submission to the United Nations subsidiary.

Noting with interest the UN decision to recall all United Nations ambassadors from Madrid, the Bureau expressed belief that "efforts should be continued for the re-establishment of trade union liberty and the return to a democratic and republican regime in Spain, and to aid the Spanish people to that end."

To aid the fight against dictatorship, the WFTU authorized a series of radio broadcasts to Spanish workers, formation of a "solidarity committee" with representatives of the Spanish unions, and close contacts with the Spanish Republican Government-in-Exile.

IN a series of other actions, the WFTU made substantial progress towards creation of trade departments for the various affiliated unions of its national organizations; and lashed out at repression of unions in a number of countries.

Attending the WFTU bureau sessions were Frank Rosenblum, vice president of the world labor organization and of CIO. He was accompanied by Michael Ross, CIO director of international affairs, and by John Abt, general counsel of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

The recent meeting of the UN General Assembly gave the WFTU and three other organizations the right to propose matters for inclusion on the agenda of the Economic & Social Council, which will meet again in February of this year.

During the course of its Paris sessions, the WFTU bureau also met with a conference of 60 leaders of the international trade secretariats. The secretariats, composed primarily of European unions in each major industry, will soon enter the general framework of the World Federation.

With numerous technical problems to handle, the Bureau postponed final action on admitting the secretariats into the WFTU until its next meeting. The general feeling of the Bureau members boiled down to a belief that the WFTU trade departments should be set up individually, with perhaps the more important ones—in metal, mining and textiles—among the first to be organized.

In other actions, the WFTU:

1. Announced that a conference of African trade unions will be held at Dakar on Feb. 1.

2. Named a committee to visit the Far East, meeting in Tokyo on March 10. Willard Townsend, head of the United Transport Service Employes, has been named by Pres. Murray as the CIO delegate on the mission. Others will be Leon Jouhaux (France), Lombardo Toledano (Latin America), Chou of China, Monk of Australia and a spokesman yet to be named of the British Trades Union Congress.

3. Protested new anti-union violence in China, which has caused H. F. Chou, head of the Chinese Assn. of Labor and a WFTU executive member, to flee to Hongkong.

4. Voiced sharp criticism of the Greek government to lift the suppression of free trade unions in that country and to halt terroristic acts against union members and leaders by the government. The British labor movement will attempt to send a representative to Greece to persuade the government to change its course, and the WFTU may bring the matter before the UN.

5. Prepared to send a delegation to Iran where there have been recent reports of anti-union activity by the government, including the dissolution of the union of workers at the Anglo-Iranian Oil Co.

CIO PORTAL PAY PIONEER

By ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

CIO Vice - President and Director of Organization.

PORTAL to portal pay is a big subject today. Our members I am sure understand that it was the CIO which supported and won the first case in the Supreme Court dealing with this principle.

This was the Muscoda Local 321, Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, CIO, vs. Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. This case held that underground travel in iron ore mines constitutes work and is therefore compensable under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The first case we have on record applying this principle to surface workers was the case of the Intl. Woodworkers of America, CIO, who in 1944 successfully established by agreement that time spent in travel from a camp site to the working place in logging operations, is "hours worked" within the meaning of the Fair Labor Standards Act. So contrary to some peoples understanding, it was the CIO that established portal to portal pay both below ground and on the surface.

THE Mt. Clemens decision simply represents the most recent expression by the Supreme Court in another case involving a CIO Local Industrial Union, providing that travel time is time worked under the Fair Labor Standards Act. The National Office of the CIO, as in the other cases, through its Legal Dept. and otherwise rendered the fullest cooperation in all phases of this litigation, authorized that it be instituted and fully assisted in the presentation of the case.

The Organization Dept. through the regional director and the National Office played its role in having this case prosecuted. Other organizations after the victory of the CIO in the Tennessee Coal and Iron case, followed the CIO in obtaining the portal to portal pay for their membership.

In the Mt. Clemens Case, the company had consistently conducted an anti-union campaign against Local 1083, United Pottery Workers, CIO. When its employes began to organize in Aug., 1940, the company sponsored a company union and was found guilty by William B. Barton, then NLRB Trial Examiner, and directed to restore to their jobs with back pay a number of workers it had fired. It was also made to put back to work with back pay strikers who later applied for reinstatement, and was ordered to pay all of them from the time they applied for work to the day they went back to work.

The purported contract between the company and the company union, which was signed on May 7, 1941, many months after the workers had organized into the CIO, was declared invalid. This occurred in 1942, following a strike in 1941. The company as usual defied all these recommendations.

DURING the period of rearmament and war, many of the workers had gone to work elsewhere in the CIO plants. It was then that Regional Director Scholle brought to the attention of the National Office the time that these workers had been required to put in, in addition to actual time at their posts, and authority was given by the National office to have the case prosecuted on the question of portal to portal pay.

The CIO was compelled to go through all the courts before getting final and correct decision. In June, 1945, our General Counsel authorized the local attorney to take the appeal to the Supreme Court and the Natl. CIO participated in and fully assisted in the presentation of the appeal to the Supreme Court. Under this precedent beginning with the Tennesee Coal and Iron case, establishment of the principles by the IWA and now the Mt. Clemens case, workers everywhere, the CIO Unions particularly, are now suing for back portal to portal pay.

We now find such an anti-labor representative as Congressman Hoffman coming to the aid of the employers, as he always does, in order to prevent the workers from getting that which is legally and morally theirs.

Every member and representative of the CIO can rightfully feel proud of the achievement of our movement on this important matter, from which many others not affiliated with the CIO have also benefited. The nation will watch with interest the pending cases. The CIO again showed the way.

OUT 10 MONTHS TO SAVE UNION

A VITAL battle in defense of the union security has been going on at Hibbing, Minn., for more than 10 months. It is a battle being waged by 175 miners, members of the CIO Steelworkers, against the Intl. Harvester Co.

Since Feb., 1946, the miners have been out at three Intl. Harvester captive mines, the Agnew in Hibbing, the Sargent in Keewatin and the Hawkins in Nashwauk, because the company has offered them everything they want — except maintenance of membership.

The company has agreed to an 18½c hourly raise, a reciprocal checkoff and, virtually unprecedented, a 3-week vacation after 15 years of employment—a concession that would benefit 85% of Intl. Harvester workers. But the men are holding firm in defense of the safety of their union.

Steelworkers Intl. Rep. Glenn Peterson said the company was being used as a guinea pig in the campaign against union security.

"It is a move calculated to soften the union for the negotiations starting in February," he said. "If we yielded on maintenance of membership at Harvester, the same surrender would be demanded through all steel. But instead, when February rolls around and if Intl. Harvester has not settled on this issue, we'll be in there stronger than ever."

LONGSHORE AWARD 5c

Under the wage review provisions of the new Longshore agreement, longshoremen on the Pacific Coast were granted a 5 cent an hour increase effective Jan. 1, the CIO Longshoremen's & Warehousemen's Union announced at San Francisco this week.

The increase was awarded by Dr. Clark Kerr, impartial chairman for the Pacific Coast Longshore Industry, acting as arbitrator under the contract between ILWU and the Waterfront Employers' Assn. of the Pacific Coast.

Hearings took place in San Francisco before the arbitrator, after the employers had refused flatly to consider any increase whatsoever for the ILWU under their contract reopening clause.

PROTEST CHALMERS PICKET CURB

IN protest against an order of the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board limiting picketing at the struck Allis-Chalmers plant here to a maximum of 20 pickets at any one time, the CIO Auto Workers called a mass parade of cars and marchers before the plant early Jan. 7.

UAW Local 248, which entered the 248th day of its strike against the company on Jan. 1, announced it will abide by the order limiting its pickets to two at each of the 10 plant gates, but the UAW held that this does not affect any supporting action that may come from outside the local. Meanwhile, the decision will be appealed to the courts.

BRADLEY TO GET MURRAY AWARD

The Philip Murray Award for 1946 will be presented to General Omar Bradley on January 13, Irving Abramson, chairman of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee, announced this week.

CIO Pres. Murray will make the presentation to the head of the Veterans Administration at a special dinner at the Hotel Statler, Washington, D. C.

The Philip Murray Award was established by the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee to be presented, in consultation with an advisory board of distinguished citizens, to the American making the most outstanding contribution to the welfare of the veteran during the year 1946. Bradley was unanimously elected.

BLAST VIRGINIA ANTI-UNION BILLS

PRES. Charles C. Webber of the Virginia CIO Council last weekend flayed Gov. Tuck's right-to-work bill as violating the constitutional provision against involuntary servitude and as a design to guarantee the profits of the utility companies.

Appearing before the Virginia Advisory Legislative Council, the Rev. Mr. Webber also attacked Gov. Tuck's bill to outlaw the closed shop as an invitation to "chaos during the contract term," which "would eliminate the stability which it pretends to be seeking." The proposed measure, he said, would totally outlaw union security clauses.

Ernest C. Pugh, CIO Regional Director; and Boyd C. Payton, Upper South director for the CIO Textile Workers, and Eugene Cotton, assistant CIO general counsel, voiced vigorous opposition to the proposals.

PENNSYLVANIA RUN-AROUND FOR STRIKING TEACHERS

IN the bleak mining area of Coal Township, surrounding Shamokin, Penna., a drama is being enacted which typifies the economic plight of most of the nation's teachers.

Since Dec. 2, 90 teachers, members of the CIO Public Workers, have been on strike, and the schools where 2400 pupils learn the three R's have been closed. The teachers earn an average of $28.65 a week after deduction is made for their income taxes and retirement, and are asking an increase of $300 a year to keep body and soul together.

A GOOD portion of the taxable property is in coal mines on many of which the owners have refused to pay taxes. For example, there are the 800 acres that belonged to the wealthy Reading Coal & Iron Co., and on which $325,000 in taxes are owing, an accumulation of six years.

The Northumberland County Commissioners seized the 800 acres for non-payment of taxes, sold them to a Scranton concern for $30,000 with the proviso that it pay royalties on every ton of coal.

The school district's royalties from these coal lands should yield $60,000 a year; with the $24,000 already on hand in royalties, the school board has a surplus of $53,000, more than enough to meet the teachers' wage demands, according to Pres. John Mangle of the Public Workers teachers' local.

One would think that the needs of the 2400 pupils for instruction would dictate that the school board pay the teachers the additional $300. But the board has decided that the cash should go to meet bond payments, even though the money was not anticipated and is not even included in the school year's budget. After a conference with State Superintendent of Public Instruction Francis B. Haas, Asst. Attorney Gen. Rutter, an aide to Gov.-Elect James Duff, and other officials in the Martin Republican Administration, the teachers' committee went home with the feeling that the State would order the royalties applied to their salaries.

THEY were rudely awakened when they received a wire from Haas stating that he "was unable to see that anything could be gained by another meeting; although if you desire, I shall be glad to confer with you."

Haas also called on the teachers to return to their class rooms, and stated "the present unhappy condition is due in a large degree to the nonpayment of taxes levied for school purposes over a period of years," a fact which the teachers did not have to go to the State Capitol at Harrisburg to learn. Haas declared that the district should try to collect the taxes, but nothing was done by the Martin-appointed official to make the board use its available funds to pay the teachers the additional money they need to live.

The teachers did decide that something could be gained by another meeting and back to Harrisonburg they went.

They told Haas that they would stay out the entire school year if their demands were not met, and the State official said he would seek a ruling from the attorney general's office on whether the board may use the royalties to meet their demands.

EATING FOR SLENDERNESS

By HANNA SHERMAN

TO lose weight you need discipline and self control. You must train yourself to eat the foods which your body needs for health and energy and to shun those that will add those extra inches to your waistline.

Dr. Samuel Hochman, the famous endocrinologist, keeps a little card on his desk where his overweight patients cannot fail to read it. It says, "The best reducing exercise is to say 'no, thank you.'" If you're overweight and feel that you'd like to take his advice, use these magic words —no, thank you—to these foods.

First, sugar in all its disguises. That includes sweets, ice cream, mincemeat, honey, candies, syrups or soft drinks. If you must have a sweetener use saccharin. All fried foods should go on your "musn't touch" list too, along with the starchy foods such as rice, spaghetti, cereal, pancakes, dumplings, creamed foods, floury sauces, crackers, biscuits, rolls, cakes and pastries.

THE vegetables to avoid are potatoes, peas, artichokes, lima beans, corn and winter squash. There are certain fruits that should be given the go-by. They are: avocado pears, coconut, bananas, and all dried fruits, prunes, dates, figs etc. Canned fruits are taboo unless they are marked water-packed and unsweetened.

Say no to the fat meats—ham, bacon, pork, sausage, scrapple, tongue, duck, goose, and to the fat fish—salmon, sardines, mackerel, roe, caviar and tuna. Chili sauce and catsup are made with lots of sugar, so avoid them and all appetizers, including nuts, olives, and canapes.

You needn't think that a reducing diet must be pale and colorless. You can add zest to your diet with these flavorings and spices. Almond flavor, A-1 sauce, Beefsteak sauce, bouillon, chili powder, curry, gelatin, ginger, horseradish, junket tablets, kitchen bouquet, mustard, tabasco sauce, vanilla, vinegar, worcestershire sauce. Also cinnamon, salts, peppers, paprika, etc.

ALL the green herbs (fresh and and dried) and all the herb seeds are good for adding zip to your food.

Foods that you should eat daily are those high in protein value—meats, fish, eggs, cheese. To maintain good health while you're losing weight you'll need six glasses of water a day (two before breakfast), two glasses of skimmed milk, two slices of dark bread.

You should have three level teaspoons of butter or margarine a day—but never more than six including that used in cooking. And at least one green, leafy or one yellow vegetable each day is a must.

To achieve slenderness, you may have to change your food habits. But the svelte figure and better health that will result will be worth the effort.

Those First Teeth

Our public schools do a great deal to guard and to improve the dental health of their pupils. But what about the little ones who are not yet in school? Contrary to what many people think, baby teeth need to be cared for too. Be sure to take that three or four-year-old to see the dentist or to the nearest dental clinic. Also, supervise the cleaning of those first teeth twice a day. Keeping those first teeth healthy and as free from decay as possible is the best way to improve a child's chances for a fine set of second teeth.

mechanization; credit on easy terms for farmers; industrial revolution (development of modern mass-production industry); technical enrichment of the raw materials of each country; establishment of heavy industry; transformation of the transport systems."

The recent CTAL conference in Costa Rica adopted many resolutions in line with these general objectives. It also demonstrated the jealousy with which Latin American labor guards the national independence of its countries against what it regards as foreign interference or imposition, by adopting resolutions criticizing the "Clayton Plan" and the "Truman Plan;" and by vigorous denunciations of the meddling of AFL agents in Latin American labor's internal affairs, in futile attempts to split the CTAL and to start a dual movement under U. S. and AFL domination.

In what they call the "Clayton Plan"—inter-American economic and trade proposals attributed to the State Dept. official of that name—many Latin American labor critics see an attempt to break down tariff protections for their infant industries, and the danger of undue competition and domination by U. S. big business.

By the "Truman Plan" they mean the President's proposals for standardization of military equipment, training and munitions in Latin American countries along United States lines—in which the critics, remembering past episodes of "big stick" diplomacy, see the danger of U. S. imperialist domination over its weaker neighbors.

SUCH actions reflect suspicions in regard to the intentions of U. S. big business which I found widely expressed not only by Mexican unionists but also by other citizens, including the ordinary "man in the street."

The late President Roosevelt was generally regarded as a great and true friend. Henry Wallace is still a hero to the Mexican working and common people, and his picture and statements are widely featured in labor and other papers. But of President Truman and his policies, I frequently heard uncertainty, if not outright suspicion, expressed.

It was sometimes claimed that, with Roosevelt's death, his "Good Neighbor" policy had really come to an end; and that the United States had now embarked on new and different foreign policies, of which the Clayton and Truman plans were cited as examples.

But such opinions do not in any way detract from the universal eagerness of Mexicans, high and low, for the closest friendship and cooperation with the people of the United States.

Mexico needs the assistance of its wealthy neighbor for its industrial and economic development and the raising of its people's living standards. It welcomes U. S. businessmen and U. S. capital. But at the same time, it is jealous of its national independence and sovereignty. It wishes to develop industries of its own, and it seeks to protect them by provisions such as those requiring that new enterprises must be no more than 49% foreign-owned.

As an example of what happens when foreign capital owns and controls, the Mexican oil industry is sometimes cited. It is said that when this was owned by U. S. oil firms, it was operated for the maximum profit of U. S. investors rather than to supply the needs of the Mexican people. Refineries were so located as to serve the export trade primarily, to the detriment of Mexican consumers.

The Mexican oil administration is now reversing this policy and locating refineries in such a way as to supply more and cheaper oil for domestic use.

BUT, whatever reservations may be expressed in Mexico in regard to U. S. big business and the meddling of AFL leaders, I found no qualifications whatever in the confidence and openhearted friendliness demonstrated toward the CIO, both within and outside the labor movement.

Thanks to the good work of the CIO Latin American Affairs Committee, thanks to the policies of international labor cooperation associated with Pres. Philip Murray and the CIO, and thanks to the close relations established between the CIO and the CTM and CTAL, the CIO and its members are looked upon as the best kind of good neighbors—folks who seek to benefit from mutual cooperation between equals, and not to interfere or try to dominate.

Proud, independent and liberty-loving, the Mexican working and common people look with eager friendliness to the United States workers, and particularly the CIO, as natural allies in their struggle for a fuller and freer life.

They know U. S. labor has much to gain from helping raise wage and living standards south of the border, to protect its own standards, and from the increased business that will result from trade with a more prosperous neighbor. They also count on the CIO workers employed by great U. S. corporations to resist greedy and bullying attempts at exploitation abroad, just as they resist them within the United States.

The warm and friendly reception accorded to the CIO representatives everywhere in Mexico, from government to labor circles, is one of many evidences that CIO's policies of close association with other labor movements through the World Federation of Trade Unions, and directly with labor in the Latin American countries, are paying off not only for the CIO but also for the cause of international understanding and world peace and prosperity.

On Guard!

CONGRESS GOES TO WORK

OPENING session of the 80th Congress on January 3 served as a warning to every American union: "Be on guard to protect your basic rights!"

Labor legislation will be a prime order of business on the Congressional calendar.

Dominated by its Republican majority, the Congress was almost deluged with suggestions from Senators and Representatives for bills to restrict, cripple or kill free labor unions.

With so-called moderates and so-called "all-outers" among the Republicans and Democratic poll-taxers in competition for the privilege of stamping hard on American unions, defense of labor's rights becomes a number one issue on the agenda of every union in the country.

ARE the members of your union alive to the danger that confronts your organization?

Have you and your union made plans to keep your Congressman informed of your sentiments and those of other liberal groups in the community?

Is your union working closely with your international's Washington representative or legislative director to insure full support against restrictive legislation?

Does your local have a committee ready to present your viewpoints to local newspapers, radio stations, civic and political groups?

Have you let your Congressman and Senators know that you are "keeping your eye" on Congress—and especially on their activities and voting record?

THESE are questions much on the mind of the CIO Legislative Committee—headed by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan and composed of representatives of many international unions—as the 80th Congress gets under way. For without your cooperation, back home, they will be powerless to stem the anti-union tide.

Cheered on by the election returns, conservative forces in Washington are moving to "do a job" on labor. Sen. Taft of Ohio, now blossoming as a "moderate," wants anti-labor legislation passed by February 15. Sen. Ball of Minnesota has several bills—all bad—ready to drop in the hopper. Sen. Ferguson of Michigan wants labor courts—a streamlined term for compulsory arbitration.

Rep. Smith (D., Va.) has trotted out his old proposals to cut the heart out of the Wagner Act and ban the union shop. Rep. Clare Hoffman (R., Mich.) would wipe out every portal-to-portal back wage suit with a sweeping, retroactive amendment to the Wage-Hour Act. The Case Bill, vetoed last session, awaits an early vote.

CHARGE BILBO GRAFTER

SENATOR Theodore "The Man" Bilbo isn't much of a man, after all, to his colleagues in the Senate of the United States.

With the question of his seating in the upper house or subsequent removal from office a matter for debate as Congress opens, a report of the Senate Special Committee investigating the national defense program this week lays bare reports of graft, bribery, special gifts and back-door financing.

"The impropriety of Senator Bilbo's actions consists in the acceptance of gifts, services and political contributions from these same contractors whom he aided," the Senate report stated.

"The committee is unable to accept the theory that Senator Bilbo's aid to those dealing in government contracts and the benefits he received were unrelated."

On the national platform Bilbo is a militant reactionary who parades his activities in an aura of patriotism and 100% Americanism. His attacks on liberals, unions, Negroes, Jews, foreign-born and other decent elements were constant, open, pompous.

But back home in Mississippi a large proportion of "The Man's" activities were distinctly without benefit of advertising.

HERE'S what the Senate committee had to say:

"Testimony and documentary evidence . . . indicates . . . substantial benefits from war contractors.

"He accepted as gifts a Cadillac sedan, valued at $1,906.67, and house furnishings valued at $500 or more. He also allowed contractors to improve his estate at Poplarville, Miss., by constructing an artificial lake and island, a swimming pool, and by painting his home. The total cost of the foregoing improvements was at least $6,658.40."

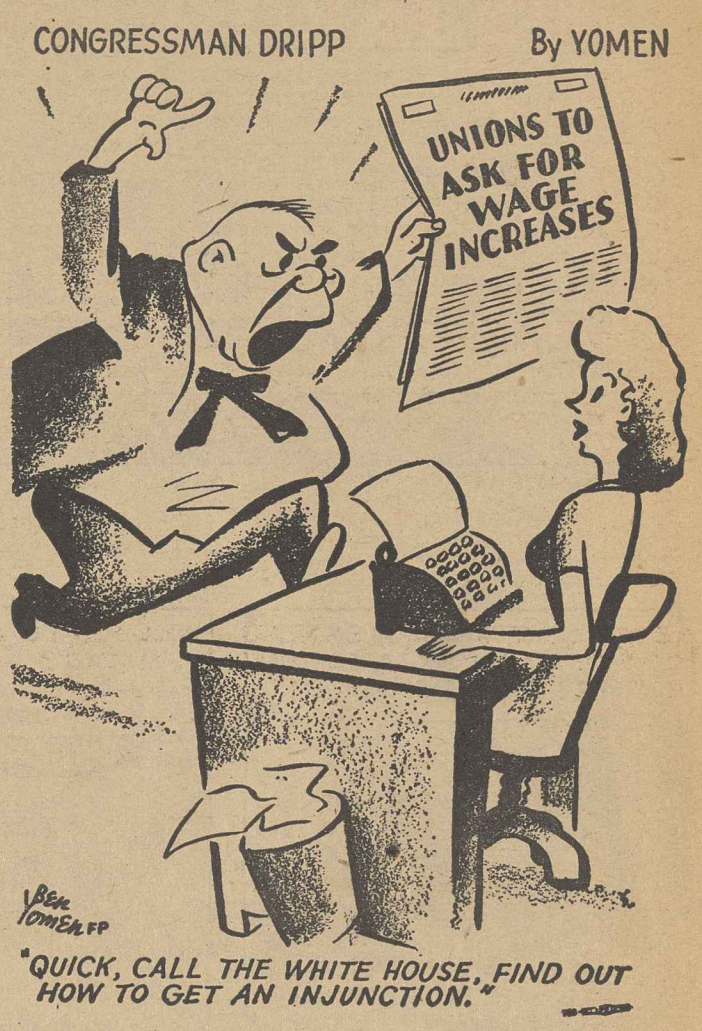
Although bills were rendered for these services, the Senate committee said they "were not bona fide transactions in the ordinary course of business, but . . . an attempted subterfuge to conceal the donation of funds in payment for services rendered to them by Senator Bilbo."

In addition, the committee found that Bilbo had collected $27,501.51 for building a church parsonage on his own land. Over $7,000 of the gifts came from war contractors with whom Bilbo had had dealings. Bilbo's action in inducing these contractors to give "charity" to a fund administered solely by Bilbo was "improper," the committee declared.

Summing up, the Senate group declared:

"The evidence presented to this committee clearly indicates that Senator Bilbo improperly used his high office as U. S. Senator for his personal gain in his dealings with war contractors."

With Republicans and Democrats moving against him, it looks as though "The Man" will no longer have the forum of the Senate for his obscene diatribes of race and class hatred. Few will mourn his loss.



THE CHALLENGE OF 1947

A DOMESTIC policy that will build a good life for the common people and a foreign policy that will yield peace were advocated last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in a New Year Day speech over the Mutual Broadcasting System.

Warning that the nation must cooperate constructively if we are to avoid another depression, Murray declared:

"When the people do not have sufficient funds to buy the products held by the profiteers, our economic machinery stalls, our prosperity vanishes, almost overnight; all our people suffer."

Full text of his speech follows:

"As we enter the first days of 1947, we must give sober, serious thought to what lies ahead for America. We stand today at a vitally important crossroad; the decision we make in the next few weeks will determine whether this country turns downhill into another major depression. If we do so, we will drag the rest of the world down with us into confusion and despair. But preferably we must catch hold of the vision of a prosperous peaceful world, and struggle to realize quickly the goal of a better life for all people.

"To make the right decisions, we must look squarely at the facts of the present situation, and face the dangers that confront us.

"Primary among those dangers is the threat of economic depression. The simple facts point urgently to the necessity of our building a high level of purchasing power if we are to maintain our present prosperity. If the level of purchasing power falls, the gears of our economic machine will lack the vital lubrication to keep it running smoothly.

"If we are to maintain purchasing power, we must raise wages. Reliable, outstanding economists have placed the spotlight on the dangers to our continued prosperity. Prices have risen drastically in the past few months. Each such rise cuts into the purchasing power of the people.

PHILIP MURRAY

"There is no question of the ability of our great corporations to pay increased wages and refill the reservoir of our purchasing power. Corporation profits in the last three months of this year just ended are estimated to be three times higher, after taxes, than they were in 1939.

"When the people do not have sufficient funds to buy the products held by the profiteers, our economic machinery stalls, our prosperity vanishes, almost overnight; all our people suffer.

"That is the very danger which we are apt to face in 1947. And it is for that reason, I submit, that the time has come for cooperative, constructive examination of our problems and for the finding of new solutions. It is imperative that we do so if our democratic civilization is to endure and develop.

"IF the new Congress attempts to set the clock back to 1932, the prospect for 1947 can be only that of strife and turmoil at home, lack of confidence in American ideals abroad. Free labor unions, responsible and devoted to the American liberal tradition, constitute our most reliable instrument for achieving higher wages and the higher purchasing power needed to keep our prosperity at its present peak.

"In promoting a land of prosperity and social stability, we shall gain the respect and admiration of other peoples in other lands. All will benefit from our wealth, our sense of social order.

"We can assist our 'one world' in many ways to help it overcome the scars of war and conflict. A progressive, intelligent policy to spur foreign trade; a willingness to help our allies economically and a policy of humitarianism free from politics; a recognition of the fact that democratic people have the right to choose their forms of government; solid support for the United Nations—all these will win the genuine support for our flag and for our ideals in every section of the globe.

"Recently I called upon the heads of other branches of organized labor to work unitedly against backward trends. Tonight I would like, in behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations, to extend that invitation to all the organizations of the community which agree with our policies and oppose reaction.

"The formation of such a democratic coalition, to protect our basic civil rights, to improve our economic welfare, to set us squarely on the road of social progress—that is the challenge of 1947."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

A TIME OF CRISIS

BY CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

THIS NATION faces a real crisis today. During the war monopoly groups tightened their hold on every major industry and on our entire national economy. As a Senate Committee recently reported, their power is such that a handful of bankers can now exert tremendous pressures on the well being of all the people.

This small group spearheaded the destruction of the national program of control of prices and living costs. Now they seek to arrogate unto them selves even more power over the living standards of the American people.

Only the labor movement has acted effectively to assert the right of the people to a decent share of the product of our national economy. With the government having capitulated on prices and profit-regulation, only labor—with its demands for wage increases—stands as a major force actively striving for a proper distribution of purchasing power.

Labor's success or failure in this struggle will determine whether our people can live in decency, our economy function freely, our nation avoid the debacle of depression and chaos.

Powerful monoply interests hope to restrict the effectiveness of labor by legislation to curb, harass—yes, even destroy—American unionism. In the midst of this gathering crisis for our Nation, these monopoly interests have adopted the tactics of tyranny everywhere and at all times.

Through their press, their reactionary radio commentators, through every means of communication available to them, industry and its spokesmen have sought to divert attention from their own unconscionable position by seeking to divert popular anger toward the organizations of the American workers.

IT is understandable that powerful corporations and their organizations hate and resist the challenge of the workers' union; but it would be tragic for our country if they succeed, with their propaganda of willful distortion, of repeated calumnies and falsehoods, in turning the public against the very organizations which truly act in the people's interest.

To cut through the tissues of fabrications, false issues, and deliberate distortions of labor's thoughts and action, I have directed the Legal Department of the CIO to prepare an analysis of the slogans of the current anti-labor campaign, and to set forth the facts and the truth. (See Page 8).

I commend it for careful reading, by the general public, by members of our organizations, and by the elected representatives of the people. It will help them better to understand the campaign against unionism, and to turn aside this attack of reaction.

For only forceful action and intelligent understanding by labor and the public as a whole can stay this vicious campaign.

But How?

PRICES MUST DROP, TRUMAN WARNS

IN two reports to the new 80th Congress, President Truman last week offered programs which in many features paralleled those suggested by organized labor during recent months. He also said that business should reduce prices.

In his Economic Report on Jan. 8, Pres. Truman and his advisors came to many of the same conclusion reached by Robert R. Nathan in his recent study for the CIO.

Like Nathan, he noted the close inter-relationship of prices, wages and profits. The President pointed with some alarm to the sharp price increases after OPA controls were lifted. He called attention to the 24% rise in wholesale prices between June and December, 1946, and to a 15% jump in the consumers' price index during the same period.

In his recommendations, the President suggested that business should reduce prices "wherever possible"—a step which has not been taken in any marked degree. He asked labor to avoid "excessive" wage demands, and added that both wage and price adjustments should be made with a regard for the individual situation.

"Since July 1946," Truman said, "there has been some further increase in wage rates, average hourly earnings, and average take-home pay, but less than the increase in prices. Thus real earnings have fallen."

And, the President said, "businesses in general is receiving exceptional profits."

While we are enjoying a high degree of prosperity, Pres. Truman said, it is necessary "to examine weaknesses that need corrections."

"Chief among the unfavorable factors is the marked decline in real purchasing power of great numbers of consumers, resulting from the large price increases in the second half of last year.

IN his "State of the Union" speech on Jan. 6 the President discussed the general problems facing the country in such fields as industrial relations, monopoly, health, civil rights and housing.

Much of the State of the Union message was devoted to management-labor relations. The President cautioned Congress to remember that "management shares with labor the responsibility for failure to reach agreements which would have averted strikes."

"For that reason, we must realize that industrial peace cannot be achieved merely by laws directed against labor unions."

Pres. Truman reiterated remarks from his message of last year when he vetoed the Case bill to point out that solution of management-labor difficulties is to be found "not only in legislation . . . but also in a program designed to remove the causes of insecurity felt by many workers in our industrial society."

The President's legislative recommendations were limited to a call for action against certain types of jurisdictional disputes and against boycotts involving inter-union disputes; to providing improved machinery for voluntary mediation or arbitration; and to urging Congress to set up a joint study committee to prepare legislative recommendations by March 15.

Monopoly practices and control of industry have grown despite a half-century of anti-trust legislation, the President noted, and he called for government assistance to help develop new, independent businesses.

PROBE BILBO CASE, CIO URGES FBI

WITH the U. S. Senate taking a back-door escape from the problems of the Bilbo case, the CIO last week expressed shock at the "compromise" worked out by leaders of both parties to avoid keeping the Mississippi bigot out of his Senatorial seat.

The compromise put the matter on ice, permitting other members of the Senate to be sworn into office and allowing Bilbo to continue drawing his salary until his case comes up at some future date. The Mississippi Senator immediately left for his home state for a mouth operation.

Left undecided was the question of whether Bilbo's call to white voters to bar Negroes from the polls during last year's Mississippi elections, and revelations of his widespread financial dealings with a variety of war contractors, were sufficient to bar him from office.

In a wire to the Dept. of Justice, Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, called upon Atty. General Tom Clark to press a thorough and impartial investigation of Bilbo's dealings.

"It is a sad comment on the greatest deliberative body in the world that it should allow its record to be besmirched by failing to take action on the facts as presented by authoritative Senate committees," Cowan said in a statement.

"Evidence presented, particularly by the Special Committee investigating the national defense program, indicates that even more shocking revelations about Senator Bilbo's war activities may be uncovered."

NAM Lobbyist Gets $28,000 A Year

SOME interesting facts about the lives of big business lobbyists turned up in the Congressional Record on the opening day of the 80th Congress.

Listed were the salaries and expense accounts of lobbyists, who were required to register under the Congressional Reorganization Act, passed last year. It was pretty obvious that scores of the big business propagandists had decided not to register.

Those who did, however, offered clear proof that monopoly industry groups consider Washington pretty important.

The Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers' chief spokesman in Washington receivews $28,000 a year, plus expenses. His assistant receives $18,000 annually.

Purcell Smith, president of the Natl. Assn. of Electric Companies, receives $65,000 a year, with about one-quarter of his time being spent on lobbying business. J. Carter Fort of the Assn. of American Railroads is also well paid for his services in the capital, getting $40,000 a year.

Of some 205 lobbyists registered, 21 are connected with CIO or CIO-affiliated unions, 12 from the railroad brotherhoods and 11 from the AFL. The average pay of the CIO Washington representatives was far below the big business figure—about $4,300 a year.

CHICAGO COUNCIL WINS AWARD

The Chicago CIO Council has been given the city's Award on Human Relations. Out of 135 nominations, eight awards were made. The Council was the only labor group so honored.

PORTAL PAY SUIT INQUIRY

THE Senate War Investigating Committee will soon be asked to look into the question of portal-to-portal back wage suits, the size of which has been a source of considerable worry to profit-swollen corporations throughout the nation.

Sen. Homer Ferguson (R. Mich.) said he would ask the committee to take up the wage cases as one of the first of the committee's activities. Ferguson claims that the Dept. of Justice has taken a position that companies should not be given the privilege of passing their defense in the cases over to the federal government.

The suits are based on court decisions allowing workers to file claims for walking time on company property or other non-productive time spent in the employer's control. According to newspaper reports, the total claims, figuring overtime rates and damages, amount to close to four billion dollars.

Meanwhile a new version of the Gwynne bill is being prepared for speedy action by the Republican-dominated Congress. The bill, which failed of passage in the final days of the last session, would apply a one-year statute of limitations to claims under the Wage-Hour Act.

Other legislative proposals being trotted out by Congressional reactionaries would apply 100% taxes to all funds received by workers under portal-to-portal pay suits, or would ban the payment of damages.

UNION-BUSTING ON CAPITOL HILL

WITH Congress scarcely a week in session, a record number of anti-labor bills have been filed in both House and Senate. Passage of even a few of these bills will be of serious consequence to all labor in America.

Most immediate danger is that of pell-mell passage of the Taft-Smith-Ball bill, a scarcely re-written version of last year's Case Bill, by the GOP-dominated Senate and House. But other bills without a definite time-table represent an equally serious menace.

Three stand-outs among these measures have attracted particular attention:

- The Ball anti-union shop bill, which would outlaw any form of union security.
- The Case bill, giving the government an absolute right to issue injunctions in labor disputes and giving individual states the unquestioned authority to outlaw union security provisions of collective bargaining agreements.
- The Margaret Smith bill, requiring labor unions to incorporate and to file financial statements with the Securities & Exchange Commission, on the same basis as profit-seeking business and brokerage firms.

THE anti-union shop bill offered by Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.) would repeal Section 8 (3) of the Wagner Act, which gives formal legal authorization to closed shop contracts. It would go much further than this, however, by definitely enforcing the regime of the open shop.

No employe, the bill proposes, would be required to join a union or remain a union member in order to hold a job.

The bill, which will delight the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, would punish with a $5,000 fine or a year in jail any person who sought to impose union membership as a condition of work.

To make the bill look neutral, Ball tacked on provisions looking towards similar illegalization of yellow-dog contracts, through which employers have sought to force workers out of the union as a condition of employment. But its principal effect would be to open the way for a giant anti-union propaganda campaign in every shop and plant with an eye to inducing—with or without pressure—workers to quit their union.

Aiming to preserve his tarnished mantle of liberalism, Ball accompanied his proposal with a pious statement that he considers union security "one of the most illiberal practices existing in American labor relations." The union shop, he added, is a form of "monopoly" which Ball—who has gained no outstanding reputation as an anti-monopolist—regards with horror.

Ball ignored a major fact in labor relations history—that the "closed shop" which many employers profess to abhor was employed by the same employers to uphold company unionism before genuine labor organizations appeared on the scene. And the CIO, in its current analysis of anti-labor legislation, points out that "union security . . . is nothing more than the established American principle that those who share in benefits should share in responsibilities."

THE invitation to return to a dark age of labor relations through injunctions was extended to American reactionaries by Rep. Francis Case (R., S. Dak.), the author of last session's outstanding anti-union bill.

Case told newspapermen his bill would permit the government to apply for strike-busting injunctions in any case involving "essential monopolized service or industry" in which the public welfare might be involved.

Since almost every industry is in a monopolized state, and the public welfare is an elastic term, passage of the Case bill would lead to widespread use of arbitrary injunction power by the government.

The new Case bill reads like a who's who of NAM anti-union proposals.

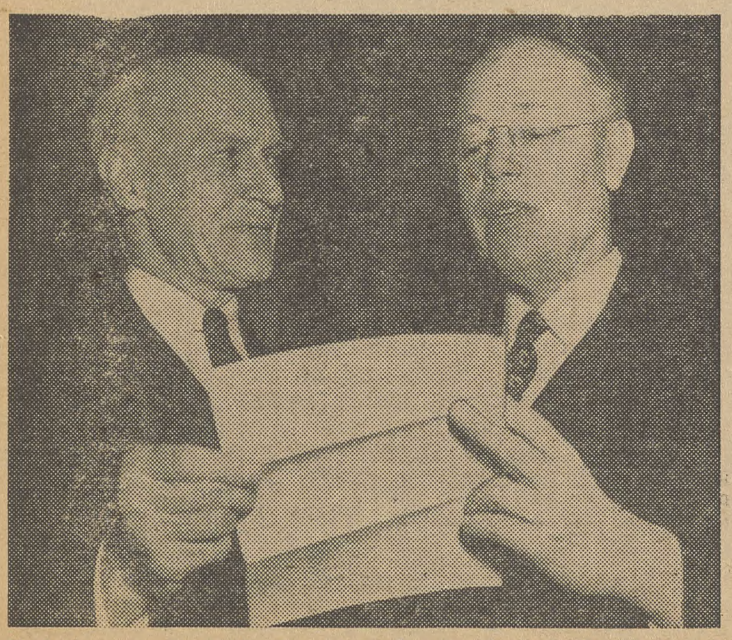
It would permit injunctions to be obtained by the attorney-general in "flagrant" cases of boycott or secondary strike, would give the various states a clear green signal for passing their own anti-labor legislation, and would make substantial changes in the Wagner Act.

Symbolic of what labor may expect. The club-like gavel is wielded by Speaker of the House Joseph W. Martin (R. Mass.).

Delaware Governor Wants Open Shop

Memo to labor: Watch state legislatures.

Sample of what's coming was the recommendation made this week by Delaware Gov. Walter W. Bacon for legislation providing an "open shop" in state agencies.



Cooked up new Case bill. Republican Senators H. A. Smith (N. J.) and R. A. Taft (O.) cooperated with Joseph Ball (R. Minn.) to introduce the 1947 version in Congress.

GOP Gag on Hearings

PLAN TO RAILROAD ANTI-LABOR BILL

REPUBLICAN leaders are making plans to railroad the anti-labor Taft-Smith-Ball bill to a vote in both houses without a hearing.

The bill (S. 55) was introduced by Sen. Taft (R. O.), Sen H. A. Smith (R. N. J.) and Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.). It appears to be the current No. 1 favorite of Taft, who now heads the important Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare.

S. 55 bears a disarming title—"a bill to provide additional facilities for the mediation of labor disputes," which hides the dangerous, badly-reasoned provisions of the measure.

The bill would bar check-off of dues payments or the establishment of health and welfare funds unless the latter were jointly managed by employer and employes. The bill would bar Wagner Act rights to all supervisory employes, would permit the filing of many new types of law suits against unions in the federal courts, would ban boycotts or suggestions of boycotts of unfair products, and would compel registration by unions with the Dept. of Labor.

The least objectionable feature of the proposal is the creation of a new federal mediation board under the Dept. of Labor. But the mediation board would have the power to step into any situation and force a 60-day cooling off period. Determination by a union to go ahead with its strike plans would lead to loss of Wagner Act rights for the length of the dispute.

THE bill is almost an exat duplicate of last year's Case bill, which failed to become law when House New Dealers rallied sufficient votes to uphold Pres. Truman's veto of the measure. But many of those pro-labor Congressmen are no longer in office.

Taft has indicated that he would like to see action on the Taft-Smith-Ball bill by mid-February at the latest. He has claimed that new hearings in committee on the bill are unnecessary since it had hearings at the last session in both House and Senate.

Taft's line of reasoning, however, is not borne out by the facts. The old Case bill never came up for hearing in the House Labor Committee at all. Case, a South Dakota Republican, introduced his bill only after the House Labor Committee had sent to the powerful Rules Committee its own proposals for fact-finding and cooling off periods.

The Rules Committee substituted the Case proposals for the Labor Committee's bill, and it came up for vote without any opportunity for interested groups to present their views.

In the Senate, the Education and Labor Committee devoted a few hearing sessions to consideration of some sections of the Case bill, but refused a huge volume of requests to be heard. It gave nothing like a full consideration to the bill.

With many new faces in Congress, substantial sections of both Houses have had no real opportunity to hear labor or other groups voice their serious objections to the provisions of the proposed law.

Not to be outdone by Senate anti-labor forces, some House leaders predicted almost immediate action on their side of the Capitol. Chairman Leo Allen (R. Ill.) of the House Rules Committee said key Representatives will meet early this week to discuss pushing an "omnibus" bill to restrict labor.

ANTI-LABOR LINEUP

Here is a brief summary of some of the key bills to curb workers' rights and harass labor unions, now awaiting action in Congress:

- The Taft-Smith-Ball bill (S. 55), a re-write of last year's Case bill.
- The Ball anti-closed shop bill.
- The new Case bill, imposing a whole new group of restrictions and substantially repealing key sections of the Wagner Act.
- The Wiley bill, outlawing portal-to-portal wage claim suits.
- The Howard K. Smith bill, a new version of a 10-year-old effort to amend the Wagner Act out of existence.
- The Margaret Smith bill, to force incorporation upon unions.
- A proposed bill by Sen. Ball to outlaw all industry-wide bargaining.

RIDING A HIGH HORSE

AMERICA'S big-business monopolists are riding high these days. With record profits in their bank accounts, with a Charlie McCarthy press voicing their every whim, they feel they have won the elections and can now ride roughshod over the rights and living standards of the working people.

The whole anti-union program of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, and nearly every other imaginable union-busting idea, is now embodied in the many anti-labor legislative proposals before Congress.

America's monopolists have never become completely reconciled to collective bargaining on more or less equal terms with their unionized employes.

They look back longingly to the days when huge fortunes were made from the exploitation of unorganized workers, when the employer was an unchallenged master who could tell his employes they must accept whatever wages and conditions he chose to offer, or go starve. And now they think they see their chance.

AMERICAN labor has had to fight long and bitterly for every right, to organize in unions, to bargain collectively for better conditions and to win some industrial democracy.

The highly organized employers fought back with every weapon at their disposal—with open shop drives, anti-labor injunctions, the lockout, state cossacks, company gunmen, labor spies, the discriminatory discharge, subservient legislatures and a controlled press.

But gradually, thanks to their own efforts and sacrifices and to the upswelling demand of the American people for more democracy, the working people won certain basic rights.

The Norris-LaGuardia Act was passed to limit the use of injunctions in labor disputes, and later the Wagner Act was passed as a charter of the workers' rights to organize and bargain collectively.

BUT WHILE labor was making these advances, and building strong unions as a result, American monopoly was making many advances of its own.

It was consolidating its control over industry and finance; was expanding its wealth and political influence; and was securing a stranglehold over press, radio, movies and other machinery for manufacturing "public opinion."

More than 500,000 small businesses were eliminated during the recent war, and 250 of the largest corporations now hold two-thirds of the country's manufacturing facilities.

The daily press has become an ever-tighter big-business monopoly, whose tone is set by a half-dozen millionaire chains controlling about two-fifths of the total daily circulation and one-half of the Sunday circulation.

AFTER the first world war, American big business launched a naked and violent union-busting open-shop drive.

But after the last war, due to the increased strength and legal rights of unions, the monopolists decided on different tactics.

Swollen with war profits, they arrogantly refused to grant adequate wage increases, rejected government awards and forced a number of big strikes.

These, and the wage increases won through them, they then used as a pretext for exorbitant price increases to raise their profits to unheard-of heights, and as material for an unbridled campaign of anti-labor propaganda.

NOW THAT the monopolists have secured the election of many subservient politicians, while labor is again compelled to move for higher wages to offset the unjustified increase in living costs, they are hoping to move in for the kill.

Their purpose is aptly summarized in CIO's new pamphlet, "The Drive Against Labor:"

"Today's anti-labor campaign is a smokescreen to conceal the most outrageous monopolistic plundering in our history. It is a flank attack on the labor movement to force it to give up its wage demands . . . The stage has once again been set for a new 'open shop' movement."

BY LEN DE CAUX

THIS is the story of Percy, the Pious Pirate.

At first, Percy was probably just as rough and tough as any pirate.

But by the time this story begins, he was a very successful pirate and getting quite respectable. He had put most of his smaller competitors out of business and built up a mass-piracy monopoly.

Instead of counting his own loot to drunken shouts of "Yo, ho, ho, and a bottle of rum," Percy now had a treasurer and bookkeepers and would just get politely "high" on rum collins and daiquiris.

He even changed the name of his enterprise from Captain Kidd & Co. to Kid The Customers, Inc.

BUT WHILE Percy was getting the piracy business better organized, his victims were also organizing to resist him.

Percy was by now too much of a big-shot to go clambering up the sides of ships, with knife in teeth. He devised more dignified tactics.

Proclaiming the policy of the "open ship," Percy had injunctions issued that his victims were not to "conspire" against him; that every vessel must keep itself "open" to his attack; and that nothing must be done to curtail the freedom of each crew member to be robbed and slaughtered individually.

In cases of resistance, Percy called on the "forces of law and order" and gave the resisters mock-trials before he made them walk the plank.

NEVERTHELESS, Percy's victims kept on organizing. They had laws passed to outlaw his injunctions, and to proclaim their right to organize and defend themselves.

So finally Percy yielded to the trend of the times. Willy-nilly, he now had to bargain and trade with folks, instead of just holding them up and saying, "If you don't like my conditions, you can always walk the plank."

In place of his old crew of cutthroats, Percy hired a crew of public relations advisers, publishers and politicians.

With their aid, he became Percy, the Pious, instead of Percy, the Pirate, and his virtues were proclaimed daily by press and radio.

BUT EVEN while Percy was thus courting Public Opinion and Political Power, his heart still yearned for the good old days.

So one day he decided to get tough with the folks from whom he made his money. Instead of bargaining, he refused point-blank to give them enough.

All they could do was to refuse to deal with him until he became more reasonable. Then Percy loudly claimed they were holding up trade. He called on Public Opinion to back him up and "do something."

Next Percy raised all his prices until people got into an awful fix for lack of the goods he monopolized, and needed more pay to buy.

NOW WAS the time for a return to the "good old days," Percy felt. He set his press agents to proclaiming the people's troubles were due to abandonment of the good old policy of the "open ship."

They denounced organized resistance to Percy the Pious as "closed ship monopoly." They said he should be free to deal with each vessel one at a time; that all ships should be required to "cool off" at anchor until attacked; and that it was "coercive" to require his victims to observe ship's discipline.

They also demanded restoration of Percy's right to issue injunctions and have them enforced, and said the right to strike Percy and his associates should be curtailed.

THE CHIEF slogan of this campaign was that the laws passed to check Percy's piracies were one-sided — that, while they proclaimed the right to organize against organized piracy and replace it with collective bargaining, they did not equally protect the privilege of piratical attack.

Of course, Percy was now much too pious to talk so bluntly about piracy. He ran full-page ads headed, "For the good of all . . .," opposing "selfish action, conceived in anger," and calling for an end to "conflict that hurts everyone."

To end conflict, Percy proposed a whole series of laws to render his future victims powerless to resist any terms he might dictate.

P.S. Percy's proposals will be found embodied in the many anti-labor bills before Congress, and answered in the new CIO pamphlet, "The Drive Against Labor."

UAW VETS TO MEET

THE CIO Auto Workers will hold a veterans' conference Jan. 30 and 31 at the Statler Hotel, Washington, D. C., to press for federal action to alleviate the housing situation for enactment of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill and other measures to benefit ex-servicemen.

On the conference agenda are a federal bonus of $3 per day for domestic service and $4 per day for foreign service, cash payment of terminal leave bonds and the lifting of the $200 ceiling on subsistence payments for veterans taking on-the-job training.

Also, an increase in the purchase price of autos bought by the U. S. for leg amputees, credit on Social Security accounts of payments based on earnings of $160 a month for each month of service, and unemployment compensation for veterans during strikes.

ATTACK LEGION

THE strategy committee of National Conference on Union Labor Legionnaires this week called on Legion members and posts to protest proposed legislation to prohibit payment of union initiation fees by veterans as a condition of employment. The conference represents trade union members of the American Legion.

The committee at a meeting in Chicago, said that the proposal was made by the Legion's executive committee despite its rejection by both the Legion's national labor relations and resolution committees.

The Legionnaires' committee pointed out that most of the CIO and AFL unions have abolished initiation fees for veterans, and that the proposal would stir up antagonism between veterans and organized labor.

At the same time the committee called for protests against the section of the Legion's housing program which asks for compulsory arbitration of management-labor disputes. The committee urged that the protests be sent to Natl. Commander Paul Griffith, Natl. Legion headquarters, Indianapolis, Ind., and to state, county and district commanders.

CHARGE BIAS

THE CIO Public Workers this week protested that James E. Miles, a Negro war veteran discharged from the Veterans Administration at Jefferson Barracks, Mo., has not been rehired despite a report of the Regional Civil Service Commission which found that his firing had been discriminatory.

The VA insists in further appealing the case, the UPW stated, although the commission found that there exists "a widespread feeling of discrimination generally in Jefferson Barracks."

HEADQUARTERS, REACTION: The N. Y. state capitol is home for Tom Dewey and his big GOP machine. But Albany community leaders heard the other side of the story on wages and profits at the State CIO community conference.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

MARK Twain once complained that nobody does anything about the weather. More recently, all sorts of people—in and out of unions—have been complaining that labor should do something about getting its message to other groups in the community. There's been lots of talk, but frequently not much action.

Last week the N. Y. State CIO Council decided to do something about it. The Council is headed by Pres. Louis Hollander.

In Albany—the state capital where presidential aspirant Tom Dewey makes his headquarters and pulls the strings that he hopes will lead him to the White House two years hence—the Empire CIO experimented with a novel type of community forum. The subject: wages, prices, profits, anti-labor legislation.

So successful was the Albany meeting that plans are already afoot to hold similar meetings in a number of New York State cities: Syracuse, Elmira, Buffalo and others.

IN ALBANY, some 100 people—CIO officials, priests and ministers, businessmen, women's club leaders, community officials—spent a couple of hours discussing the Nathan report, labor's wage demands, the 80th Congress. Nobody was selling anything except the hope that labor's views on the economics and legislation would be understood by leading people in the city.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey was on hand to present the national CIO viewpoint. "We're in a crisis," Carey told the group. "We have to make the decisions now as to whether we have depression or prosperity."

The Nathan report, he reminded his audience, was prepared for CIO in order to give the American people a fresh view of the country's balance sheet. The way the newspapers handled the story of that report, and the prominent play they gave to each petty criticism of the Nathan report, Carey indicated, show that big business doesn't want any such examination of the facts.

"Don't rely on the American press as a source of information, for it occasionally 'hides' the facts," the CIO official said. "This meeting is a substitute—a meeting for ordinary people to get the true facts. We hope that there will be other such meetings in other states, and that they will be held in time to exert some influence on the 80th Congress.

"The Eightieth Congress is hellbent on doing a job on the people," Carey charged. "I'd hate to have to ask this Congress to pass the First Amendment to the Constitution. Somebody would be sure to say that free speech is dangerous, that free assemblage will cause trouble, and that the right to petition in redress of grievances will cause an undue strain on the facilities of the Post Office Dept."

PROF. Herman Gray, of N. Y. University law school and an expert on unemployment compensation, said he wasn't a professional economist—but the Nathan report, and the idea of improving workers' wages, looked good to him.

"We have the most powerful industrial system in the world—yet there is fear," Gray asserted. "There's no discernible limit to what consumers need and want to buy, and there's no discernible limit to what we can produce to meet that demand.

"But," he said, "there's fear—fear of another depression. And our American institutions can't stand another 1929. Only stupidity, greed and blind reaction can bring a new depression."

Mrs. Grace Echols of the N. Y. State Community Assn. had some telling advice to union leaders.

"I'm the spokesman of the good people back in your community who just don't know what to think," she said. "These people have lots of questions about labor's position—and the unions haven't done a very good job of supplying them with answers.

"Get union representatives—people who are really interested—on every civic board and community group in your town," Mrs. Echols advised. "It will help you and it will help us to understand your problems."

Father Benjamin Massie, editor of America, a leading Catholic publication, told the meeting that the CIO, "by talking of profits and prices, shows it is thinking in terms of general moral principles and the general welfare.

"The fact is, a large percentage of the families in America simply are not receiving wages sufficient for the prices of today, and a wage increase is therefore morally justifed," he said.

"Certainly, I would favor a 20% price cut across the board right now, rather than new wage increases—but I know that it is impractical. The majority of businessmen will always charge all the traffic will bear."

JEROME Udell, a N. Y. clothing manufacturer, said he had a "selfish interest in the betterment" of wages, since he is convinced that prosperity depends on higher purchasing power.

"As a businessman, I don't want the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce to lobby our system out of existence," Udell said.

And Archie Wright, head of the N. Y. Dairy Farmers Union, pointed out that farmers can't be prosperous when city industrial workers can't buy their products.

TALKING IT OVER: Speakers at the N. Y. State CIO community forum. (Standing) Father Massie, Businessman Jerome Udell, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Council Sec. Harold Garno, Prof. Herman Gray and farm leader Archie Wright.

HOW COPS FIGHT CIO IN SOUTH

VIOLENCE against CIO organizers is not dead in the South. Hoping to stave off a resurgence of terrorism from which the CIO has been relatively free during its southern drive, the Textile Workers and the Auto Workers are demanding action by federal authorities in three cases of violence and intimidation against organizers.

The most flagrant case of the three occurred at Alexander City, La., where a Textile Workers' organizer testified before a NLRB examiner that city police warned him to leave town, and stood idly by despite his repeated appeals while he was beaten by company thugs.

The union is charging the Russell Mfg. Co. with Wagner Labor Act violations. The NLRB had the doors of several halls slammed on it before it decided to rent the CIO Hall at Alexander City to conduct the hearings.

This is believed to be the first case in NLRB annuals where city police were named defendents in a Labor Board complaint. Under the Civil Rights law, if the charges against them are upheld in the courts, the policemen are liable to fines of $1000 or a year in jail or both, and are also subject to a suit for damages under another section of the Federal laws.

T. C. Russell, the mayor of the town for whom the police work, is a vice-president of the Russell Co. and an uncle of Thomas D. Russell, head of the firm.

The Textile Workers this week called on Attorney Gen. Thomas Clark and Virginia's Gov. William Tuck to protect the rights of union organizers after Cree Radcliff of the TWUA had been ordered to leave South Boston, Va., Tuck's home town by a "committee" of citizens.

Clark and other Federal authorities also have before them the demand from the CIO Auto Workers for a probe of the assault of the union's Intl. Rep. James P. Harden by three thugs in Elba, Ala., during a strike against Dorrey Trailers, Inc.

At Alexandria City, TWUA organizer J. P. Mooney testified that one policemen told him to "get into his damn car and leave town" when he appealed to the officer while he was being beaten by company thugs.

Police Chief Horton came by following the assault and took him and the two company thugs to city hall, where the stooges threatened to kill him, Mooney testified.

When he called on Horton to take action against these threats, the chief replied "I told you this was going to happen if you didn't leave town".

Another witness, Hudson Murphy, a former Russell Co. employe, testified that another city policemen, Floyd Mann, advised him "to use a gun" on NLRB Attorney Purdon and Mooney. Mann paid him $22 to spy on union activity from a room opposite Mooney's hotel room, according to Murphy.

Even the scarecrow in the Philadelphia Mummers' parade on New Year's Day is impressed by the Real Record, which an attractive Newspaper Guild member is showing him. Although the publisher of the Philadelphia Record and the Camden Courier and Post, J. David Stern, succeeded in putting up a virtual radio and newspaper blackout to keep the facts of the strike against his papers from the public, the truth came out when almost a million copies of the strikers' paper, the Real Record, were distributed during the parade.

SWANSON HEADS SHOE UNION

Raymond Swanson, of the Chicago Joint Board, was declared elected president of the CIO Shoe Workers by the union's executive board this week, on the basis of ballots cast by the general executive committee. Swanson succeeds Frank J. McGrath who resigned last summer.

At the same time the executive board declared Isadore Rosenberg, of the New York Joint Council, elected national director of organization for USWA. Since McGrath's resignation, Sec.-Treas. James J. Mitchell has directed the union with the assistance of the executive board on which CIO Vice Pres. Allan Haywood has been invited to serve.

FTA 75% STRONGER

By C. W. FOWLER

MEETING on the 10th anniversary of affiliation to the CIO, the Food, Tobacco, Agricultural and Allied Workers Union will report a 75% growth in membership since 1944 at its 6th convention opening in Philadelphia, Pa., this week.

FTA-CIO, founded by a handful of bitterly exploited food and agricultural workers in Denver, Colo., in 1937, has grown to an international union with more than 100,000 workers under contract and strong organization in many of the biggest food and tobacco corporations in the country.

According to President Donald Henderson—who also marks his 10th year as leader of FTA—the union has brought over $24,000,000 in wage increases to its members and to those under contract since V-J Day, which works out to an average of 17½ cents an hour.

At the same time, the number of contracts covering year-round and seasonal workers has increased from 548 to 743, reflecting a considerable growth in extension and consolidation of gains for the workers in FTA industries.

The growth, Henderson added in his report, has been won "with a minmum of strikes," of which the six-month-long American Tobacco ("Luckies") strike was the most notable.

Much of FTA's organizing progress has been made in the course of the CIO Southern organizing drive, where the union has won 25 of 28 NLRB elections in the tobacco leafhouse industry of North Carolina, Virginia and Kentucky.

Henderson's report paid tribute to the leadership of the CIO, of Pres. Philip Murray and Southern Director Van A. Bittner, for its success in the campaign, which has put it out in front among CIO unions in numbers of elections won.

Main future task of the union, as outlined to the opening convention session, are to extend organization of the unorganized and to raise the generally substandard wages in the food, tobacco and fiber industries.

CAFETERIA WORKERS LOCKED OUT

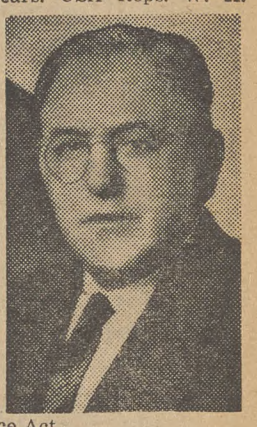
Members of Cafeteria Workers' local 471, CIO Public Workers, this week were picketing U. S. government buildings in Washington, D. C., where cafeterias are operated by Government Services, Inc., a private concern.

The union was locked out after GSI refused to extend the old contract pending negotiations for a new one. Prior to the lockout the union which asked a 20c an hour increase rejected an offer of 8c on condition that it drop all other demands.

ORGANIZING

BY ALLAN S. HAYWOOD

W. B. Taylor, CIO Reg. Dir., Louisville, Ky., reports W. E. Caldwell Co., Louisville, Ky., USA-CIO 60; Boilermakers, AFL 11. This defeated the attempted raid on CIO by Boilermakers. CIO has been the bargaining agent for the past seven years. USA Reps. W. H. Beatty and H. A. Rasmussen handled this campaign.



R. E. Engelking, CIO Field Representative, Spokane, Wash., reports: Pike Lumber, IWA-CIO 6; against 2.

Back pay totalling $800 for two members of Fisher Bomber Local 290, UAW-CIO, this week climaxed a 16-month fight by Region 2A, against the Fisher Management of General Motors, UAW Regional Director Paul E. Miley reported.

The union charged that the layoffs disregarded preferential seniority as provided in the UAW-General Motors contract for committeemen and their alternates. The Fisher management maintained that the layoff was necessitated through the re-employment of veterans under the Selective Service Act.

Director Miley stated that the two UAW members, Ernest Gaube and H. W. Binkley, had been awarded the back pay by the company in lieu of "taking their chances before the Umpire as provided for in disputes that cannot be resolved in the first three steps of the GM grievance procedure."

The management denied the Union's claim and preparations were made to submit the case to the Umpire. The case was scheduled to be heard by the Umpire Dec. 16, 1946, but was withdrawn from the docket at the last minute when the company reversed its position and agreed to pay the union's demands.

James Ritchie, CIO Reg. Dir., St. Louis, Mo., reports Atlas Powder Company Plant, Wolflake, Ill., Chemical Workers, CIO 35; no union, 16.

At 5 a. m., Jan. 6, only a few hours before 250 employes of the Trust Co. of New Jersey were ready to strike, bank officials affixed their signatures to a union contract with the CIO Office & Professional Workers.

The union's dramatic victory came after the bank, one of New Jersey's largest, with a main office at Jersey City and ten branches in Hudson County, had reneged at the last moment on signing a negotiated contract, including a union security clause.

The strike was averted only after company officials contacted union representatives at 2 a. m., Jan. 6, and agreed to sign unconditionally, granting general wage increases of $8.50 per week to all employes; establish a $32 weekly minimum salary, and a union security clause.

CIO SOUTHERN ORGANIZING CAMPAIGN

Van A. Bittner, Director, CIO Organizing Committee, reports the following election victories:

Armco Drainage & Metal Products, Ice Can Dept., Houston, USA 16; AFL 6. Armco Drainage & Metal Products, Tank Dept., Houston, USA-CIO 29; AFL 23.

Carnation Milk Co., Dadeville, Ala., CIO 9; against 2.

James J. Leary, former secretary-treasurer of the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, has been appointed CIO Regional Director for the Kansas City, Mo., area, with offices at 1311 Rialto Bldg., Kansas City, Mo.

CHALMERS LOCAL TO VOTE IN POLL

LOCAL 248 of the CIO Auto Workers which has been on strike since April 30 at the West Allis, Wis. plant of Allis-Chalmers Co. is confident that it can beat the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board at its own game.

On the petition of the company union, the board had held that an election should be held at the plant to determine the collective bargaining agent, although the UAW had been recognized for years as the representative of the workers.

The board's order was upheld this week by the Federal district court in Milwaukee, even though the UAW argued that the state board was usurping the functions of the NLRB.

Although the local is planning to appeal the court's decision to the Supreme Court if necessary, it has issued a call to its members to be prepared to vote and "wipe out the company's argument that the workers do not support the union demands."

Sure of victory, Local 248 is planning to marshal every device to get the workers to the polls on whatever date the board sets for the election.

"I'm looking for an item about our union victory."

UE ASKS 'BIG 4' PARLEY

DEMANDS for substantial wage increases as well as a broad health and welfare program will be presented to the country's four major electrical and radio manufacturing corporations by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers in forthcoming negotiations.

A two-day wage parley in N. Y. city was attended by 300 delegates representing 225,000 workers at General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors electrical division and Sylvania Electric.

Although no specific wage demand was put forward, UE officials revealed that "the rise of prices, forced on the American public by big business, which destroyed price controls, has reduced the weekly buying power of the workers in the electrical and radio manufacturing industry by $11.72 since January 1945."

Under the health plan, the union is seeking life insurance, accident insurance, disability benefits, surgical benefits and medical care, with all costs to be borne by the company.

A pension plan proposed by the union would guarantee all employes a monthly income of no less than $100 upon retirement. The union is also seeking improved severance pay, holidays and vacations, and the union shop.

Contracts with the 1,300 smaller firms organized by the UE will not be reopened until negotiations have started with the four big firms.

At a press parley Organization Dir. Matles ridiculed employer claims that wage increases will compel higher prices.

He exhibited a light socket which sold for 5c before the war and now sells for 15c. The labor cost, he pointed out, jumped three-thousandths of 1c while the price was lifted 10c.

Citing many similar items, on which prices jumped as much as 300%, he said the labor cost on most formed less than 20% of the total cost.

STEEL TALKS JAN. 16

AS officials of the CIO Steelworkers concluded their first day of contract talks with representatives of the Aluminum Co. of America last week at Pittsburgh, U. S. Steel announced it would begin negotiations for a new wage contract with the union Jan. 16 in that city.

The union's contract with Big Steel expires Feb. 15, and affects 180,000 employes.

Outcome of negotiations with U. S. Steel is expected to set the pattern for the remainder of the industry.

The union's formal demands will be presented Jan. 16. These have included an unspecified wage increase, portal-to-portal pay, an improved insurance plan and premium pay for Saturdays, Sundays and holidays.

WOOLEN WORKERS WIN 15c AN HOUR HIKE

A GENERAL wage increase of 15c an hour, putting more than $9,000,000 more a year into the pay envelopes of 29,000 woolen and worsted workers, has been negotiated by the CIO Textile Workers and the American Woolen Co., the Botany Worsted Mills, and the Forstmann Woolen Co., Pres. Emil Rieve of the union announced this week.

The increase will be effective Monday, Feb. 3. It was negotiated under a wage reopening clause which permits wage considerations to be restudied during the term of the contracts, which will not expire until Feb. 1, 1948.

Benefitting from the increase will be 20,000 workers in 20 mills of the American Woolen Co. in New England, N. Y., and Ky.; 5,000 workers in the Botany Worsted Mills, Passaic, N. J., and 4,000 workers at the Forstmann Woolen Company, Passaic.

Because the same considerations exist in all of the 140 other woolen and worsted mills under contract with the union, Rieve said it was his opinion that the 15c increase would be granted by the other mills. He pointed out that this would mean an annual payroll increase for the 90,000 workers in TWUA contract mills of more than $28,000,000.

The last previous general wage increase in the woolen and worsted mills of the United States was a general 15c an hour rise, effective in Dec., 1945.

The current increase raises the minimum wage in the 22 affected mills from 75c an hour to 90c an hour and lifts the average straight-time hourly earnings from $1.01 an hour to $1,16, or $46.40 for a 40-hour week.

UAW STUDY SHOWS INDUSTRY CAN PAY 25%

THE CIO Auto Workers this week issued a statistical study showing that auto industry profits will be stupendous even if a 25% wage increase—more than the 23½c the UAW is asking—were granted, and announced that a natl. wage conference will be held at Detroit Sat., Jan. 18.

Expectation of an all-time peak in auto industry profits, close to $2 billion before payment of taxes and exceeding the entire payroll of the industry if there are no substantial wage increases, is confirmed in the detailed statistical study made public by UAW Sec.-Treas. George F. Addes.

Profits before taxes will reach $1,957 million in 1947, allowing for every possible increase in costs except a 1947 wage increase, Addes says. Total payrolls, including wages and salaries in the auto industry, before any increases if granted, will be $1,796 million. That is, 1947 profits before taxes will exceed payrolls by $161 million.

Those who take without working will get substantially more than those who get theirs only if they work.

"For the auto industry, despite its pathetic claims to the contrary, 1947 promises to be the richest profit year in history," Addes said. "This is the amazing picture of future profit which spokesmen of the industry have been seeking to blot out."

1946 could have been a big profit year too, Addes asserts, "but the auto industry along with the coal and steel industry preferred rebellion against the wage-price policies of the government to the production of automobiles. Auto corporations will collect $200 million from the U. S. treasury to offset losses for failures to produce in 1946." Taxpayers will not pay for employers' sabotage of production this year.

The basis for the calculation of almost $2 billion gross profit in 1947 is painstakingly set forth by Director James Wishart of the union's research department in a statistical addendum to Addes' statement. Cost figures are known for 1941 as they were compiled by the U. S. Bureau of Internal Revenue and tabulated by the Dept. of Commerce in a special study of the auto industry. Auto prices for 1947 are based on 1941 prices, plus increases in wholesale prices and weighted for each model. The same with material costs and labor costs.

FUR WORKERS' PAY RAISED 16.3c

PACING its drive for wage increases for its 60,000 members employed in the nation's leather industry, the CIO Fur & Leather Workers this week, announced that increases totaling 16.3 cents an hour were obtained in renewal of the collective agreement with the Mass. Leather Mfgs. Assn.

The agreement covers 5,000 workers in association shops. Negotiations are now under way with independent shops in Mass. employing another 4,000 workers and with leather firms in other states throughout the country.

A 10c an hour general wage increase will go to all leather workers employed in Mass. association shops effective Jan. 1. Another 5c an hour general wage increase will go into effect July 1. An additional paid holiday and an additional ½% of the payroll for the health and death insurance fund are estimated as equalling 1.3 cents per hour on the payroll, making an overall total of 16.3 cents increases per hour.

A clause providing for reopening of the wage question on Jan. 1, 1948 is provided in the two-year agreement.

U. S. RUBBER SIGNS PACT

The CIO Rubber Workers this week signed the first company-wide rubber industry contract for 1947 with the U. S. Rubber Co., and started negotiations immediately with Goodyear Tire and Rubber Co.

The U. S. Rubber contract will become effective if it is approved at Chicago Jan. 25 by a committee representing the local unions. Terms of the contract were not announced.

A meeting will be held Jan. 27 between a committee headed by top union officials and representatives of the Big Four—U. S. Rubber, Goodyear, Firestone and Goodrich—to discuss the union's demand for a 26c an hour raise.

HAWAIIAN PAY BOOSTED 30c

The CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union at San Francisco made public this week the basis of agreement for a new contract between Hawaiian longshoremen and Honolulu waterfront employers granting a 30c an hour wage increase effective last Nov. 25.

This latest increase brings the basic hourly rate to $1.30 and marks a gain twice as large as any previous longshore gain in Hawaii. The increases secured by Honolulu longshoremen will also set the pattern for all other Islands ports.

Principles of the hiring hall have been secured, including measuring the work force against the work load, the 40-hour guarantee for basic employes and preference of employment for union members.

CIO LISTS APPROVED GROUPS

A LIST of organizations approved by various departments and committees of the CIO was sent this week by John Brophy, director of the Industrial Union Councils, to the affiliated councils.

This was done to implement the amendment to Rule 8 of the council rules, as approved by the CIO convention. A memorandum accompanying the list stated that the fact that an organization is not listed neither reflects on the merits of the organization nor indicates that councils are required to support it. The list follows:

American Christian Committee for Refugees, Inc., American Committee in Aid of Chinese Industrial Cooperatives, American Relief for Czechoslovakia, Inc., American Relief for France, Inc., Community Chests and Councils, Inc., Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, International Rescue and Relief Committee, Inc., Palestine Histadrut Campaign, Philippine War Relief of the U. S., Unitarian Service Committee, United Seamen's Service, United Service to China, Inc., YWCA Round-the-World Reconstruction Fund.

American Jewish Congress, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, National Council for a Permanent FEPC, National Urban League, United Negro College Fund.

American Legion, American Veterans Committee, American Veterans of World War II, Army and Navy Union, Catholic War Veterans, Disabled American Veterans, Jewish Veterans of the United States, National Conference of Labor Union Legionnaires, Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States.

American Labor Education Service, Committee for Extension of Labor Education, Highlander Folk School, Hudson Shore Labor School, Southern School for Workers.

National Policy Committee, National Public Housing Conference, Regional Committee for MVA, and genuine labor unions and farm organizations.

An analysis of proposed legislation to restrict unions, prepared by the CIO Legal Dept. under the direction of Lee Pressman, general counsel.

THERE is a determined effort in our country today to draw our people into a crusade against labor.

Propaganda flows in a steady stream from the press and from most radio commentators and newspaper columnists for legislation to shackle labor. It is a campaign based upon misrepresentation and deceit.

During the early part of this century the witch hunt against labor was carried on under the slogan of the "open shop plan". This high-sounding phrase meant little more than the arrogant insistence of American employers that while they were to be free to organize and to pit their strength against the workers, the workers were to be denied the freedom to organize.

The "open shop plan" was not merely a slogan. It was a call to battle. With this as a battle cry the organized employers in this country prior to the first World War systematically set about not merely to destroy the labor organizations already in existence through economic and physical weapons, but so to terrorize employees as to drive the organizational process underground.

The courts also freely lent their aid to the employers engaged in carrying out the "open shop plan". Anti-labor judges promptly issued injunctions to prevent workers from defending themselves against the aggression of their employers. In addition, the anti-trust laws were used to break unions and to ruin them financially. In contrast powerful business monopolies were permitted to thumb their noses at the anti-trust laws and to gain a powerful hold upon American economic life.

AFTER the first World War the open shoppers again resumed their own private war against the democratic rights of American workers. This time they changed their battle cry; they called it the "American plan". But only the words changed; the tune remained the same.

In addition to the usual weapons of the strike-breaker, the lockout, the labor spy, the discriminatory discharge, and the whole arsenal of devices which had been developed for destroying unions, the employer-sponsors of the "American plan" more than ever turned to the courts for help in their battle against labor. The campaign against labor was so brutal and lawless that fair-minded citizens were shocked; they realized some action was necessary to create an atmosphere in which working people could raise their heads and lift the banners of their labor organizations on high.

To this end a number of laws were passed for the protection of labor. The cornerstones of the new policy with respect to labor were the Norris-LaGuardia Act, passed in 1932, which limited the power of courts to issue injunctions in labor disputes, and the Wagner Act, passed in 1935, which protected labor in the right to organize and to bargain collectively.

At the same time many of the judges began to recognize that it was wrong and un-American for courts to permit themselves to become the tools of employers in labor disputes.

The Drive

The courts thus came to recognize that the right to strike, the right to engage in peaceful picketing, the right to assemble in connection with labor matters, the right to distribute leaflets —all of these rights are fundamental rights of workers which may not be arbitrarily invaded. The courts came to realize that these rights were nothing more than the rights safeguarded to all of the people by the Constitution —that the right to strike is nothing more than the right protected by the Constitution to be free of involuntary servitude; that the right to picket is nothing more than the constitutionally protected right of free speech, and that the right to go to a union meeting is nothing more than the constitutionally protected right of free assembly.

WHAT has happened in the short period during which these statutes and decisions have been the law of the land? Has the old bloody dream of the open shop died out? Have the forces responsible for the "American plan" laid aside their weapons and their propaganda? Have they accepted in good faith the principle of federal law that workers' rights are to be respected and that collective bargaining is the true path to industrial peace?

Of course not!

It is about 15 years since the Norris-LaGuardia Act was passed and about 11 years since the Wagner Act was passed.

During that period of time labor organizations, their members and their leaders have been subjected to an unremitting campaign of sniping and attack on the part of powerful American industrialists. These groups have sought in every way to weaken and destroy the Norris-LaGuardia Act. When the Wagner Act was passed they formed the infamous Liberty League to fight the Act, and obtained literally hundreds of injunctions against its enforcement until 1937, when it was held to be constitutional by the Supreme Court.

The voice of these employers is by no means quiet in our country today. The working people of America still do not enjoy the benefits of the federal labor program which has been 15 years in the making. Today in the United States there are many powerful employers who still regard the Wagner Act as a temporary embarrassment; who still fight the organization of their workers, and use their economic strength to destroy the efforts of their workers to organize.

THERE are many areas in the United States in which labor organizers are beaten and mained by mobs instigated and paid by employers. There are areas in the United States in which employers have corrupted the peace officers of entire communities and erected vast open shop citadels in defiance of their government.

Similarly, these same employers are still able to find judges who will issue injunctions to smash peaceful picketing.

These same employers, through their control of political machines even in large cities, have even recently succeeded in unleashing police brutality against workers of a type which carries one's memories back to the darkest days of our labor history.

At this moment in our history the stage has once again been set for a new "open shop" movement, for a new "American plan". Of course, those who are directing the present day crusade against labor realize that they can no longer be as open and flagrant as those who directed the anti-labor drives of the 1920's.

The slogans today are more subtle, but the purpose is the same.

The organized employers of this country, who have never surrendered their dream of an open shop America, pay lip service to collective bargaining and to the right of self-organization. They protest that they are merely in favor of certain basic "corrections", certain "minor" amendments.

The present-day attack on labor has a very special and fundamental additional purpose. It comes at a time when we have just finished a war during which, in every industry, monopoly interests succeeded in tightening their stranglehold on the nation. The enormous profits gained by these monopolistic groups during the war already have begun to be exposed to the people. And now, having succeeded in killing price controls, these same monopolies are preparing for a gigantic profit killing at the expense of the American people.

THE ONLY groups challenging these all-powerful monopolies are the organizations of their workers.

These workers in early 1946 asked that their wage losses be remedied by a wage increase, and pointed out that the profits amassed by American monopolies were so tremendous that wage increases could and should be given without any price increases. The monopolies had a one-word answer to their employees, "No".

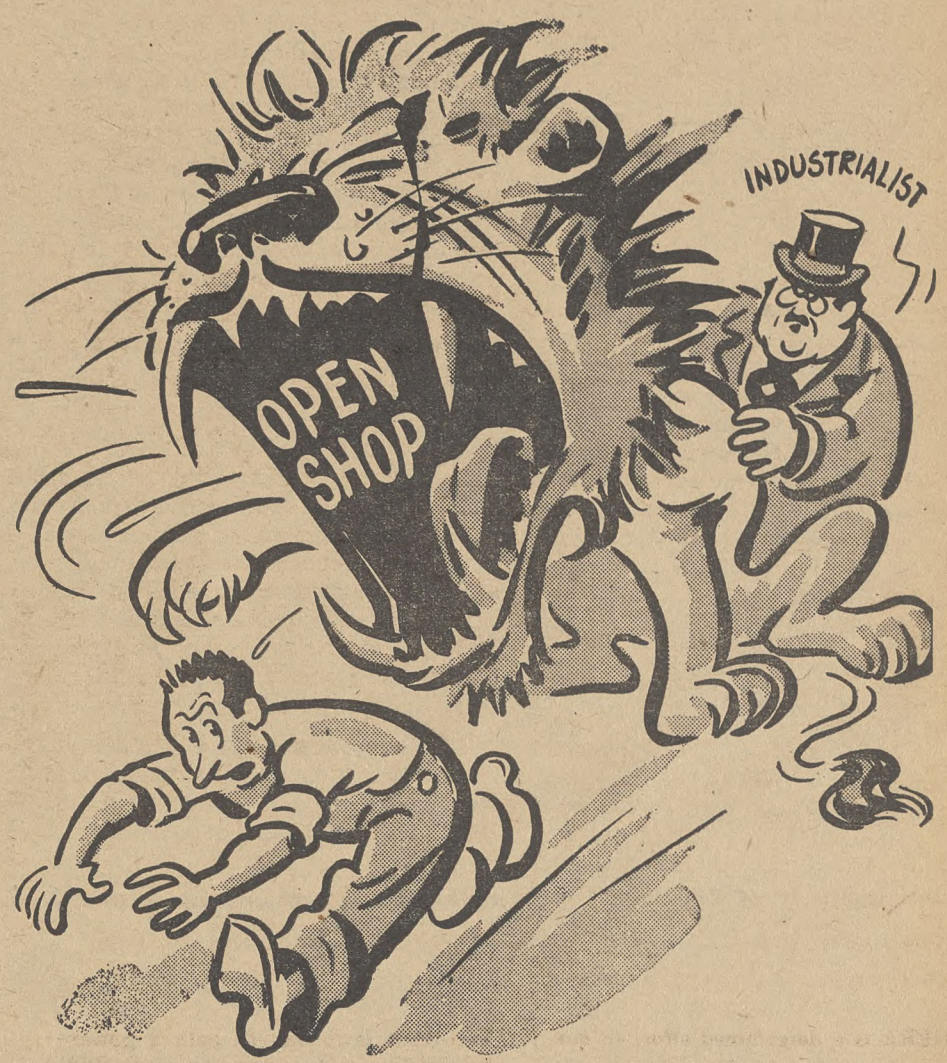
The workers, however, refused to take "No" for an answer. They fought back, and they won.

Today, the monopolists have beaten the government into submission.

Price controls are off, prices have spiralled, and profits are at levels higher than any in our history. Once more the American workers are insisting that the monopolies loosen their death-grasp on the nation's income, and allow the wage-earners enough to give them a decent standard of life.

The monopolists again are preparing to say "No". But this time, it is their aim to make the workers take "No" for an answer. And all of the anti-labor Congressmen, radio commentators, newspaper columnists and editorial writers are rallying to support the National Association of Manufacturers to help the monopolists squeeze the American people dry.

Today's anti-labor campaign is a smoke-screen to conceal the most outrageous monopolistic plundering in our history. It is a flank attack designed to force the labor movement to give up on its wage demands.



Some of today's labor-baiters boldly admit their goal is amendment or repeal of the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Most, however, pretend to preserve these laws while at the same time advancing proposals to chop the heart out of them. They conceal their intent in meaningless and misleading slogans which are oft repeated in press and radio to create the impression that these falsehoods and empty phrases are accepted truths.

Every American owes it to himself and his country to examine a few of these phrases and the facts behind them and not to be swept away in a tide of manufactured falsehood and slick propaganda. Some of the catch phrases of today are: "unions are monopolies", "make unions suable", "the closed shop is un-American", "stop coercive picketing", "amend the one-sided Wagner Act", "limit the right to strike". In some of these slogans, not even the words have changed from those of the "open shop" and the "American Plan" campaigns.

In all, the tune remains the same. The aim continues as before to destroy organized labor and to terrorize workers into an abandonment of their right of self-organization.

THEY say "Unions Are Monopolies" . . . "Prohibit Industry - Wide Bargaining" . . .

These slogans have become a very fashionable way of attacking labor.

To the labor-haters these sound like good slogans, because the fight against monopolies is a good and progressive fight. The labor-baiters consider it a good idea to develop a slogan which confuses the anti-monopoly fight with the anti-labor fight by making it appear that organizations of working men and women are just as dangerous as the giant trusts and international cartels.

The NAM, however, gives the show away when it clarifies the proposal a little more. The NAM would make it illegal for "a union or unions representing the workers of two or more employers to take joint action or engage in other monopolistic practices".

We must keep in mind that under the anti-trust laws today it is illegal for any group to set up a conspiracy to control the trade in any commodity or to control prices. A labor union which joins with employers in such a conspiracy is just as liable as the employers. The Supreme Court made this clear in a number of decisions, and particularly in the case of Allen-Bradley Company v. Local Union No. 3, IBEW, 325 U. S. 797, decided June 18, 1945.

But this is not what the NAM is talking about. They are not concerned about monopolies among the trusts or among employers.

The NAM is not bothered, for example, by the fact that more than 500,000 small business concerns were eliminated from the market during the war.

They are not worried about the fact that 250 of the largest corporations in this country now hold approximately two-thirds of all the usable manufacturing facilities in the nation. Of these 250 largest manufacturing corporations which thus have a stranglehold on the nation's production, 31 are controlled by 5 banking groups—the Morgan, Mellon, Rockefeller, duPont, and Cleveland banking groups. The eight largest banking groups directly control 100 of the largest non-financial corporations.

THE DRIVE AGAINST LABOR

The NAM is not troubled by the fact that as of January 1, 1945, the four largest steel corporations controlled almost 63% of the total steel ingot capacity in America. Three of the banking groups mentioned (Morgan, Rockefeller and the Cleveland banks) control seven of the 10 largest steel producers in America and account for nearly three-fourths of the total ingot capacity in the United States.

This is only a small part of the picture of growing industrial monopoly in this country, in which the flow of the life blood of the nation is controlled by small groups of powerful bankers. But this picture holds no terrors and brings forth no denunciation from the NAM. The NAM sees danger only in the fact that American working men are attempting to meet the power of these gigantic trusts by joining into labor organizations.

WHAT does the NAM proposal mean? What does it mean to forbid a union from taking "joint wage action" against two or more employers, or to forbid "industry-wide bargaining"?

In the steel industry this means that the United Steelworkers of America may not formulate a unified wage policy to be presented at the same time to the United States Steel Corporation, the Republic Steel Corporation, the Bethlehem Steel Corporation, or any two of these giant institutions.

In the automobile industry the UAW may not take uniform action against the General Motors Corporation, the Chrysler Corporation, and the Ford Company, or any two of them.

In the electrical industry the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers would be forbidden to present a uniform wage program to G. E., Westinghouse, R. C. A., or any two of them. The local unions representing employees of each of these employers would be required to act separately.

What does this mean in practice?

The local unions in the steel industry are all in one organization. The local unions in the automobile industry and in the electrical industry are each in a single national organization. The NAM, however, would prohibit the various local unions in each of these national organizations from consulting and cooperating with other local unions in the same national organization!

The NAM, in short, would forbid the existence of national unions. The NAM would break every one of our national organizations up into a series of separate local organizations.

There is something especially hypocritical about this proposal. When unions first started to organize in major industries they were able to organize only one plant at a time. When they bargained with the employer for a single plant the answer was given that these demands could not be met for the single plant alone because they were matters of general policy affecting the entire corporation. So the unions organized the entire corporation.

Then in industry after industry the reply was given: "Why make us the guinea-pig? Why is this demand not made on our competitors as well as on us?"

As recently as 1945 and 1946 this was the complaint of the General Motors Corporation when it was the only automobile manufacturer involved in a strike. So the unions organized the competitors. Now the cry is: "Go back to the separate employers. Take them one at a time."

Never before has any responsible group dared to advance the outrageous theory now offered by the NAM that we must require competition in wage cutting. Our national policy has always insisted on competition with respect to the manufacture and sale of commodities.

Our economic system rests on the assumption that we will advance production and secure lower prices through the operation of our competitive system. But we have never insisted that employers engage in competition to see who could establish the worst conditions for his employes.

On the contrary, the War Labor Board adopted a uniform wage policy for the nation. In the steel industry the basic rate has been traditionally uniform throughout the industry; and increases have been given on an industry-wide basis for decades—long before there was any strong national union in the industry.

It has been our national policy to eliminate competition in wage rates, not to foster competition in sweatshop conditions. If the NAM were sincerely interested in stable labor-management relations, it would attempt to advance, not prohibit, industry-wide bargaining. Objective studies have demonstrated that industry-wide uniformity eliminates the chaos, conflict, and unsettled conditions which result from hundreds of separate negotiations.

Thus, a recent study under the auspices of Princeton University concluded that when wages are determined by National bargaining, the results are "more sensible and farsighted, taking in the economic interests of the industry as a whole."

SENATOR BALL insists that a prohibition of industry-wide bargaining is necessary to prevent industry-wide strikes which injure the public welfare. However, to the extent that industry-wide strikes occur, they occur in industries tightly organized by employers—where for generations the employers have joined together througout an industry to pit their combined economic strength against their employees.

Experience has shown that if the law required negotiation with single employers, all the rest of the employers in the industry would rush to the rescue of the one employer involved, in order to insure that he would suffer no loss through any strikes he might provoke. Union members in other plants would thus be forced to work in order to break a strike of their fellow employees.

It should also be borne in mind that a major inducement for peaceful settlement of issues is the recognition by an employer that other employers will ultimately be required to settle on the same terms. A prohibition on industry-wide negotiations would destroy the economic pressure which makes possible uniform settlements. It would thus actually provoke and prolong strikes in the narrower areas in which the law would permit negotiation.

If the policy of division advanced by the proposal succeeded, lower standards would develop in some plants than in others.

Other employers in that industry, placed at a competitive disadvantage, would inevitably try to equalize their wages and working conditions. The result would be an epidemic of strikes throughout various single units of the industry. Conversely, if some employers were forced to establish conditions better than the rest of the industry, the resultant inequalities would then cause strikes in other units of the industry to equalize the inequalities.

But in either event, the possible injury to the public welfare is far greater than is involved in the situation at present.

Two additional conclusions of the Princeton study mentioned above are important:

". . . elimination of wage-cutting has tended to stress efficiency of management as the most important factor in competition."

". . . Concentration of the change in one industry-wide determination avoids the labor unrest and series of strikes that often accompany competition between firms in the timing of wage changes or competition between rival unions in exacting concessions from employers."

Labor's Program

THE simple fact is that this country is fast approaching a state of crisis. What is the nature of this impending crisis?

Its proportions and implications can be gathered from what happened in the first few months of 1946. Industry emerged from the war richer and more tightly concentrated than ever before in its history, and with a profit level unequalled in the history of our nation.

TODAY we are in a period when prices, released from control, have leaped skyward. Profits have followed suit. American industry anticipates net earnings after taxes of approximately 15 billion dollars in the year 1947.

At present wage levels, the American worker is faced with an actual and continuing reduction in his real earnings. The workers have asked for increases in wages. Industry is preparing again to say "no." Industry would thereby help to plunge this nation into an economic crash which could well dwarf the 1929 crisis by comparison.

MONOPOLISTS have created the crisis. Now they point the accusing finger at the one group which has stood up in an effort to preserve economic stability.

These monopoly interests have used the crisis of their own creation as a pretext. They dare not encourage any study of the real crisis of today and a search for real solutions. Instead they revive anti-labor proposals which have been put forth by them for decades.

They revive devices which have been considered and rejected by Congress after Congress. They attack isolated phenomena—"the jurisdictional strike," "the secondary boycott," issues of relatively rare occurrence and far removed from the heart of the real labor-management problems of today.

This is a calculated and well-planned program of monopoly. It is a program intended to prevent understanding of the crisis and of the best solutions.

We say that the answer lies in the realm of economics, not of vituperation. The answer is a preservation and development of the living standards of the nation. The answer is a sound national wage policy which preserves the purchasing power needed for the American economy. The answer is an expanded social security and health program.

The answer lies not in engaging in witch-hunts against the organizations of the nation's workers, but in meeting the basic economic and social needs of the American people.

1 Thelma Nickerson, employe of Brown Shoe Company, St. Louis, Missouri, and a member of Local 11, CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Workers, brings her 3½-year-old daughter, Yvonne, to the Labor Health Institute for a physical examination. Mrs. Nickerson knows the value of preventing illness by coming to the Medical Center before getting sick.

3 An LHI doctor checks Yvonne's nose and throat. If she should need her tonsils removed, an LHI throat specialist would perform the operation at moderate fees. The doctor explains the necessity for thorough checkup of the throat in order to prevent illness and keep the child healthy.

2 Yvonne is fascinated by the stethoscope which the doctor uses to check her heart and lungs. All through the physical examination, special care is taken to keep children at ease and to avoid frightening them so that there will be no association of fear and pain in going to the doctor.

KEEPING LABOR HEALTHY

WHEN members of the CIO Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Employes in St. Louis, Mo., get sick, they don't have to become sicker with worry about how they're going to pay doctor or hospital bills. The union has seen to that.

By contractual agreement with 20 employers in the city, who help finance the project, the union has established a Labor Health Institute which affords all union members medical, dental and hospital care—and at the same time teaches a practical lesson in the workability of non-discrimnation.

St. Louis is a town in which Negroes and whites are segregated in hospitals and clinics. But the Labor Health Institute has proved that discrimination is unnecessary and unacceptable and is doing much to surmount the prejudices of the townspeople.

Negroes serve on the Board of Trustees at the Labor Health Institute with equal voting rights. One waiting room serves all patients, white members taking their turn with the colored. Even though the non-discriminatory procedure is novel to most of the Missourians, it has enjoyed almost 100% acceptance by the whites who visit the center.

THE LHI operates an additional plan whereby workers' families may receive the same thorough health care at a moderate cost. Under the family plan, a worker may pay $1 per month and $1 enrollment for his child, who then receives complete medical care. Children periodically receive free dental examination (including x-ray) and care, and immunization shots.

Hospitalization for both the worker and his family is provided by the Blue Cross plan for which the union and employer pay. Medical examination and treatment are accorded all members without limitation or exemption—and both the workers and their employers have found that such year-round health insurance pays off.

IT'S THE VETERANS' SUPPORT THE NATIVE FASCISTS WANT

JOHN Roy Carlson's "The Plotters" is a powerful argument for the continuation and intensification of the labor movement's work in behalf of veterans.

Now that the war is over and most of the former soldiers, sailors and marines have returned to their work benches, there may be a tendency to forget their peculiar problems, which if they are not solved by the unions will isolate the ex-servicemen.

The native fascists are working steadily at making the veterans feel that they are getting a rough deal from the nation and from unions.

Carlson, who was aided in his work by the Friends of Democracy library, tells of the activities of a host of pro-fascist, nationalist and extreme rightwing organization including the America First Party, the Protestant American Veterans and the Society of Sentinels.

CARLSON quotes the boasting of Gerald L. K. Smith, who declared in 1944 that his time "will come in the post-war period. The candidate will not be me; it will be a veteran of this war, but I'll be behind him. If business conditions are bad — inflation, widespread unemployment, farm foreclosures—then my candidate will be elected . . . Then the flame will spread, and the extreme nationalist will come to power . . . When chaos comes, I'll be the leader."

Carlson points out:

"Smith may be a Hitler-like crackpot. An economically and politically healthy nation can survive such goons. But when we get another depression some Huey Long will inevitably arise to 'save America' from 'Communism,' unions, Jews, Masons, Negroes, Catholics. Winchell, internationalism, immigrants, aliens, the CIO, the PAC, or what not."

THE work of the CIO in aiding veterans is praised by the author, who tells of its "neighborhood network of union locals and special veterans committee" and its "determined effort to help the new civilian with his readjustment problems."

"Far more than the American Federation of Labor," Carlson continues, "the CIO has printed a wide range of reading matter for the veteran. Another inducement is the waiving of initiation fees—ranging from $2 to $5—for new veteran members."

Carlson also has high praise for the CIO and PAC for aiding democracy.

The CIO has made a good start but the moral of Carlson's book to this reviewer is that not only must the national CIO carry on its work in this field, but the work of many affiliated unions for veterans should be increased so that ex-servicemen will not become shock troops for the native fascists.—F. USA'S BIGGEST CHILD KILLER

(By Federated Press)

RHEUMATIC fever is far and away the most menacing child killer and child crippler in America. It causes 90% of all heart disease in children. It is the leading cause of all deaths during school years. There are today an estimated one million sufferers from rheumatic fever, actually more than the total number of tuberculosis cases.

The disease is most common in the North and East. It does its work in cold, damp homes, in overcrowded tenements, in slum areas hidden from the bright sunlight. Upper income groups are by no means immune, but rheumatic fever is mostly a disease of poverty and of wretched living conditions.

What is rheumatic fever? Not too much is known about it, which is one reason it is such an uncontrolled menace. Here is a sad example of the need for planned research in this country. Scarcely $100,000 a year is spent on its study.

It is known that some type of germ enters the body and sets up an infection which causes acute illness, frequent relapses, long invalidism or early death. Usually a severe sore throat sets the stage for the rheumatic infection, which begins a few weeks later with all the signs of serious fever.

The bones and joints may be painfully affected as in arthritis, the skin may show a peculiar rash, or the disease may take the form of "St. Vitus' Dance." Far too often the heart is damaged, and then the most tragic part of the disease begins.

About 50% of all rheumatic children have heart disease within ten years after the onset of the infection, and 20% die within that time. With good treatment of milder cases, however, recovery can be complete.

Unions 3,000 Years Old!

FEW trade unionists realize that their movement dates as far back as 1100 BC, 3,000 years ago.

Facts from a book written in 1902 by Osborne Ward, "The Ancient Lowly," were cited by Forrest Emerson publicity director of the CIO Farm Equipment & Metal workers, before a recent conference of the Methodist Federation for Social Service.

Ward's book differs from most ancient history in that it tells the story of the common man in those days.

Emerson quoted reports that workers had been guaranteed the right to organize by Emperor Numa Pompilius in Rome as early as 600 BC. American workers did not receive their Magna Carta until 1937, when the Natl. Labor Relations Act was passed.

THE ancients were much more modern than we often given them credit for. In their labor unions they participated so actively in politics that in Rome between the years 379 to 373 BC. the patrician class was unable to elect a senator.

"But the small but immensely powerful upper crust of Roman society . . . could not stomach such rising democracy and soon produced one of history's greatest fiends—Appius Claudius," Emerson noted, "who conceived the Roman conquests to strengthen the ruling class. The unions, alas, were lulled to sleep with promises of unlimited work for the state, making armaments."

Roman legions then proceeded to level cities and nations, shipping countless thousands of slaves back home, to which our history books refer as "glorious conquests," while records of the life of the everyday, lowly people have been omitted.

In the two centuries prior to the birth of Jesus, there were many great strikes and uprisings against the inhuman degradations they suffered at the hands of the wealthy, the greatest of which was led by Spartacus in 74 BC. A Thracian shephered who had been captured, enslaved and forced to become a gladiator, Spartacus gathered behind him the thousands of dispossessed, hungry and oppressed and for four years his huge armies battled the ruling legions.

Following the death of Spartacus, Rome suppressed the unions, which were known as collegia, sodalicia or corpora, and they went underground. Into this world Jesus was born and soon He was demanding social equality and democracy as the unions had been demanding for some 1100 years before Him.

Archaelogical research shows that the trade-unions were the very cradle of Christianity. Such Biblical characters as Peter, Paul, Luke, John, Clement, James and many others held positions of leadership in the unions. Jesus Himself was a carpenter, a craft organized back through all antiquity, the speaker pointed out.

"Precise history," Emerson declared, "established through excavation and research, but censored from the eyes of common people, reveals the fact that it was the unions which endorsed, protected and formed Christianity through the first three centuries of its then nameless existence. Christianity became the continuation of their centuries-long fight."

It's A Pleasure To Listen

The nation's capital heard a new radio station last week—one dedicated to the emphasis of classical music, a progressive viewpoint and a limitation on advertising.

The station WQQW, has promised its radio audience no more than four commercial announcements an hour, no commercial lasting more than one minute and no two commercials in a row.

Manager of the station is Edward Brecher, a former Federal Communications Commission executive.

PRETTY HANDS

By HANNA SHERMAN

BEAUTIFUL hands can be one of your greatest assets. But to be beautiful your hands needn't be lily white and perfectly lacquered.

The hands of women who use them in their work often have a true loveliness that comes from flexibility and graceful movement.

You'll find that you need very little time and extra effort to do some simple hand exercises. These will not only be beauty making, but like all exercise will help you to relax.

We talked to charming and dynamic Ray Lev. She is considered America's most distinguished woman pianist and has lovely expressive hands. Miss Lev was enthusiastic about the value of exercise for the average woman. The exercises she uses to keep her hands beautifully supple can be learned by all of us.

Miss Lev massages her fingers daily. You do this by pulling at them gently as though removing a pair of rather tight gloves. And when you do this (several times a day, if you wish) remember to massage the soft web of flesh between the fingers.

Another good hand exercise is the one taught to the piano students of Joseph and Rosine Lhevinne. Put the thumb between the second and third fingers and close your fist gently. Open your hand and repeat with the thumb between the third and fourth fingers. Again with it between the fourth and fifth. Do this with both hands and work for increasing speed.

An exercise I like—primarily to relax the hands—is to shake them from the wrist for a minute or two, as though shaking water off them.

People who must pamper valuable hands take simple precautions with them. They keep their hands immaculately clean and do as thorough a job of scrubbing up as a surgeon would. You'll want to do the same.

Use a nail brush several times a day. When you wash your hands, dry them gently, push back the cuticle around each finger nail, and always use a hand lotion whenever your hands have been in water.

These wintry days, most of us find our hands sensitive to cold. The fashion for wearing woolen gloves is a boon to hand beauty. Wear them when the temperature drops and prevent the frozen look that hands get when they are cold.

In a future column we'll discuss other aids for your hands. It's not too late to make one more New Year resolution—to have the kind of hands that excite admiration.

WOMEN AT WORK

CONTRARY to widespread predictions, women have not abandoned their wartime jobs en masse to resume full-time household duties, the Women's Bureau of the Dept. of Labor reports.

Although approximately a million fewer women were employed in November of this year than in November 1945, those working still far outnumber the pre-war figure.

In many instances the wartime gains made by women in overriding discrimination in hiring and pay have been retained, but the Bureau reports a continued need for a national equal-pay law, upward revisions of minimum wage laws and more widespread acceptance of women on professional as well as unskilled levels

Now that industry is again expanding, most reconverted war plants—particularly electrical, airplane, and automobile—are hiring women, but only after the supply of male labor has been exhausted.

The division of women to industry has caused a continued shortage in such occupations as stenographers, typists, teachers, nurses, librarians, dietitians and social workers—all notoriously underpaying positions.

The drive for equal pay for equal work has gained momentum since V-J Day. Seven states have enacted laws of their own, many major unions have included such clauses in their contracts, and pressure behind the federal "equal pay" bill has gained increased support.

Discrimination against Negro women, too, has declined somewhat. In N. Y. City and Detroit, for example, Negro women are now being employed as telephone operators.

Many women, intrigued by the overseas adventures of returning GIs, have entertained a desire to obtain employment abroad.

The Labor Dept. reports that women at present are needed overseas in the following occupations with the U. S. Government:

Court reporter, legal stenographer, x-ray and laboratory technician, hospital staff nurse, public health nurse, teacher, librarian, acountant, and dietitian.

Further information is available in a bulletin titled "Guide to Foreign Employment Opportunities," distributed by state employment offices.

MUST WE WORRY?

'Teen-agers can take care of themselves if there is a first-class neighborhood headquarters for their activities. The corner drugstore or the local ice cream parlor are better than nothing, but a 'teen canteen is best of all. In many neighborhoods there is little delinquency or 'teen-age hoodlumism. Parents are comparatively free from worry about what their boys and girls are doing or where they are doing it. The youngsters just naturally gravitate to the conteen for games, for dances and for dates. A few local businessmen, a few returned veterans, a committee of high school youngsters have set up these fine centers in some placs. It can be done in your neighborhood, too.

CIO TEACHERS HONOR MURRAY

The N. Y. Teachers Union, Local 555 of the CIO Public Workers, this week presented CIO Pres. Philip Murray with its annual award for distinguished service to education.

In selecting Murray, the Union's Executive Board said "he has given magnificent leadership in the fight for economic and social security for all of the people of America.

"He has truly made a genuine contribution to education by bringing forward the issue of economic and political freedom in which a democratic educational system must be rooted."

Previous recipients of the award are Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, George Washington Carver, Dr. Franz Boas, the Norweigian teachers for their determined resistance against Nazi education, and the Federation of Atomic Scientists.

AID URBAN LEAGUE

Over 100 American trade unions have contributed to the 1946 Natl. Urban League Appeal, Robert L. Kinney, the League's trade union consultant, announced this week.

Outstanding union contribution was $5,000 from the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers. Other CIO unions contributing included Steel, Textile, Packing, Rubber, Public, Brewery, Fur & Leather, Communications, Railroad, Transport Service Employes, and Shoeworkers Joint Council.

LOCAL No. AMALGAMATED UNION LITHOGRAPHERS LABEL OF AMERICA

The above label is the symbol of the Amalgamated Lithographers of America.

It is an assurance that a piece of lithographic work has been done by trained, skilled craftsmen well-versed in their own particular lithographic jobs.

95% of such expert lithographic workers in every branch of lithography—artists, platemakers, cameramen, pressmen—are organized under the A.L.A.

Since OFFSET IS LITHOGRAPHY, and differs basically in every respect from letterpress, it is necessary that lithographic jobs be handled by specialized lithographic craftsmen, not by letterpress workers or any "printers".

That is why the recognition of and insistence upon the A.L.A. label has become greater now than ever before.

TO 'BEST YEARS,' AN OSCAR

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

WHILE the cocktails are being mixed and the "Oscars" handed out for 1946 in Hollywood, I hereby cast my vote without reservations for the top picture of this and many past years.

"The Best Years of Our Lives" is the best picture on the nation's screens today.

The only marring feature of its introduction to the millions of Americans who should see it has been the profit-happy tariffs charged for admission.

Otherwise, the picture is as down-to-earth as the twelve million vets who will see it and be hit right in the gut by the story of three returning GI's, their problems and their readjustment.

The vet who spent four years behind a rifle butt will understand (with bitterness) how Fred Derry (Dana Andrews) feels when the chain store manager slights his "fruit salad" and with a sneering "the war is over NOW, you know" attitude offers him a job at subsistence wages.

The awkwardness of banker-sergeant Al Stephenson's (Frederic March) homecoming to a maturing daughter and a growing young boy will restir the feelings of uneasiness most felt when they crossed the threshold of home after four years away.

And the humane, understanding treatment of Homer Parish (Harold Russell), the sailor who lost both hands in combat, will move the hearts and minds of America to an appreciation of the sacrifices and courage of the war-maimed.

THE picture has warmth and devotion. It glows with a love for America and its good people. You laugh with the vets when they go off on a mild beer jag; you cry at the tenderness with which Wilma (Cathy O'Donnell) loves Homer after he has shown her how helpless he is when he discards his steel hooks before going to bed, and you will cheer when Fred slugs a native fascist who tells Homer that he was a "sucker" to lose both hands fighting the war on "the wrong side."

It's no flagwaving hoop-de-la with 1,400 chorus girls fanning the air with star-spangled panties. There isn't a phoney bit in it from the word "camera."

It deals with GI's and their problems from the top of the deck. Sometimes, it slugs as in the case of Fred and his unfaithful wife. Other times it goes into a soft-shoe routine as when Al raps his bank bosses for the harsh attitude they are taking on veterans' loans. But the picture is in there punching all the time—in an appreciative, entertaining way. You couldn't spend a better three hours.

IN contrast to the veterans of the "Best Years" who face their problems and find some solutions, "The Razor's Edge" goes off into the mystic world. Heralded by the biggest tub-thumping campaign in recent years, the picture falls short on every score.

Tyrone Power carries the ball as the young man anxious to make himself worthy of the sacrifices of a fellow aviator in World War I.

After much wasted slow-moving film, he finds solace and peace in the mysticism of a temple in India. There, the answers to the troubling questions of life in a modern world put his distraught mind at rest and give him reason for living. He should have joined a union. It would have made a better picture and given him a better life.

Gene Tierney works hard trying to ensnare this handsome but poor idealistic lad. But at the same time she keeps the bait out for the rich moneybags who is also swimming around her pool. Anne Baxter manages to save a few scenes with her lifting performance of a fallen woman whose matter can't triumph over Power's mind.

WHEREAS Tyrone goes to India to find "life," Rex Harrison in the new English film, "Notorious Gentleman," goes straight to hell. There never is any doubt of his destination after he gets killed in the war. Dying was about the only good thing he ever did.

Harrison plays the role of Vivian Kenway, a no-good bum, or, as they might say in Oxford from which he is expelled early in the picture, a cad and a bounder. He deceives his roommate, makes love to a good friend's wife, muffs out on a job and marries a refugee girl for love—of money. He doesn't have a conscience and is such a ratty character as to win sympathy occasionally. The fact that he is such a scoundred never bothers him.

The picture can't be classified as anything but a character study. It has elements of humor and some of cold brutal human meanness. It drags at times and moves smoothly in other scenes. The picture is Harrison's all the way as he shows the decadence of a corrupt ruling class.

M-G-M has requested that all who see "Undercurrent" with Katherine Hepburn and Robert Taylor do not reveal the surprise climax. I won't. It certainly was a surprise and so incredible that it is just as well it be kept a secret.

Rich tycoon Robert Taylor takes his innocent bride, Katherine Hepburn, from the sheltred life of her university home and introduces her to the evils and fascinations of "big-time" life. She is unhappy in her new life, particularly with her inventor-husband whom she suspects of deception, etc.

Never meeting his brother, Robert Mitchum, she nonetheless finds out that he likes books and music. These and other mutual interests are enough to inspire her love for him. And then that surprising climax. Sounds silly, huh? Well, it is, and the excellent talents of Hepburn, Taylor and Mitchum deserve better. However, all three make the most of what is there and the result isn't too bad if you like Hepburn.

DID you see the new screen biography of Hiram Hayseed who wrote the third bar to the Virginia Reel? Well, Hiram is a poor piano player in a pingpong parlor with great talent for setting the rhythm of bouncing balls to music.

Purely by chance, Oscar Hammerhead, the great producer, overhears Hiram playing chopsticks for a lovely blonde babe. "Great talent," says Oscar as he hands Hiram a three million dollar a year contract—and so on until the picture ends with Hiram conducting the Cornfield Symphony Orchestra in a great Broadway opening. And the blonde is starring.

Change the name and you have the basic formula for a screen biography of a musician, inventor, statesman or singer.

I don't know the true life story of Jerome Kern, but I will bet Hiram's last dollar that it isn't in "Till the Clouds Roll By," which merely strings together a series of incidents.

However, the important thing is that the story is conveniently shoved in the background while the full beauty of Kern's melodic music and a lot of good talent have full reign.

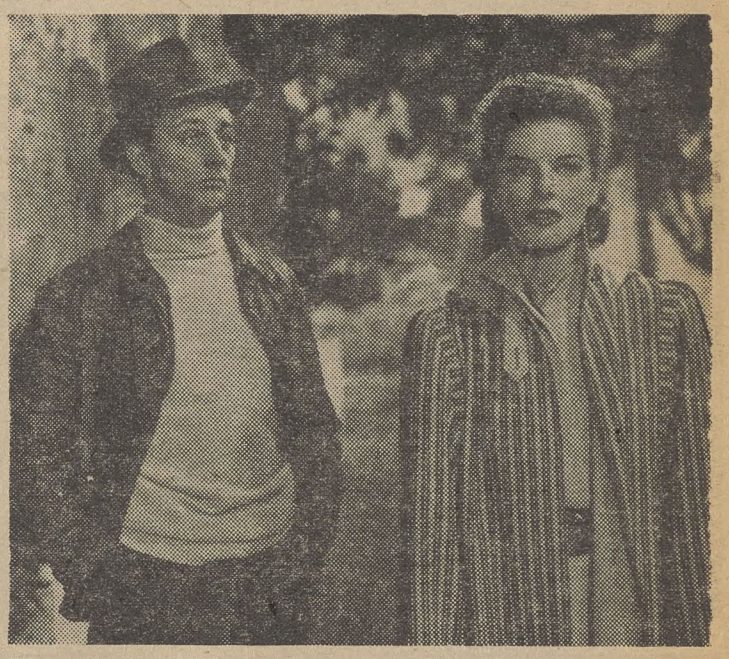
THE same can't be said for "The Verdict," which is the latest offering for mystery fans. Those who like their blood-and-thunder screen meat raw will find this a bit on the well-done style. Others will find keen delight in the suave, competent acting of Sidney Greenstreet, Peter Lorre and George Couloris, and the neat pattern of suspense and horror the picture weaves.

"The Verdict" takes place in the gas-lit, foggy atmosphere of Victorian London. Greenstreet has just lost his Scotland Yard job for causing the hanging of an innocent man on circumstantial evidence. Couloris, his successor, vows he won't ever do that. But, as fate would have it, the nephew of the first victim is found cold and stiff one foggy morning with nary a clue in sight.

Forgetting his vow, Couloris threads through a flock of suspects and nabs a likely character on circumstantial evidence. The fat man solves the perfect crimes and the day is saved with only two murders. Definitely deflation nowadays.

Peter Lorre, Sidney Greenstreet and Joan Lorring pursue the murderer who committed the perfect crime in "The Verdict." Greenstreet portrays former Scotland Yard man who lost job because he caused an innocent man to hang on circumstantial evidence.



Katherine Hepburn finally meets Robert Mitchum, her brother-in-law in "Undercurrent." Unhappy with husband Robert Taylor, Katie falls in love with Mitchum when she learns of their mutual interest in books and music.

Playing Around

THE FALCON'S ADVENTURES—Tom Conway goes to Miami to outwit a band of South American criminals who are out to steal a secret industrial formula and it isn't the atom bomb. Good "B" fare.

SO DARK THE NIGHT—French-styled murder down to the heavy accents. The innkeeper's daughter is murdered. The famous Parisian detective is on the scene. Who dunit?

DICK TRACY VS. CUEBALL—Vitamin Flintheart steals the show from our hero Dick. But, the great detective chases a jewel robber who is so tired out that he———. No, not that. Yes.

THAT BRENNAN GIRL—Advocates good mothers rather than those who raise their spoiled brats to be jewel-happy. Mama is no-good, daughter follows her foot-steps—but reform sets in and everybody but the audience is happy. Bring a box of kleenex for this one.

GALLANT BESS—Is an incredible tale of how Navy life and horses don't mix. Bess is a wonderful hoss, pardner, and there should have been more of her and less of a silly story on the screen.

NEVER SAY GOODBYE—Errol Flynn drops his dashing character for that of a commercial artist, who longs for his divorced wife. Naturally, the pair are re-united by seven-year old Patti Brady who is too sticky and sweet for anyone's enjoyment. The picture is called a comedy.

the ADVENTURES of JIM BARRY

The story, characters, incidents and scenes mentioned here are entirely imaginary and fictitious, and have no identification with actual persons, living or dead.

IN LOVE WITH JIM BARRY — RUBY CARRUTHERS CONVINCES HER FATHER, OWNER OF THE WARRENTOWN MILLS WHERE JIM IS WORKING, TO GIVE JIM A BETTER PAYING JOB. NOW SHE HAS TO CONVINCE JIM THAT HE SHOULD BE ON THE SIDE OF THE BOSS...

THROUGH ME YOU CAN HAVE A BETTER WAY OF LIFE... WEALTH, SOCIAL POSITION, COMFORT! BUT YOU'LL HAVE TO GIVE UP YOUR SILLY IDEAS AND —

HOW MUCH DO YOU KNOW ABOUT MY IDEAS, RUBY? WHAT RIGHT HAVE YOU TO CALL THEM SILLY?

I DON'T KNOW TOO MUCH ABOUT YOUR IDEAS, JIM. BUT YOU TALK LIKE A MAN WHO WANTS TO GO OUT AND CHANGE THE WORLD!

...AND THE WORLD CAN'T BE CHANGED! THE WORLD ALWAYS HAD PEOPLE WHO RULED AND THOSE WHO DID THE WORK — AND NOBODY CAN CHANGE THAT.

I SEE WHAT YOU MEAN, RUBY... HISTORY TEACHES US THAT THERE WERE SLAVES AND MASTERS

THAT'S IT... AND IT WILL ALWAYS BE THAT WAY!

MAYBE... AND MAYBE NOT! BUT I'LL BELIEVE IN AMERICA WITH ITS DREAM THAT ALL MEN WERE CREATED EQUAL... NO ONE CAN CHANGE MY MIND ON THAT!

I'M NOT TRYING TO CHANGE YOUR MIND, JIM. YOU CAN GO ON BELIEVING...

IT'S PRETTY LATE, RUBY... SUPPOSE WE TALK ABOUT IT SOME OTHER TIME? I'VE GOT TO GO NOW.

HE'S GOING TO BE HARDER TO CONVINCE THAN I THOUGHT... BUT HE'S WORTH WINNING!

IF I CAN WIN JIM'S LOVE FOR ME... I'LL SEE THAT HE BEHAVES—

WHO—WHO'S THAT?

WHAT DO YOU MEAN SNEAKING THROUGH THE GARDEN, JAMIE FERRET?

I DIDN'T MEAN NO HARM, MISS RUBY. ONLY I GOTTA SEE YOUR FATHER WITHOUT NOBODY KNOWING I'VE BEEN HERE.

EVEN HIGHER PRICES!

TAKE it from the Dept. of Agriculture—prices are going to soar even higher in 1947. In a booklet entitled Demand & Price Situation, the Department said this week:

"Prices received by farmers during the next few months may average slightly below the mid-November levels. The general level, however, as well as the level of prices paid by farmers is likely to continue upward during the first quarter of 1947."

The Department warned that business cannot expect the lush sellers' market of the last two years. Consumers, it seems, are not drawing on savings. Either savings have dwindled or people are getting wary about a probable depression.

Rent Control Attacked

REACTIONARY Congressmen are taking their cue from Herbert U. Nelson, executive vice-president of the Nat'l. Assn. of Real Estate Boards.

Apparently looking on his own campaign for 15% rent boosts as small-time stuff, Nelson said:

"Hell, we're going to wipe out rent control and the whole damn business this time."

As this week closed, Sen. W. Lee ("Pass the Biscuits, Pappy") O'Daniel (D., Tex.) introduced a bill to end the entire rent control program Feb. 1. Co-sponsors were a trio of Republicans, Sens. Wherry (Nebr.), Moore (Okla.), and Bushfield (S. Dak.).

Falling on deaf ears was the plea of Pres. Truman in his economic report to Congress that rent controls be extended beyond their present June 30 termination date and that the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill be passed to alleviate the steadily increasing housing crisis.

Although OPA rent experts have maintained that landlords are making more than their pre-war profits and that either de-control or general rent boosts would not be justified, 961,973 increases on houses and apartments have been allowed since rent control began June 1, 1942. (OPA is now part of the Office of Temporary Controls.)

The OPA rent division reports that these permissions to grant rents are being increased at the rate of 20,000 to 30,000 each month. The law provides substantial improvements, financial hardship and 13 other reasons for granting rent boosts.

Following the order of Congress, OPA is preparing the way for further increases in ceilings by examining the records of four million rent-controlled rooms as it was directed to do by Congress.

These are to be reclassified as either transient hotel, residential hotel, rooming house or motor court.

The shape of things to come is shown by a 50c increase in transient rooms authorized at four Washington (D. C.) hotels by the District Rent Control Administration, and by the announcement by Maj. Philip B. Fleming, chief of the Office of Temporary Controls, that he would soon have an announcement on transient hotel rooms throughout the nation.

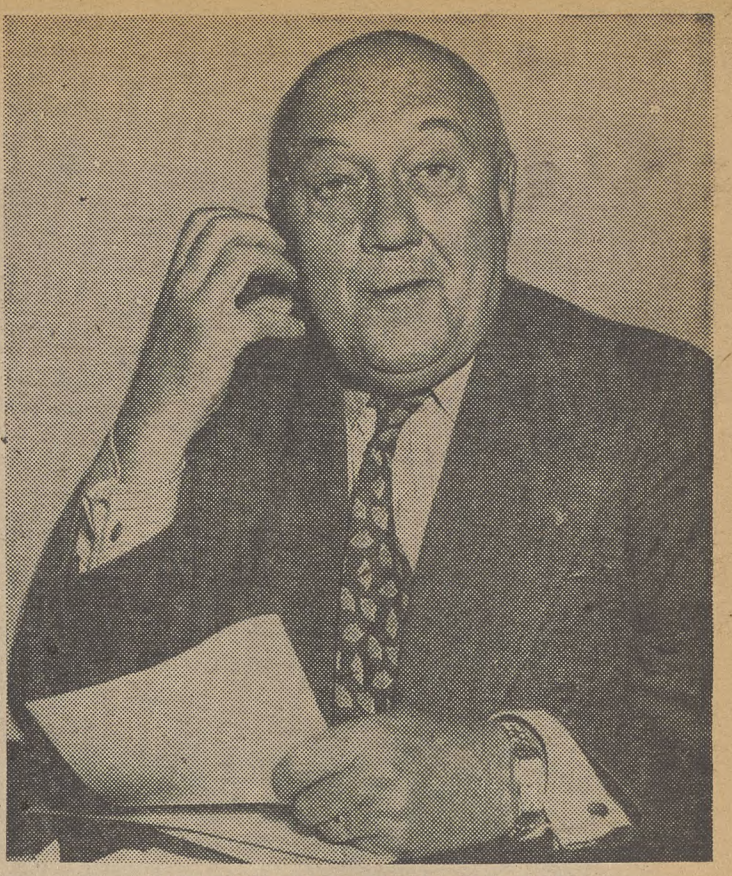
HAVING done all it could to embarrass, hamper and wreck the Veterans Housing Program, the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards declares that the program's accomplishment was miserable and shouts loudly that its inadequacies are proof that the long-range housing program such as the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill set up would not work.

The organized real estate interests have the effrontery to propose burying the housing bill in face of the fact that Pres. Truman pressed for its passage in both his "State of the Nation" message and his economic report to Congress.

"To reduce the cost of housing on all fronts and by all desirable methods, we must start as promptly as possible on a long-range housing program," the Chief Executive said. "Such a program can stimulate large investments in land acquisition and preparations for development."

Quick with an answer was the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards. Speaking to the Pawtucket Real Estate Exchange, Pawtucket, R. I., the day after the President made his report, Charles T. Stewart, NAREB director of public relations, said:

"Of course, there are families who need help to get decent housing, to get adequate food, clothing, or fuel. The satisfying of that need is the practice of charity, private or public, which many of us have always believed to be a virtue."



REP. HAROLD KNUTSON (R. MINN.)
For $5 million a year with no dependents, a $452,177 tax cut; for a family of four with $2,000 a year, 70c a week saving.

FOR THE GREEDY, NOT THE NEEDY

THE heart of Rep. Harold Knutson (R. Minn.) really bleeds for the poor downtrodden taxpayers—especially those in the upper brackets.

This week he introduced H.R. 1 in Congress to provide for a 20% income tax cut for compensation up to $302,000 a year. For incomes above this, the 20% reduction would apply to the $302,000, and a 10.5% reduction would apply to the rest.

What would the 20% cut mean to a family of four with an income of $2,000 a year? About 70c a week!

The savings to a corporation executive making $250,000 a year would amount to $730 a week.

But the really big time operators making half a million dollars a year (without dependents) would cash in to the tune of $452,177 yearly savings.

In contrast, an average worker with a gross income of $2,500 a year, and no dependents, would save just a little more than a week's salary—$57.

Knutson said that he is "satisfied that (the plan's) operation will prove beneficial to all classes."

$8,000 a Week Pay!

ONE hundred and twenty-two big shots of American corporations hit the jackpot to the tune of $75,000 a year or better in salaries, commissions or bonuses, the U. S. Treasury reported this week.

The payoff list was only a supplemental one, not including many individuals whose income was revealed several months ago.

Topping the 122 was Thomas J. Watson, president of the Int. Business Machines Corp., who "earned" $425,548.94—or $8,183.63 a week.

The report did not include other income from stocks, bonds, real estate, etc.

Among assorted movie stars and corporation executives who cashed in were:

Deanna Durbin—$310,728.93

Chrysler officials B. E. Hutchinson—$90,850; K. T. Keller—$100,954; and Fred M. Zeder—$85,500.

U. S. Steel heads N. L. Miller—$85,300; Irving S. Olds—$106,200.08; and E. M. Voorhees—$105,900.08.

The Natl. City Bank of N. Y. paid William Gage Brady Jr. $104,739.84, W. Randolph Burgess $83,999.92, and Gordon S. Rentschler $129,199.92.

Boost Wages or Face Crash, Wallace Warns

FORMER Vice-Pres. Henry A. Wallace and Isadore Lubin, who served as economic adviser to Franklin D. Roosevelt, agree with the findings of the Nathan report that American industry can afford a 25% wage increase.

Indorsement of the report, prepared by Robert R. Nathan for CIO, was given in an exchange of correspondence between Wallace and Lubin in which the two upheld the view that such a wage increase would still leave business with profits equal to those of 1929, the nation's most profitable year.

If the present steady decline in purchasing power continues, the former government officials agreed, the result will be business bankruptcies and consequent widespread unemployment.

High production levels can only be maintained, according to Wallace, former secretary of commerce and now editor of the New Republic, if "the balance between prices, wages and profits gives the consumer a sufficient share of the national income to take off our market the goods produced."

Look Before You Yell!

CHARGES by the House Campaign Expenditures Committee that 60 CIO unions in N. Y. City had violated federal law by contributing to election campaign funds brought a "look before you shout" reply from Hyman Blumberg, head of the N. Y. Political Action Coordinating Committee.

Noting that the matter has been turned over to the Attorney General for possible legal action, Blumberg said "we are confident that such an examination will show that our committee has scrupulously adhered to the letter and spirit of all election laws." Contributions he said, were from individuals, and were transmitted by the unions.

HAPPY DAZE! MEAT SALES DROP BUT PROFITS SOAR

The meat trust this week told its stockholders how well the campaign to kill price control paid off. High priced meat brought Swift & Co. $16,394,739 in net profits last week despite an 11% drop in sales. Armour & Co. net profts totalled $30,291,128—two thirds of it made in the last six months when price control was on the rocks. Cudahy Packing Co. reported a net gain of $6,720,585 despite a 12% drop in sales. Cudahy's 1945 profits (under price control) totalled $2,505,097. The months-old smiles of these consumers are more that equalled by those now of the packers.

THE BOSSES OF CONGRESS

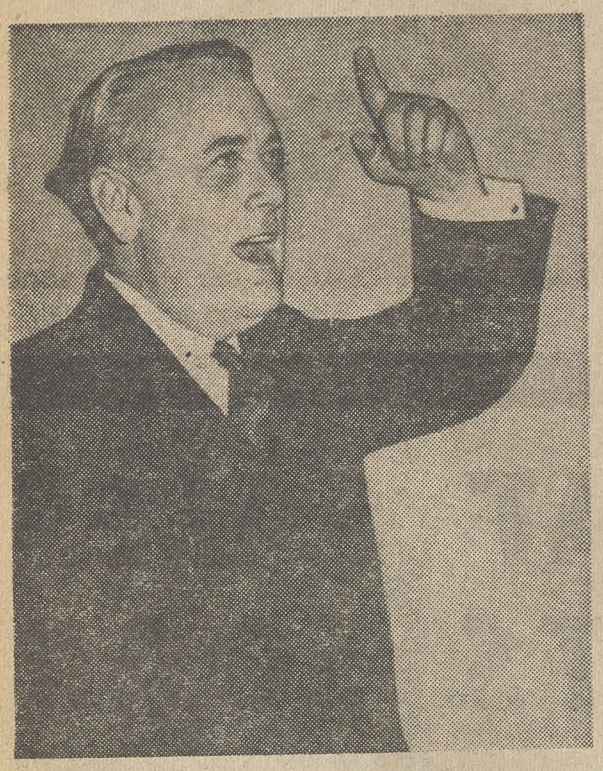
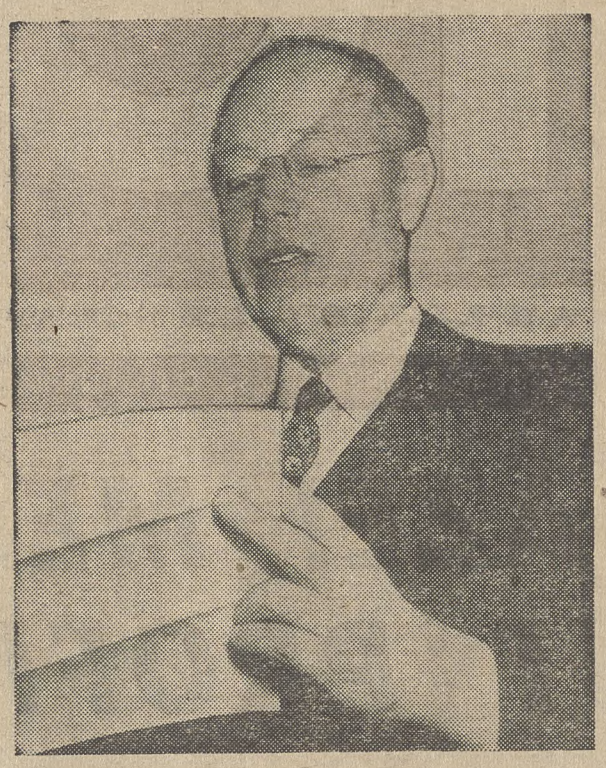
MEN TO WATCH



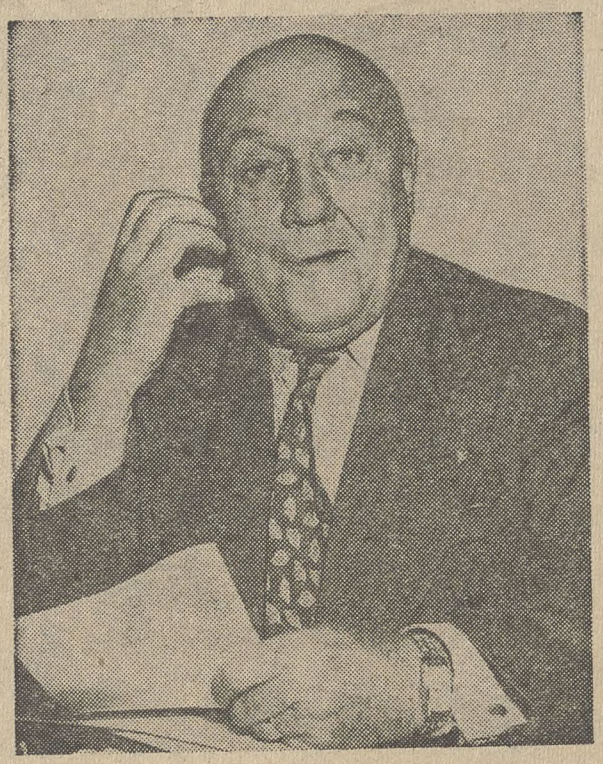
SEN. ALEXANDER WILEY (R) of Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin, heads the powerful Senate Judiciary Committee. That committee is currently hearing arguments on legislation to curb or abolish workers' claims for portal-to-portal back pay; one of the principal bills on the subject was introduced by Wiley. A lawyer, Wiley first entered the Senate in 1938. During the 79th Congress he voted for anti-labor bills and against price control.



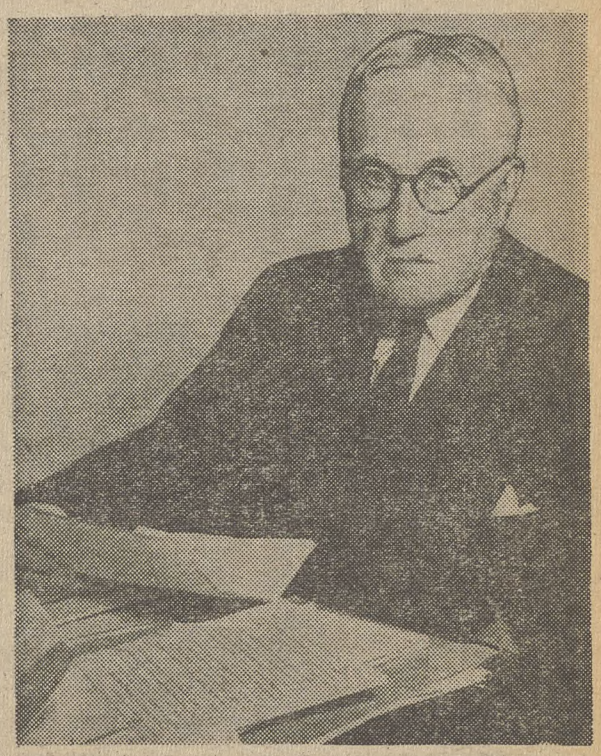
SEN. ROBERT A TAFT (R) of Cincinnati, Ohio, is the son of a former president who has cast his eyes on a return to the White House. A reactionary who "sees all the angles", Taft is number one boss-man of the Republican bloc in the Senate. As head of the GOP steering committee and chairman of the Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, the wealthy Ohioan occupies a strategic position. He wants anti-labor legislation passed by March. Last year he led the fight to kill OPA.

SEN. EUGENE A. MILLIKIN (R) of Denver, Colorado, heads the powerful Senate Finance Committee, which will handle all taxation bills. With big-business proposals on deck for a "soak-the-poor" policy of a 20% across-the-board tax cut, the committee will be of prime importance. Millikin's record is far from liberal. He voted against OPA, for anti-labor legislation, against minimum wage bills and against price controls on veterans housing.

REP. FRED HARTLEY (R) of Kearny, N. J., is head of the House Education and Labor Committee, and will be a key figure in the coming battle over anti-labor legislation. An "omnibus" bill, bearing his name, and carrying all sorts of restrictions on unions, will probably emerge from his committee in coming weeks. Hartley voted for the Case and other anti-labor bills last year, and helped lead the fight to kill price control.



REP. HAROLD KNUTSON (R) is a Minnesota newspaper publisher turned tax expert. Head of the Ways & Means Committee, he is the GOP's key man on taxation. Knutson rushed in to file the first bill of the 80th Congress, HR 1, a proposal to give everyone a 20% tax cut. That would save pennies for low and medium income earners, but would give the wealthy a tremendous tax reduction. He voted "wrong" on every listed issue in The CIO NEWS voting record for the 79th Congress.



REP. JOHN TABER (R), head of the House Appropriations Committee, is an upstate New Yorker who has been in the House of Representatives for more than 10 years. An inveterate foe of government spending, he is in a key position to cripple New Deal agencies by tightening the purse strings. Taber will probably fight all efforts to make government agencies serve the interests of the people. In The CIO NEWS voting record of the 79th Congress, Taber voted "wrong" on every listed issue.

IRONS IN THE FIRE

Anti-labor plans in Congress have assumed proportions of a flood. Here are a few of the main propositions to watch for—and to organize community support against.

INJUNCTIONS TO SMASH STRIKES. If Rep. Case (S. D.) has his way, the Attorney-General would have specific power, in any strike which he thinks endangers the "public welfare", to get an injunction forcing the workers back to their jobs. Under broad interpretations of the law, the federal government could obtain an injunction to smash almost any strike.

BREAK UP NATIONAL UNIONS. National unions of workers would lose much of their power to negotiate wage controls, if Rep. Case and Sen. Ball's (Minn.) plans are approved. Both have offered bills which would amend the Wagner Act by barring any labor organization from negotiating with any two employers outside the same metropolitan area. This crippling proposal is offered in the name of "anti-monopoly!"

AMEND THE WAGNER ACT. Almost every anti-labor bill offered in Congress offers amendments to cripple the vitality of the Wagner Labor Relations Act, which protects labor's right to organize and bargain with employers. Sen. O'Daniel (D. Tex.) would repeal the Act; others would allow employers to bust organizing drives by picking their own time to ask for NLRB elections; others would make unions, not employers, guilty of unfair practices.

TAKE UNIONS INTO COURT. The bill proposed by GOP Senators Smith, Ball and Taft would be subject to damage suits in federal district court for any violation of contract. This would allow employers to tie unions up in the courts with all sorts of petty cases—and it would make unions liable for any actions taken by agents of the employer within the ranks of the union. The bill would be an invitation to provocation.

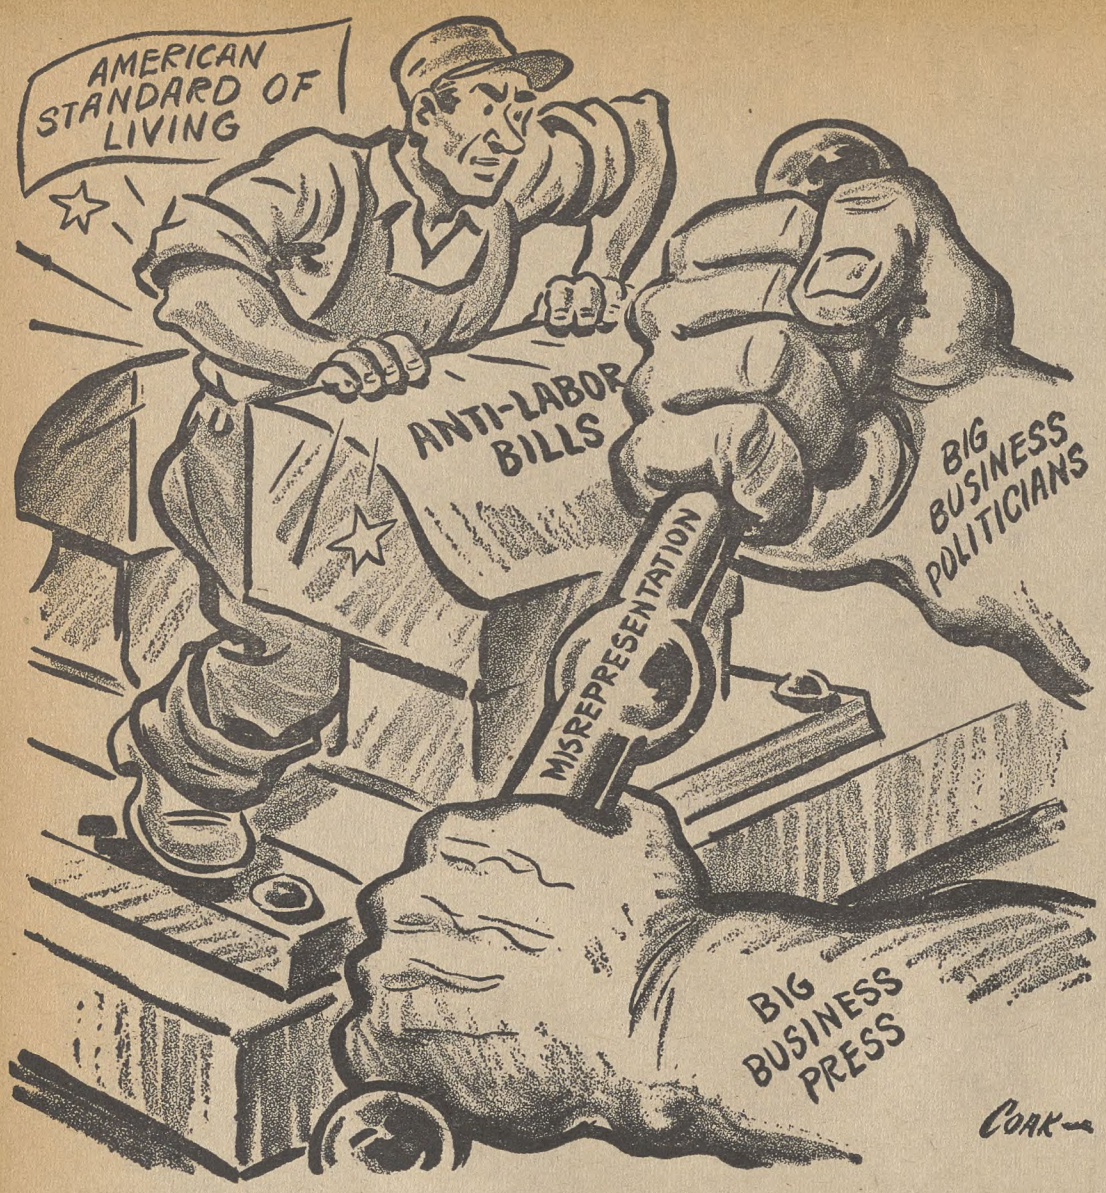
ABOLISH UNION SECURITY. Sen. Ball and others want all "closed shop" contracts declared illegal. This would restore American industrial relations to the "law of the jungle" era, when employers tried to outlaw the union from their shops. And it goes counter to the principle that those who gain benefits from unions should have the responsibility of belonging to the union.

RESTRICT UNION POLITICAL ACTIVITIES. Rep. Case and others, who fear and dislike the power of workers' political action, would put still more stringent restrictions on unions' political activities. Proposals would ban contributions from labor organizations in primary as well as general elections.

INCORPORATE UNIONS. The Smith-Ball-Taft bill and others would force unions to register with the government, in some versions with the Dept. of Labor, in others with the Securities & Exchange Commission. Some of the bills, including one by Rep. Smith of Maine, would force unions to incorporate, as though they were profit-seeking business firms.

FORCE COOL-OFF PERIODS. Many of the bills would force delays of 30 to 90 days in union negotiations, on the theory that this would permit unions to "cool off" and refrain from striking when employers refuse to consider the workers' demands. Actually the proposal is just one more means of extending negotiations and weakening labor's position against the employers.

BAR JURISDICTIONAL STRIKES. Almost all the bills would bar jurisdictional strikes—but since they include very hazy definitions, the provisions could be extended by unfriendly courts to include almost every strike, particularly if employers built up a streamlined company union to rival bona fide organizations.



PUTTING ON THE SQUEEZE

QUITE a few folks are running around these days blissfully unaware that they have "Kick Me" signs on their back-sides.

You can hear them chuckling that "labor's sure going to get what's coming to it—and about time, too."

Opinion polls show there are even some working people so hoodwinked by all the anti-labor propaganda as to say they favor some union-crippling legislation.

And, outside of labor's ranks, there are many more Americans who think it's just "the other fellow" who's going to get kicked.

EVERYONE can see there's a big squeeze going on. The papers are full of it.

The preparations have been long and carefully made—first through big-business hold-ups and provocations to create major stoppages, and then through the most intensive and sustained campaign of misrepresentation in the big business press.

The big-business politicians have joined the hue and cry, blaming the unions for all the ills created by their own patrons.

And now they think they have a majority in Congress, they're turning on the screws for every kind of union-busting legislation.

BUT NOT everyone realizes just who is going to get squeezed, nor who is doing the squeezing.

Any unionist who remembers the open-shop drives of the past and what conditions were like before union organization, must know the score.

The propaganda and proposals of today are exactly the same as those used by employers in the past, to prevent unions from being organized or to smash them before they became too strong.

Then, as now, the real purpose was to keep wages down and to exploit the workers in any way deemed necessary for maximum profits.

MORE THAN the workers' unions and wages is going to get squeezed, however, if the big-business program of anti-labor legislation is enacted.

Any weakening of labor's bargaining power will undermine the whole American standard of living.

When CIO unions win higher wages, they win them for all the workers, whether union or non-union, and the result is soon higher salaries for the office employes.

Like the pebble dropped in a pond, union wage increases start a wage-boosting ripple that eventually spreads to all industries and occupations.

Farmers, professionals and businessmen also benefit from having more customers with more to spend.

In a word, strong unions are basic to maintaining and raising the standard of living of all the American people. And the real goal of the anti-labor drive is to reduce this standard for the greater profit of a few big-business monopolists.

AMONG the many misrepresentations made is the claim that the public, as shown by opinion polls, demands union-crippling laws.

An analysis of these polls shows nothing of the sort. While they indicate many people have been fooled by the press propaganda, they also show that the great majority favor unions and collective bargaining.

The public demand is not for doing a job on the unions, but for doing something to avert disruptive stoppages.

In this demand labor is the first to join, calling for curbs on the monopolists and their provocations, for genuine and peaceful collective bargaining and, above all, for wage and legislative policies that will meet the basic economic and social needs of the people and thus remove the causes of industrial discontent.

BY LEN DE CAUX

SINCE some have claimed to detect in this column a certain lack of enthusiasm for big business, I recently decided to make a more sympathetic study of its viewpoint.

So the other night I took home a carload of full-page ads, newspaper editorials and Congressional Records, all full of the canned ideas which the NAM so generously supplies.

Lying in bed, I began reading and was surprised to find most praiseworthy sentiments repeated again and again—about "the basic American right to work," the evils of "monopoly," the need for "lower prices" and the dangers of concentrating "too great economic power" in too few hands.

THIS READING made me rather drowsy, and the last words I remember were those of Senator Ball, in a recent magazine article:

"Millions of Americans today are finding that their opportunity to work when and as they please is sharply limited; that the opportunity to enter many occupations is strictly controlled, rationed out to a privileged group. They are finding that if they speak and write on certain subjects, they may lose their jobs."

SUDDENLY I found myself outside a big factory during the last Republican depression (or it may have been the next).

Hundreds of unemployed workers were milling around. The hiring boss was picking out a few favorites here and there. Behind him was a sign, "This is an open shop. If you don't like our jobs, don't ask for one."

Up got someone who looked like Senator Ball. Reading the Senator's words he shouted:

"What you fellows need is a strong union, with seniority rights and a fair union hiring system. With the open shop, you haven't a chance. Through the union and PAC you can fight for a real full employment law.

"And don't ever let anyone tamper with the Wagner Act, which says you can't be fired for joining the union or speaking your mind."

THE NEXT thing I knew, I was in a Wall Street skyscraper office.

Pointing their fingers accusingly at me were dozens of the biggest big businessman. Their spokesman, with dollar signs all over his capacious vest, was saying:

"You got us wrong, bud. Haven't you read we're against monopoly and folks having too much economic power, and for lower prices and the right to work?

"IT'S LIKE this," Mr. $$$ continued. "The gentlemen in this room control most of the big banks and industries, not to mention the press. That's too much economic power, isn't it?

"Then in each industry, the big companies work together on prices and such. That's monopoly, isn't it?

"Bust up all this big-business monopoly, we say. Give little business a break. Give the workers a chance against all our economic power, by strengthening unions."

"But I thought . . ." I stuttered.

"You got us wrong, bud. Didn't you read our slogans? Can't you draw a logical conclusion?

"AS TO lower prices," Mr. $$$ went on, "we admit we were wrong about junking OPA and raising prices like we did. You've read our latest ads. You can draw conclusions.

"Lower prices to higher-paid customers—that's what'll bring prosperity.

"As to the right to work, we've told you we're for it. No more closing down our plants, a guaranteed annual wage, and more union security, so every worker can have a fair chance to work under decent conditions."

I MUST have fainted, for the next thing I was conscious of was a dull thud.

It was the morning paper being thrown against the door.

I woke to read that Senator Ball had drawn strange conclusions from his own eloquent words—that he'd introduced bills to impose the open shop, to reduce unions to small, isolated and powerless bargaining units, and to wreck the Wagner Act.

I read that big business and its politicians don't mean jobs for all by "the right to work," but open-shop scabherding; that they aren't "anti-monopolistic" for free competition to lower prices but for competition among workers to lower wages; and that all their bills are designed to increase the excessive economic power of big business at the expense of the workers.

MURRAY AWARD TO BRADLEY

$10,000 TO VETS FOR RADIOS

CIO Pres. Murray this week hailed Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Veterans Administrator, as the man who "humanized the Veterans Administration and made it a friend and counsellor of ex-GIs."

Murray's speech was delivered at a banquet at Washington when the CIO Natl. Community Services Committee presented Gen. Bradley with the Philip Murray award for the American making the most outstanding contribution to the welfare of the veteran during 1946.

Gen. Bradley, earlier in the day, received $10,000 from the CIO committee to purchase portable battery electric radios for 120 veterans hospitals chosen by the General's office.

Murray was unable to be present because of the steel wage talks in Pittsburgh. His speech was presented by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, who said:

"General Bradley has carried out his duties in such a way as to enhance the character of the men in whose behalf he serves. We feel he personally has been responsible for greater advances among veterans than any other single man."

Most People Aren't Fooled

A majority of those with opinions on the subject believe that industry can raise wages without raising prices, according to a Gallup Poll released this week.

To the question, "Do you think pay increases could be given by most factories without increasing the prices of the goods they make?" 47% answered yes, 40% no, and 13% had no opinion.

Correction

It has been called to the attention of The CIO NEWS that the figure of 118,010 Liberal Party votes reported in the Associated Press election survey and quoted in our editorial of January 6 does not correspond to the total number of votes cast. Executive Director Ben Davidson reports that the Party polled 183,000 votes.

Storm Trooper In Georgia

"IT is not my intention to cause disorder or violence," announced Ku Kluxer Herman Talmadge, contender for the Georgia governorship, just after he and his men had broken down the door to the executive office in a storm-trooper battle with Gov. Ellis Arnall's supporters last week.

This preview of how a junior Talmadge administration would function followed the decision of the state legislature to name young Talmadge governor on the basis of 675 write-in votes he received in the November election. Seventy-seven of the ballots were discovered at the last minute, allegedly "misplaced."

James V. Carmichael had received 667 write-ins. Carmichael, backed by liberal Gov. Arnall, had received more popular votes in the Democratic primary for governor than the deceased governor-elect, Eugene Talmadge, but lost on the basis of county unit votes.

Dispute over the governorship was caused by the recent death of white supremacy chief, Eugene Talmadge, Herman's father, before being sworn in this month. Had he lived to take the oath, M. E. Thompson, elected Lieutenant Governor, would have succeeded him.

Arnall has submitted his resignation, contingent upon Thompson's being named his successor, but will now retain the office until the Supreme Court, recognized as friendly to him, returns a decision.

If Talmadge is confirmed as governor, his first move will be to bar Negroes from the Democratic primaries, he has announced.

Carey Urges:

Security For All

"WE will continue to betray the peoples of the world as long as we insist on security for ourselves superior to the security of others."

Using that as his theme, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey urged the U. S. and other countries to move in the direction of establishing "law and justice" to "place the rights and interests of humanity above any group."

In a speech at the Time Magazine World Forum at Cleveland, at which governmental and people's leaders from several countries participated in a discussion of global problems, Carey declared:

"There is much talk of economic security, full employment and jobs. May I suggest that the fulfillment of those economic promises alone will not guarantee peace. Peace will come only when law is substituted for force, and when public opinion supports international law and international justice."

Carey laid great stress on CIO's affiliation with the World Federation of Trade Unions, "the one international organization that is working toward harmony and efficiency in improving the welfare of the people . . ."

"The WFTU is a people's forum, and in it we propose to raise our voices to demand what people must have in order to live in peace and harmony based in justice," he said.

"There is an official tendency on the part of the U. S. to ignore minority problems," Carey charged, "and that attitude carries over to American government attitudes on minority problems abroad."

Truman Says:

LAW TO GUARD LIBERTY NEEDED

THE U. S. needs federal legislation to guarantee that the civil rights of all people will be protected, Pres. Truman told his Committee on Civil Rights this week.

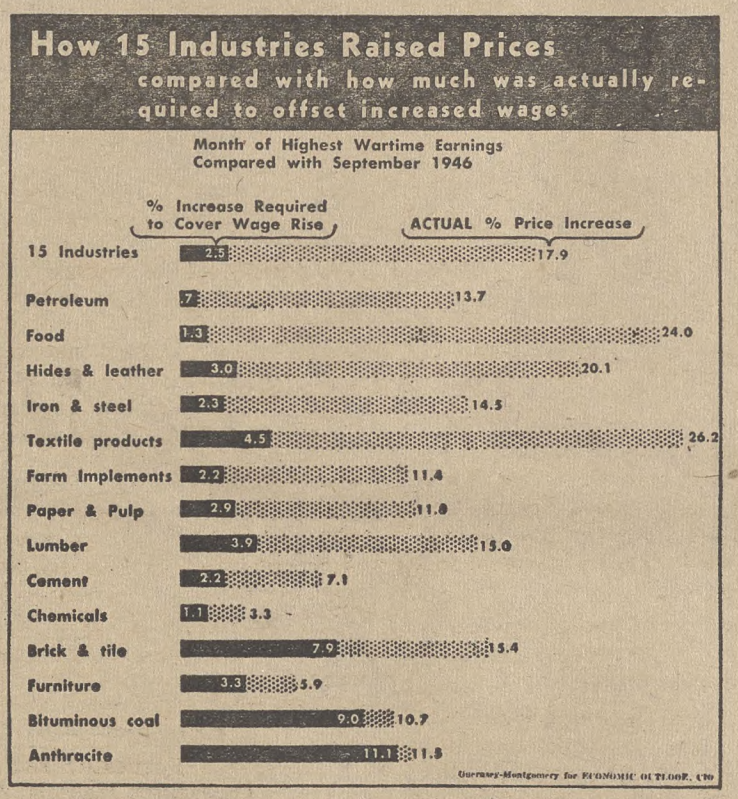
The Committee, created by Executive Order, is headed by Charles E. Wilson, president of the General Electric Co. CIO Sec. Treas. James B. Carey is a member.

Condemning a revival of racial and religious bigotry, Truman urged the Committee to start a grass roots campaign of opposition and indicated that the federal government will back it up.

The President said that while he believes in the sovereignty of local and state governments, "there are certain rights under the Constitution of the U. S. which I think the federal government has a right to protect."

Truman referred to a situation in 1922 when in Missouri "there was an organization in Jackson County that met on hills and burned crosses and worked behind sheets." He added: "There is a tendency in this country for that situation to develop again unless we do something to prevent it."

The Committee held a lengthy meeting after the President's talk, following which Wilson called on all organizations interested in civil liberties to forward their views to the group.



This chart, from the December CIO Economic Outlook, is based on an OPA study. It shows how industry hoodwinked the public with its propaganda about wage rises forcing up prices. The Outlook, published by the CIO Education & Research Dept., points out that price rises in many instances were the result of artificially created scarcities plotted by big business monopolies.

CIO ENTERS MINE CASE

FEDERAL court went far beyond its power in issuing an injunction against the United Mine Workers during the recent coal dispute, and if upheld the situation could lead to a complete breakdown of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction law, the CIO declared last week.

In a brief filed with the U. S. Supreme Court, Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, argued that the injunction should be set aside and the $3,510,000 fine against the mine union and its president should be wiped out.

The CIO brief argued that elimination of such evils, arising out of injunctions sought by either government or private parties, were the object of those two laws; that Congress, in passing those two acts as well as the Smith-Connally act—under which the mines were seized by the U. S.—specifically ruled out use of injunctions by the government in labor disputes; and that the mine situation was a labor dispute, rather than some mystic phase of federal sovereignty.

What reaction wants from Congress . . . and how big business proposals would seriously disrupt long-established and satisfactory collective bargaining negotiations are explained in this second installment of "The Drive Against Labor." The analysis of anti-labor legislation was prepared by the CIO Legal Dept., under the direction of General Counsel Lee Pressman.

WHEN the NAM urges that a combination of human beings who join a labor organization to advance their conditions of work is to be compared with a combination of profiteers seeking to gouge the public by joint price policies, the NAM is turning the clock of history backward.

The Thirteenth Amendment to the United States Constitution destroyed the institution of slavery and declared that the labor of human beings could not be considered in the same category as ordinary pieces of property, chattels or commodities. In 1914 the Clayton Act laid down a principle which no one has dared openly to deny in the years since, namely, that "the labor of a human being is not a commodity or article of commerce". The NAM today apparently doubts the truth of this principle.

Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, in charge of anti-trust prosecutions—a man who knows about monopoly problems—recently said:

"The monopoly problem is today more serious than at any time since the passage of the Sherman Act. If monopoly power follows its traditional course, we can expect higher prices, limitations on production, and a lowering in the level of employment. Monopoly power prevents the full utilization of our productive and human resources. It retards technological progress. It stifles the development of new enterprise. . . .

". . . The twin demands, 'hands off business' and 'curb labor' have long been the heart of the anti-democratic program of those who favor the corporate state. To say that labor unions shall be restrained while the march of monopoly is allowed to continue will result in the abandonment of industrial democracy. If industrial democracy is permitted to perish, our proud heritage of political freedom cannot survive."

THEY claim "the closed shop is un-American."

The closed shop is neither a new nor a rare feature of American labor relations. Workers in America have operated under closed shop contracts for over one hundred years.

As long as there has been collective bargaining there have been closed shop or union security contracts. Today approximately nine million American workers enjoy the benefits of union security contracts. Almost the entire steel industry works under union security contracts. Over 90% of the men and women's clothing industries do likewise. This type of contract also predominates in the fur, rubber, printing, maritime, electrical manufacturing, textile, and many other industries.

Without the closed shop it would be impossible to achieve industrial peace and stability. Impartial authorities on labor have for many years agreed that union security contracts promote industrial peace.

A study, "The Closed Shop," by Father Jerome L. Toner, formerly of Catholic University, draws the following instructive conclusions with respect to the benefits of closed shop contracts:

"1. Labor relations are considerably smoother as a result of the closed shop.

"2. Trade unions have demonstrated genuine responsibility under closed shop contracts, and have contributed substantially to the improvement of production.

"3. The closed shop will probably be the rule rather than the exception within the next decade."

It is obvious that once a union has no longer to fear for and fight for its security it is then able to turn its energies to a smoother operation of labor relations and to the achievement of industrial stability.

In addition, the constant frictions which occur when union members and non-union people work in the same plant, and when two rival unions are operating in the same plant, are eliminated under the union shop agreement. Many managements, recognizing these facts, have hastened to conclude such agreements.

Just as employers who are anxious to promote industrial peace in their plants have favored the closed shop, so opposition to the closed shop invariably is the program of employers who actually desire to destroy unions and collective bargaining.

It is a matter of record that the powerful anti-labor employers in this country who seek to destroy unionism disguise their objective behind the mask of opposition to the closed shop. This identity between anti-unionism and opposition to the closed shop is fully borne out both by the records of the LaFollette Committee as well as the records of the National Labor Relations Board.

It is no accident that the term "open shop" has come to be synonymous not merely with opposition to the closed shop but with complete hostility to unionism, violence against union organizers and union members, the use of strike-breakers, company thugs, and open industrial warfare. Legislative prohibition of union security would immediately give rise to a resumption of these pernicious practices.

A prohibition of union security would be an open invitation to all employers to destroy and cripple unions. A wave of industrial strife would thus be precipitated which would seriously injure the public welfare and promote bitterness in our labor relations for generations to come.

IT is highly significant that the most bitter opposition to union security comes from well-organized employers' organizations and associations such as the National Association of Manufacturers and the National Metal Trades Associations, rather than from free individual employers.

It is also significant that the same anti-labor employers who belong to these powerful employer associations actually use the closed shop technique to prevent bona fide labor organizations by signing back-door closed shop agreements with company unions which do not represent their employees.

These employers are obviously not opposed to the closed shop in principle, for they consistently resort to the closed shop when it suits their anti-union purposes. They only condemn the closed shop when it furnishes security to a bona fide labor organization. As Father Toner's study, referred to earlier, points out:

"Many of those employers who use the closed shop to frustrate genuine labor organization frown on it when they are asked to incorporate it into the standard union contract."

Union security rests upon a simple and unanswerable logic. A union in its collective bargaining is required by law to make a fair and just bargain for all members of the bargaining unit. It is actually illegal for the employer, through collective bargaining, to make better terms with the union for members of the union than is made for non-members. If the union is required, therefore, to perform its services for everyone, why should not those who receive the benefits of those services also share the obligations and the responsibilities of union membership?

Union security, therefore, is nothing more than the established American principle that those who share in benefits should share in responsibilities.

We would not dream of permitting individuals to evade their responsibilities as citizens by refusing to pay taxes. Why should the same individual be permitted to evade the responsibilities as a citizen of an industrial democracy by being permitted to remain outside of the union?

Moreover, while these proposals are usually offered under slogans about the "closed shop" they invariably outlaw any union security clause. Under maintenance of membership clauses, for example, employees are free to decide whether or not to join a union but are required only to accept the principle that if they do join they remain bound for the duration of the contract. These clauses, too, the proposals would prohibit.

THOSE who oppose the closed shop frequently mouth phrases about compulsion. Yet these same individuals ignore the fact that a union security clause in a contract between an employer and a labor organization is the result of free collective bargaining. To empower the government to step in and actually to prohibit real collective bargaining is compulsion and regimentation at its worst.

In the American free enterprise economy there is nothing more basic than the freedom of contract. To deprive a labor organization and an employer of the freedom to make a contract for union security is an undemocratic attack upon a basic right.

Those who attack the closed shop and other union security clauses so vehemently also try to give the impressions that such clauses tie the unions into unions forever. Actually the Wagner Act, so much attacked and misrepresented by these same people, gives the workers complete freedom, regardless of closed shop clauses, to express a full and free choice on union preference at the end of each term of the contract, if they so desire.

Because legislative prohibition of the closed shop would promote industrial warfare; because it repudiates the American principle that those who receive benefits should be required to share responsibilities; because such legislation is a drastic interference with freedom of contract and with free collective bargaining, such legislation is unsound and dangerous.

It is not the closed shop which is un-American. On the contrary, opposition to union security rests upon principles which are fundamentally un-American.

In the never-ending war upon labor unions and upon free collective bargaining, the organized anti-union employers of this country and their Congressional spokesmen employ one familiar technique. They invent an imaginary evil in labor relations and then propose a "cure" which if adopted would result in profound injury to sound labor relations and in a weakening of labor organizations themselves.

Typical of this technique is the frequently advanced proposal that labor organizations be made suable. The argument is made that labor organizations are not at present suable and therefore they should be made suable "in order to make them responsible."

In the first place, this type of proposal is based upon an assumption which is completely false and deliberately intended to smear labor. The proposal assumes that unions, and unions alone, frequently violate collective bargaining agreements and therefore should be made subject to some special redress.

What are the facts?

Is this proposal supposed to solve any labor problems revealed in the experience of post-war strikes?

In not one of the major CIO strikes was there a violation of a collective bargaining contract or any other type of obligation. In contrast, it was the General Motors Corporation which rejected the award made by a fact-finding board appointed by the President; it was the U. S. Steel Corporation which rejected a settlement suggestion of the President himself; and it was the Westinghouse Corporation which was denounced by two prominent conciliators for its provocative and unreasonable prolongation of the strikes.

Is this proposal supposed to deal with some long-standing problem of contract violation?

It should be realized that every one of the thousands of arbitration awards each year which uphold union grievances is a decision that an employer has violated a contract. On the record, therefore, there are hundreds of proven employer violations for each alleged union violation.

Whether the union or the employer is a violator, court litigation will not establish good labor relations. But it is significant to realize that these labor baiters are trying mainly to establish a false public impression unfavorable to unions.

This type of proposal seeks to smear unions in still another way. It assumes that unions are in a class apart from employers and enjoy a special privilege under the law. The plain fact is that unions are suable for any breach of their obligations.

There is not a single state in the United States in which a union may not be sued for breach of a collective bargaining agreement. In 24 states, express statutes have been passed making a union suable either in its common name or through officers, such as the president or the secretary, designated by the statute. In the remaining states unions are suable in these cases upon the basis of some other type of statute or established common law principles.

BUT the real purpose of those who are pressing for an amendment "to make unions suable" is not merely to smear labor organizations and to create in the minds of the public the idea that labor is irresponsible both in fact and in law.

Their purpose goes beyond this. Anyone who is familiar with the field of labor relations recognizes that a lawsuit is the simplest and most effective way to destroy harmonious labor relationships.

Employers and labor organizations with a bona fide desire to live in peace and harmony strive in every way possible to free themselves of legalistic technicalities. There can never be good relations between an employer and a labor organization if a law suit is the end product of a breach of a collective bargaining agreement.

A collective bargaining agreement is not an ordinary type of contract. It is a contract which is designed to promote a continuing amicable relationship between an employer and the labor organization of his employes. Because of their special nature and purpose, labor agreements have developed their own special form of redress for breach, namely a grievance procedure.

The sheer chaos which would result if labor organization or employer, instead of filing grievances under the contract, sued in a court of law for violations of the contract is indescribable.

Those who would invite the parties to a collective bargaining relationship to substitute for the grievance procedure resort to law suits must be condemned as disrupters and troublemakers. It is easy to see that this proposal, innocent on its face and addressed to a pretended evil for which, if it existed, there would be already available a completely adequate cure, really has a sinister and dangerous objective.

This type of proposal serves as a

THE optician is one of the most skilled professionals in America. It takes years to acquire the necessary skill and knowledge of a first rate optician. Five years is judged the minimum for a "journeyman," and ten years to qualify as a "mechanic."

With their union contract these men work a 40-hour, five-day week, have two and three weeks' vacation with pay, and an average of ten holidays with pay. They have group health insurance to which employers contribute 3½%. It is administered by the union.

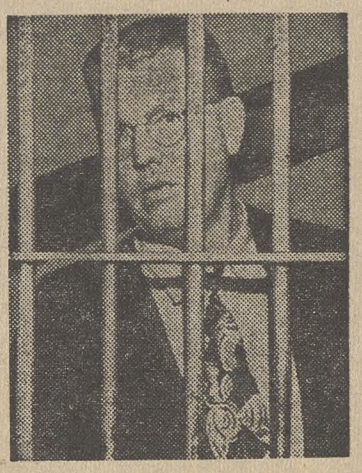
GOVERNMENT BY INJUNCTION AT WORK IN LOS ANGELES

By CHARLEY ELLIS

LOS ANGELES jails this week claimed another victim in labor's long battle against injunctions when Philip M. Connelly, Los Angeles CIO Council secretary, voluntarily surrendered to begin serving a 60-day sentence handed him last September for allegedly violating an anti-picketing court injunction.

Connelly's conviction followed his arrest last Jan. 17 during the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers strike at U. S. Motors plant. The CIO leader, now in his eighth term as secretary of the Los Angeles Council, was first picked off the UE picket line as the police charged the pickets. He was the first arrested and the first tried.

Though 22 other pickets arrested in the mass police attack on strikers were let off on payment of fines, the same judge sentenced Connelly to a fine and the jail term.



PHILIP M. CONNELLY

Los Angeles CIO Council Secretary serving 60-day sentence on charge of violating an injunction.

An appellate court upheld the sentence.

Connelly's decision not to appeal his case to the U. S. Supreme Court was founded on the opinion that the high court might uphold the lower court's decision on the basis of the perjured police testimony of "violence," and that such upholding of the conviction would imperial previous Supreme Court rulings buttressing labor's rights.

Protests from leading community, CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhood and political figures greeted the news of Connelly's jailing. All declared their disagreement with the conviction and jailing and urged immediate working labor unity to stop such court attacks on organized labor.

FTA CONCLAVE ASKS SUBSTANTIAL HIKE

THE CIO Food & Tobacco Workers holding their sixth national convention at Philadelphia this week endorsed the CIO Wage policy and called for substantial wage increases for its members with ending of women's pay inequities.

Donald Henderson was re-elected president. Other officers elected are: Harold J. Lane, secretary-treasurer; Luis Moreno, Calif.; Armanda Ramirez, N. Y. City, World War II veteran, and Robert Lathan, Winston-Salem, vice-presidents, and John Tiesa, Spanish, Republican War and World War II veteran, director of organization. Only new officer is Lathan.

The union adopted a resolution rejecting red baiting or any other form of witch hunts in or outside the union as an opening wedge for employer-inspired disruption.

Henderson reported that despite the gain of $25 million won for workers under FTA contracts since V-J day, these increases have been "more than wiped out" by the rising cost of living, while profits in the food, tobacco and fiber industries have gone up much faster than those of other industries.

To meet the "attack on labor, the 'get tough' policy with friendly nations, the arms race and the preparations for new tariff wars" American labor and FTA-CIO must engage in two main campaigns, the report said:

"One is the strengthening of world labor unity through the World Federation of Trade Unions.

"Second-and no less imperative—is the fight against reactionary control of the foreign and domestic policies of this country.

"On the national scale, our union must fight for higher wages and for job security, not only for immediate needs but also to prepare against economic collapse as well.

Speaking of CIO Political Action, Henderson declared that "the answer to the setback we received must be more, not less, political action, and specifically, the same kind of organized activity on the political front that we engage in on the economic front.

The FTA president praised CIO Pres. Philip Murray for his appeal to the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods to join the CIO in working out a program to meet the attacks of labor's foes.

OFFICE WORKERS ASK 30% HIKE

THE CIO Office & Professional Workers last week pledged a fight for increases of 30% to $15 a week, whichever is greater, to restore white collar living standards to 1939 levels.

The UOPWA declared that the plight of these workers is "approaching a national calamity."

The statement came from the union's Executive Board and 150 delegates attending a policy conference, and called for support for the CIO's demand for increases for industrial workers because such increases "will have salutary effects upon the earnings of all sections of the population."

The union's collective bargaining demands will be put forward as part of an accelerated organization drive. Noting an increase toward unionism among white collar workers to meet economic pressures, UOPWA said it had signed up 15,000 new members in the last two months.

The conference also unanimously adopted a "unity for action" statement aimed at clarifying the executive board's recent declaration of policy on communism and an accompanying statement by Pres. Lewis Merrill.

Pointing out that the union has always respected "the democratic rights of our members" and that the UOPWA constitution provides for participation and leadership in its affairs "regardless of race, color, or religious or political beliefs," the statement said:

"In the interests of our membership, we therefore clarify the recent GEB declaration of policy and accompanying personal statement which lend themselves to misunderstanding, and which were used by the press in an effort to create a 'witch-hunt' atmosphere in our union. We are united in our determination that there will not be that effect . . ."

FUR WORKERS BACK UNITY CALL

PRES. B. Gold of the CIO Fur & Leather Workers this week endorsed CIO Pres. Philip Murray's call for labor unity at the semi-annual meeting of the union's Executive Board at Atlantic City.

The Board heard reports of district and regional directors showing that wage increases of more than $16 million annually were won since last May.

Gold hailed the success of the CIO convention in defeating splitting efforts.

He said that if labor should fail to unite its ranks to fight the trusts, reactionaries would undermine the labor movement, deprive the American people of their democratic rights "and bring about the most tragic crisis this country has ever seen, and pave the way for fascism and world war slaughter."

Attacking the host of anti-labor bill introduced in Congress, Gold declared that when the spokesmen for monopolies charge that trade unions are monopolies, their real intent is "to enact laws that would enable the monopolists and their courts to destroy the economic, political and cultural activities of the labor movement."

AFL LEADER JOINS IN UNITY PLEA

The CIO is not alone in its demand for labor unity to meet its foes.

Pres. Morris Klein of the N. Y. City Branch of the AFL Railway Mail Assn., in an editorial on his organization's publication, expresses the hope that "labor will respond to the magnificent appeal of CIO Pres. Philip Murray for unity in the struggles ahead.

OIL WORKERS FILE STRIKE PETITIONS

Strike petitions under the Smith-Connally Act were filed this week with the Labor Dept. by the CIO Oil Workers against all major oil companies and many smaller ones in California.

The petitions were filed following the failure of the companies to negotiate the union's request for a 25-cent wage increase. The union's policy committee will meet at Fort Worth, Tex., Feb. 3, to consider next steps to be taken in obtaining the pay boost.

Cafeteria Workers Win Demand

The eight-day lock-out of 2,300 members of the CIO Public Workers employed in cafeterias in U. S. government buildings in Washington was settled this week when the Government Services, private operator of the cafeterias, bowed to the union's demand for arbitration.

The workers were locked out Jan. 6 after they rejected management's offer of an 8½c an hour increase. The average wage of the GSI employes is a little more than $20 a week.

TO PUT IT BRIEFLY

Sec. Arthur Riordan of the Philadelphia-Camden CIO Newspaper Guild narrowly escaped injury this week when four hoodlums threw a half-dozen bottles filled with paint and nails through the windows of his home.

The Guild is in strike against the Philadelphia Record and the Camden Courier & Post. The Record reported the day following the attack that similar missiles were thrown at the homes of three executives of the struck papers.

The Guild, which had called on Federal and local authorities for a probe in the first attack, matched management's offer of $1,000 reward for the arrest and conviction of the vandals in the second series of alleged attacks.

The CIO Office & Professional Workers this week completed a contract with the N. Y. Exchange, Monogram Pictures, increasing the weekly pay of front office workers by $6 to $8 a week.

The CIO Natl. Maritime Union has served notice under the Railway Labor Act that it intends to strike the car ferries of the Pere Marquette, Ann Arbor, Grand Trunk Western and Wabash Railroads Feb. 2. The union said the railroads have refused to consider any of its demands in negotiations in progress since last August.

The CIO Auto Workers this week called on Sec. of the Treasury John Snyder to deny tax carry-back privileges to the J. I. Case Co., Racine, Wis., where the union has been on strike since Dec. 26, 1945.

The union pointed out that the NLRB had found the company had caused the stoppage by violation of the Labor Relations Act, and hence the firm had forfeited its rights under the carry-back law.

Harvey O'Connor, Publicity Director, OWIU-CIO, reports: OWIU maintained its bargaining rights for Magnolia Pipe Line employes by a bigger vote than in the original election a year ago. OWIU-CIO got 687 votes to 259 for the Associated Petroleum Employes, which petitioned for the election. OWIU increased its vote by 200. Magnolia is a subsidiary of Socony-Vacuum, one of the Standard Oil giants. Negotiations for renewal of the contract with a 25c hourly wage increase, postponed by the stalling tactics of the independent union, will be resumed immediately.

The campaign was conducted by Arthur Seigfried and Arthur Cross, president and secretary respectively of the Oklahoma IUC, assisted by CIO Field Rep. Gobel F. Cravens.

Natl. CIO Adolph Germer returned from his duties in Paris, France, as Assistant Secretary of the World Federation of Trade Union. He arrived here on December 24, and will sail for Paris on January18. Germer, who has quite an interesting story to tell about the activities of the trade union movement in Europe, is in charge of trade union activities in the colonies throughout the world for WFTU.

He visited other European countries, including Germany, and met with the officials of the unions in these areas. His many friends wish him well. I know that if it takes diligence and hard work his efforts will be a success.

The enemies of labor in Congress have their axes out in an attempt to do a vicious job on organized labor. Tragically so, the Teamsters Union, through their raiding tactics and boycotts against the CIO Brewery Workers, who have had bonafied contracts for many years in the breweries involved, are not helping Labor's cause any. But, they are playing in the hands of our enemies.

The CIO is on the alert. Its officers and members everywhere will render every support to defeat these unjust and unwarranted attempts to shackle labor. Now is the time to increase organizing activities. It is the main task of the CIO today. In order to safeguard the liberties and in order to safeguard the security already obtained and improve them, the millions of unorganized workers must be brought into the fold of our movement, the bulwark of democracy.

TRUMAN ASKS $3.5 MILLION MORE TO EASE NLRB LOAD

RECOGNIZING the importance of a smoothly functioning NLRB to keeping industrial peace, Pres. Truman in his budget message late last week recommended an increase in the NLRB appropriation for the fiscal year 1948 of $3.5 million.

Calling attention to the NLRB's backlog of unfinished cases and increased work load, caused by an increased number of representation and unfair labor practice cases, on top of a drastic 1947 budget cut, Truman said:

"The program submitted in this budget is designed to reduce the backlog and keep the NLRB more nearly current in handling cases. This should diminish the incidence of strike action by labor organizations which is encouraged by tardy handling of cases."

The message explained that the backlog climbed 42% during the fiscal year 1946, and by an additional 23% during the first quarter of fiscal year 1947 (July-Sept. 1946). During recent months, it said, the influx of new cases was 42% above the previous year's record.

"Because of this lag," it was explained, "labor organizations are impelled to resort to strike action as a defense against unfair labor practices and in order to establish proof of majority representation for purposes of collective bargaining, rather than invoke the judicial procedures of the NLRB."

Truman called for an appropriation of $7,984,000 for the coming year's NLRB operations. The 1947 appropriation was $4,070,000, to which an additional $412,000 is expected as a supplementary appropriation. The 1947 amount represented a considerable drop from the 1946 figure of $4,308,000.

TENNESSEE BOSSES BELIEVED BACKING MOB VIOLENCE

A mob of 150 men believed to have been inspired by anti-union companies this week broke up the picket line at the Henry I. Siegel shirt factory at Brucetin, Tenn., and ordered two women organizers of the CIO Clothing Workers to leave town.

The day before the organizers, Miss Eula McGill of Birmingham and Miss Mary Morgan of Knoxville, were ordered by a mob of 150 men to leave town, armed men assisted by two plant foremen, one of them also carrying a gun, had driven a flying wedge in the picket line.

Twenty-three union members, three of them women, whose sole offense was to protect themselves from this onslaught, were arrested.

On the scene, Vice-Pres. Gladys Dickason of the ACW gave three reasons why she believed that the violence was inspired anti-union bosses. Miss Dickason is also vice-chairman of the CIO Southern Organizing Committee.

She said that she doubted whether Floyd Lindel Cole, spokesman for the mob of 150, had enough intelligence to tip off the Associated Press that there would be a story.

Anti-union employers are believed by the Clothing Workers to have been back of the mob that this week ordered Miss Eula McGill (left) Birmingham, and Miss Mary Morgan, Knoxville, from Bruceton, Tenn., where workers at the Siegel plant are on strike.

Furthermore, she said, it was reported that the assailants of the union members would be represented by an anti-union attorney.

Another evidence of the planned character of the action against the union was a false radio report that union members were converging on Bruceton to come to the aid of the strikers.

The average wage of workers at the Bruceton plant is 55c an hour. They went on strike after Siegel, informed that the union had signed up a majority of workers at the plant, broke an appointment to meet with union officials, Miss Dickason said. The union had earlier lost an NLRB election at the plant.

Siegel's workers at his nearby Dickson plant are also on strike following the failure of the management to negotiate a contract.

"The mob action in Bruceton against Miss McGill and Miss Mary Morgan, "declared Frank Rosenbloom, ACW vice president and director of organization, "if tolerated by State and federal authorities, bodes ill for the constitutional liberties not only of laboring people but of the rest of the community. Today it may be an assault upon the rights of trade unionists; tomorrow it will be against other American groups.

"Since the Amalgamated won a National Labor Relations Board election in the Henry I. Siegel plant at Dickson, in Feb. 1943, the firm, by every subterfuge, has sought to avoid genuine collective bargaining and continues to seek the perpetuation of sweatshop conditions in its Southern plants.

"The National War Labor Board, as long ago as April 19, 1944, issued a directive ordering the firm to comply with its decisions, but the firm refused to do so. It issued a second directive on Dec. 19, 1944, reaffirming its original order, and yet the Henry I. Siegel firm refused to obey and bargain in good faith with ACW."

CONTRACT discussions among the CIO Steelworkers and five big steel companies were getting under way as The CIO NEWS went to press. U. S. Steel talks, scheduled for Jan. 15, were postponed by mutual agreement until sometime the next week.

The five firms with whom discussions are opening include: Bethlehem at N. Y. City; Jones & Laughlin at Pittsburgh, Youngstown Sheet & Tube at Youngstown, Ohio; Republic Corp., at Cleveland, and Inland Steel at Chicago.

Meanwhile, Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray, and Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald served strike notices on 1,000 basic and fabricating steel plants, and aluminum and related plants, whose contracts expire around Feb. 15.

At Washington, U. S. Conciliation Dir. Edgar L. Warren pointed out that the notices were formal compliance with the Smith-Connally Act and added: "The government has full confidence that both the union and the companies will make every effort to conclude peacefully a mutually satisfactory agreement."

The notices affect about 720,000 USA members union. About 130,000 others are covered by contracts which expire later.

$55 MILLION WON BY TEXTILE UNION

Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers this week served notice on the Southern cotton industry that the union will seek the next round of increase from it, as he announced that within the past month 200,000 workers in the three major divisions of the textile industry have won pay boosts that will aggregate $55 million a year.

Rieve declared that of the 160 cotton mills under contract in the South only two have so far matched the 10c an hour raise granted by North cotton manufacturers.

TRANSPORT SERVICE WINS BOARD VOICE

The CIO Transport Service Employes has become the 23rd standard railroad labor organization following a decision by Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach which granted the CIO union the status of a participating organization in the selection of labor members on the Natl. Railroad Adjustment Board.

The UTSE campaign for a voice in the selection of labor members on the board dates back to 1939 when Sec. of Labor Perkins established a 3-man committee to study the union's demands.

NMU ASKS ARBITRATION

THE CIO Natl. Maritime Union wired Sec. of Labor B. Schwellenbach this week asking him to appoint an arbitrator in its demand for a 25% wage increase from Atlantic and gulf coast ship operators.

NMU Treas. M. Hedley Stone said the 15-day negotiation period provided for under a wage review clause in its contract had expired and no further meetings with the American Merchant Marine Institute were scheduled.

Stone pointed out that similar demands were being made by the CIO American Communications Assn. on the Atlantic, gulf and west coasts and the Natl. Union of Marine Cooks & Stewards and the Marine Firemen Oilers Watertenders & Wipers, independent, on the west coast. He suggested the cases be consolidated into one national arbitration proceeding to insure industry stability.

pretext for smearing unions; it serves as a pretext for ruining prospects of industrial peace between employer and employe. It frequently serves an additional purpose.

PROPOSALS which pretend that they seek only to make it possible to sue a union, frequently contain cleverly wrapped up within them rules which not only encourage suits against unions but make unions liable for things for which they are not properly responsible.

To understand this problem let us go back a bit. In the darkest days of anti-unionism in this country, when the government and the courts set their hands against the unions and aided the employer in destroying them, it was a simple thing to make a union liable for the act of any member.

Unions were regarded as conspiracies, and, when a member or a minor officer violated a law, the union and all of the members were made to suffer upon the theory that they were all in the "conspiracy."

It was this kind of thinking which led judges to impose enormous fines upon unions and to make the members of unions responsible for acts which they had never authorized or participated in.

On the basis of this type of thinking it was relatively easy to destroy a union. All the employer had to do was to plant in the union ranks a spy who would deliberately, contrary to the instructions of union leaders, commit unlawful acts for the purpose of bringing discredit upon the union and of making its officers and members liable for damages.

In order forever to banish this type of abuse laws were passed, such as the Federal Norris-LaGuardia Act, which expressly provided that neither the officers nor members of labor organizations could be held liable for unlawful acts of members or agents of those organizations unless there was clear proof that the acts had been either participated in or authorized by the officers or members. Many of the states passed similar laws.

Today, in most states of the United States as well as in the federal courts, liability is imposed upon unions and their members, but only when it is fair to do so, namely, when there has been actual participation in or authorization by the officers or members of the organization.

Most proposals, however, which pretend to deal solely with the suability of unions also change this basic principle of liability. By clever phrases and trick clauses these proposals would once again make innocent union members the prey of enormous money judgments incurred through the irresponsible and unauthorized acts of others, who frequently are commissioned to perform their acts by unscrupulous employers bent on destroying the union.

There is no need for a law to make unions liable. The major purpose of such a proposal is to undermine peaceful labor relations and destroy unions.

THEY propose: "Make labor unions bargain collectively," "let's have a cooling off period before strikes . . ."

These are two convenient slogans under which a large number of proposals of various sorts have been made. The Case Bill had extensive provisions for a "cooling-off" period. The NAM in its proposals sets forth as a declaration of principle that the union as well as the employer should be obligated by law to bargain collectively.

These are appealing words but what do they mean? What are the specific proposals which are made under cover of these slogans?

First, let us take a look at the slogans.

"Make unions bargain collectively," says the NAM. Is this intended to create the impression that unions refuse to bargain collectively while it is the employers who are insisting on collective bargaining? To recognize this for the sheer nonsense it is, one need only stop for a moment and think about what the word "collective" bargaining means.

For generations it was the practice of employers to deal with each individual worker, to offer to each worker the wages which the employer would pay, and to hire or fire the worker on the employer's own conditions. That was individual bargaining.

Unions came into being because the workers sought equality in bargaining power with the employer. They could not hope for that equality in individual bargaining. The union was a means of substituting collective bargaining in place of individual bargaining.

In other words collective bargaining is the opposite of individual bargaining, and collective bargaining is the very purpose for the existence of labor unions. A labor union by its very nature cannot bargain otherwise than collectively.

That is the very purpose and intent of the much maligned Wagner Act. It requires that the employer bargain collectively with the organization which the workers have established for collective bargaining. The Act does not require the employer to yield to the worker on any condition of employment; it requires only that the employer meet with the union if the workers so desire and bargain with the union as the collective bargaining agency.

Does the NAM now mean to imply that employers are insisting on collective bargaining but the unions are insisting on a return to individual bargaining? Is that what the NAM means when it says, "Make unions bargain collectively?" Clearly that would be nonsensical; and equally clearly, if unions were doing that, the NAM would not be complaining.

In another implication, which is equally without sense and equally unjustified, the slogan seems to imply that unions are refusing to bargain with the employer, while the employers are making every effort to engage in bargaining in good faith with the unions. If this is what the slogan means, does it imply that unions should be required to yield or compromise their position at the bargaining table? We have already pointed out that the Wagner Act does not require employers to yield. To require unions to do so would obviously be unfair and unjust.

THIS implication that unions are refusing to bargain is similar to that which underlies the equally widespread call by anti-labor groups for legislation to make unions engage in a cooling-off period before calling a strike.

Both slogans try very hard to create a public impression that unions are unreasoning groups of men who insist upon rushing into strike action without careful deliberation, without considered and reasonable bargaining, and without reckoning the cost to themselves and the community. "Therefore," say these sloganeers, "make these unions cool off before they call the strikes; make them bargain in good faith before they call the strikes."

Do the facts justify any such implications?

In 1946 there were some four or five major strikes which were widely recognized as representing the main core of the strike crisis of the early part of the year. There was a strike in steel; there was a strike in the automobile industry; there was a strike in the electrical industry. Were any of these strikes the result of hot-headed and impulsive action by labor unions? Were any of these strikes the outgrowth of any failure of the unions to make every effort to engage in reasonable collective bargaining? Were any of these strikes called in the face of reasonable employer efforts to bargain collectively?

In the steel strike the demands initially presented by the union were delivered to the employers in October of 1945. They were negotiated for the succeeding months and no strike was scheduled or contemplated or announced before the middle of January in 1946.

Even at that time at the request of the President the strike was postponed for an additional week. When the President made his recommendation as to the proposed terms of settlement it was the union which accepted the President's proposal; it was the employer who rejected the proposed settlement terms.

In fact, while we are discussing unreasonable arrogance, it is well to remember that before the steel strike, it was the U. S. Steel Corporation which twice turned down requests from the Secretary of Labor that they meet with him to discuss the impending strike.

In the automobile industry the negotiations preceding the General Motors strike took better than 60 days. In that strike, too, when a fact finding Board recommended certain terms of settlement it was the union which accepted and the employer which rejected the proposal.

In the electrical industry the negotiations preceding the calling of any strike were as extensive as those in each of the other two industries.

In that strike, too, it was the union which expressed complete willingness to settle the entire dispute on the basis of recommended national policy; it was the employer who persisted in prolonging the strike before finally accepting the terms suggested by objective anthorities, terms which the union had been willing to accept many weeks earlier. It was the employer alone, as federal conciliators themselves declared, who obstructed settlement for an extensive period of time.

Does this establish a record of union unreasonableness in the face of employers' willingness to bargain? Or does it point out that despite the best efforts and intentions of the Wagner Act employers are still in a position where they can make a sham of the collective bargaining process by engaging in all the forms of negotiations while at the same time obstructing any reasonable settlement?

On these facts who but the NAM could be expected to come forward with a proposal that unions be subjected to special and additional restraints and requirements rather than the employers who were responsible, on the record, for the prolongation of each and every one of the major disputes of 1946?

"It's back to the graveyard for me. I can't find a house to haunt."—Fred Wright.

New York City teachers sign pledges to participate in mass demonstration staged by CIO Teachers' Union during the Board of Education public budget hearing last week.

$16.19 A Week In Mississippi

LOW PAY—ANGRY TEACHERS

AMERICA'S teachers are finding they can't live on professional dignity.

They are "kicked around and ignored," as Sen. Theodore F. Green (D. R. L.) puts it, receiving less in most cases than the town's street cleaners or waitresses, forced to make a meagre fixed paycheck go as far with a 53.9 per cent rise in prices as it did before the war.

They are leaving the classrooms at an alarming rate. And those that remain are up in arms at weekly earnings, which in Mississippi, for instance, reach the ridiculous average of $16.19.

During the past seven years a third of our educators have left the classroom. Teachers' strikes—of which there were only 20 in the entire 72 years between 1870 and 1942—have begun to mushroom. Membership in teachers' unions is swelling.

In the past few months teachers have walked out in St. Paul, Minn.; Paterson, N. J.; Portsmouth, Ohio; Wilkes-Barre, Pa.; Shamokin, Pa., McMinnville and Warren County, Tenn.; Muscoda, Wisc., and Norwalk, Conn. And members of the CIO's Teachers' Union division of the United Public Workers in New York and Chicago are becoming increasingly irritated and restless.

ATTEMPTING to buck Gov. Thomas Dewey's insistence on maintaining large surpluses in the state treasury as a personal plum to point out at election time, New York City's Teachers' Union has rallied wide support for demands of a $1050 increase.

Recommendations of Governor Dewey's "fact-finding" committee, calling for a $2,000 annual minimum and a state grant of $300 per teacher to each school district, were dubbed "a monstrous fraud."

The proposed minimum, they point out, would be $700 less than the minimum wage the state pays its street cleaners, also members of the UPWA-CIO. The $300 would not constitute a raise for NYC teachers, but would serve only to compensate the city for a raise previously given.

While industrial earnings rose 79% during the war, teachers' salaries over the country increased only 31%. In 1941 the average pay for teachers was $1,470 a year. Last year it was $1,988, including principals and supervisors. It would have taken a salary of $2,100 a year in 1946 to buy what a $1,470 salary would have bought in 1941.

It is easy to understand, therefore, why the American teacher is vanishing. 350,000 have joined the mass exodus since 1939. For one-sixth of these, there have been no replacements. Others have been succeeded by unqualified teachers holding emergency certificates. Some of the rural schools in Wisconsin, Maine, New Hampshire, Vermont, Texas and other states were closed because of lack of teachers.

And in all the classrooms that remained open, there was the overcrowding, the tired, overworked teacher—and there was the child, who in later years would suffer from the neglect.

WHAT is the solution? According to the CIO Teachers' Union, the states are now enjoying the biggest surpluses in history. The present crisis makes it essential that this money be allotted to education.

It is obvious, however, that the low-income states cannot compete in educational expenditure with the wealthier ones. There is, therefore, growing pressure for passage of a federal aid to education bill.

There is crying need, too, for passage in each state of a minimum wage law for civil employes. Such a move in Mississippi, for instance, would correct the situation in which Negro teachers average less than $300 a year.

These three moves are immediately essential, says the TU, if a collapse of the entire education system is to be averted.

California has made the first all-out effort to correct the injustice done her educators by passing a constitutional amendment fixing teachers' salaries at a $2,400 minimum, highest in the country. New York State's minimum is $1,200.

With pressure from teachers' unions, indignant citizens and unmanned—or inadequately manned—classrooms, states are beginning to move in the right direction.

Meanwhile, the profession has lost its appeal; fewer and fewer students plan to make education their life work. And as the supply of teachers diminishes, the first batch of war babies enters the first grade.

LABOR FILM CO. IS FORMED

California has made place for one more film producer—Labor Films, which has begun to make documentary sound films on labor subjects.

First picture, "The Redwood Story," shows working conditions in the lumber industry, pictures the lumber strike which was climaxed by CIO-AFL demonstrations of unity at Fort Bragg, N. C.

Founded by three union men—two carpenters and a radio announcer—the company is planning films on housing, FEPC, and as a campaign document for 1948, one showing effects of a Republican regime upon the country.

The films are particularly suitable for union use. Information or the films may be had by addressing Lou Hartman, 2433 Carleton St., Berkeley, Calif.

VIRGINIA OUTLAWS UNION SECURITY

THE Virginia Legislature this week led the battle of big business vs. labor on a state level.

Both the Senate and House of Delegates passed by large majorities bills outlawing the closed shop in intrastate commerce and banning strikes in public utilities until the state could take over the industry involved. The bills, suggested by Governor Tuck, await his approval.

Virginia thus will shortly become the sixth state to outlaw contracts providing for union security. Laws in five other states are being tested, but have not yet reached the Supreme Court.

In several other states bills are pending which would outlaw union security either by the closed, union shop or by maintence of membership, would require unions to file financial statements, and would ban jurisdictional strikes or those against public utilities.

The Virginia proposals were sharply opposed by CIO leaders, including Reg. Dir. Ernest Pugh, State CIO Council Pres. Charles C. Webber, Boyd E. Payton, upper south director for the Textile Workers, and Eugene Cotton, assistant CIO general counsel.

They declared the public utilities bill was unconstitutional, and the anti-union security bill would lead to chaos in what have been orderly union-management relations.

UAW TO STRESS 'KNOW-HOW'

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, former OPA Administrator Chester Bowles and Edward L. Bernays, public relations expert, will participate in the third annual Intl. Education Conference and Fair of the CIO Auto Workers Jan. 24-26 in Cleveland, Ohio.

Marking the end of the union's "tooling-up period," the Conference is scheduled to do away with educational activity separate and apart from regular union activity and to channel it instead into the "main stream of union activities," according to Education Director Victor Reuther.

Delegates will receive practical training in the techniques of union education designed to aid in the achievement of major union goals. Public relations, publications, public opinion polls, union counselling, social security, collective bargaining and leadership training—all will receive thorough treatment and demonstration.

Laboratories and workshop session will be scheduled twice to enable delegates to attend four complete courses.

To top it off, delegates will have an opportunity to give vent to their union spirit at an evening carnival where there will be group singing and dancing.

Southern Clergy And Labor Plan Parley

Southern churchmen and labor representatives will meet in Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 4-5 to further integrate the activities of religion and labor toward achieving "a social order of divine justice and an abundant life."

The Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation conference, initiated by Van Bittner, director of the CIO southern organizing drive, has invited leading southern churchmen to attend the meeting, which will emphasize the responsibility of the church toward labor.

Co-chairmen of the organization are Kermit Eby, director of the CIO Dept. of Education & Research, and Thornton W. Merriam.

Sprucing Up

PRETTY HANDS

By HANNA SHERMAN

NOT all of us are blessed with long tapering fingers and pretty oval nails. But we can all have hands that we are not ashamed of.

Remember that hands are on view every time you smoke a cigarette, lift a glass, reach for the telephone, and of course, whenever you use them to emphasize your conversation with gestures. You just can't hide them. And hands respond so quickly to consistent care that it's a pity to see them neglected.

If you do housework, work in a factory, or handle carbon paper, there are still ways of keeping your hands lovely looking without adding too much time to your already over-crowded schedule.

Let's see now what your trouble is. Maybe you'll find the answers in these suggestions to keep at your finger tips. In this winter season, are your hands rough and dry? Then mix toilet lanolin with your cold cream in the palm of your hand and rub this mixture all over your hands as though lathering them. Do this every day before bathing and see the improvement. For serious cases of roughness and redness, leave this cream mixture on your hands overnight, covered by a pair of loose white cotton gloves.

Some jobs are messy. For those jobs that are hard on your hands, why not try one of the good protective creams that you can buy nowadays? When smoothed over the skin, it forms an invisible protective film. When you finally wash it off, your hands emerge smooth and silky. Rubbing your nails across a cake of soap will keep them from getting too dirty.

Do your nails split? Drink more milk. Calcium is wonderful for nail health. And for this condition, many experts swear by white iodine. It should be applied all around the cuticle and under the nail. They say that split nails will clear up like magic.

ONE of the simple tricks for nail beauty, good in grandmother's day and still good, is the practice of buffing the nails before applying the polish. Buffing does for the nails what brushing does for your hair. Also push back the cuticle with a towel whenever you wash your hands. And of course, keep a bottle of hand lotion in your kitchen, in your office, as well as in your bathroom.

Speaking of nail beauty, nothing is more unflattering than chipped nail polish in jagged streaks, and rough looking hang nails and cuticles. To have the kind of hands that are useful and pretty, a weekly manicure is a must.

It takes a beauty operator about 35 minutes to do a professional job on your nails. So you can hardly take less when you do it yourself. Anything you try to do about your nails five minutes before you have to catch that bus won't help much.

Still don't like the way your hands look? Get into the habit of turning your hands sideways—the profile side to your audience—much prettier.

HITS LOWERING OF TOY TARIFFS

Testifying before hearings of the Committee for Reciprocity Information in Washington last week, Anthony H. Esposito, president of the CIO Playthings, Jewelry & Novelty Workers, opposed the easing of tariff barriers on toys and jewelry.

Esposito criticized the policy of the American Military Government in seeking to foster light industry in ex-enemy countries by permitting "unhindered imports" of toys and jewelry into this country. The practice would lead to a dumping campaign, which would be detrimental to the American jewelry and top industry and to its workers, he said.

Citing the fact that price slashes on jewelry and toys occurred on a large scale in retail stores throughout the U. S. before Christmas, Esposito declared that the American industry is even now in a shaky position.

THE BAD REPORT CARD

"Gee, but I'll catch it for this!" Too bad when a youngster is afraid to take his report card home. Before cracking down on a boy or girl for poor grades, ask yourself why those marks are low. There are basic reasons for children's inattention, so-called laziness and unwillingness to try. Are we expecting too much of them? Is there illness in the family, difficulty between parents, or other home troubles which may be worrying them? Have eyesight and hearing been tested? Whatever the cause, friendly discussion will help more than punishment and scolding.

FLINT OKs 15% RENT HIKE; PROBE ASKED

THE Flint, Mich., Fair Rent Committee, consisting of members of the CIO, AFL and the American Veterans Committee, this week asked the Office of Temporary Controls to investigate the action of the Flint City Commission boosting rents 15%, while rent control is in effect nationally.

After Jack Thronton and Leo Goodman, chairman and secretary, respectively, of the CIO Cost of Living Committee, visited Flint last week-end, the Fair Rent Committee protested to the city commission against the rent boost.

The commission refused to join the committee in requesting the OTC to take over rent control in the city, where tenants will be entirely at the mercy of landlord.

The crowded conditions are being further aggravated by the fact that two new auto plants will employ 17,000 workers.

MC&S FIGHTS ANTI-SEMITISM

The Marine Cooks and Stewards, CIO, have announced their affiliation to the American Jewish Labor Council, which is enrolling AFL, CIO and independent unions in a campaign against anti-Semitism and for relief of Jews abroad.

Informing the Council of the union's affiliation, the union's secretary-treasurer, E. F. Burke, wrote: "This union has always been in the forefront of the fight against racial intolerance in every form and we constantly attempt to educate our membership on the dangers of anti-Semitism and all forms of racial discrimination. We wish your organization complete success in your program."

Backs March Of Dimes

Pres. Philip Murray this week threw the support of the CIO behind the 1947 March of Dimes campaign.

"The American people will rally cheerfully and with full support, I know, to the 1947 March of Dimes," he said. "To help protect our children from the scourge of infantile paralysis is a cause which touches every home.

"Members of the CIO, who have always contributed in large numbers to this worthy campaign, will certainly give it their continued support in 1947."

DEADLINE For Action

HEARINGS on the dozens of proposed anti-labor bills will get under way January 23 before the Republican-controlled Senate Committee on Labor and Public Welfare, if present plans hold.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), himself the sponsor of one of the principal bills, is chairman of the committee. Taft, it is learned, hopes to have legislation to restrict union rights passed by both houses of Congress by the end of March.

The Taft-Smith-Ball bill, (S. 55), which is a re-hashed version of last year's Case bill, will have an inside track within the committee, since all three of its sponsors—Taft, Sen. Smith (R. N. J.) and Ball (R. Minn.) are members of the important committee.

In the House, the Education & Labor Committee will also soon get down to brass tacks on the equally vicious proposals to curb workers' rights which have been filed by many Congressmen.

FILE FOR THE FUTURE

AFTER two weeks of horse-trading and sparring, Republicans and Democrats in Congress have completed appointment of members to the committees of the House and Senate.

With Republicans in the majority on both sides of the Capitol, all committee chairmanships automatically went to the GOP, as well as a majority of the members of each committee.

In the finagling, both Republicans and Democrats squeezed Rep. Vito Marcantonio, American Labor Party Representative from N. Y., out of any committee assignments. Marcantonio has proved to be an effective and tireless fighter on labor and civil rights issues. But each party claimed the other should make committee seats available to the ALP spokesman.

Here are the chairmen of the various committees; clip the list for reference:

CIO TO TESTIFY ON PORTAL PAY SUITS

THE CIO was ready late last week to take the witness stand before the Senate Judiciary Committee and cut through the mass of employer propaganda against portal-portal wage claims suits.

Earlier a constant stream of spokesmen for big industry had come before the committee to protest that workers' demands for payment of claims over unpaid walking and make-ready time would bring powerful corporations—now operating at peak profits—to a state of financial collapse.

Both the Wiley and Capehart bills in the Senate, and the Gwynne bill in the House would have the effect of nullifying many of these claims if the bills were found to be constitutional by the U. S. Supreme Court.

WITH the wage suits totaling in the billions, according to hysterical newspaper accounts, CIO attorneys have pointed out that an unprecedented public clamor is being aroused by corporate interest to influence the court's decision in the precedent-making Mt. Clemens Pottery case even while the case is still being argued.

In Washington, meanwhile, Wage-Hour Administrator Metcalfe Walling pointed out that the time workers spend in making ready for their job, after punching the time clock, has always been held as working time under the Fair Labor Standards Act.

The vast majority of employers have followed the rules on make-ing ready time, Walling said, and only a few of the suits involve retroactive pay on this account.

Learning what makes Congress tick was the self-assigned job last week for 18 Virginia CIO members. Students at the Southern School for Workers spent seven days button-holing Congressmen and watching government work. Story, page 20.

PORTAL TO PORTAL

An Eye on Congress: This rugged looking worker has good reason to keep his eye on Washington. Bills now up for consideration would bar his sizable back wage claims and limit Wage-Hour Act rights.

Portal-portal wage suits, if you read the daily press, are made to sound like a conspiracy, a racket, a plot against business. CIO witnesses at Senate hearings proved they're nothing of the sort —and gave Senators some food for thought about proposed legislation.

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

FOUR senators—who get paid for their time in the barber shop as well as for work in committee and on the Senate floor—opened hearings last week on bills to outlaw the back wage claims of thousands of industrial workers.

The hearings were covered by a score or so of Washington reporters who are paid for the time they walk from assignment to assignment, and even for occasional stop-overs at the corner bar.

From workers in the factories, and from spokesmen for CIO and a number of its unions, the Senators and the press heard the "other side" of the story on wage claims filed by men and women who get paid for only a part of the time they work. Their testimony was impressive, particularly after the phony tears of a number of big businessmen who had been on the stand earlier.

Up for consideration are two bills: S. 49 and S. 70, introduced by Senators Capehart (R. Ind.) and Wiley (R. Wis.). Both bills aim to outlaw current suits for back wage claims; and equally serious, they would amend the Wage-Hour Act to limit employes' rights in the future.

THE CIO brought to the high-ceilinged Senate caucus room both experts on the law and workers straight from steel mills, textile plants and tobacco processing factories.

A. W. Alexander, a CIO steel worker from Covington, Ky., told of the special equipment he must wear in the plant, and the reports he must file in connection with his job—at no additional pay.

Jack Seman, a Duquesne, Pa., employe of U. S. Steel, and Stanley Mansheski, of St. Louis, gave some additional details.

Sen. Capehart, a pudgy-faced industrialist who once ran the radio company that bears his name, thought there were simple explanations for the failure of their employers to pay for make-ready time spent at the factory.

"The work you do in preparing for steel production helps you to turn out more tons, and that means higher pay for you, doesn't it?" Capehart asked.

"Yes, and higher profits for the company," the steel worker shot back. The sub-committee members were quiet for a moment, then turned to a different line of questioning.

John Flaggs, a CIO auto worker from Detroit Steel Castings Co., listed the half-dozen tasks he must perform at the beginning and end of each work-day, without a cent of pay.

"There was a time," Flaggs pointed out to the committee, "when separate employes especially hired for the purpose took care of some of those things . . . however, the company saves the money that was paid to these individuals by Working Time—But No Pay: Workers inside hundreds of big plants spend many hours a week traveling to their job stations and getting ready for work. Companies are showing "surprise" at their portal-portal claims—but they've had some four years' warning that claims would arise.

Dangerous Work—and it takes time to prepare to do it. Special clothes, masks, equipment are required when you work in a hydrofluoric acid alkylation unit of a synthetic rubber plant, like these men. Companies claim this get-ready time for special jobs sho ıld be contributed to them by employes.

requiring the rest of the workers to come earlier without pay to do the same jobs."

THAT point—that companies have profited by refusing to pay workers for legitimate time in and around their jobs—was hammered home to the committee by Lee Pressman, general counsel of the CIO and of the steel workers, who answered questions of the Senators for the better part of three hours on the witness stand.

Pressman ridiculed sections of both the Wiley and Capehart bills which would ban payment of wages for "non-productive" time.

"When the Wiley Bill attempts to introduce the novel concept of a distinction between something called 'productive' work and other kinds of work, it acts on the basis of a complete lack of cognizance of the realities, the intricacies, the detail of current economic and industrial processes," Pressman said.

Again and again, in his statement and in his answers to the Senators' questions, the CIO attorney emphasized the correctness of the Supreme Court's definition of work: "physical or mental exertion (whether burdensome or not) controlled or required by the employer and pursued necessarily and primarily for the benefit of the employer and his business."

Any other definition, such as proposed by either Sen. Wiley or Sen. Capehart, becomes either unenforceable or downright unjust to the workers, he declared.

"We submit and firmly believe that these measures violate the principles of our Constitution," Pressman said, adding that they can serve only to convey the impression that "Congress does not propose to play the game according to the rules where workers' rights are concerned."

The statute of limitations proposed by the bills for workers' claims under the Wage-Hour Act would be only one year—although in almost every state the law provides for a period of three to six years to file claims in other sorts of business transactions, Pressman said.

SOME of the committee's most intensive questioning was directed to Pressman on the background of the portal suits, which newspaper accounts report running into billions.

Pressman cited cases involving coal miners and ore miners who were given portal-to-portal rights by the Supreme Court. He described the course of the Mt. Clemens case through the courts, and of the close attention paid to it by corporation lawyers throughout the country. Big business knew over a four-year period that workers' portal claims were being held valid, but no steps were taken to change wage practices, he charged.

The CIO attorney said that when he discussed the matter last December with a corporation lawyer—whom he later identified as Tom Patton of Republic Steel—he was told that big business was highly optimistic that Congress would take action to illegalize the portal suits. Accordingly, he said, various CIO unions felt it their duty to notify their members of their rights under the law and to advise them that legal action might rule out their claims at a later date.

Pointing to bright profits records of American business in recent years, Pressman referred to the "millions upon millions of dollars in the form of tax refunds" to big companies and the fact that "not a single penny has yet been paid out in judgments" arising from portal suits.

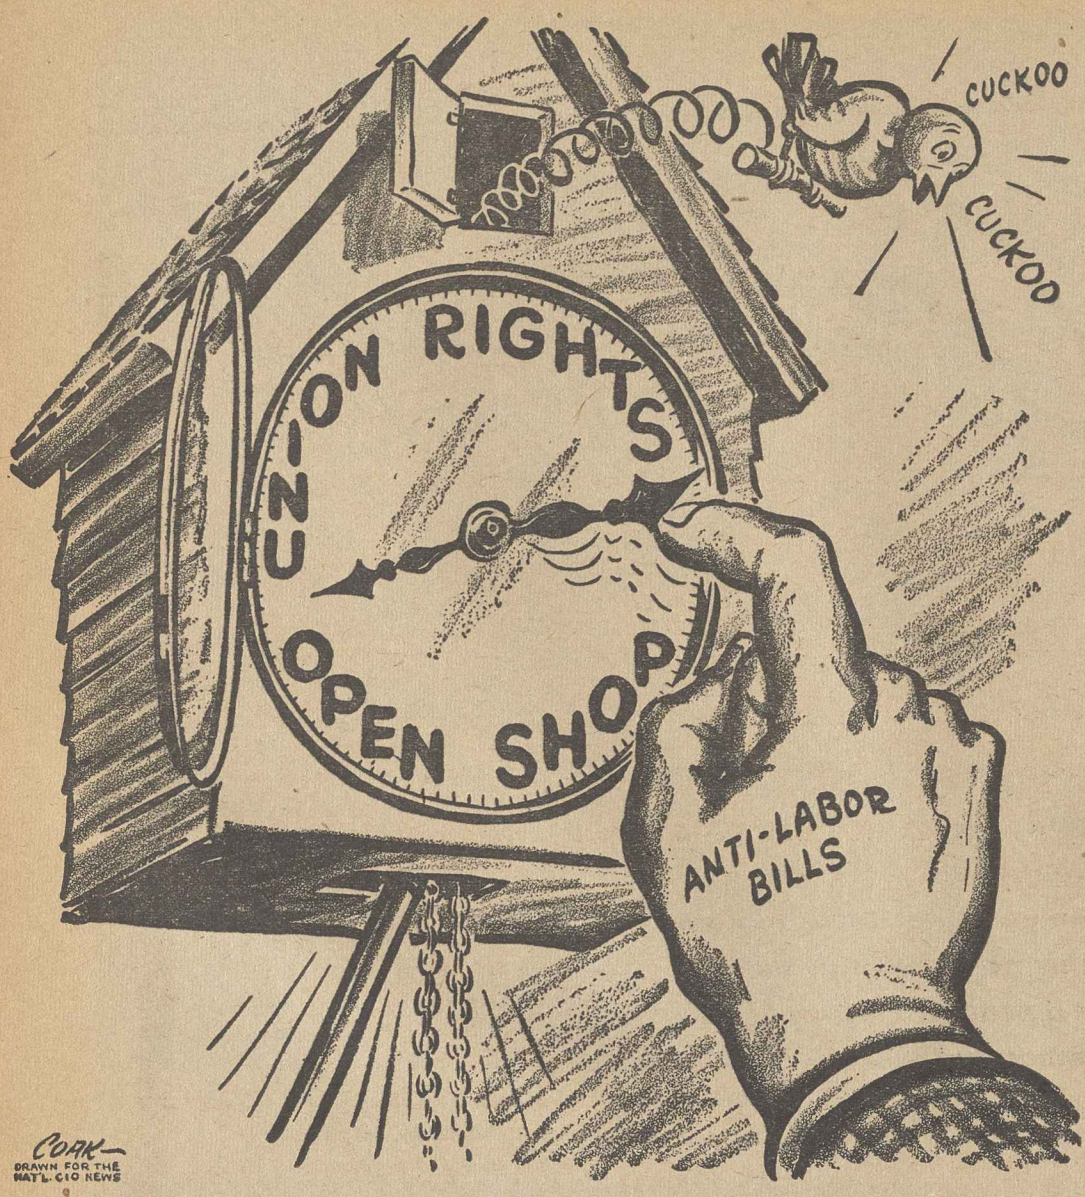
"It would be tragic if we allowed scare newspaper headlines and loose talk with respect to the amounts which are allegedly involved in current litigation to stampede us into acts destructive of the sound principles of our Fair Labor Standards Act."

Only possible change in the law required, Pressman suggested to the Senators, was a provision—not now contained in the Wage-Hour Act—permitting unions to act for their members in compromising wage and damage claims under the Act. In this way, he said, fast progress can be reached in settling them equitably.

During the course of allotted time, a number of CIO witnesses appeared on the stand. They included John Abt of the Clothing Workers, Russ Nixon of the Electrical Workers, Leonard Douglas of Mine, Mill, Irving Richter of the UAW-CIO, Arthur Schusterman and E. J. Pickeral of the Textile Workers, Cornelius Simmons of Food & Tobacco Workers, and Walter Oakes of the Shipbuilding Workers.

Talks Issues: Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, as he appeared at the Senate Judiciary Committee hearings in Washington on portal suits. Proposals to change the law are unwise and probably unconstitutional, he said.

Propaganda on portal suits in daily press is examined by three steel workers at Senate hearing: USA-CIO District Director Al Whitehouse of Cincinnati, A. W. Alexander of Covington, Ky., and Stanley Mansheski of St. Louis.



TURNING BACK THE CLOCK

IN THEIR proposals to make the open shop compulsory in American industry, Senator Ball and his associates are trying to turn back the clock of progress by a hundred years.

For at least that long, workers in the United States have been able to enter into contracts with their employers to protect their unions against the hiring of non-union labor.

The so-called "closed shop" is also firmly imbedded and practiced in the medical and other professions and in other walks of American life.

BUT THE Ball & Chain crowd extend their attacks on union rights and long-accepted American principles far beyond the closed shop, which means that only union members may be hired.

The Ball bill would also outlaw the union shop, under which non-unionists as well as unionists may be hired provided they join the union thereafter; and even "maintenance of membership" clauses, which do not require union membership but merely provide that those who decide to join shall maintain their obligations for the contract's duration.

In a word, the purpose is to outlaw all forms of union security.

IF BALL and his crowd should thus succeed in turning back the clock, we do not have to look back a hundred years to see what would happen.

Today most of the major industries are organized, and some nine million American workers enjoy union security contracts.

But less than a dozen years ago, the open shop was the rule in the steel, auto, electrical, rubber and most other big industries.

CIO members can well remember what this meant in low wages, long hours, job discriminations, and lack of seniority rights, paid vacations and countless other union benefits.

TO OUTLAW union security would be an invitation to employers to revive the tactics with which they fought every attempt at union organization in the past.

It would encourage them to hire non-unionists, spies and provocateurs for the purpose of undermining union conditions, causing dissensions and breakaways, and generally disrupting union organization in their plants.

Faced with the constant necessity of fighting for its very existance, the union would have little time and energy left for more constructive endeavors, and constant friction and turmoil would replace harmonious union-management relations.

UNION security contracts are based on sound, democratic American principles.

Under existing labor laws, the workers have the right to choose their bargaining representation by majority vote. The union so selected becomes the sole bargaining agent.

Until the workers vote for some other representation, they are entitled to protect their majority choice against minority and employer opposition by negotiating a union security contract.

THE CHOSEN union is required by law to make a fair bargain for all workers in the plant or group covered, establishing the same conditions for all.

All American citizens are required to pay their taxes for governmental services supposed to be for the benefit of all. So by the same democratic principle, every worker who benefits from conditions won by the union should pay his share of the union costs involved.

The open shop idea that non-unionists should ride free on the backs of union members, who have to pay and fight for them as well as themselves, is grossly unfair, undemocratic and un-American.

Union security is also based on the American principle of freedom to contract through free collective bargaining.

THE OPEN-SHOP laws now proposed would destroy many long-established labor rights, violate many American democratic principles and promote industrial turmoil.

It does not take much scratching below the surface to uncover their real purpose—the breaking up of unions and the restoration of open-shop wages, working conditions and employer tyrannies.

WHAT'S IN a name? Quite a lot, as the stockbroker's assistant discovered when he told a court he was "in the gambling business."

The poor fellow was promptly fired by his boss and scourged from that temple of the money-changers, the New York Stock Exchange.

He should have known that "gambling" is what the little fellow does with dice or cards. The big-time gambling in Wall Street is called "big business."

SO IT'S awfully important what we call the next depression.

The Republicans don't like the word "depression." It brings up memories.

The next one will therefore be a "recession."

BUT NOW objections are being raised to "recession," as not sounding so nice either.

Words like "slide," "dip," "defrothing" and "shakedown" are being tried out in business sheets.

There'll be nothing "frightening" about the coming unemployment, they say—just a few more millions unemployed.

Furthermore, they assure us that our free economy has "bounce."

IF YOU should be "bounced" from your job, therefore, because wages have been kept too low and prices too high to maintain demand for production, don't worry.

Profits will still be good, the same pundits assert, even if they dip a little below the present record rate of 15-16 billions a year

So we can all console ourselves that the next depression will just be another "shakedown" of labor and the public by the profiteers.

NOW COMES the AFL, in what it is pleased to call "Labor's Monthly Survey," denouncing the CIO's demands for higher wages.

It argues that CIO-won wage increases (not exorbitant profits and price increases and the scrapping of price controls) "broke the dam holding back inflation"; that CIO's present wage demands threaten high profits, which have made American industry what it is today; and that they spring from "Communist policies . . . to create chaos and discredit free enterprise."

Haven't we heard that line somewhere else before?

THE AFL leadership, on the other hand, was and is willing to settle for much lower wage increases than are CIO unions, according to the Survey.

But there's so much in a name!

What unionists have been wont to call "scabbery" is now "labor statesmanship," according to all the big-business editorials praising this AFL statement.

BUT ALL the employers' press and its Little Sir Echo, the AFL Survey, have not been able to convince the American people that wage increases can't be paid out of profits without raising prices.

A recent Gallup poll, dealing with the issue raised by the Nathan report, asked this question:

"Do you think pay increases could be given by most factories without increasing the prices of the goods they make?"

Of those questioned, 47% an-answered Yes and 40% No. Among manual workers (and we'll bet this included some AFL members) 55% answered Yes.

"PORTAL-TO-PORTAL pay" is another naughty name that shocks some AFL leaders and gives newspaper publishers an ink-hemorrhage.

Members of Congress get 20 cents a mile, in addition to salary, while traveling all over the country to and from work.

Corporation executives draw their salaries even while on the golf links or in Florida.

Coupon-clippers get paid, not only while going to and from work, but even while refraining from it altogether.

But then, none of these folks call theirs "portal-to-portal pay."

OR TAKE "strike benefits" and "carry-back provisions."

Do you think the big corporations could have drawn millions upon millions of dollars from the U. S. Treasury, to maintain themselves in the style to which they were accustomed while forcing their employes on strike, if they'd called this anything so crude as "strike benefits"?

Instead, they asked for and got "carry-back," which suggests nice homey things like "carry me back to old Virginny."

SO WE haven't heard any big demand in Congress for retroactive legislation to prevent this raid on the public treasury, on the grounds that the carry-back provisions of the tax laws were never intended to finance strike-provocation and strike-breaking.

Tory Congressmen can get furiously retroactive about "portal-to-portal pay" and the Fair Labor Standards Act, but not about "carry-back" and the tax laws.

You see, names are so important! What's sauce for the goose may be sauce for the gander. But if you substitute "corporation" for "goose" and "union" for "gander," it's oh so different!

"Dear Mr. Congressman"

It's a great American custom — writing letters to your Congressman. He not only likes to hear from you—he needs to hear from you! On this page are tips on how to write him. It's a practical lesson in how to help make democracy work!

NEXT to 18-year-old girls and GI's overseas, there's probably no one who likes to get a letter as much as your Congressman and Senators.

You may think that your Congressman is the best man who ever came to Washington, or you may feel that he "shoulda stood in bed." But regardless of your sentiments, you ought to write him—and write frequently.

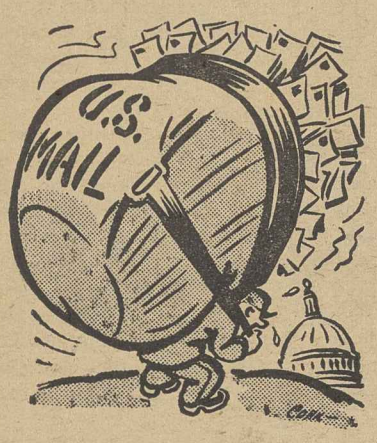
For plain, ordinary letters from folks around the country are the best way your representatives in Washington have to judge your sentiments about important legislation. Nobody knows that fact better than the business and industrial employers in your community, who have looked upon Congressmen for years as their "servants" in Washington.

There's no reason why union men and women shouldn't feel the same way about it. In fact, if we are to stave off laws to cripple our unions, the members of Congress had better hear from the people back home in the very near future.

SOME folks think up all sorts of alibis to keep from writing their representatives in Washington.

"Poor old Mr. Jones must be awful busy up there in Congress," the people say. "Why should I bother him with another piece of mail? After all, he doesn't know me."

First of all, your Congressman and Senators have staffs of assistants. One of their principal jobs is to handle his correspondence, bring it to his attention, and keep tabs on how many people are pro and how many are con on any issue. Your letter is like your vote—alone, it doesn't swing the issue, but together with lots of others, it makes a whale of a big impression.



Even the most anti-labor Congressman will watch his step if he sees letter after letter coming into his office in opposition to his stand. And if he is on the fence, or undecided about a particular issue, those letters of yours may be the turning point in winning him over to your side.

If you think there's any question about the wisdom of writing your Congressman, keep one thing in mind—the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the Chamber of Commerce, urge their members to write.

The Chamber of Commerce prepared a pamphlet for its local organizations a while back, on this very subject. Listen to how it quoted one Congressman on the subject of letters from home:

"The individual letters are, to me, the pulse of the body politic in my District. I count and study that just like a doctor does with a patient."

SO you're going to write to your Congressman. What's the best way of going about it? Where do you reach him? How do you address him? What do you want to say?

Here are a few handy tips:

1 Treat him with respect. Remember that a Congressman treasures his title and prerogatives the way a newly-commissioned second looie looks upon his gold bars. Address him as "The Honorable John Doe, Member of Congress" or "The Honorable John Doe, U. S. Senator from ————."

2 Send the letter to the right address. If he's a Congressman, his address is House Office Building, Washington 25, D. C.; a letter to your Senator should go to Senate Office Building, Washington 25, D. C. But any letter addressed to Rep. John Doe or Senator John Doe, Washington, D. C., will get to him without much trouble.

3 Make sure he can read what you write. Some of us have pretty difficult handwriting to decipher; if yours is on the difficult side, give some thought to printing your letter in block letters—or if you can have it typewritten, that's all the better.

4 Be sure to sign your name. An anonymous letter will travel the shortest possible course between his desk and his waste basket. And don't forget to list your address; without it, your Congressman or Senator won't know if you live in his district or state—which is important to him. If you are writing officially in behalf of an organization, write the letter on the official stationery of your group, or type in the name of the organization.

5 Remember that your Congressman is human, too! Even the best of Congressmen get weary at times of "demand" letters. "We demand that you do such-and-such" sounds nice back home, but a Congressman, being human, is apt to say to himself: "Nobody's going to demand anything from a great statesman like me."

Instead, "request" his action; "call attention" to your position; indicate you "look forward" to his voting the way you want him to do. Language like that frequently gets results.

6 Be brief and to the point. Don't gamble around in history or expound theories—your Congressman doesn't have time to read about them. You can tell him you hope he'll vote against S. 55, the Ball-Smith-Taft anti-labor bill, without going back to the Crusades or the Civil War to explain why you don't like it.

It's better to list a bill by name, and by number if possible (usually you can get this information from your union officials or The CIO NEWS.)

For instance, write: "I favor the elimination of the polltax in nine southern states, and request that you act and vote for the passage of H.R. 7;" or "I think that passage of the Smith-Ball-Taft bill (S. 55) will hurt our democratic institutions, and I request that you use your influence to stop passage of this and all other measures to cripple labor unions."

7 Put your Congressman to work for you. He's in Washington to work for all his constituents, and you should take as much advantage of his services as Mr. Gotrocks from the big company down the road.

In addition to telling your Congressman what you think about bills, ask him where he stands. If you want a copy of a specific bill or a law, ask him to send it to you. If he took what you consider a bad position on a bill, ask him for an explanation.

8 Give him the applause he deserves. Being human, your Congressman likes a pat on the back every so often. If he makes a good speech or votes right, or gives you some special service, let him know you appreciate it. Your stock will go way up with him.

9 Be yourself in your letters. Write it in your own words; wherever possible avoid "canned messages," since your Congressman will recognize an organized campaign and be prepared to discount their effectiveness. And talk in terms of a particular bill's effect on you, your family, your factory and your community.

These are simple suggestions. Keep them in mind when you write your letters and you'll make them really count in Washington. And be sure to write. The future of your family and your union are certainly worth a few minutes of your time and a 3c stamp.

The Case of the VANISHING PAYCHECK

Johnny Poore's wages were melting away — his Army savings too! This is the story of how Johnny was robbed by Unfair Taxes and what he did about this problem.

FOLD ON THIS LINE

The Case of the Vanishing Paycheck

After four years' service in the Army, Johnny Poore has come home. His sweetheart, Alice Wykowski, has been waiting a long time for this moment. But she hasn't been idle. She did her part at the bomber plant until it closed and left her without a job.

Before the war, John worked for the Expert Machine Company for 80c an hour. The union has since won a strike at the plant and there is a new contract under which John gets his old job back at $1.12½ an hour—$45 a week.

EXPERT MACHINE COMPANY

STATEMENT OF EMPLOYE'S EARNINGS AND DEDUCTIONS

WEEK ENDING: MAY 17, 1940

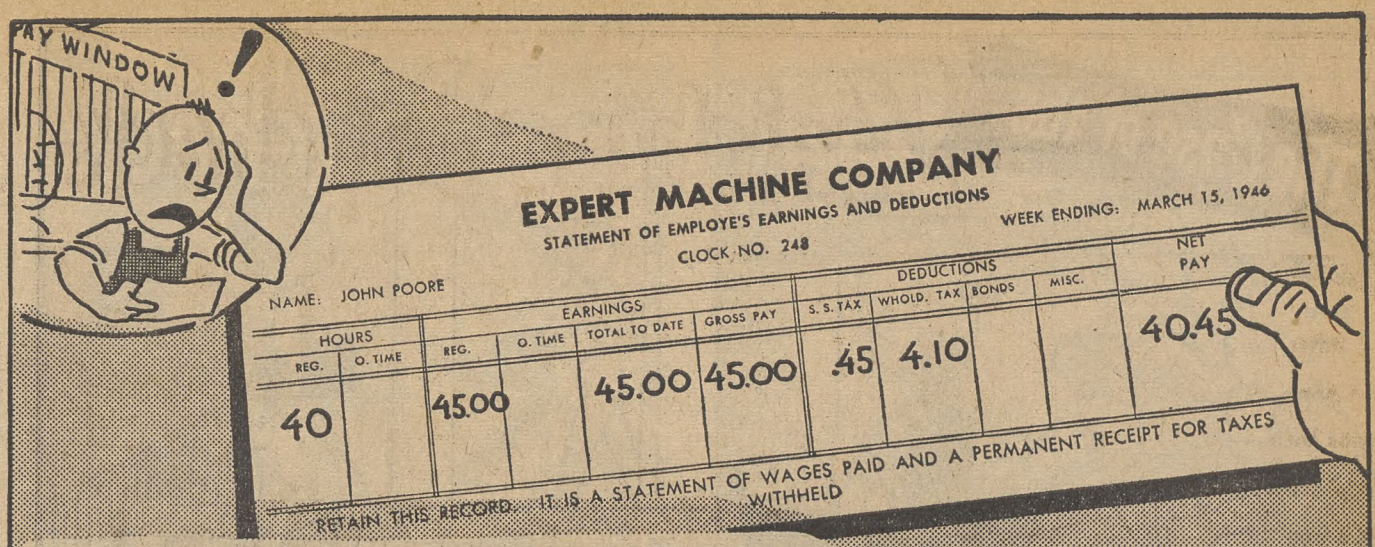
NAME: JOHN POORE

HOURS		EARNINGS			DEDUCTIONS		NET PAY
REG.	O. TIME	REG.	O. TIME	TOTAL	S. S. TAX	MISCEL.
40		32.00		32.00	.32		31.68

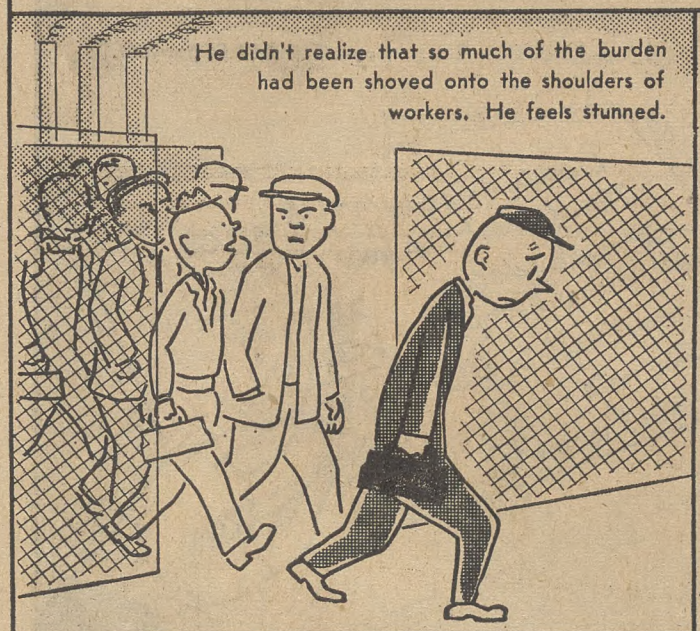
RETAIN THIS RECORD. IT IS A STATEMENT OF WAGES PAID AND A PERMANENT RECEIPT FOR TAXES WITHHELD.

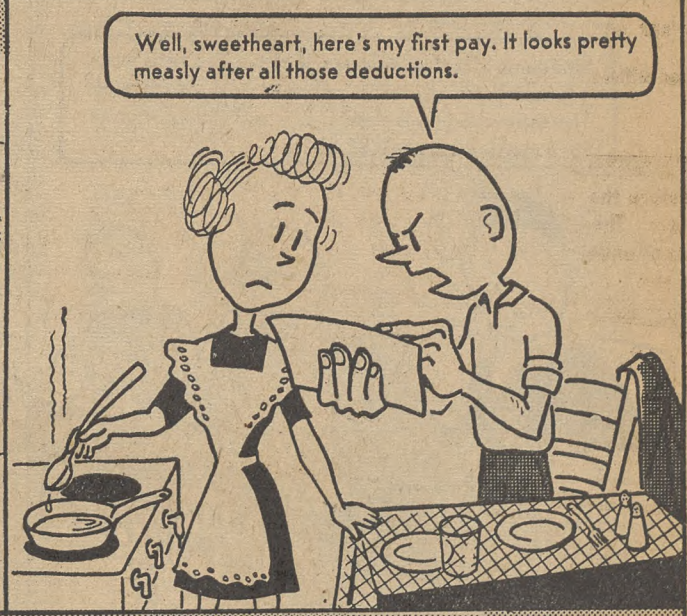
John and Alice know the cost of living has shot up, but they feel they can manage on $45 a week.

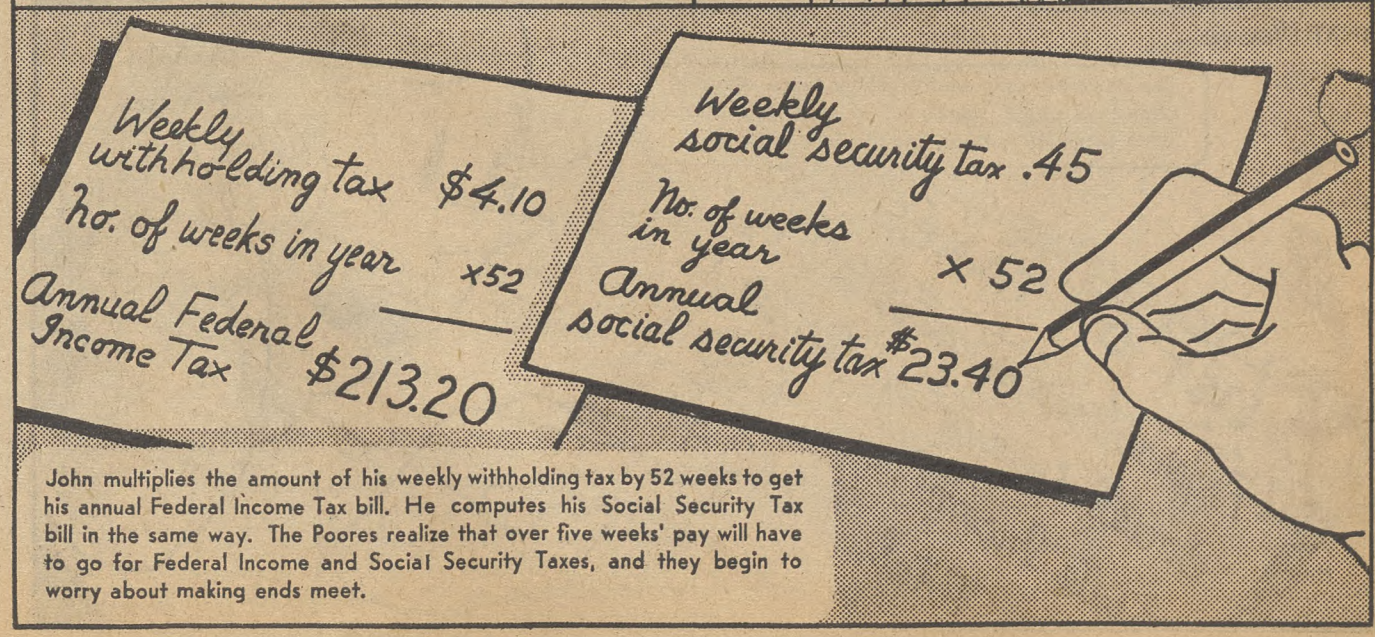
Meanwhile, Alice has found a bungalow out at the edge of town which she rented for $42.50 a month. While the house is being repaired, the Poores live in a small furnished apartment.



At the end of the week, John gets his first pay. He opens the envelope and finds a slip showing his deductions. John knew that taxes were high, but . . .







John multiplies the amount of his weekly withholding tax by 52 weeks to get his annual Federal Income Tax bill. He computes his Social Security Tax bill in the same way. The Poores realize that over five weeks' pay will have to go for Federal Income and Social Security Taxes, and they begin to worry about making ends meet.

NEXT DAY, AT THE PLANT—

Federal Income Tax high? Well, kids, that's not the only kind you'll have to worry about!

Gosh! Am I going to have to pay a State Income Tax, too?

I'm going to see what I can find out for John about State Income Taxes, here at the Library.

Hm—most States have an Income Tax rate from 1% to 3% on all income over personal exemptions. The rate here in our state is 2% and the exemption for a married couple is $2,000.

REFERENCE DEPARTMENT

Alice computes their State Income Tax at $6.80 per year.

Weekly Wages $45.00
No. of weeks in year × 52
Annual Wages 2340.00
Less Personal Exemption 2000.00
Income taxable by State 340.00
Tax rate .02
State Income Tax $6.80

THAT EVENING—

I've started to keep a list of all our Taxes. Already almost six weeks' wages out of every year have been eaten up by taxes, and the list is just begun!

LIST OF TAXES

Federal Income Tax $213.20
Social Security Tax 23.40
State Income Tax 6.80
Total $243.40

NEXT DAY

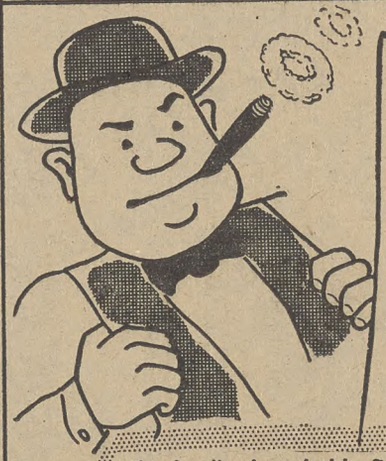
Good news, darling! The Real Estate agent came by today to tell us our bungalow is ready to move into. I paid him $42.50 for the first month's rent.

We're moving into our new bungalow soon, Joe. I'm glad I don't own the place so I won't have to pay the taxes on it.

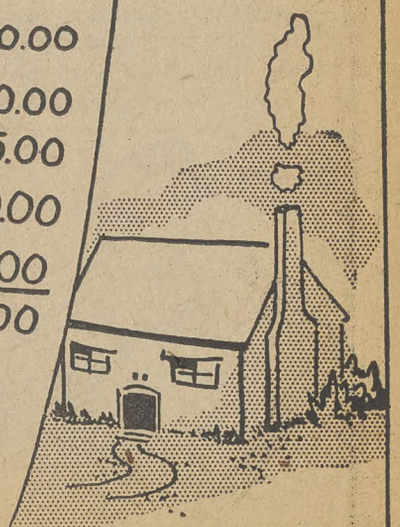
That's where you're wrong, John. The cost of taxes is an expense which the landlord takes into consideration in setting the rent on your house. What's more, the landlord can deduct the real estate tax on his Income Tax Return. The tenant, who actually pays the tax, can make no deduction.

John phones the Tax Department on his lunch hour.

You say the tax on the house we've rented is $120 a year? I'll bet that house is assessed at a lot more than it's worth.



Interest Charge	$180.00
Estimated Repairs	30.00
Depreciation Charge	75.00
TAXES (paid indirectly by John)	120.00
Commission and Profit	105.00
Total Annual Rent	$510.00
-or $42.50 monthly rent



The landlord probably figures something like this: He continues to charge depreciation on the house even though it is old and he has already recovered its full value through annual depreciation charges. He also continues to charge interest on the original investment even though he has long ago recovered his full investment. He has tried to charge a higher rent, but the OPA won't let him.

NEXT WEEK

I've saved almost $1,100 from my Army pay! With that and over $300 you've saved from your pay at the bomber plant we'll be able to furnish our home..

...and do some of the other things we have always wanted to do!

Alice and John pick out the things they want for the house and make the necessary down payment. The salesman gives John this bill...

ACE FURNITURE COMPANY
100 MAIN STREET

TO: Mr. and Mrs. John Poore

Electric Refrigerator	180.00
Toaster	8.00
Sofa	119.98
Chair	14.00
Radio	40.00
Total	780.12
SALES TAX AT 3%	23.40
Total	803.52
Down Payment	300.00
Balance on Conditional Sales Contract	503.52

John stops in to see his friend, Henry Rosenberg, the shop steward.

Imagine! A sales tax of $23.40 added to our furniture bill!

I remember an article I saw on that in a sales tax pamphlet. Yes . . . here are the figures. Since you earn $2,340 per year, your estimated sales tax is at the rate of $14.82 per $1,000 of income.

WHERE THE SALES TAX FALLS

ANNUAL INCOME	ESTIMATED PROPORTION OF INCOME ON WHICH TAX IS PAID	ESTIMATED AMOUNT OF TAX PER $1,000 OF INCOME
Under $1,000	60.9%	$18.27
Between $1,000 & $2,000	58.6%	17.58
Between $2,000 & $3,000	49.4%	14.82
Between $3,000 & $5,000	42.9%	12.87
Between $5,000 & $10,000	39.3%	11.79
Between $10,000 & $25,000	31.7%	9.51

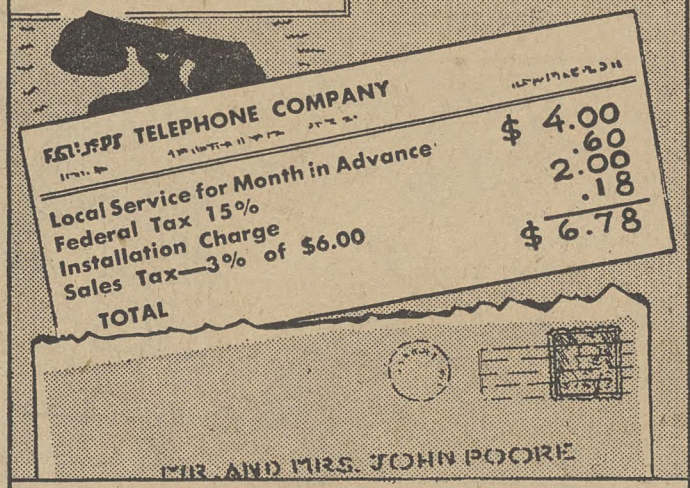
So that means—let's see—$2,340 Annual Income x $14.82 per $1,000 equals $34.68 a year. And that's in addition to sales tax on special purchases such as furniture.

Gosh, the way our tax list is growing, we'll be paying out as much for taxes as for food!

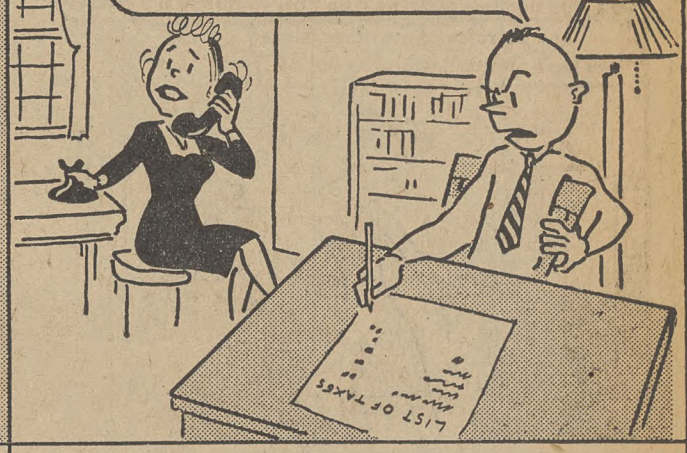
LIST OF TAXE

Federal Income Tax 213.
Social Security Tax 23.4
State Income Tax 6.80
Real Estate Tax 120.00
Average Annual Sales Tax 34.68
Sales Tax on Furniture 23.40
$421.48

The Poores have moved into their new home.
They are lucky to get a telephone a few weeks afterwards.
As soon as it is installed, John receives a bill for the first month's service in advance.

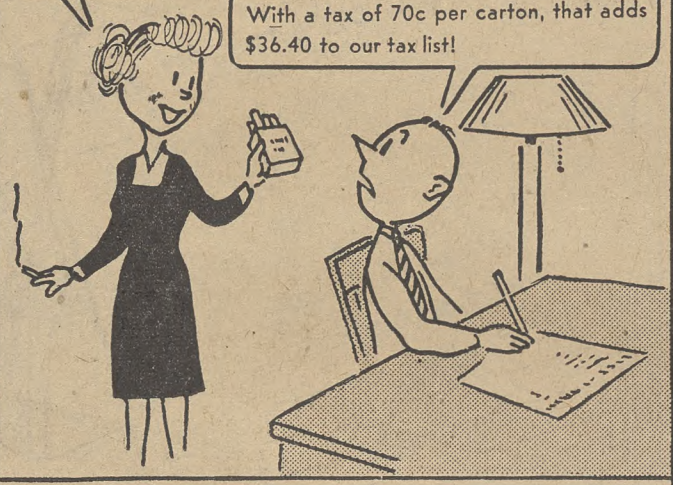


We won't make any long distance calls, if we can help it. Even so the tax on our phone bill will be 12 x 60c or $7.20 a year. I'll put that down on our tax list, but not the sales tax, since I've already figured an average for the year's sales tax.



While you have the tax list out, don't forget the tax on cigarettes. Together we're smoking a carton each week.

With a tax of 70c per carton, that adds $36.40 to our tax list!

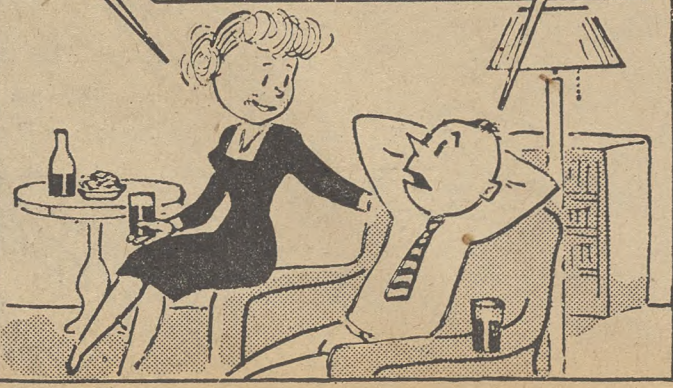


Yes, and here's something else for your list. I bought a lipstick and some powder the other day. The bill was $1.50 plus 30c Federal taxes plus sales taxes. It's a good thing I spend only about $10 a year for cosmetics. Even so, the tax is 20% or $2 a year.

One of the men at the plant was complaining about the tax on railroad fares. I don't remember paying any tax when we went on our honeymoon.

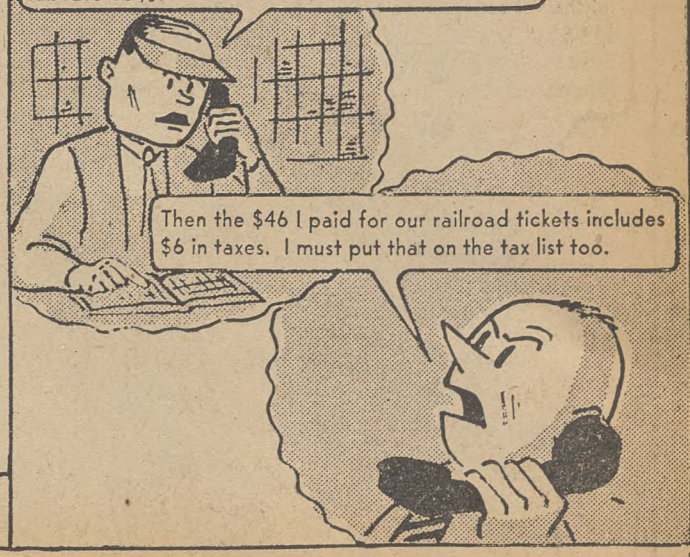
You were used to riding on furlough tickets and probably didn't watch for it.

I'm going to ask the Railroad Station about that.



. . . Yes sir, the fare for your trip was $40 and the tax rate 15%.

Then the $46 I paid for our railroad tickets includes $6 in taxes. I must put that on the tax list too.



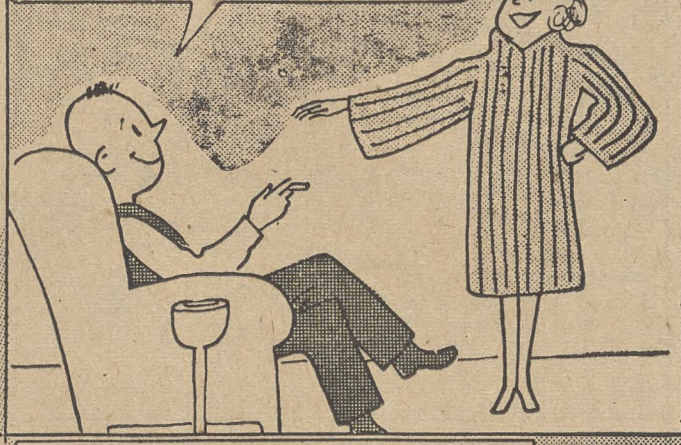
CUT ON THIS LINE

Darling, there's the coat I have my heart set on.

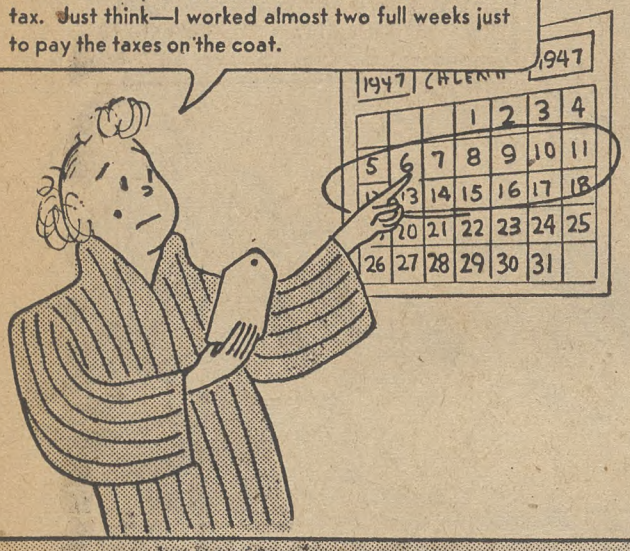
Well, you have saved a little over $300 and you have a right to spend that money on something nice for yourself.

Look, John—here it is! How do you like it?

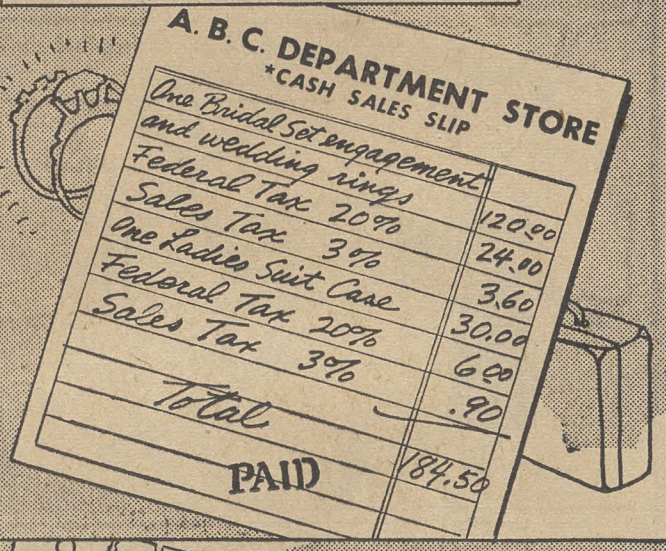
The coat is a beauty—and so is the model!



It cost $250 plus $50 Federal tax and $7.50 sales tax. Just think—I worked almost two full weeks just to pay the taxes on the coat.



The bill for the coat reminded John of another receipted bill he had from the same store . . .



John's tax list continues to grow.

I wonder where this is all going to end?

CUT ON THIS LINE

That car is pretty high at $1,120. Lucky there's no sales tax. After all, that same car was selling for less than $800 when I left for the Army.

Things are much higher now—and don't forget the Federal tax.

Federal Tax! I don't find any such item on my bill here.

It's a manufacturer's excise tax. It is paid by the manufacturer and added on his price. The rate on Automobiles is 7%.

Oh sure—there are a number of other excise taxes like that—
10% on Electrical Appliances
10% on Radios
10% on Refrigerators

I wrote down those figures the dealer gave me. I'm going to get together with Henry Rosenberg, the shop steward, about these items.

Let's ask Henry and his wife over tomorrow night. You can talk over the whole tax question with him then.

Henry, I've found out that the manufacturer often passes his excise tax on to retail buyers in the form of increased prices. Here's how it works out on things we've bought for the house recently—

ITEM	COST	EST. MANUFACTURERS SALES PRICE	TAX RATE	TAX PAID
Auto	$1,120.00	800.00	7%	56.00
Refrigerator	180.00	120.00	10%	12.00
Radio	40.00	25.00	10%	2.50
Toaster	8.00	5.00	10%	.50
			total tax	$ 71.00

And don't forget that besides State Taxes, you're paying a Federal Manufacturers' Excise Tax on gasoline—1½c a gallon, and also a tax of 6c a gallon on lubricating oil.

State Tax on Gasoline .05
Federal Excise Tax on Gasoline .01½
Total per gal. .06½

John and Henry bring the tax list up to date.

It's staggering to think that our tax bill for the year is so large.

Just think—over 16 weeks' wages, almost a third of your year's income must go to pay taxes!

And there are still other taxes which John has not included in his list simply because he never knew they existed—

TAXES OVERLOOKED BY JOHN

Colored oleomargarine	10¢ LB.

I'm beginning to feel very bitter about our tax burden.

You have a right to. A tax bill of $734.80 is entirely too high for a couple with an income of only $2,340.00

Next Saturday.

I'm making a study of taxes and would like to compare various tax rates with those of ten years ago. Could you get me the reference book I need?

THIS IS THE TABLE THAT JOHN WORKS OUT:

(TYPE OF TAX)	AMOUNT AT 1946 RATES	AMOUNT AT 1936 RATES
Federal income tax	213.20	0
Social Security tax	23.40	0
State income tax	6.80	6.80
Real estate tax	120.00	120.00
Average Annual Sales tax	34.68	34.68

Federal tax on Radio	2.50	1.25
Federal tax on toaster	.50	0
Federal and State tax on gas + oil	65.72	60.48
total	$734.80	$357.84

I'm convinced now—a big slice of my wage increase is being taken away from me in the form of increased taxes!

In 1936, I earned 75c an hour or 2/3 as much as I now earn. I've already estimated that I would have paid $357.84 in 1936, if I had earned as much as I'm now earning. So I actually paid about 2/3 of that amount in 1936.

Tax I would have paid in 1946 at 1936 rates = 357.84

2/3 x 357.84 = $238.56 taxes I probably paid in 1936

Taxes I paid in 1946 - 734.80

Taxes I paid in 1936 - 238.56

Increase in my tax bill $496.24

I've had a gross increase of $780 over my 1936 wages, but $496.24 of that is eaten up by higher taxes. So my net wage increase is only 18.2%!

My Annual wages at 1946 rates $2,340.00
My Annual wages at 1936 rates 1,560.00
Increase in my wages 780.00
Less increase in taxes 496.24
Net increase in wages between 1936 + 1946 $283.76
— or only an 18.2% increase in my net wages between 1936 and 1946

The cost of living has gone up almost 3 times 18.2% since 1936—

Sure, look at how the food bill has doubled.

So in spite of my wage increase, I actually have less buying power than I had 10 years ago!

It looks to me as though wage earners are shouldering much too big a tax burden.

I'd like to know if employers are suffering the same way. Say, I'm going back to the library tomorrow and get the facts on the big companies!

Wow! Look at those profit figures after payment of all taxes and all increased costs! Almost tripled since 1936!

Net Profits of All Corporations After Taxes

Year
1936	4.1 billion dollars
1937	4.6 billion dollars
1938	2.1 billion dollars
1939	4.9 billion dollars
1940	6.3 billion dollars
1941	9.2 billion dollars
1942	9.2 billion dollars
1943	9.9 billion dollars

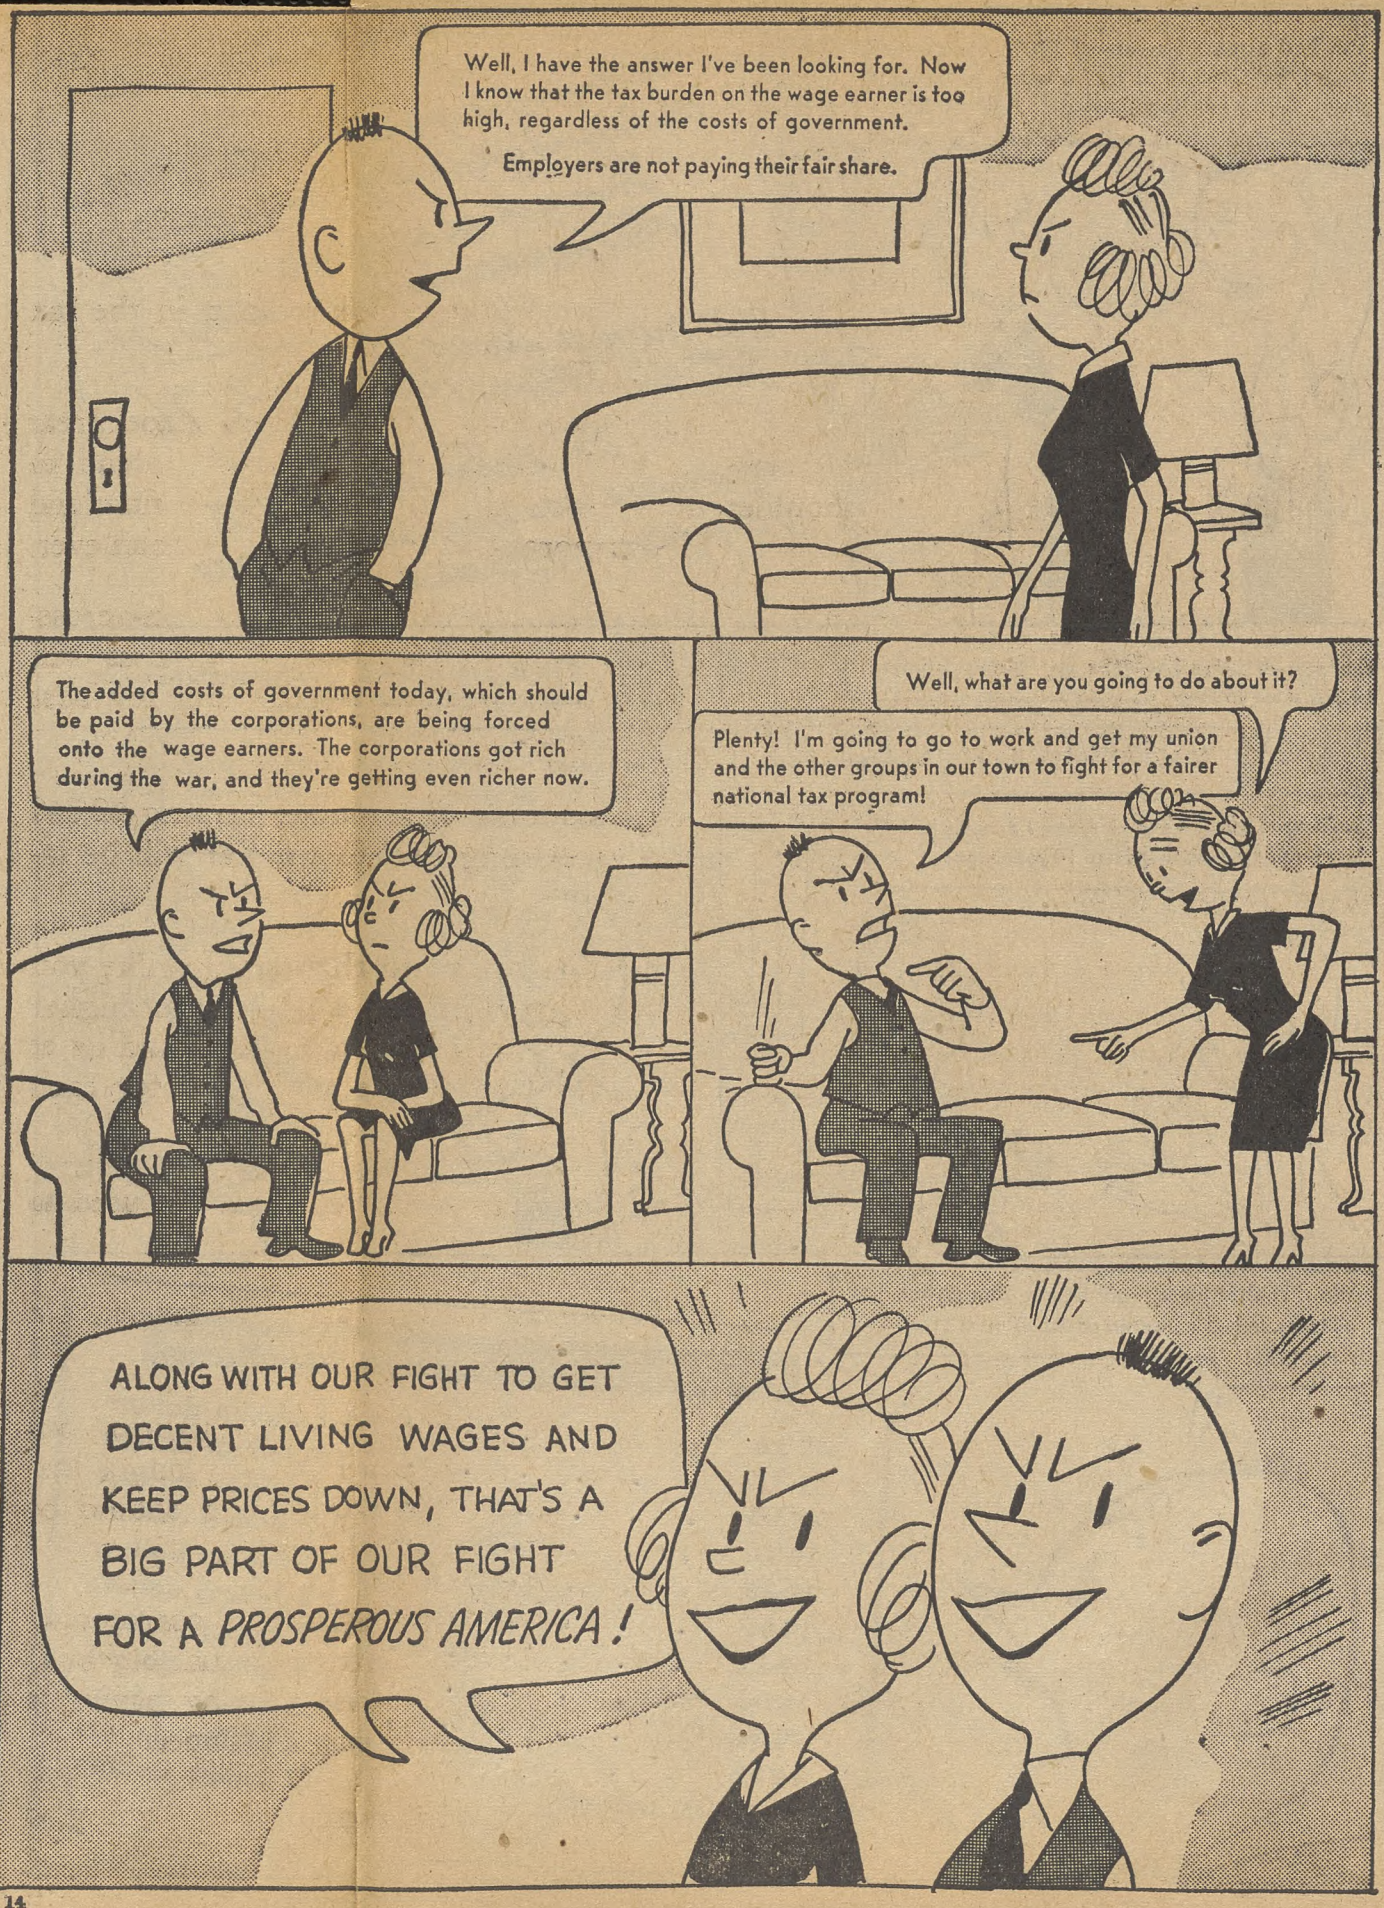
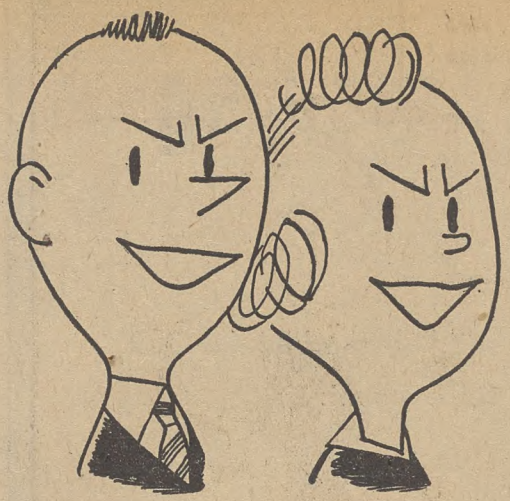
U. S. DEP'T. OF COMMERCE.



Well, I have the answer I've been looking for. Now I know that the tax burden on the wage earner is too high, regardless of the costs of government.
Employers are not paying their fair share.
The added costs of government today, which should be paid by the corporations, are being forced onto the wage earners. The corporations got rich during the war, and they're getting even richer now.
Well, what are you going to do about it?
Plenty! I'm going to go to work and get my union and the other groups in our town to fight for a fairer national tax program!
ALONG WITH OUR FIGHT TO GET DECENT LIVING WAGES AND KEEP PRICES DOWN, THAT'S A BIG PART OF OUR FIGHT FOR A PROSPEROUS AMERICA!



IT's high time we workers took a hand in the tax program of our country.

The war's over now. The workers made great sacrifices to help win it. Now we don't intend to shoulder more than our fair share of the financial burden while corporation profits are higher than ever.

We demand that the tax program be changed—and we don't mean any cuts-across-the-board. The 20% cut-across-the-board which the Republicans want to give us will increase my take-home pay by 82 cents—from $40.45 a week to $41.27. But my boss will get an increase of $816 a week—from $1,210 to $2,026.

A 20% cut-across-the-board will increase the take-home of a worker earning $2,340 a year by 2%. But the take-home of an executive earning $275,000 a year will be increased by over 67%.

We want the tax law changed by raising the exemptions so that workers like you and me won't have to pay any federal income taxes unless our wages go up a lot higher than they are now. With the cost of living what it is now, the exemptions should be at least $1,000 for a single person and $2,000 for a married couple with $500 for each dependent.

We want the federal income tax rates in the lower brackets reduced. We used to pay 4% on the first $2,000 above our exemptions. Now the rate is 19%.

We want all sales taxes repealed. Sales taxes are the worst of all. They tax us from the first dollars regardless of how little we earn.

We want taxes on necessities repealed. It's all right to keep taxes on luxuries, but telephones, cigarettes, automobiles, refrigerators, radios and toasters are no longer luxuries for the rich alone. They are products which every American worker should be able to buy tax free.

We took it on the chin all during the war when taxes rose without a corresponding increase in wages. We lost again when the cost of living went up so that big business could make more billions in profits. We don't intend to lose now by paying a larger part of the total tax burden out of our already shrinking pay envelopes.

Our votes help put Senators and Representatives in Washington. We're going to let them know that we expect a fair deal.

THE DRIVE AGAINST LABOR

This is the third installment of a pamphlet exposing the union-busting intent of "curb labor" proposals in Congress. It was prepared by the CIO Legal Dept., headed by Lee Pressman.

THEY PROPOSE:

"Make Labor Unions Bargain Collectively . . ."

"Let's Have a Cooling Off Period Before Strikes . . ."

WE find that these slogans are completely lacking in any reasonable basis. They serve merely as an effort to confuse issues which the facts themselves make quite clear.

So much for the slogans. Now what are the proposals which are offered under cover of these slogans?

The one most widely urged takes the form of a so-called cooling-off period. The proposal usually contains a suggestion that before calling strikes unions must send certain kinds of notices to the employer and to government officials, that there must be a certain minimum period of conference, and thereafter certain additional notice of varying duration.

In all, these usually add up to a requirement that before calling a strike a union must give the employer extensive advance notice of its intent to call the strike, usually for at least a period of thirty or sixty days or sometimes even more.

Sometimes a slight twist is introduced in addition to this cooling-off period arrangement so as to declare that it is the duty of the union to bargain in good faith and to declare that it shall be an unfair practice for the union to fail to bargain.

In both forms, however, the proposals have the same evil foundation and effects.

In both forms, in the first place, the proposals by their very nature seek to create a public impression adverse to unions. By their very nature the proposals seek to create the impression that it is unions which have created recent labor difficulties and that it is unions which must be chastised. The true facts on this we have already pointed out.

More important, however, these proposals by their very nature play into the hands of employers and accomplish results seriously weakening to the unions in the collective bargaining process.

It is a well-known fact, particularly to leaders of labor organizations, that the power of the union to organize and conduct a strike, if one should be necessary, depends in large measure on the morale and organizational spirit among the men and women who comprise the union.

That morale and organizational spirit is not a thing of the moment. It is not something which can be built up and turned on or off over night simply at the beck and call of the leaders of the union. A strike decision by any large group of workers is a very important decision; important to them and important to the community.

It is one which they take only after consideration and judgment and it is one which, once taken, requires a good deal of preparation and work to make their decision effective.

To organize a strike requires planning, timing, understanding and above all complete and detailed preparation. This being so, it is a matter of extreme moment to the organization that it be able to time its strike action properly and effectively. It is a matter of great moment to the organization that it not be placed in the position of scheduling a strike and calling it off and scheduling it and calling it off and delaying it, at the whim and command of a government official or dependent on the stalling tactics of the employer.

ALL of these proposals have a simple major objective! They subject the union to artificial delays, to artificial extensions, to artificial uncertainties which make it more difficult to plan and organize an effective strike.

There is, in addition, an effect produced by these delaying proposals, these cooling-off proposals, which actually forces strikes on many occasions when strikes would not be needed or desired. These cooling-off periods set an official stamp and determinant as to when a strike should be called.

If they fix a 60-day period from the day of the notice, an expectation is built up among the members of the union that the end of the 60-day period will mark the commencement of the strike. This has been found to be one of the substantial effects of the ill-fated Smith-Connally Act.

Thus, far from preventing strikes, these delaying cooling-off period provisions in statutes have only one major effect: they weaken the union in its organizational efforts in preparation for the strike. At the same time they frequently provoke premature strikes and frequently cause strikes which would not otherwise take place. As to all these proposals a set of simple conclusions may be stated:

1. These proposals are not supported by any of the facts of the strike situations they are supposed to remedy.
2. They are part of a campaign to discredit and vilify labor and obscure the true facts as to the cause of strikes.
3. They will have no effect on labor relations other than to harass and weaken unions in the collective bargaining process.

THEY ARGUE:

"Amend the One-Sided Wagner Act . . ."

To refer to the Wagner Act as "one-sided" is a thorough confusion of ideas.

Prior to the passage of the Act the rights of employers and employes were completely out of balance. Employers had the uncontested right to pool their resources and engage in collective action through the formation of corporations. The corporations themselves were permitted to band together for the purpose of presenting a united front to labor in the matter of wages, hours and working conditions.

On the other hand, the worker was helpless as an individual to cope with the enormous concentrated bargaining power of the employers.

The employer possessed and used many highly effective weapons to destroy unions. Discharge, blacklisting and espionage were but a few of the weapons available to him for such purpose. The employe, however, had the bare legal right of self-organization—and nothing more. Any collective action which he tried to take was promptly smashed by his employer.

FINALLY, the employer's business property were protected against interference from his employes by the injunction and the whole body of laws, civil and criminal, protecting property rights. But the worker found no assistance in police regulations or the injunctive process in protecting his job and the standards under which he worked.

The purpose of the Wagner Act was to relieve, at least in part, this glaring inequality.

It did so simply by forbidding the employer to use his economic power to destroy the right of self-organization of his employes. The Act thus merely placed employer and employe upon a plane of equality in one limited respect, namely, freedom to organize for collective action. None of the other legal rights of the employer was taken from him.

Since the Wagner Act thus merely restores a partial equality where enormous inequality existed before, it is difficult to see how it can be called one-sided.

Furthermore, the Act accomplishes its purpose in the mildest possible way. No criminal penalties attach to violation of the Act. Not a single employer has ever gone to jail under the National Labor Relations Act while employes are subject to severe jail sentences by anti-labor judges for even threatening interference with the property rights of employers.

IT is true that the Act imposes obligations only upon employers rather than employes—but to attribute one-sidedness to the Act for that reason is silly. It would be equally unrealistic to assert that game laws are one-sided because they make no provision to protect the hunter against the birds which he is forbidden to shoot.

The inequality which the Act sought to remedy grew out of employer interference with self-organization of employes. There is no corresponding threat by employes to the self-organization of employers. Certainly no law is needed to prevent employes from restraining or coercing employers in the exercise of their right to self-organization and collective bargaining.

Every proposal which is now made to "equalize" the Act has been urged for years by groups opposed to collective bargaining. They have as their real purpose the hope of interference with the self-organization of employes and the destruction of their unions.

SPECIAL

The first settlement in portal-to-portal pay suits was announced in Federal Court in San Francisco by R. L. Miller, attorney for the Swift & Co. He advised Federal Judge George B. Harris that his company had reached a nationwide agreement with the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The company agreed to pay members of the union 12 minutes' overtime pay for each work day since 1943. It is estimated that this will give each individual worker a sum of more that $200.

This is a good answer to the hue and cry that prevails and to the stupid, asinine position taken by the AFL, which has been asleep at the switch on this and other issues. The position the AFL has taken on the wage question is the most diabolical of any ever taken by a so-called labor organization. They are breaking their necks to be self respectable in the hope that industrialists will benevolently smile upon them. They clothe themselves in the respectability of having no strikes, but they fail to mention the Miners' strikes and many other strikes that have taken place among AFL groups.

What is really hurting them is that the CIO is leading the way and the workers of the nation know it, and will not be deceived by the kind of anti-unionism that the AFL through its mouthpieces is proclaiming.

UAW REJECTS CHALMERS' OFFER

By ESTHER HANDLER

THE policy committee of the CIO Auto Workers meeting in Detroit this week to consider Allis-Chalmers offer to settle the strike made in a bargaining session in Milwaukee earlier in the week unanimously rejected the proposal as inadequate.

The offer was the first break in the deadlock of the Allis-Chalmers negotiations since the strike began last April 30 at the West Allis, Wis., plant.

Afraid of a victory for Local 248 in the State Labor Board election Sunday, Jan. 26, between the UAW and a strike-born company union, Allis-Chalmers made some minor concessions on wages in their new offer.

Quashing company-insured reports that the settlement was reached, the UAW policy committee said:

"While the committee is encouraged by this proposal in that it is the first offer of any kind to be made by the company since negotiations began nine months ago, we feel a better offer will be forthcoming in further negotiations to be held only after Local 248's victory in the bargaining election Sunday.

"In the first place the company's wage offer as it now stands would be given only to such workers as the company selects and would not affect large sections of the working force inasmuch as no incentive worker would receive an increase in take-home pay.

"Secondly, the company offered absolutely nothing in the remaining key issues in the dispute."

In a telegram to Local 248 last week CIO Pres. Philip Murray urged all Allis-Chalmers workers to get out and vote.

"Local 248 has the complete and wholehearted support of the Congress of Industrial Organizations in its long strike," Murray wired. "United behind Local 248 you will move to victory in your strike and improvement of your conditions."

CHARLES H. GILLMAN
CIO's Georgia Drive Leader

CIO GEORGIA SCORE IS 50

(This is the first of a series of stories of the growth of the CIO in the South, state by state).

FIFTY new CIO unions have been established in Georgia and there has been "healthy" growth in long-established CIO unions since the Southern membership drive began last May, Charles H. Gillman, Georgia director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reported this week.

"Among our top victories of the campaign was winning an NLRB election at the Goodyear plant at Cedartown, which brought about 1,800 new members into the CIO," Gillman said.

The new unions are divided as follows:

Auto Workers 3, Clothing Workers 6, Brewery Workers 1, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers 18, Packinghouse Workers 4, Paper Workers 2, Woodworkers 1, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union 6, Steelworkers 3, United Stone Workers 1, and Textile Workers Union of America 5.

U. S. STEEL TALKS OPEN

THE CIO United Steelworkers this week opened negotiations for a new contract with the U. S. Steel Corp.

Negotiators, led by Pres. Philip Murray, met with management at Pittsburgh as The CIO NEWS went to press. Demands of the union, previously reported, included a "substantial increase" in wages.

U. S. Steel employes about 150,000 of the industry's 850,000 workers. The pattern set with this firm is expected to be followed generally by the rest of the industry.

GLASS UNION DEMANDS 25c

THE CIO Glass Workers were in negotiations with Libby-Owens-Ford and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. at Washington this week in an attempt to get a 25c general wage raise.

The two corporations, known as Big Glass, were also asked to guarantee an annual wage, to provide a company-paid fund for accident, health, hospitalization and life insurance, and to participate in a pension fund.

The union also seeks equal pay for women workers, elimination of the swing shift, and double time for the second four hours on Saturday, Sunday work and holiday work. An increase is sought in night shift bonuses, to bring them to 5c for second shift and 10c for third shift.

NLRB ANSWERS LIES WITH FACTS

THE facts of the 11th annual report of the Natl. Labor Relations Board speak louder than the rantings of reactionary Congressmen bent on destroying the Wagner Act.

Many congressmen have been saying that Wagner Act under which the board operates promotes industrial strife. The board reports:

"The fact is that the only kind of strikes which the board was created to discourage, those involving recognition and the commission of unfair labor practices, have sharply declined, both absolutely and relatively, since 1937.

"Congress passed the Wagner Act to provide a peaceful alternative to the costly strikes which had been fought over the denial of the basic rights to union recognition and collective bargaining.

"The statute has served the public by decreasing such strife. The fundamental rights which Congress said should be the subject of Federal protection are no longer being bought at the price of economic strugle."

Reactionaries in Congress have been clamoring for legislation to end jurisdictional disputes. But the board reports:

"The number of representation contests involving two or more unions continued to wane, with 80% of all elections during the year (the fiscal year ending June, 1946) involving only a choice for or against a single union.

"In these cases, as well as in the minority involving a contest between two or more unions, the custom of using the board's election machinery is well established."

Reactionary Congressmen do not say that the number of employers who are fighting unions is growing, but the board reports:

"The number of unfair labor practice cases filed during the past year, 3,815, was greater than the total number filed in any year since 1942."

In 64% of these cases discharging or otherwise discriminating against workers because of their union activities was alleged, and 32% involved the allegation that the employer refused to bargain or failed to bargain in good faith.

The report shows that the CIO continues to be the popular choice of the workers, winning 263,641 votes compared to 175,332 for the AFL. In cases where the CIO was pitted against the AFL, the CIO won 48.7% of the elections—308; the AFL 39.7—251, with the balance going to no union. In elections in this class, the CIO tallied 77,655 of the votes, the AFL 61,178.

UAW DEMANDS INSURANCE, PENSIONS FROM CHRYSLER

AS THE CIO Auto Workers this week made known their full demands on the Chrysler Corp., a magazine article appeared which declares that auto manufacturers have increased their profits per car from 4.2% in 1941 to 11.6% today.

At Chrysler the UAW is seeking a union shop, and company financed insurance and pension plans in addition to a 23½ general wage increase.

Other UAW aims at Chrysler are a clause to make seniority the governing factor in promotions to higher paid or better jobs. The social security program proposed by the union includes life, health and accident, hospitalization and surgical coverage.

The magazine article by Boris Shub in the February issue of This Month declares that although the amount paid out in wages per car has increased, the percentage of labor cost per car has dropped from 25.5% to 24.1%.

While wages jumped from $201.39 per car in 1941 to $269.86 in 1946, increased labor productivity has greatly reduced the unit cost of autos, thus a new electric welding machine speeded the welding of crankshaft balances from three to 36 per hour and multiple spindle drills perform 14 lapping operations simultaneously instead of the single radial drill operation.

N. Y. TEACHERS MAY STRIKE

Other Union News In Brief

A CONFERENCE of representatives of all the teachers, organizations in N. Y. City, spearheaded by the CIO Teachers Union, voted this week to conduct a strike vote among the city's teachers.

The move follows refusal of Gov. Thomas Dewey and the state legislature to comply with demands for a total permanent salary increase of $1050 a year. A Dewey-sponsored bill to increase salaries by $300 and to set a $2000 statewide minimum was passed by the legislature and brings the gains of the New York City teachers up to $900, only $250 of which has been made permanent.

The CIO Fur & Leather Workers' executive board meeting last weekend at Atlantic City voted to continue the union's wage drive until the workers in every plant particularly in the leather industry obtain substantial increases. The union will also seek guaranteed wages.

The semi-annual meeting reiterated the union's convention statement that color, religion and political beliefs and affiliations will constitute no bar to participation in the union's activities.

Thurman Arnold and Abe Fortas this week urged the adoption of judicial and procedural safeguards to protect not only the security of the government but the fundamental rights of government employes as well.

Arnold was formerly a Federal Judge and prior to that was Asst. Attorney General in charge of anti-trust cases. Fortas, former Asst. Sec. of Interior, and Arnold are now law partners.

Their recommendations were contained in a letter written on behalf of the CIO Public Workers to the President's Temporary Commission on Employe Loyalty.

"LET'S BAN STRIKES, PICKETLINES, CLOSED SHOPS AND MAKE UNION MEN PAY DUES TO THE COMPANY"

LABOR UNITING TO FIGHT FOES

By FRED ROSS

FROM all points of the compass grass root leaders of the CIO, AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods this week thundered "Yes" to the request of CIO Pres. Philip Murray for unified action to turn back the onslaught of labor's foes.

Formal replies unmatched by action were received last month by Murray to his unity letter to AFL Pres. William Green and Chairman Thomas C. Cashen of the Railway Labor Executives Assn. Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen was quick to reply to the letter with a promise of cooperation that is bearing fruit in the vigorous pro-unity attitude of the members of his union.

But this week AFL and rail union members in Jamestown, N. Y., Salt Lake City, Chicago and Milwaukee showed by positive action that they had taken to heart Murray's request to rise "above any petty or personal quarrels."

At Chicago representatives of the AFL Federation of Labor, the CIO Council and the Railroad Brotherhoods set up the All-Chicago Labor Committee to oppose anti-labor bills in Congress.

The Committee was established at a meeting co-chaired by Sec. Michael Mann of the CIO Council Sec. Joseph Keenan of the AFL Federation and Frank L. Noakes of the Brotherhood of Maintenance of Way Employees. Approval of the project had previously been voted by the Chicago CIO Council.

The committee wired Sen. Taft (R. O.), chairman of the Senate Labor Committee, and Rep. Hartley (R. N. J.), chairman of the House Labor Committee, that it was gravely concerned over anti-labor bills and hoped for the fullest consideration of labor's rights.

Spurred to action by Chautauqua CIO Council at Jamestown, the six-year-old Labor Legislative Conference of the 43d Congressional District this week sent letters to every CIO and AFL central body in N. Y. State urging conferences of AFL, CIO, Railroad Brotherhoods and other bona fide unions "to carry out a joint program in defense of the labor movement."

The letter contained a call for action not only on the state but also on the national level, and urged an appeal to international and state bodies—if necessary—to consummate joint action.

Union leaders at Salt Lake City have formed a united front to study and analyze the effects of new bills on workers and to advise legislators and the public of their opinion.

The committee is composed of representatives of the state, CIO, AFL, Mine Workers and Railroad Brotherhoods. Pres. Clarence Palmer of the Utah CIO Council was named chairman; Sec.-Treas. J. R. Wilson of the Utah Federation of Labor, vice chairman; and Malio Percorelli, UMW, and Forest Hodges, Railroad Brotherhoods, secretaries.

N. J. PLAN BANS STRIKES

New Jersey Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll (R) stepped into outgoing Gov. Walter Edge's shoes last week and he found they fit.

First on his legislative program was an all-out assault on labor's right to strike and the closed shop. His message to the legislature followed through on Edge's notorious law enacted last year, outlawing strikes in New Jersey's public utilities. It called for:

1. "Effective means . . . to prohibit any use of economic force by employers or employes."
2. ~~An "open door"~~ in any existing closed shops in the state.
3. Outlawing of jurisdictional and "wildcat" strikes.
4. Setting up of a labor tribunal under a state labor relations act to define unfair labor practices and provide mediation for collective bargaining.

PRODUCTIVITY RISING

UP 5% IN YEAR SAYS CLAGUE

LABOR productivity is on the increase, with the prospect that there will be still further improvement in output per man-hour, according to Ewan Clague, Commissioner of Labor Statistics.

Addressing the Chicago Chamber of Commerce and the Chicago Chapter of the American Statistical Assn., the Dept. of Labor official reported that production per man-hour seems to be moving upward in most industries for which figures are available.

In a limited group of 20 manufacturing industries, mostly producing non-durable goods and consequently free from reconversion delays, output per man-hour in the third quarter of 1946 averaged between 4 and 5% above the levels of a year ago.

Analyzing the factors underlying changes in labor productivity, Clague singled out five as having special current significance—the worker element, the management element, the technical element, the level of capacity utilization, and supply arrangements.

In all of these the outlook is favorable for further improvements in output per man-hour, he said.

Clague pointed out that 12 million more persons are at work in jobs outside of agriculture than in 1940, and that since V-E Day about 11½ million persons have been released from military service, the bulk of them to jobs in private industry.

The heavy turnover of workers between jobs incident to the war and to reconversion has necessarily reduced below prewar levels the average experience on the job of the typical worker, he declared.

Technical knowledge, he said, is probably the most important single factor determining productivity levels in the long run.

Hits AFL 'Gross Errors' In German Report

"GROSS errors in fact and irresponsible statements" were charged this week by CIO Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum to two leaders of the AFL who renewed their attack on the CIO and its affiliation with the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and a WFTU vice-president, denied that the manpower directors of the four occupying governments in Germany had brought into a deal, secret or otherwise, to affiliate the new German trade unions with the WFTU.

In a letter to Sec. of War Robert Patterson and Under-Secretary of State Dean Acheson, he said that recently publicized comments by Sec. George Meany of the AFL and Matthew Woll, an AFL official, contained "slanderous statements" about the WFTU.

In actuality, Rosenblum said, the WFTU executive bureau in the course of its recent Paris meeting agreed to study the condition of German trade unions and to undertake "preliminary negotiations" with those organizations as a basis for possible future affiliation.

The WFTU attitudes were communicated informally to the manpower directors, with the understanding that future action by the German unions would of course be presented to the Allied Control Council in Berlin for approval.

The CIO official told the government leaders that "irresponsible statements like the Meany-Woll telegram, based on invented facts and replete with deliberate insults to the organized labor movements of the United Nations and the military governments of the four occupying powers are hardly calculated to contribute to the constructive solution of this and other difficult questions of German democratization."

'You And The WFTU' Is New CIO Pamphlet

THE CIO "will continue to play a major role in the affairs of world labor," Pres. Philip Murray said today in a foreword to a new pamphlet entitled "You and the WFTU." The WFTU is the World Federation of Trade Unions, with headquarters in Paris.

"The WFTU, created in the autumn of 1945, is in no small measure the work of CIO; and we look forward to participating actively in its future development," Murray declared.

The pamphlet was prepared by the International Affairs Dept. of CIO, headed by Michael Ross. Frank Rosenblum, secretary-treasurer of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is a WFTU vice-president, representing CIO.

The pamphlet describes the structure and functions of the World Federation of Trade Unions and cites CIO's reason for participating in its formation and activities.

"You and the WFTU" can be ordered from the CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N.W., Washington 6, D. C. 5c a copy, 100 for $4, 500 for $19.

RENT CONTROL WEEK FEB. 17

AN intensive nation-wide drive for maintenance of federal rent control and passage of housing legislation climaxed by a Natl. Rent Control and Housing Week, February 17-23 was announced by Jo Davidson and Frank Kingdon, co-chairmen of the Progressive Citizens of America.

The PCA leaders declared that scores of their community political action groups will initiate city-wide demonstrations, rallies, delegations to state capitols, and petition campaigns directed to Congress and state legislatures.

Informal open hearings will be held with Congressmen and state legislators in their home communities to bring to their attention specific local rental and housing problems.

Radio programs, transcriptions, leaflets, posters and house-to-house canvassing will be some of the methods used to organize public activity during the week of February 17-23.

Tomorrow's Citizens • By Rose H. Alschuler

There is no need to be shocked. Neither is there need to brush off a child's outspoken statement of his feelings. Sometimes children do "hate" when they are punished, when they are forced to do something they do not want to do. They hate, too, when their wills clash with yours and you win just because you are the grownup. The important thing is to make the hating child know that you love him even though he is, for the moment, out of love with you. Try to explain why you must act as you do toward him and that you love him under all circumstances.

BROTHERHOOD WEEK FEB. 16

THE week of February 16-23 has been named American Brotherhood Week by the Natl. Conference of Christians and Jews.

In a letter accepting the honorary chairmanship of the Week, President Truman stated:

"Our supreme need is brotherhood as a pattern for peace, here and across the globe.

"Our own land can make no greater contribution to this troubled world than to establish brotherhood as the rule of life among all our citizens of every religion, race or national origin."

"Brotherhood—live it, believe it, support it—must be the resolve that governs our relations to one another. We cannot hope to recommend brotherhood abroad unless we practice it at home."

The President emphasized the necessity for cooperation and friendship among Protestants, Catholics and Jews as the cornerstone of democracy.

He expressed hope that Americans would meet in churches, schoolhouses and public places to reaffirm these principles in order to "strengthen the bonds that hold us together as we face the demanding tasks to which destiny summons us."

During Brotherhood Week the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America has scheduled a Conference on the Church & Economic Life at Pittsburgh. Beginning Feb. 18, the Conference will attempt to clarify "the direction which economic life should take."

MURRAY ASKS WOMEN'S AID

The CIO Women's Auxiliaries have embarked on an all-out organizing campaign and will present a bronze plaque to the auxiliary making the greatest gains during the Jan. 7-April 7 period.

Sprucing Up

SPRING SONG

By HANNA SHERMAN

HERE in New York I have just previewed the new Spring fashions. Truth to tell there is nothing startlingly different about them.

In spite of the hullabaloo and the thousands of words being written about New York's yearly showing for the press, your last year's clothes, if you still like them and they are still in good condition, are very much O. K.

There really is no radical change in the fashion picture. There are suits with straight sleeves, cuffed full sleeves, jackets with a belt in the back and jackets tied at the waist. There are fitted suits, loose cardigans and jackets with peplums. As for the length of suit coats, they range from the shortest of short boleros to the tunic length jacket which in itself is almost a full length coat.

So if you want a grey flannel bolero suit this spring (and it's a fine choice for you short girls) it's right there in the shops. If you want a beautiful gabardine classic shirtwaist dress in a bright color—and who doesn't?— you'll find that too. Wear what you like and wear what becomes you. When a sales person tells you that "They are not wearing" what you wish to buy, it's merely to intimidate you.

You are they. You determine what the manufacturers will make. And you determine by your choice whether or not they stay in business.

Perhaps you are not planning to add any big items to your wardrobe this spring. You'll still want to look and feel fresh as a daisy. It's the little things that will help you achieve this effect, and they have undergone some considerable face lifting.

Real silk scarves are back, good leather pocketbooks at a price, ditto belts. You can get smart looking blouses with long sleeves if you want them—why even French cuffs! All these put new life into that suit you expected to last you for three years. And why shouldn't it? Of course, it's only feminine to want a new hat before your serious spring shopping, so I won't be the girl to discourage that particular purchase. I confess that's a weakness of my own.

Have you a clothes or beauty problem? I'll be glad to help you solve it in this column. Write me—Hanna Sherman—care of the CIO News, Washington, D. C.

ASKS TWO DIMES FOR POLIO

In a radio broadcast last week in behalf of the Natl. Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt called on every American to contribute not one but two dimes in this year's March of Dimes.

The former First Lady pointed out that last year's polio epidemic, the greatest in 30 years, had depleted the funds of the Founation, necessitating a higher goal this year than ever before.

Contributions to the March of Dimes in past years made it possible for every polio patient—25,000 in all—in the 1946 epidemic to receive adequate care. Costs incurred by the disease average $1,200 per patient, an expense that few families can afford.

Drive To

SHACKLE LABOR

INDUSTRY's drive to restrict the freedom of labor union activity began to move into its final phases last week.

The Senate Committee on Labor & Public Welfare, headed by Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), opened hearings on a slew of anti-labor legislative proposals with a plea by lanky Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.) for the adoption of S.55, a rehashed version of the Case bill which President Truman vetoed a year ago.

With Sen. Alexander Smith (R. N.J.), a thin-lipped old gentleman, providing the necessary questions, Ball read into the record his argument that he was acting largely to protect workers from their unions. But his statement defending the bill which he, Taft and Smith are sponsoring was a clear-cut attack on a variety of union functions.

Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), one of the minority New Deal Democrats on the Labor Committee, opened the hearing with a plea for a thorough investigation of management-labor relations as the only sound basis for passing any legislation on the subject.

The quiet-spoken Montanan opened the hearings with a warning that "we cannot mix statesmanship with hysteria" nor approach the "vital and delicate problems of labor relations in an atmosphere of emotionalism and confusion."

The nation should not overlook the "danger of seeking a short-term victory through compulsory techniques," Murray said, while "losing the long-term objectives of the preservation of freedom and democracy."

Pleading against "stampede" action, the Montana Senator predicted solemnly that "abridgements of the right to strike inevitably lead . . . from freedom to fascism."

Sen. Taft, however, said that the committee would move quickly within the next month to hear testimony from interested parties and prepare a Committee bill for consideration by the Senate. Government witnesses are scheduled to be heard at the daily hearings for the next fortnight, while employer spokesmen will testify between Feb. 4 and 18.

LABOR will have its innings for two weeks starting Feb. 18, and Taft is hopeful of getting a bill passed by March 31. Under consideration by the committee are Sen. Murray's proposal for a government study of labor relations; the Taft-Smith-Ball bill; two bills by Ball relating to union security and industry-wide bargaining; a mediation proposal by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), five proposals for amending or repealing the Wagner Act by Sen. O'Daniel (D. Tex.); a union incorporation bill by Sen. Byrd (D. Va.); and a forthcoming bill on Wagner Act amendments by Ball.

Ball sought to cloak the severity of his proposed bill with a cover of reasonableness. One proposal he described as "extremely mild"—it would simply throw out from the protection of the Wagner Act workers who violated the bill's 60-day cooling-off provisions in labor-management negotiations!

Another section, he said, would "simply" make unions liable to suits in federal courts for any action by any of its members in violation of a union contract.

The Taft-Smith-Ball measure, which many observers expect to become the basis of the Senate Labor Committee's legislative recommendation a couple of months hence, was described by Ball as an "approach to some, not all, of the problems in the field." He hung his attack on union organizations on three pegs—the removal of "special privileges and legal immunities of unions"; the making of labor unions "responsible to the public interest"; and what he chose to term "monopolistic practices".

ONE section of the bill, as in its predecessor Case Bill, would pull the government's conciliation service out of the Dept. of Labor, which Ball described as "partisan to labor" and into a new federal mediation service. The new board would have the power to intervene in any labor dispute, and having done so it would bar strikes or lockouts for a period of 60 days.

Learning What Makes Washington Tick

THE U. S. Government will move less mysteriously hereafter for 18 Virginia workers who spent last week in the nation's capital getting a close-up of government machinery.

Students of the Southern School for Workers with headquarters at Richmond, the workers were selected by six CIO unions to make the trip—Amalgamated Clothing, Steel, Paper, Food, Tobacco & Agricultural, Textile, and the Public Workers.

The school's director, Brownie Lee Jones, accompanied the group.

The capital visit began with personal interviews with each of Virginia's Representatives. Closing each day's experiences were early-hour bull-sessions in the dormitories of American University, where the group was housed.

The visitors obtained special permits to visit the White House and toured the Social Security and U. S. Labor Dep't. buildings.

RENT RISE THREATENED

See Page 12

"Big Steel" in the Spotlight. CIO Pres. Philip Murray (left) chats with John A. Stephens, U. S. Steel Corp. executive in charge of industrial relations. In bargaining conferences at Pittsburgh for a new contract, the CIO Steelworkers announced that the firm had agreed to revision of wage rates which will bring $32 million in back pay and annual wage increases of $17 million to most of the company's 150,000 employes. (For story, see page 7.)

UAW VETERANS ASK HOMES

THE CIO Auto Workers veterans' conference this week labeled inadequate housing their "No. 1 problem," and promptly set out to do something about it.

Meeting in Washington, the 200 delegates from plants throughout the country urged President Truman to recreate a strong housing agency under the Patman Act, and called on Congress to pass immediately the Wagner-Ellender-Taft Bill and to set up a program for building 16 million dwelling units.

If resolutions do not get the results, there is a possibility the veterans will demand a march on Washington not only for housing but for the bonus.

Discussion of the march was ruled out of order the first day of the conference, but the next day there was considerable discussion before such action was voted down as being untimely while Congress may consider the measures.

The ex-GIs also were hot under the collar over the prospect of removal of rent control and strengthened their resolution on the subject to advocate rent strikes if curbs are eliminated and rents raised.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther was scheduled to speak, but was unable to attend.

UAW Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas was detained in West Allis, Wis., by the Allis-Chalmers strike but his speech presented by UAW Vice-Pres. Richard Leonard lashed out at Sen. Taft (R. Ohio), Herbert Nelson of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, and the Natl. Assn. of Home Builders.

"Sen. Taft," Thomas said, "may or may not introduce the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill as it now stands. He says he wants it passed. Well, Sen. Taft is the new boss of the Republican party, and we have a Republican Congress. He can get it passed if he wants to.

"All he has done up to now is to make speeches while the nation's No. 1 economic problem waits for a solution."

Thomas declared that Nelson took the lead in harassing the Wyatt program and accused him of using the Natl. Assn. of Home Builders as "stooges" in the "get-Wyatt" campaign. Thomas said that he felt that the Home Builders had been duped into supporting NAREB.

The UAW ex-servicemen saw eye to eye on the principle of the bonus with the Veterans of Foreign Wars and the Disabled American Veterans. The UAW vets called for a bonus of $3 a day for domestic service and $4 a day for overseas service, a minimum of $100 and a $3500 maximum for domestic service, and a $500 minimum and a $4500 maximum for overseas service.

The $200-a-month limitation for veterans taking on-the-job training was attacked in another resolution.

Both Richard Reisinger, chairman of the veterans committee of the UAW executive board, and Emil Mazey, chairman of the conference and director of the UAW veterans dept., attacked the American Legion's leadership.

Reisinger advocated that UAW members take part in the Legion to have it mirror the veterans' real wishes. Mazey said that the Legion is opposed to unions because its leadership is sympathetic to big business, despite the fact that 80% of its members are workers.

BURY HOPES OF USING VETS AGAINST LABOR

THE hope that veterans would become the shock troops against unions was given a decent burial this week in the pages of Business Week, a leading spokesman for industry.

Although it was apparent some months ago that ex-servicemen had no intention of being union-busters and were in fact militant trade union members, the more reactionary business elements, banked on servicemen to aid them in their anti-union crusade.

Business Week saw the possible "end of the belief of some employers that demobilization might drastically temper unionism."

"That belief was held only by a small percentage of employers," the magazine stated. "Those included ones who during the war had signed their first union contracts. There were others who simply chafed under the necessity of having to live with labor organizations.

"They took at face value GI gripes against labor. They interpreted the grumbling as an indication of anti-union sentiment. They were certain that this would make itself felt when the war ended.

"If any plans were made on the basis of those beliefs, they have gone awry. Veterans generally have fitted easily into trade union membership and peacetime employment. For the most part veterans have become indistinguishable from non-veterans in the labor force. . ."

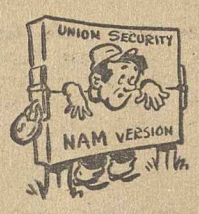
WHAT'S THAT WORD?

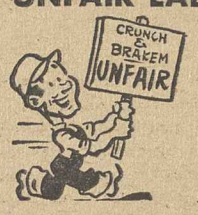
Technical terms on labor relations, which once used to hide behind the covers of college textbooks, are becoming everyday language as legislators push their favorite bills to curb unions. Here's a handy glossary of some of the most frequently-used terms to help refresh your memory and to keep abreast of what Congressmen Doaks is talking about in his next speech:

UNION SECURITY: This covers three types of clauses found in most union agreements: (1) closed shop, which requires an employer to to hire new employes only from members of the union; (2) union shop, which requires that all persons hired by the employer must join the union; (3) maintenance of membership, which requires that with the exception of a limited period each year, all workers who join the union in a particular plant must remain in the union for the duration of the union-management agreement; (4) preferential hiring, which requires the employer to ask the union for new employes before he hires anybody on the outside market.



JURISDICTIONAL STRIKE: A strike by one union to prevent members of another union from doing or handling certain work. This strike has occurred most frequently in the AFL building trades, or by AFL unions aiming to cripple the activities of CIO unions. The daily press, however, frequently expands the term to cover strikes against company or so-called "independent" unions.

UNFAIR LABOR PRACTICE: An action by an employer — such as firing of a worker for union activity, discrimination against union members, or threats against workers if they join a union — which is illegal under the provisions of the Wagner Labor Relations Act.



UNION 'MONOPOLY': A term used by the press to describe almost any situation in which a union bargains with more than one employer for an agreement. Industry-wide bargaining-negotiations with all or the majority of employers in a particular industry—is a special target of these forces.

COOLING-OFF PERIOD: A period, usually ranging from 30 to 90 days, during the course of negotiations over a new contract in which the union would be barred from taking strike action.

INJUNCTION: A court order obtained by an employer in a court of law to prohibit a union or members of a union from carrying out union activities. Injunctions of this sort were made illegal by the Norris-LaGuardia Act in 1933, and the government's injunction in the recent coal strike is now in the Supreme Court to determine its legality.

CIO TO TESTIFY ON ANTI-LABOR BILLS

Murray On Stand February 21

WITH Pres. Philip Murray slated to testify on Feb. 21 against anti-labor bills now up for Congressional consideration, CIO this week launched plans for a counter-attack against the incessant propaganda drive to curb American unionism.

Pres. Murray will lead a group of CIO witnesses due to appear before Senator Robert A. Taft's Committee on Labor & Public Welfare to blast the drive against labor and to show the dangers to national industrial relations contained in the batch of restrictive bills now up for consideration.

The Committee, bent on securing passage of some measures by the end of March or early April, heard a number of government and industrial witnesses during the week. Principal criticism of the Taft-Smith-Ball proposals (S. 55) came from Sec. of Labor Lewis Schwellenbach, who offered the Committee close criticial analysis of the proposals.

OTHER developments in the fast-moving labor legislation scene included:

1. Filing of new anti-strike bill by Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), who has set the pace for other Senate anti-unionists.

2. Announcement by the House Labor Committee that it would commence hearings on anti-labor legislation on Feb. 5, with the intention of clearing a cover-all measure by March 31, date of the coal miners' current no-strike pledge to the government.

3. Warning by a leader of the highly-unionized men's clothing industry that a quarter-century's practical experience has proved that bills to outlaw the union shop and "Balkanize" industry-wide bargaining would disrupt labor-management relations in the trade.

SEC. Schwellenbach's testimony consisted of a close analysis of the Taft-Smith-Ball bill. The bill is a re-write of last year's Case bill and the principal contender for passage by the Senate during this session.

The Labor Secretary warned that plans contemplated in the bill for a separate Federal Mediation Board outside the Dept. of Labor would "impede industrial peace rather than further it"; and he attacked plans to illegalize the check-off of union dues and to limit health and welfare funds.

"I just can't see anything wrong with the check-off system," Sec. Schwellenbach said. "If a man belongs to a union, I see no objection to collection of his dues."

Other witnesses included Prof. Leo Wolman of Columbia University, onetime researcher for the Amalgamated Clothing Workers who has become an anti-union newspaper columnist and spokesmen for the ideas of reactionary employers. Wolman, as expected, went down the line for the Senate clique favoring legislation against the unions.

Theordore Iserman, member of a big N. Y. corporation law firm, opined that Sen. Ball's bills to end industry-wide bargaining and outlaw union security would be the answer to every phase of labor relations, and R. S. Edwards, of the Natl. Electric Manufacturers Assn. went marching resolutely against sympathetic boycotts of non-union products.

Three key Anti-Laborites: Republican Senators Smith (N. J.), Ball (Minn.) and Taft (O.). They're debating what size knife to use on union workers.

That Squeal, Suh, Is From Bad Gamblers

MUCH of the nationwide press campaign against portal wage-claim suits springs from a realization by big employers that they are losing a "colossal gamble" to evade the Wage-Hour Act.

That charge was made last week by the CIO Legal Dept., which filed a "friend of the court" brief in the important Mt. Clemens pottery case, now being heard by U. S. District Court in Detroit.

"The wild attacks upon working people for bringing law suits is little more than an attempt to divert the attention of the courts, the legislature and the people in general, from the fact that American employers during the past eight years have been involved in a colossal gamble to evade the Act in the hope of escaping the consequences of such evasion," the CIO brief declared.

The statement, signed by General Counsel Lee Pressman and his assistants, Eugene Cotton and Frank Donner, said that "judicial and administrative decisions" made since 1939 have pointed to the character and extent of employer liability for travel and make-ready time.

"Now that workers have proceeded in the normal American way to seek redress for what has been wrongfully withheld from them, these employers have sought to create an atmosphere in which their own wrong-doing will be obscured and their irresponsibility overlooked," the CIO told the court.

Before Judge Picard is the problem of deciding to what extent the claims of the Mt. Clemens pottery employes should be upheld. The general principles governing the claims have already been approved by the U. S. Supreme Court.

Honor Guildsmen Who Died in Service

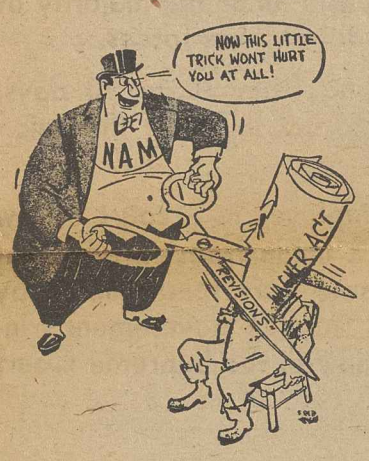
An annual memorial lectureship in honor of three Minneapolis newspapermen who died in service has been established at the University of Minnesota by the Twin Cities Newspaper Guild.

The lectureship is in honor of Carroll Bon of the Morning Tribune, Lawrence Cragg and Riley McKoy, both of the Minneapolis Star, all of whom were guild members before they entered the army.

BOSS BLASTS BALL BILL AS 'STEP BACKWARD'

SOME practical talk on collective bargaining—a feature sadly missing from most Congressional discussion on labor laws—came last week from a leading employer in the nation's big, important clothing industry.

Victor S. Riesenfeld, chairman of the board of one major firm and head of the bargaining committee of the U. S. Clothing Manufacturers Assn. expressed belief that union security and industry-wide bargaining during the past decade or more have stabilized profits and working conditions, and spelled doom for sweatshop exploiters of labor.



In contrast to Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), who has sponsored bills to illegalize both practices, Riesenfeld spoke with the conviction of an employer who has participated in scores of bargaining sessions between management and union—in this case the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, CIO.

Ball's proposals, and those of other Congressmen, would be a "backward step," the clothing manufacturer declared. Industry-wide bargaining between all employers and the union has kept the entire trade on an even keel and has prevented any one clothing center from "upsetting the apple cart."

"I do not want to appear to be making a prescription for all industries," Riesenfeld said, "but in the clothing industry, where we have a well-disciplined union and employer group, and a genuine disposition on both sides to take into account our mutual problems, it would definitely be a step backwards to return to local bargaining."

LEADERS of the Amalgamated backed up Riesenfeld's criticism of the proposed Ball legislation with a prediction that the Minnesota senator would "open up a torrent of conflicts on local and geographical levels where none now exists."

In a statement by Pres. Jacob Potofsky and Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum, the union said:

"The nation-wide stabilization of labor costs by the Amalgamated ten years ago has been hailed by management, labor, economists and the courts alike as a program which saved the clothing industry from hopeless ruin. This program Senator Ball's proposed measure would destroy.

"His proposal is a blind assault on labor's rights and progress. If successful, he will pull down the house of labor over his head as well. We trust that sane legislators will stop Sen. Ball's proposals for industrial suicide."

"TERRIBLE, TERRIBLE, TERRIBLE"

LIKE the millers of Coketown, of whom Charles Dickens wrote, America's organized manufacturers are "such fragile chinaware" that "handle them ever so lightly and they fall to pieces."

Dickens wrote that the Coketown millers were "ruined" when child labor laws were enacted, "ruined" by factory inspectors, and "ruined" when such inspectors doubted "whether they were quite justified in chopping people up with their machinery."

American manufacturers, similarly, have wailed that they would be "ruined" by every measure ever passed for the protection of working people, including especially the Wagner Act, passed to protect the right of workers to organize and bargain collectively.

The Wagner Act has now been in force for 11 years, and American industry shows no signs of being "ruined." On the contrary, profits have risen steadily in this period and are now at record peaks.

NOW THAT the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers feels it has enough influence in Congress to pass union-busting legislation, however, the hue-and-cry has been renewed.

The cry is that the Wagner Act is "one-sided," that it falls "with crushing weight" on the employer and grants special privileges to the worker.

Yet actually, American workers who face starvation if they do not work are still far from enjoying real equality of bargaining power with the great corporate monopolies, whose owners suffer little from shutdowns.

TO ILLUSTRATE the "crushing weight" with which the "one-sided" Wagner Act falls on the employer, J. Warren Madden, when NLRB chairman, compared the rough treatment of union pickets with the velvet handling of the boss.

If the employer thinks his rights are being violated, he can call the cops and have his workers beaten up, arrested and jailed.

"To equalize the law," Madden said, "would require that the police first inquire who caused the strife and, if they conclude that the employer caused it, they should back the police wagon up to his office and push him in, lock him up in a dirty jail and charge him with vagrancy or being a suspicious person, set his bail or fine so high that he could not meet it, and leave him."

ON THE other hand, the law might be equalized by according to labor the mild treatment applied to employers.

"This would mean," Madden said, "that if Picket, a union man on strike, violated the law, the employer would file a charge in our Regional Office . . .

"Our office would write a letter or telephone politely to Picket and ask him for his side of the story. An investigator would go out as soon as convenient and attempt to ascertain the true facts.

"If the investigation indicated that the employer's charge against Picket was apparently well founded and if Picket indicated that he was unwilling to bring himself into compliance with the law, a formal complaint would be issued," giving notice that a hearing would be held before a trial examiner.

Madden then continued to trace the endless delays, reports, hearings, and warnings, if the unionist were given equal treatment with the boss, before a Board order would be issued, and the lengthy court procedures thereafter before he would finally have to obey the law or suffer punishment.

OF COURSE, big business has its tongue in its cheek when it wails about the "one-sidedness" of the Wagner Act.

The law falls on the boss with all the "crushing weight" of a feather.

But still big business wails, "Terrible, terrible," as profiteers have always done, to cover up all the grabbing they can do at the expense of workers' rights and liberties.

BY LEN DE CAUX

SAID the lion to the lamb: "Beware the ewe that eats your grass. Trust me, and we'll soon dispose of this menace."

The lamb trustfully came within the lion's reach.

Then, as it felt the lion's claws enter its flesh and saw the lion's jaws open to devour it, the lamb bleated, "But what about the ewe? I thought you said . . ."

"Pardon the pun, my sweet little morsel of ewe-lamb," the lion replied, "but I did and do mean YOU."

SAID a lot of politicians to the voters: "Labor has become too powerful, greedy and arrogant. Vote for me and we'll soon do a job on this menace."

Quite a few citizens voted for these politicians.

Now that they have felt the claws of uncontrolled prices, now that they see the jaws of increased rents, unfair taxes and depression opening to devour them, these voters may well complain:

"But I thought you said you were just going to do a job on labor."

And the tory politician might well reply: "You are labor, my trustful friend. For does not labor include all those who earn a useful living by productive effort?"

A FANTASTIC picture of "Labor" has been created in many minds by the terrific campaign of anti-union propaganda.

It would take a Walt Disney film to do justice to this weird, inconsistent and ever-changing fantasmagoria of all-powerful labor dictators, greedy unions holding up a meek little John Q. Public, subversive plotters, jutting eyebrows, special-privilege, violence, monopoly and what-have-you?

The underlying purpose of all these crude misrepresentations, lies and exaggerations is to create an unreal separation in the public mind between labor and the general public.

Thus the big-business lion hopes to allay suspicion while it prepares for itself a meal of public lamb.

CONSIDER what has happened since the November elections, with their acclaimed victory for big-business and anti-labor reaction.

Living costs have soared to unprecedented heights.

Corporate profits and dividends have broken all records.

Tory Republicans are pressing for a 15% increase in rents and an early lifting of all rent controls.

They are also urging a 20% "across-the-board" reduction in income taxes, which would add millions to the take-home pay of the rich and furnish little or no relief to the poor—all at the expense of public services from which the poor benefit most.

And looming ever closer is depression and unemployment—the rotten fruit that grows on the tree of exorbitant super-profits, reduced mass purchasing power, over-high prices and too low wages.

Yes, big business and its politicians are doing a job on labor. And by "labor" they do mean you, Mr. John Q. Public.

BUT THERE are still some who imagine that the furious drive for anti-labor legislation is just aimed at "labor abuses," union leaders and other things somehow separate and apart from the interests of the ordinary working American.

If they will study the many proposals now before Congress, however, they will find their real aim is to depress the living standards of all working people, whether union or non-union—and of all others, whose income and welfare depend on those of the workers.

THE PHONY hysteria over portal-to-portal pay is whipped up for the purpose of undermining the Fair Labor Standards Act—which furnishes more protection to low-paid unorganized workers than it does to the organized.

It is also designed to deprive workers of payment for time spent setting up the job, preparing materials, tools and safety equipment, traveling from time-clock to machine and other activities controlled by the employer and for his benefit.

The bills to enforce the open shop and outlaw industry-wide bargaining are designed to reinstate open-shop conditions and low wages for all workers, by rendering the unions powerless to resist employer attack and to bargain effectively with mighty corporate monopolies.

The latest Ball bill to revise the Wagner Act is admittedly designed to encourage and assist strike-breaking. It would offer many new privileges to wage-cutting and union-busting bosses and destroy most of the workers' present protections.

Signs designate the counties represented by the "Senators" and "Assemblymen" at the first session of the model unicameral legislature held this week by the N. J. CIO Council within a stone's throw of the State capitol.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the N. J. Council presented the state CIO's program to the "legislature" for action.

Assemblyman John J. Grogan, also vice-president of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, urged a vets' bonus.

Assemblyman T. James Tumulty said a good example was set for the real legislature.

A MODEL LEGISLATURE

By FRED ROSS

THE New Jersey CIO Council this week set a good example to its state legislature.

Meeting in the War Memorial Building at Trenton, N. J., almost in the shadow of the Capitol, the council held a unicameral legislative session. The Senators and the Assemblymen were 65 CIO members from counties throughout the state.

Not only did the "legislature" give the local CIO leadership an opportunity to digest thoroughly the bills supported by the council, but the "testimony" of representatives of a number of other state organizations helped forge a wide basis of support.

And the "legislature" was a true facsimile of the real thing. Each of the "legislators" was furnished with a copy of the rules of procedure, and Alexander Barkan, executive secretary of the council, who was duly elected as president of the "legislature," saw to it the rules were obeyed.

The "legislature" did not stop with being superficially true to the original, but made good Barkan's announced intention to "encourage the widest discussion of bills sponsored by the council."

Pres. Carl Holderman of the N. J. Council struck the keynote when he declared:

"I should like to point out that none of the measures we introduce or support have been considered on a narrow and or pedantic level geared to our own needs and desires. It has never been our practice to do this. And in 1947, which we recognize as a year fraught with the problems and tensions of a postwar world, we realize, more than ever before, the need for considering our whole society and economy on all levels—local, state and national, for all segments—industry, labor and consumer.

"And while we know that there are those who want to curb labor no matter what the costs . . . I believe there are in New Jersey many individuals who will join us in pleading for genuine understanding and who can be counted on to fight intemperate forces who would throw us into chaos, strife and bloodshed."

Holderman then outlined the council's program which includes extension of social security, sickness insurance, additional unemployment compensation benefits and a minimum wage and hour law, the present obsolete statute being limited to women.

Also included on the program are a referendum on a $100 million bond issue for temporary and permanent housing, and extension of the state rent control law without amendment.

The council also is asking for a veterans' bonus of $1 a day for service at home with a maximum of $300, and of $1.50 a day for overseas service with a maximum of $800, with the money to be raised by a $165 million bond issue.

Only five bills were slated for discussion by the "legislature" but the debate on them was so extended that only three of them, one calling for sickness insurance and the companion measures on housing were passed.

Other measures were held over to future meetings, and the enthusiasm of the "Senators" and "Assemblymen" was promise that future sessions will be well attended.

A listing of some of the organizations represented at the hearings shows the wide support for the CIO's New Jersey program in part or in its entirety:

The American Assn. of University Women, the Dept. of Social Service of the N. J. Episcopal Diocese, the Consumers League, the League of Women Voters, the N. J. Citizen's League, an affiliate of the Progressive Citizens of America and the Women's Bureau of the U. S. Labor Dept. and the American Veterans Committee.

Some of the guests outlined their organizations' viewpoints on the council's program, and others confined themselves to discussion of specific proposals, but a wide front was forged to press for a program to aid labor and all the citizens of the state.

Assemblyman John J. Grogan (D., Hudson county), who is also vice-president of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers, drew applause as he announced that he had introduced the council-endorsed bill for the veterans' bonus.

It remained for T. James Tumulty, Grogan's fellow-assemblyman from Hudson county and also a Democrat, to point up the value of the council's legislature when he declared:

"I am glad to see that you know what the bills are about. We usually vote in the dark across the way.

"You are doing a challenging thing—making us go to the books and find out what the bills are all about."

Broadway stage star Jan Sterling, r., joins a new kind of nylon line at the N. Y. City office of Mojud Hosiery Co. Answering the call of the Greater N. Y. CIO Council, she picketed with a group of unionists in support of 500 workers at Mojud's Greensboro, N. C. plant who have been on strike for seven weeks because the firm won't renew its agreement with the CIO Hosiery Workers.

RUBBER UNION WINS COMPANY-WIDE PACT

ONE of the original goals—uniform contracts in the Big Four—was reached this week.

The agreement with the U. S. Rubber Co., covers 28,000 workers in 16 local unions from coast to coast.

The pact, first to be reached with any of the Big Four—Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and U. S. Rubber—will become effective upon approval by the URWA executive board.

Goodyear local union officials also expressed confidence that a uniform contract with that company will be reached soon. Conferences on the Goodyear contract made substantial progress before recessing to permit conferees to attend the Big Four wage negotiations, at Cincinnatti, Ohio.

The U. S. Rubber contract was hailed by URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster as a "milestone in the history of industrial relations in the rubber industry."

The highlights of the contract include:

Severance pay to workers permanently laid off through reasons beyond their control; a detailed method of establishing pay.

Also overtime provisions calling for compensation for call-in and emergency work, and transfers; payment of the same rate to women employed on jobs similar to those of men; new vacation pay minimums; check-off of dues, initiation fees, rejoining fees and general assesments.

BURNS RESIGNS

Thomas F. Burns, of New York, Assistant Director of the CIO Political Action Committee, announced this week that he would resign to accept an executive position with the Aldan Rubber Co. of Philadelphia, Pa. Burns will assume his new duties within a month.

Burns was associated with the PAC since its inception, serving as assistant chairman under Sidney Hillman. Following the death of Sidney Hillman, PAC chairman, last July, he was named assistant director and served under Jack Kroll, present PAC director.

PACKING WINS $20 MILLION

A survey initiated at the insistence of the CIO Packinghouse Workers is paying off to the tune of $15 million in back pay and an annual wage increase of $5 million for more than 100,000 workers in the industry. The CIO union has organized most of the packinghouse workers.

The results of the survey were announced this week by Dr. Clark Kerr, Univ. Chicago, chairman of the 10-man board set up in Feb., 1945, by the old War Labor Board. The board has succeeded in reducing the number of jobs from 100,000 to about 25 classifications and has eliminated differentials, particularly in the South.

"We are on the way to establishing a scientific wage rate structure in the industry," declared Svend Godfredson, editor of the union's paper, the Packinghouse Workers.

STRESS UNITY IN OKLAHOMA

Labor unity to fight off Congressional reactionary moves was stressed by speakers last week at the fifth annual convention of the Oklahoma CIO Council in Oklahoma City.

Speakers included Sec.-Treas. T. M. McCormick of the CIO Oilworkers; Delmond Garst, assistant to CIO Vice-Pres. Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood; District Director James Dickerson of CIO Steelworkers, and Father Shortell, Holy Cross College, Worcester, Mass.

The meeting resolved to prohibit proven Communists, Nazis or Fascists from holding elective or appointive office in the council; to support the Labor extension service bill; to conserve Oklahoma's forests, and to back Natl. CIO policy.

40 NEW LOCALS IN TENNESSEE

(This is the second of a series on the CIO Southern organizing campaign state by state,.)

THE CIO has established 40 new unions in Tennessee since last May and has made "outstanding contractual gains," Paul R. Christopher, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, announced this week.

"Our membership in established CIO local unions in Tennessee increased from about 70,000 to 85,000 during the past seven months," Christopher said.

"Not included in these figures are several thousand others who have joined the CIO but work at plants at which our unions have not yet been certified as collective bargaining agencies."

Christopher said establishment of new local unions was accompanied by "a healthy membership growth in old locals."

"Our Steelworkers local at the Aluminum Company of America at Maryville, for example, has increased its membership more than 1,600 since the middle of last year," he said. "Our Textile Workers local at the Brookside Mills in Knoxville now has more than 1600 members—nearly double its membership of seven months ago.

"We are picking up new members steadily throughout the state in those plants under CIO contract which sharply curtailed operations during reconversion and are now getting back in full production.

"We will gain quite a few members in the near future as a result of the expansion of plants which have union shop agreements with CIO unions. Among these plants are International Cellucotton Co. at Memphis, which is now expanding from a 200-man operation to some 1600."

Christopher said the CIO has lost 13 National Labor Relations Board elections in Tennessee since its Southern organizing campaign began.

"We consider an election loss merely as a temporary set-back," Christopher said. "We keep on going back until we finally win. We're already re-organizing five of the 13 plants at which we lost —and we're making good progress, too.

"We've made most of our gains in recent months in East Tennessee but we've been making progress in other parts of the state, too. We've picked up quite a few members in Memphis, where nearly 12% of the population belongs to the CIO."

Christopher said the Organizing Committee is concentrating its activities principally on textile and steel plants.

He said active textile organizing drives are now under way at Standard-Coosa-Thatcher Co., Dixie Mercerizing Co. and Dixie Spinning Co. at Chattanooga, Hardwick Woolen Mills at Cleveland, Leon-Ferenbach at Johnson City and the Bemberg and the North American rayon plants at Elizabethton.

Steel organizing drives, he said, are under way at Consolidated Vultee at Nashville, Tennessee Stove Works at Chattanooga, Hardwick Stove Foundry, Dixie Foundry Co., Cleveland-Tennessee Enamel Co. and Brown Stove Works at Cleveland and the Glazer Steel Co. at Knoxville.

"I like to refer to Oak Ridge as an example of what can be accomplished when you work hard," Christopher said. "We started our campaign there far behind the American Federation of Labor, which had been organizing for many months before our first man arrived at the project.

PAUL R. CHRISTOPHER Leads CIO's Tennessee Drive

"We trailed behind in the first NLRB election, then won out in the run-off at the Carbon & Carbide plant, which has about 500 employes. CIO United Chemical Workers negotiated a splendid contract at Carbon & Carbide, obtaining wage increases ranging from 10 to 40 cents an hour. This contract establishes a minimum wage of 85 cents an hour and provides severance pay for those laid off as a result of reduction in work force."

Christopher said an "unusually good" contract was negotiated by the CIO Hosiery Workers at the United Hosiery Mills in Chattanooga. This contract establishes a minimum pay rate of 82 cents an hour and a maximum of $1.30.

"I am well satisfied with the progress the CIO has been making in Tennessee," Christopher said.

"To get a true picture of our progress you have to consider four things—the membership gained by establishing 40 new local unions, the membership gained by old locals, the members at the 25 plants at which we have petitioned for NLRB elections and the members at the plants where we have been organizing but have not yet petitioned for certification."

CIO HAS 324 NEW LOCALS IN SOUTH

Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee said this week that 324 new CIO local unions have been established in the South since the Southern membership campaign began late last May.

LABOR NEWS IN BRIEF

FOLLOWING the lead of the CIO Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and the Electrical Radio and Machine Workers, are seeking new contracts without strike action.

The Auto Workers agreed to extend for 30 days their contract which expired Jan. 26. Negotiations have been in progress since Jan. 16.

UE has set no termination date in its contracts with the four major companies in its field, is planning to open negotiations in the next week or so and has set no deadline for possible strike action.

Two AFL organizations this week called on the AFL executive council, meeting in Miami, Fla., to join in the unity move to fight reaction as first proposed by CIO Pres. Philip Murray. Such action was advocated by the Mercer County (Trenton, N. J.) Central Labor Union and the N. Y. City joint board of the Hotel & Restaurant Employes.

Pres. Jack Hurwich of the Greater Boston CIO Council, has been appointed by Gov. Bradford, of Massachusetts, to serve on a committee to study ways for ending labor-management disputes.

Pres. Abram Flaxer, of the CIO Public Workers, stated this week that the union will not be deterred from its program for wage increases and job security by Congressional threats to institute mass layoffs and by a witch hunt hysteria.

President Flaxer sent a letter announcing the opening of this nation-wide drive among all government workers to nearly 500 UPW locals in all parts of the country.

Pointing out that the situation faced by government employes today is "grave in the extreme," Flaxer warned that attacks upon government employes now going on in Congress and in government agencies are part of the general attacks on labor.

Steelworkers Win

$100 MILLION BACK PAY, $50 MILLION WAGE HIKE

MEMBERS of the CIO Steelworkers will get approximately $100 million in back pay and about $50 million in annual wage increases through application of a new wage rate plan OKed by the union and the U. S. Steel Corp. The plan is being adapted to 84 other steel firms.

This announcement came from Philip Murray, president of the union and of CIO, as he continued negotiations in Pittsburgh for renewal of a contract with the giant U. S. Steel Corp.

To the 150,000 employes of the largest firm in the industry, the wage rate plan will bring $32 million in back pay and $17 million in annual wage increases, Murray said.

The plan was formulated as the result of two years' work by a joint committee from management and the union which established 30 separate wage rate classifications. Fitted into these classifications were from 45,000 to 50,000 job titles. These were cut in half.

Under the plan, wage increases will range from 1c to 29c an hour. Some workers will receive as much as $1,800 in back pay, the union said.

Former employes, to be eligible for back pay, must file individually signed requests with the company within 120 days after Feb. 1, 1947.

The 30 new job classifications begin with 96½c an hour for sweepers, janitors, etc., and climb to $1.98 an hour for blooming mill rollers, blowers in Bessemers, etc.

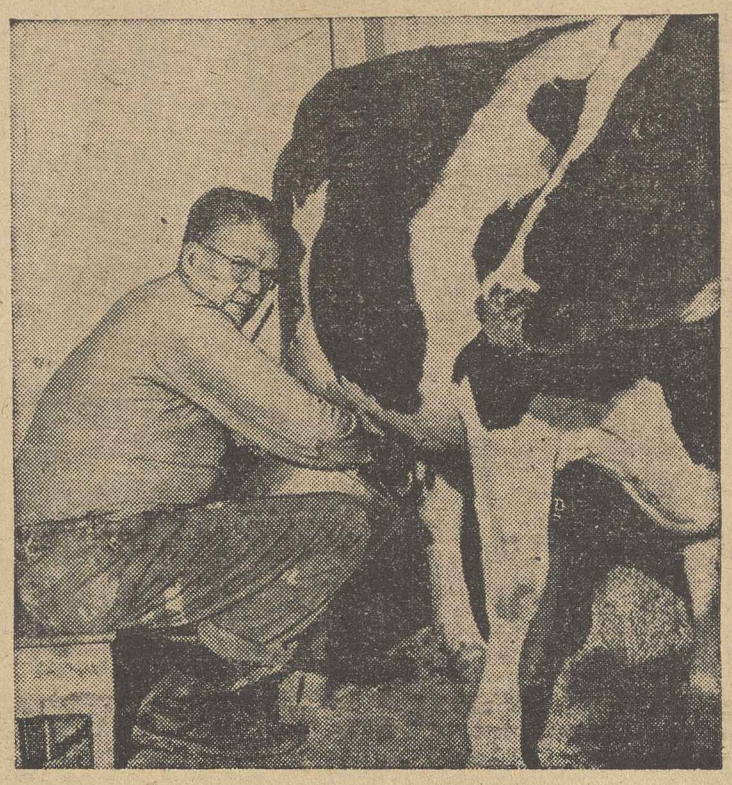
The ability of the corporation to pay these increases and even higher ones was revealed by its year-end profit statement. A net gain of $88,683,530 in 1946 compared favorably with 1945 profits of $58,015,056. Reports for the first quarter of 1947 are expected to indicate that this year will be even more profitable.

MEANWHILE, in Pittsburgh, the contract negotiations adjourned until Feb. 6 to give each side time to study the other's proposals.

Due to an inconclusive situation regarding claims due for portal-to-portal pay, both union and management agreed to extension of the present contract until April 1. Bethlehem Steel has agreed to a similar continuation.

The union, which has maintenance of membership security now, is asking for the union shop, which would require that all employes covered by the contract join the union.

The corporation has made a counter proposal—in effect an open shop—which reads: "The agreement shall not abridge the fundamental right of an employe to determine for himself . . . whether or not to be a member of the union."



Sec. Philip M. Connelly of the Los Angeles CIO Council milks a cow at the Los Angeles county prison farm where he is serving a 60-day sentence for alleged defiance of an injunction against picketing during the strike of the CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers against U. S. Motors last September. The council this week filed a request for Connelly's parole.

CONGRESSMAN BLASTS ALLIS CHALMERS CO.

MANAGEMENT of Allis-Chalmers Co. at West Allis, Wis., was charged this week with "a program of unconcealed union-busting." The criticism came from Rep. Melvin Price (D. Ill.).

Price said the company, "fattened with high wartime profits and subsidized by federal carry-back tax rebates, has hired strike-breakers, has had the police plant labor spies in union meetings, and has had many of its striking employes beaten by the police."

The accusation followed an election won by Local 248, CIO Auto Workers Union, over an "independent" union at the plant. The election was conducted by the Wisconsin Labor Relations Board.

Price declared that Federal Judge J. Ryan Duffy's decision denying an injunction to Local 248 against the State Labor Board to prevent the holding of the election was done with "injudicious" haste, while briefs filled by the NLRB and the Dept. of Justice in a similar case were in the mail. These briefs supported the union's contention.

The Congressman also pointed out that Judge Duffy is a brother-in-law of Vice Pres. H. W. Storey of Allis-Chalmers.

"I submit that no legislative program concerned with management-labor relations can be just or equitable which concerns itself only with punitive measures against labor and which ignores the existence of a conspiracy hatched by the powerful and influential captains of American Industry to destroy the bargaining power of their employes by smashing unions," Price asserted.

UAW Vice Pres. R. J. Thomas, assigned to the strike, declared he saw no reason why negotiations should not be started immediately.

Meanwhile, special U. S. Conciliators have been renewing efforts to bring the parties together. The failure of the State board the official election returned this week had provided management with an excuse to stall and, according to Thomas, is jeopardizing an early settlement.

BREWERY UNION TO FIGHT DRYS

An all-out drive against the prohibition forces is being mapped by the Brewery Workers in which that organization will have the support of the CIO national office and affiliated organizations.

The 1946 convention of the CIO unanimously adopted a resolution declaring "that this eighth convention of the Congress of Industrial Organizations go on record as being unalterably opposed to the enactment of any and all prohibition laws, local, State or National."

As part of its plan to fight the dry movement, the Brewery Workers Union has elected Joseph E. Brady, Detroit, to the new office of Co-ordinator of State Councils, to unify and co-ordinate the work being done by the various State Councils of Brewery Workers in this field.

THE DRIVE AGAINST LABOR

OPPONENTS OF THE WAGNER ACT

Create False Issues To Hide Their Real Purpose

A GOOD example of the way in which critics of the Act create false issues to hide their real purpose can be seen in the so-called "free speech" issue.

Many critics of the Act complain that while an employe enjoys free speech under the Wagner Act an employer does not. But what are the facts? The Labor Board has held in scores of cases that the employer is free under the Wagner Act to discuss trade union matters with his employes and to advance arguments to them against unions. There are any number of Board decisions in which the Board has had under consideration statements, notices and speeches by the employer involving an aggressive campaign against unions and their leaders. In all of these situations the Board has held that the utterances of the employer are protected by free speech.

EMPLOYERS USE FREE SPEECH

To Meddle In Affairs Of Their Workers

THE great majority of the employers today use free speech not merely to discuss issues of trade unionism but openly to attack unions, their objectives, their leaders and their program. Shielded by free speech they openly electioneer in Labor Board elections, even though the selection of the employes' representative is primarily the employes' business. No employe would dream of interfering in the selection of the employer's representative, such as a member of the company's board of directors; yet employers consistently thrust themselves into elections of union representatives and enjoy complete immunity under the Wagner Act.

The Wagner Act respects employers' freedom of speech and the Supreme Court has so held. As a matter of fact the Constitution protects employers' freedom of speech; if the Wagner Act interfered with such freedom it would have been held unconstitutional.

It is only when an employer's speech carries threats of discharge or warns of economic reprisal that the Labor Board holds that an unfair labor practice has been committed. There is no constitutional right to yell "fire" in a crowded theatre and there is likewise no constitutional right to coerce employes through use of economic power into abandoning their union. The cry of "free speech" is merely raised as a smoke-screen to justify amendments to the Act which in fact would permit employer intimidation.

Making It The Goat

This is the fourth installment of a pamphlet exposing the union-busting intent of "curb labor" proposals in Congress. It was prepared by the CIO Legal Dept., headed by Lee Pressman.

A SIMILAR type of complaint relates to the fact that employers have no right to file petitions for elections under the Wagner Act. At the present time the Labor Board entertains such a petition from an employer who is confronted by claims of two rival unions to represent the employes. But it refuses such petitions when there is one union in the picture.

Simple logic justifies such a refusal. In the first place, the right of employes to choose their representative when and as they wish is no more the affair of the employer than the right of the stockholder to choose directors is the affair of the employes.

In the second place, the employer is not injured by the fact that he cannot petition the Board for an election. The employer has no obligation to bargain under the Act until a union approaches him for collective bargaining. At that time the union must demonstrate that it has been designated by a majority of the employes. If the employer in good faith doubts that the union represents a majority he is not obligated to bargain with it and may refuse to bargain with it until after that issue is settled by an election.

On the other hand, if the employer were granted this right it would seriously prejudice the rights of his employes. For the employer could then seek an election as soon as a union had started an organizing campaign in his plant. By forcing a vote at that time, the union would be sure to lose. The psychological effect of such a defeat in a premature election would cripple organization for some time to come in the future. The result might be to deprive the employes of collective bargaining for a considerable period.

The same would be true where an employer had engaged in unfair labor practices and thereby prevented organization among his employes. To permit him to petition the Labor Board for an election at a time when his employes were suffering from his own unfair labor practices would create a condition in which it would be possible for an employer permanently to deprive his employes of freedom of self-organization.

No, the Wagner Act is not "one-sided."

Let us not fall into the trap prepared by those who dream of once again imposing the law of the jungle on American labor relations by restoring the same glaring inequality between employer and employe which existed before the Wagner Act was passed.

EMPLOYERS ASK CONGRESS

To Outlaw 'Coercive Picketing'

EXACTLY what is it that those who urge laws on "coercive picketing" want to prohibit?

Do they want to prohibit peaceful picketing? Do they want to prohibit workers from conducting parades with banners in front of the establishment under strike?

Some of those who raise this slogan frankly admit that they are opposed to all picketing, however peaceful. Most of them, however, vehemently insist that they have no intention to interfere with the right of peaceful picketing.

As a matter of fact, of course, the right of peaceful picketing is protected by the Constitution of the United States and no law contemplating prohibition of peaceful picketing could withstand the test of the courts.

Are these persons opposed only to the use of force or violence or other unlawful conduct in connection with the conduct of the picket line? If so, what is the need for any additional legislation? Clearly, force and violence are unlawful and are today subject to criminal penalty in each and every state of the United States.

What then is the true objective of those who urge these laws to restrict picketing?

When we examine the various laws that are offered under this heading the true purpose and object becomes quite clear.

Many, if not all, of these proposals suggest that the kind of picketing which they are seeking to attack should be removed from any operation of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. In other words, this slogan is used, in effect, as a cover-up for a suggeston that the Norris-LaGuardia Act be repealed.

What would it mean to repeal the Norris-LaGuardia Act?

For thirty years before the Norris-LaGuardia Act was passed, the use of the labor injunction in the federal courts as a device for breaking strikes had become a notorious scandal in our national history.

Congress therefore passed a law in 1932 which in effect declared (1) that peaceful picketing and other peaceful strike action was no longer to be the subject of any labor injunction in the Federal courts, and (2) if injunctions were issued in labor disputes as a means of curbing any proven unlawful or violent conduct, then there must at least be certain principles of fairness in procedure.

These princples as laid down in the law declared in effect only that appropriate notice of an application for injunction be given to the union so that it might defend itself, and that an open and full hearing must be held on the facts so that the court might act with full knowledge.

This picture, "Too Hot in the Foc's'le," a water color by George N. Payne, member of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union, was awarded one of the six $100 prizes at the fifth annual Exhibit of Seamen's Art sponsored by the United Seamen's Service in New York City. Payne, who was born in Oakland, Calif., and attended the Art Center School in Los Angeles, shipped during the war as third mate. He used his spare time painting the new faces and countries he saw.

SEAMEN'S ART SHOW CALLED 'EXCITING'

THE annual exhibit of seamen's art sponsored by the United Seamen's Service has been hailed by John Taylor Arms, leading American etcher, as "the most honest and most exciting art show of any of hundreds I attend every year."

"I look forward to it with real anticipation," he said, "as these artists, many of them self-taught, can really paint and they express themselves with a truth and directness that is all too often lacking in the professional's work."

The exhibit which was started by the War Shipping Administration as a wartime diversion for merchant seamen, is being carried on as a part of the USS's permanent peacetime program.

At the fifth annual exhibit held in New York in January, six prizes of $100 each were awarded to Hermann S. Brockdorff, Peter Davies, Phil May, George N. Payne, Gene Tepper and to the wife of Milnes Levick, deceased. The presentation was attended by some 200 seamen, USS sponsors, art critics and consular representatives of 13 countries.

EDUCATION

QUICK, PRACTICAL TRAINING IS FEATURE OF UAW CONFERENCE

AN intensive basic training course in trade union fundamentals and the techniques of mass education was presented at the CIO Auto Workers' big educational conference held in Cleveland Jan. 24-26.

More than 900 educational directors and committeemen from UAW-CIO locals throughout the nation attended the conference.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt and Chester Bowles were among the national progressive leaders who addressed the gathering. Specialists hailed the workshops, panels, exhibits and demonstrations of the third annual conference and first annual fair of the auto union as a significant milestone in workers education.

From nine in the morning until ten at night, delegates went to school. They learned how to go back to their locals and set up courses in union administration, collective bargaining and political action.

They learned how to operate film and film strip projectors; how to produce posters by the silk screen process; how to write a headline and edit a shop paper; how to conduct and tabulate the results of a union survey; how to establish a local union recreation program.

IN the panels and workshop, they were given intensive instruction from trade union, university and government experts. Manufacturers of education materials provided special displays of their products.

Delegates were introduced to turn-over talks, a special device adapted from the Army Air Forces orientation program, which consist of a series of related posters with accompanying text supported on an easel. These are made available to locals for the quick and painless training of rank-and-file public speakers.

From exhibits filling the long corridors of the hotel, delegates obtained an over-all view of the activities of the locals and the various international union departments.

MRS. Roosevelt, speaking over a national network, stressed the decisive influence which Americans can exercise in behalf of world peace and reconstruction through a national program to prevent another depression in the United States.

Former Economic Stabilization Director Bowles warned that a depression is inevitable if the profit drive of selfish employer interests is not curbed by a policy of stable prices and greater mass purchasing power.

CIO Sec.-Treas. James Carey and CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby joined UAW Pres. Walter Reuther and Sec.-Treas. George Addes in stressing labor's determination to resist punitive legislation and to fight for an economy of full employment.

Natl. Farmers Union Pres. James Patton called for a joint Council of NFU and UAW representatives to cement farmer-labor unity through practical efforts to solve common problems.

John Gibson, assistant secretary of labor, and Hilda Smith of the Labor Extension Committee, outlined the history of workers education and explained the importance of the pending bill to create a workers extension service in the Dept. of Labor.

Victor Reuther, director of the UAW-CIO Education Dept., presided over conference sessions.

CHURCH & LABOR CONFERENCES

Two important conferences called to discuss the common problems of church and labor will be held this month. The Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation is holding a southern conference in Atlanta, Ga., Feb. 4-5, and the Industrial Relations Division of the Federal Council of the Churches of Christ in America will hold a national conference on the Church and Economic Life in Pittsburgh, Pa., Feb. 18-20.

Theme of the opening session of the Atlanta conference will be "Labor and the Church in the South." Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO Southern Organizing drive, will speak at the evening session, Feb. 5. Subject for the evening is "The Social Meaning of Religion."

Delegates will divide into six workshops at the second day's session, to plan programs of study and action on various subjects.

The responsibility of the church in the economic life of the nation is the theme of the national conference to be held in Pittsburgh. Delegates, appointed by the denominations and other religious bodies, will be predominantly lay people drawn from the ranks of agriculture, labor, management and the general public.

CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby is a member of the Program Committee. Pres. Walter Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers, has been invited to be chairman of one of the section meetings.

TEACHING CHILDREN RACIAL TOLERANCE

New ways of teaching children racial tolerance must be found if community patterns are to be changed, says Pearl S. Buck, famous novelist, in an excellent article in the February issue of "Better Homes & Gardens."

Children learn no theories which they do not see practiced, she says. "Life in the community contradicts too often what the school teaches." Tolerance, she believes, must be taught through everything a child learns. It cannot be taught as a separate "subject" in a classroom. It has to pervade the school, the church, the home, the community.

Olga Madar, UAW Recreation Director, is the first woman in the union to head an International Department.

Olga Madar

UAW RECREATION DIRECTOR COMES FROM BIG CIO FAMILY

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

OLGA Madar, first woman to be appointed head of a department by the CIO Auto Workers, is nice to look at, but this is not why she got her job as UAW-CIO Recreation Director. She knows her stuff.

Visitors at CIO camps held the past summer in Michigan, Illinois and Ohio were greatly surprised when they learned that one girl was responsible for the smooth-clicking, well-equipped and varied sports program given at the camps for young and old.

Principals and superintendents of public schools in Michigan visiting the UAW-CIO, commented on her keen understanding of the true meaning and real usefulness of a recreation program and one even offered her a job.

A good recreation program, Olga Madar believes, must be tied in with a good education program and should stress such policies as anti-discrimination. The best way to teach people to work together, she holds, is to teach them to play together.

OLGA learned her earliest lessons in trade unionism from her mother, Mrs. Anna Madar. The family first settled in Sykesville, Pa., and lived the life of the coal miners.

Later they moved to Detroit, where Olga's nine brothers and her two sisters all became identified with the UAW. Brother Joe was the first educational director of Local 3. Alec was chief steward for Local 190. Mary, Albert, Andrew and the twins—Mike and Jim—all belonged to various locals.

Art, who was labor delegate to the national convention of Amvets, was elected national vice-commander. Elmer won prominence in another field, being named to the Associated Press' 1946 All-American Football Team. He plays for Michigan.

Olga received her formal training at Michigan State Normal College and spent her summers working for Chrysler and for Bower Roller Bearing, where she learned about company unions and the speed-up and became a strong UAW supporter.

After graduating she taught school for a year and then in April, 1942, went to work at the Willow Run bomber plant. Seven months later she became recreational director of Local 50, which then had a membership of 25,000, later increased to 50,000.

In November, 1945, Miss Madar was offered a job with the International Recreation Department, then under the directorship of Mel West, who had expanded the program to include children's parties, dancing classes, card, chess, and checker clubs, golf tournaments, swimming, social dancing and other activities.

When West was forced to take an extended leave because of sickness, the UAW Executive Board last November approved Pres. Walter Reuther's appointment of Olga Madar as head of the department.

Olga credits much of the success of the UAW's recreation program to former Director West, and to Clayton Carpenter, who joined the staff in the fall of 1946. She stresses the importance of strong support from the local unions.

"We do not believe in spoon-fed recreation," she says. "The initiative must be taken by the locals. Once they have indicated a wish to have a recreation program, our department steps in with the training and equipment and gets them started.

"The program should, wherever possible, be coordinated and related to the educational program. For, in simple words, before we can live together and work together, we must learn to play together."

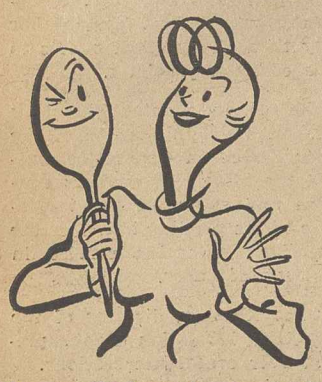
THE HIGH COST OF BEING A WOMAN

By HANNA SHERMAN

THEY say it's a man's world and as far as we're concerned, they're welcome to it. Of course, we gals will do all we can to make this world of theirs a better one for us and our kids. But until we've achieved that happy state, we won't argue about who it belongs to.

There are lots of disadvantages in this man's world. The cost of being a woman comes rather high. If we want to be neat and orderly in our heads as well as pretty and dainty in our appearance, we've got to spend a great deal of our time, our patience and too much of our money.

Which of these three is hardest for you to come by? That's something you'll have to decide for yourself. But as far as we are concerned, the question of money is our biggest headache.



We don't want to look dull and dowdy and we know that being attractive is a large part of living successfully. But we also know that there are dozens of other places where our money must go. We also feel that the woman who spends every penny she has for her clothes and personal upkeep is not your idea of the woman who is really bright and truly attractive—she's usually rather dull. And certainly not the woman you want to copy.

LET'S get down to essentials and start from the skin out. Bathing frequently is a must and should be enjoyable. So let's start by saving on bath preparations. Instead of expensive bath salts, buy ordinary water softener in jumbo sizes. It will soften your bath water even more effectively than the expensive salts. If you wish to perfume your bath, a dash of inexpensive brilliantine in your tub will do the trick—helps smooth the skin too!

Plain white floating soap saves pennies and is better for you than the more highly perfumed expensive brands. Oatmeal, tied up in a cloth is wonderful as a skin softener and a mild bleach. Use it just as you would a wash cloth.

A good bath brush and a hand brush will last for years. Their daily use will give you that scrubbed immaculate look which is the real basis of physical attractiveness. Good brushes of all kinds are a necessity of good grooming.

BUY your hand lotion in the large economy size. Use it on your elbows and your knees as well as the rest of your body. Especially if your skin has a tendency to be dry in this kind of weather.

As for face creams, the best money saver is USP cold cream—again bought in quantity—and toilet lanolin, a tube of which should cost about fifty cents. For a rich lubricating cream, you need only to mix a very small quantity of the lanolin with your cold cream. Apply in the usual way on the face and neck. Witch Hazel is an excellent astringent and skin freshener and very inexpensive.

As for your cosmetics, we cannot urge you often enough to use inexpensive brands. They should be chosen carefully and properly applied. But you need to do this no matter how high a price you pay for them.

Just these few money saving ideas will give you several dollars more for other things and you'll be just as pretty. In future columns, we'll take up other methods of bringing the high cost of being a woman down to reasonable levels.

Negro Women's Council Fires Four Unionists

The four union members of the staff of the Natl. Council of Negro Women in Washington were fired this week, according to the CIO Office & Professional Workers.

Discharged were Mrs. Marian Williams, Mrs. Gladys Thomas, Miss Ellen Randolph and Mrs. Katherine Shryver. They represent the entire staff of NCNW with the exception of an executive and a field worker.

Mrs. Williams, shop steward, said that the Council's executive committee "in star chamber proceedings" dismissed the staff members in spite of the fact that they had made it plain that they were not asking for increases until the Council could afford to pay them.

THE "COLD" MONTHS

There are "cold" months in health as well as in weather. A day in bed at the first signs of a cold often saves many days of later discomfort. Grand new play materials can make bed seem very attractive. We suggest keeping on hand for just such an emergency "dime store" products like blunt scissors, paste, manilla and colored paper, crayons, plastic animals, and of course, story books. Old magazines and mail order catalogues also have many play possibilities and can be used as raw material for scrap books.

PLOT TO RAISE YOUR RENT

REAL estate lobbies began bringing up their heavy artillery last week for an all-out attack on rent controls, which have so far withstood the tremendous inflationary pressure of private-profit groups.

With controls still holding firm despite a mysterious "squeeze play" which almost brought about a 10% rise in rents, CIO Pres. Philip Murray wrote to Pres. Truman that a rise in rents would have the "gravest effect"—particularly at a time "when labor is attempting to work out harmonious agreements with management regarding the adjustment of wages to the needs of the workers and their families."

To amplify the CIO position, R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee and a UAW vice-president, will take the stand before the Senate Banking & Currency Committee on

The committee has under consideration about a dozen bills on rent control—ranging from proposals by Sen. O'Daniel (D. Tex.) for its elimination immediately to a variety of loophole propositions. One such bill is S. 415, offered by Senator Hawkes (R. N. J.), which would provide for an immediate 15% lift in rent ceilings and take off controls completely from all dwellings.

Pres. Murray's letter to the White House pointed out that such an increase in rents would mean a rise "of at least 3% or 4% in the expenses of the average worker's family."

SPOKESMEN from the Office of Temporary Controls — to which OPA is now attached—failed to show up for opening sessions of the Senate Committee hearings. A day earlier OPA had cut mimeograph stencils announcing a 10% boost in the ceilings, allegedly on orders from higher authority, but instant protest spearheaded by the CIO brought an abrupt reversal of plans.

Sen. Tobey (R. N. H.), chairman of the committee, said it would be up to the real estate interests to prove the need for changes in the ceiling on rent payments. He added that "marginal, almost slum" properties have had few improvements in recent years, and that "any increase in rent would be almost intolerable and unjustified."

But Sen. Homer Capehart (R. Ind.) blithely indicated that the whole problem of rents should be turned over to the states. Sen. Tobey retorted that Capehart's philosophy seemed to be: "Let them sink or swim, starve or die."

"That's right," Capehart replied, "that's as it should be."

SPEAKING with a background of local knowledge, Edmond B. Butler, chairman of the N. Y. City Housing Authority, argued strongly against lifting of controls.

Predicting that such an increase would "cause more hardship than it would eliminate," Butler noted that N. Y. City alone is 150,000 apartments short, and the lifting of controls would create a "chaotic situation."

Butler's arguments struck sharply at the main propaganda contention of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards and other housing industry groups, which have sought to convince the public that the "housing crisis is over."

Despite obvious facts to the contrary, these groups have gunned against rent control and veterans housing on the basis that everything is hunky dory.

Rep. George Schwabe (R. Okla.) backed up this propaganda line with a letter inserted in the Congressional Record from Oscar Bieser, Oklahoma City realtor.

"There is no real housing shortage here or anywhere that I can find," Bieser wrote, after a search that must have been something less than diligent.

And Herbert Nelson, chief spokesman for the real estate industry, said that "the housing shortage will be over by the end of 1947"—providing the government "lets us build." Nelson, an ardent foe of the federal housing program, has also advocated the lifting of rent controls in recent weeks.

Joining the clamor was the Natl. Apartment Owners Assn., which took full page advertisements in daily papers throughout the country to charge that the housing shortage has become a "grievously distorted problem" and that OPA is the root of all housing evils.

After rising steadily over a period of months, milk prices today crashed down one cent....

CIO HITS CONGRESS BAN ON MARCANTONIO

REP. Vito Marcantonio, American Labor Party standard-bearer from N. Y., should quickly be given assignments to committees of the House of Representatives, the CIO told Congressional leaders last week.

In letters to House Majority Leader Joseph Martin and Minority Leader Sam Rayburn, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan called for an end to the inter-party jockeying which has deprived the veteran Congressman of a place on any of the House committees.

"Congressman Marcantonio has long been a friend of the organized labor movement and has had the vigorous support of the workers in his district and throughout the country," Cowan said.

"The working people have counted him as a friend not only because of his voting record, but because he has consistently acted vigorously in support of pro-labor legislation.

"This discriminatory action directed against a member of Congress supported by labor is considered by CIO as an affront to labor itself.

"Furthermore, the failure to grant Rep. Marcantonio a committee assignment deprives his constituents, as well as the Nation, of his full services as a representative.

"The residents of his district are entitled to his services in all aspects of the work in the House. I should like also to point out that Congressman Marcantonio's outstanding ability and high principle are generally recognized."

Don't Pity 'Poor' Stockholders!

The N. Y. Stock Exchange this week reported that dividends paid by listed firms amounted to $2,668,549,000 — an increase of 16.3% over 1945.

The gain was made despite reduction of dividends paid on 74 stocks and elimination or deferral of dividends on 26 others.

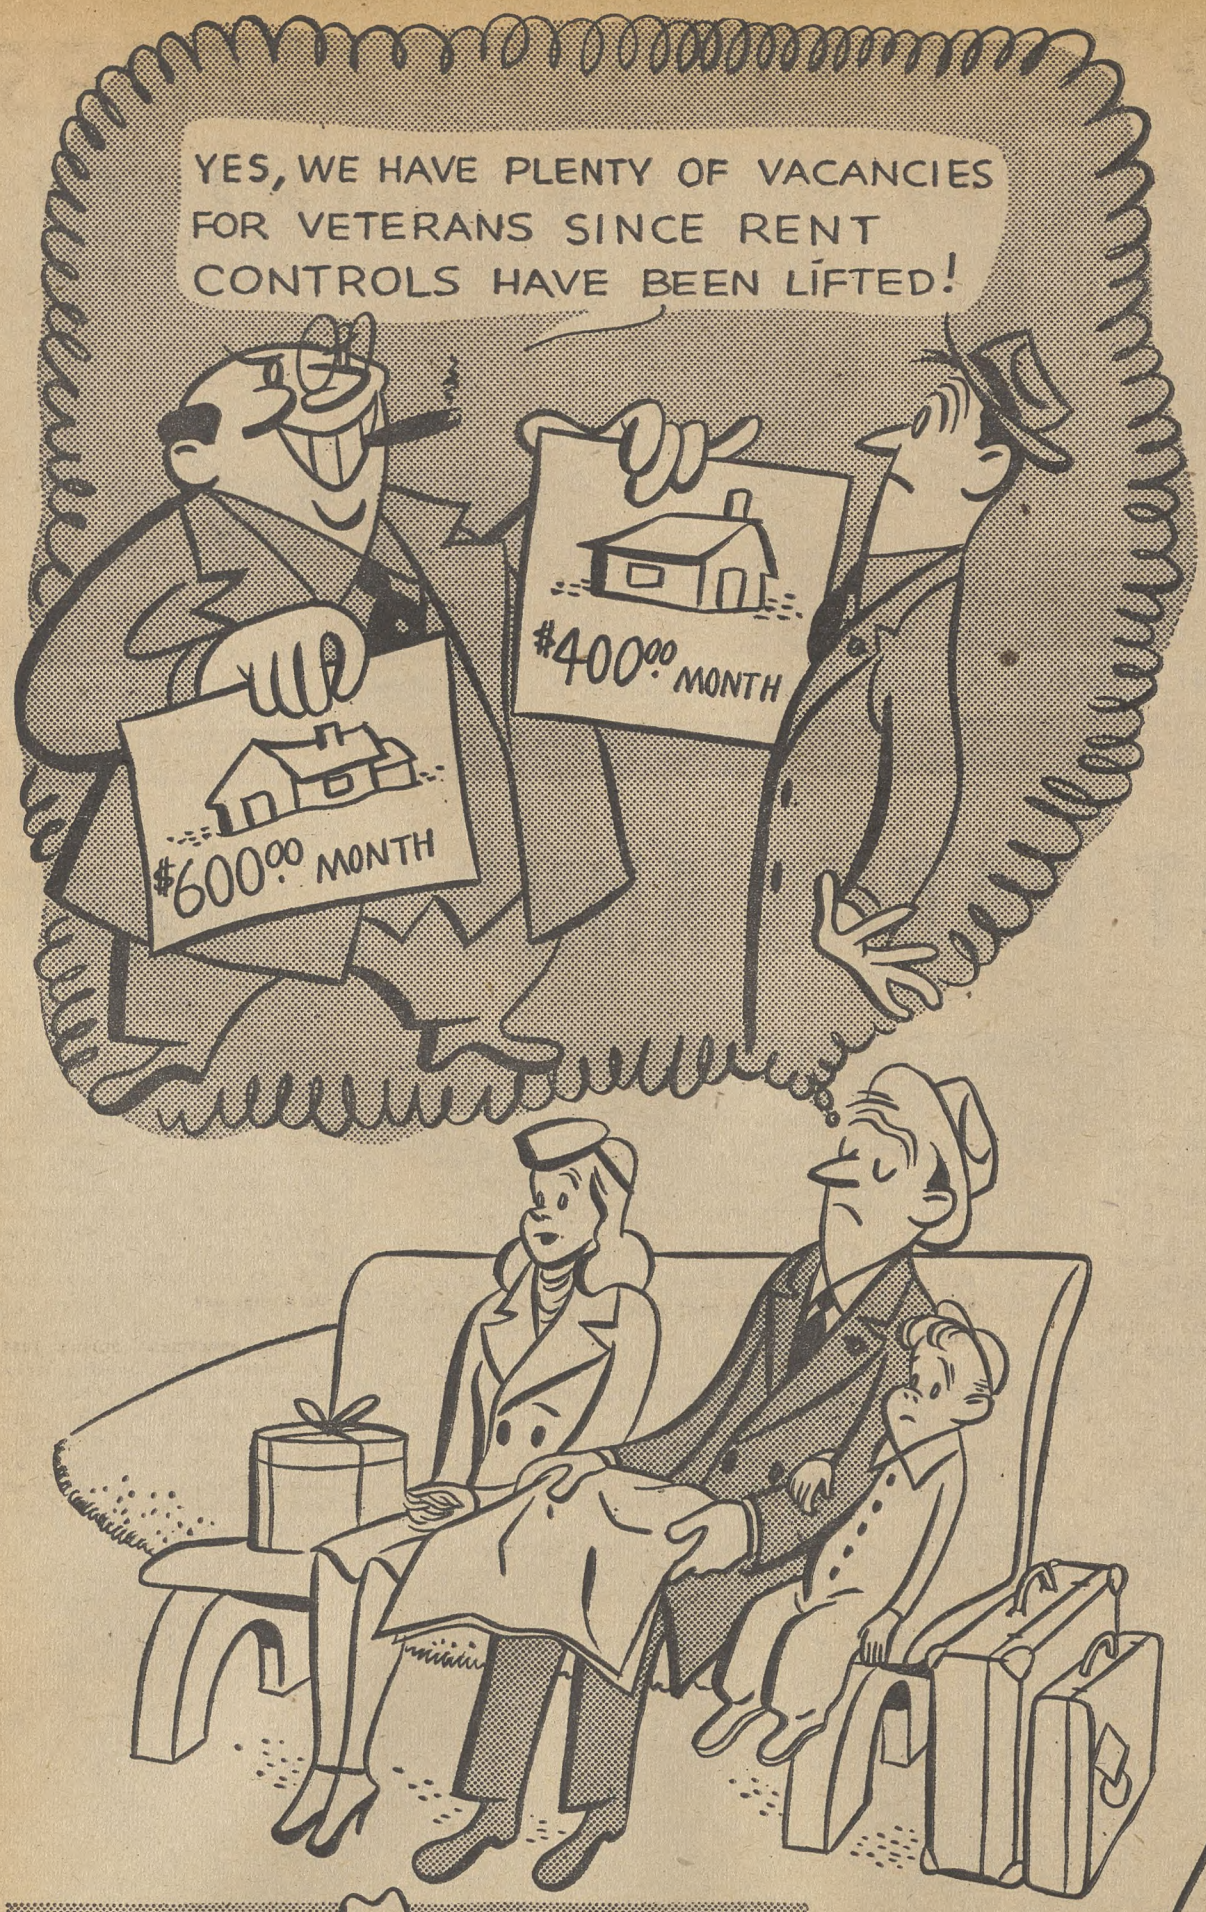
Elimination of rent control will mean more evictions. The Charles Johnsons in Chicago know what evictions mean. No one offered them shelter. But the Animal Welfare League provided housing for their two dogs. Rent stories—page 2, 3.



MEET MR. FITCH!

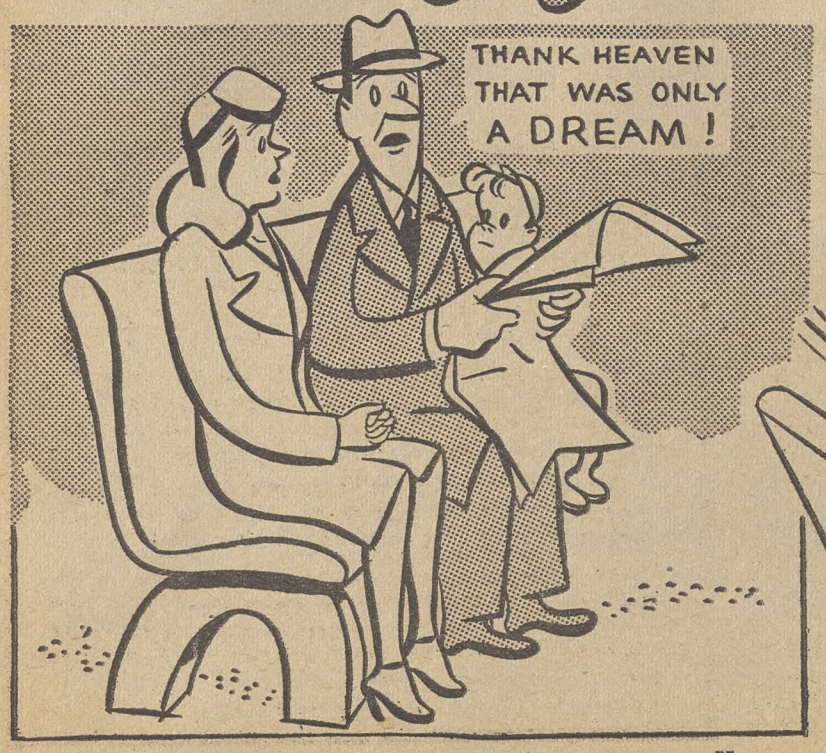
YOU and your family are a "mammoth monopoly of special privilege." You are engaged in a "conspiracy" with your government. You are responsible for the shortage of housing. You are wasting housing space, living with the royal elegance of a French king. You are "vested wealth," you're a "restraint of trade"—in fact you'd put commercial monopolists in Wall Street to shame.

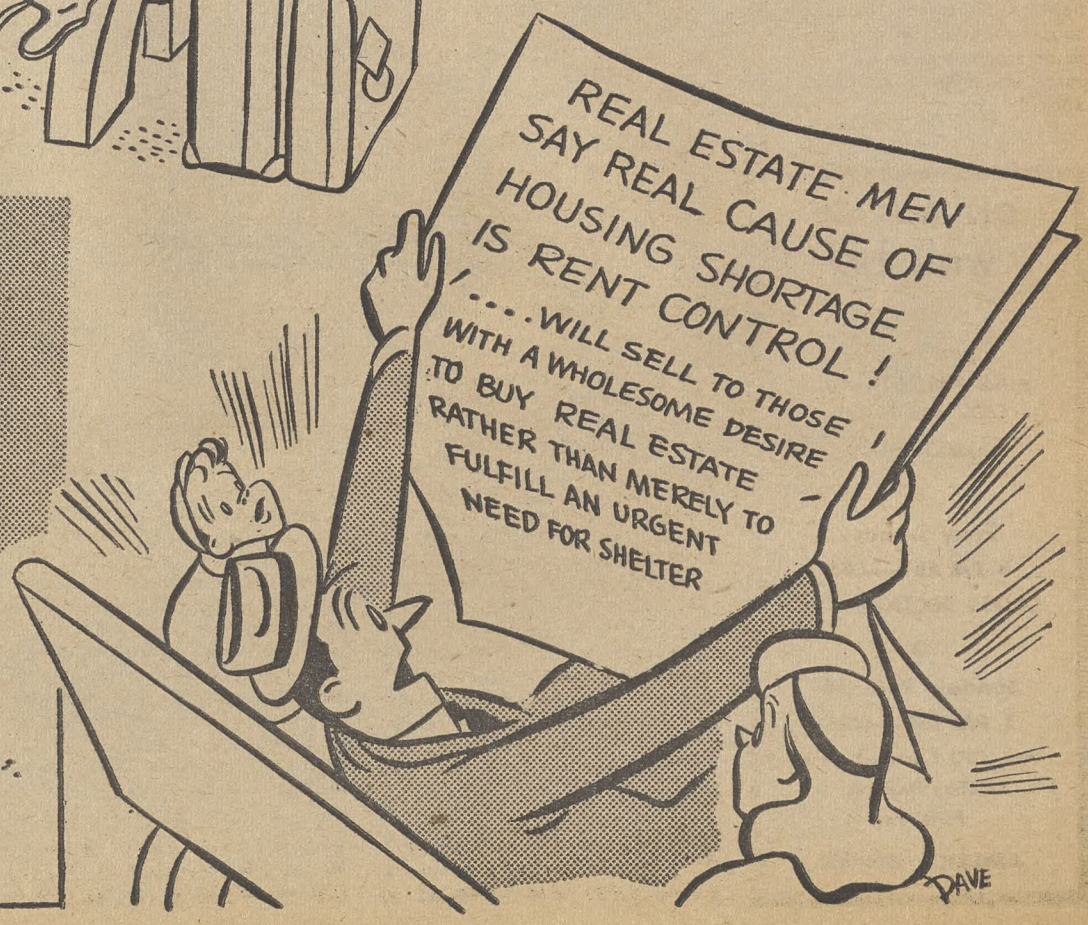
At this point, you're probably looking across baby's play pen into the living room mirror and saying, "Who, me?"

"Yes, you" will be the reply of Mr. Morgan L. Fitch of Chicago, new president of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards. Fitch, a mean man with an adjective, made all the accusations against you during a recent real estate dinner in Baltimore, Md.

RENT control, Fitch wants you to think, is the cause of the housing shortage (contractors' profits, speculators' gambles and the knifing of the Wyatt housing program had nothing to do with it!) The Real Estate Boards apparently respect their boss, for they issued a press release on his statements—without so much as a grin or a note of apology to the public.

You can still make Mr. Fitch happy. Move in with your in-laws, your sisters, cousins or brothers. Pay anywhere from 15% to 40% more for rent. Tell G.I. Joe that you are the cause of the housing shortage. And if you get around to buying a house, don't do so out of distress but because you have a "wholesome desire" to purchase.





Hold That Rent Line

"Hold That Rent Line," a new CIO leaflet to aid the fight against higher living costs, has just come off the press.

Warning of the dangers if rent control is ended or weakened, the pamphlet says:

"In general, you will pay from $50 to $75 more a year for rent. If you can't pay, out you go. And don't forget that such rent increases will be just starters—with more and more to come."

"Hold that Rent Line" was prepared by the CIO Cost of Living Committee and the Dept. of Education & Research.

Order copies from the CIO Publicity Dept. or the Dept. of Education & Research, 718 Jackson Place N. W., Washington 6, D. C. Prices: 500 for $5.50; 1,000 for $10; 5,000 for $45.

GE, Others Named In Trust Charge

Charges of international conspiracy to monopolize the high tension cable industry were leveled against four U. S. and two foreign corporations by the Dept. of Justice in U. S. district court Jan. 30.

The department filed suit for anti-trust law violations against General Electric Co., General Cable Corp., Okonite-Callender Cable Co., Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp., Societa Italiana Pirelli of Italy and Intl. Pirelli of Belgium.

Among the firms' activities, the government charges, are: creation of an illegal patent pool, entry into cartel agreements which divided world markets and fixed uniform prices in this country, establishment of a monopoly on patent rights, exclusion of competitors from the industry and suppression of a superior and more economical type of gas-filled cable which has been widely used abroad.

WHO'S CRAZY? REALTORS THINK IT'S THE PUBLIC!

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

TIRED of living with your inlaws, or in a GI quonset hut for veterans? Wish you had more space for the kids? Finding it tough to meet the rent, what with the increased cost of living?

You're crazy, says the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, spokesman for the country's multi-billion dollar realty industry.

Actually, you're using too much living space now. You should be agitating for an end to rent control, in order to enjoy the privilege of paying 15% to 40% more rent. And, by golly, if we had a good depression, you'd find an apartment right away.

Silly? A Senate Banking subcommittee has been taking it all in seriously for the past fortnight—and heckling CIO representatives like Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey who came to argue the case for continued rent control in behalf of millions of hard-pressed families.

The Rube Goldberg arguments of the real estate lobby, which is going all-out to secure passage of the Hawkes Bill (S. 415) and blow the ceiling off the rent structures, would be funny if they weren't loaded with economic dynamite for almost every wage earner's family.

Listen to some of these choice remarks read into the record by the profit-hungry real estate men:

● From Morgan Fitch, president of the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards: "We have fixed rents at about 60% of their proper level . . . We have caused an expansion in demand—an extravagant and wasteful use of housing."

● From Rufus Lusk, Washington realtor: "The housing shortage is the result of rent control . . . I would give a minimum 15% across-the-board increase. I do not know if that is enough . . . Let us have a depression here, and inside of six weeks we will have a 10% vacancy rate."

● From Herbert Nelson, executive of the real estate boards: "We believe that at least 10%, or 300,000 of those would go on the market, because stenographers and other people living alone now would double up if those (apartments) are released from rent control."

So it goes—in the greatest behind-the-scenes propaganda campaign since big business ganged up to shear OPA of its powers last summer. The campaign plays every note on the scale: (1) There's no shortage now, so why not lift rents; (2) The landlords are suffering from low rents, and tenants should be pleased to help them out; (3) Lifting rent ceilings by 15% or more will produce more new homes; (4) People are using living space "extravagantly" because it's so cheap, and higher rents will make them "economize" on space; and (5) everybody else has blackjacked OPA, so why can't we?

AN impressive mass of facts to give the lie to these propaganda claims was presented by CIO Sec.-Treas. Carey at the Senate hearings.

"The fact is that the housing shortage is worse than ever before in our history," Carey told the Senators. "The situation is one familiar to all of you, I am sure. There is simply no rental housing available in America today."

A recent OPA survey in 26 cities found that the rate of vacant dwelling space had plummeted from 9% in 1929 to three-tenths of 1% for apartment dwellings in December, 1945.

"The immediate effect of the many proposals which have been made to remove controls or to impose an across-the-board rent increase would be to bring about a sharp and sudden increase in the cost of living," Carey said.

CIO economists estimate that a 15% rent rise would produce a 3% or 4% jump in living costs for working families. The Dept. of Labor, which has traditionally been conservative on its living-cost estimates, figures the rise would be at least 2%.

As Carey pointed out, rent is "the largest single item in any family budget" and a further increase would cut the "already dangerously reduced expenditures in meat and eggs and butter" of the average family.

He quoted from figures in a number of cities to prove the practical non-existence of vacant space, and warned:

"Rent control is their only protection against wild rent increases. They cannot refuse to pay a higher rent and go elsewhere because there simply is no other place to go."

And the great bulk of landlords need no special assistance, in the form of higher rents, the CIO official declared, because between 1939 and mid-1946 "landlords' net operating income from residential rents has gone up 35 to 40%. An across-the-board increase at this time will further raise these profits."

CAREY'S charges are backed up by OPA statistics which show that the landlords cleared $166 in 1945 for every $133 they netted in 1939 on the average apartment unit. This $33-a-unit profit jump was matched by increased expenses of only $11. Add to that the fact that every apartment is occupied, and the profit figure becomes even more favorable.

"If we were convinced that the removal of rent controls would stimulate the construction of new housing, we would be in favor of such a move," Carey said. "But such a result is not in the cards.

"If you remove controls, it will not add a single unit of new housing. A housing program — thoughtful and fitting the needs of our country—is our need today.

"Yet the same groups that sniped at and destroyed the Wyatt program that was a start in the direction of solving our problems are today demanding the end of rent control today."

Carey said that any hardships on individual small landlords should continue to be handled by OPA, which despite the limitations of a small staff, is issuing thousands of special exemptions each month.

Rules for easing procedure on "hardship" cases, with all borderline decisions going to the landlords, were set forth this week by Gen. Philip Fleming, government controls boss.

In his testimony Carey noted that Fleming had been deeply involved in the unsuccessful effort to lift rents 10%—a move scotched by CIO and other public protest—and questioned his devotion to the cause of rent control.

THE CIO's fight against the real estate lobby—which two weeks ago halted a squeeze play by some government officials to put through an appeasement 10% increase—has widespread support.

Lee Johnson, executive vice-president of the Natl. Public Housing Conference, charged the real estate board's claim that rent control causes the housing shortage wins for the lobby "the alibi sweepstakes" of 1947.

"The no-housing-because-of-rent-control boys are saying that two bushel baskets would hold ten bushels of apples if we would only increase the price of the two empty baskets," Johnson said.

The Natl. Urban League pointed out that the housing shortage is causing special hardship on the Negro population. Reginal Johnson, League director, said that only 5,000 out of a quarter-million temporary housing accommodations approved for veterans had been allocated to Negro families, and that only 1,600 were available for actual use.

"The enactment during 1947 of federal public housing legislation such as the Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill is the only hope for even a partial solution of the problem of America's many thousands of homeless and crowded Negro families," Johnson predicted.

But the bill, which would furnish a basis for a long-term construction program, is currently stalled in Congress. Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.) has introduced the bill in the House, but the Republican majority in the Senate has not yet taken action to indicate its position on the measure.

Meanwhile the propaganda campaign which knocked the bottom out of the Wyatt program for veterans' homes is focused on rent control.

If they win, your cost of living is due for another jump.

In A Nutshell

CIO WANTS rent controls continued "as is"; no increase in ceilings; individual exemptions in hardship cases.

REAL ESTATE LOBBY presses for 15% increase by action of either OPA or Congress.

PROPAGANDA DRIVE of real estate lobby moves on triple theme; end of rent control will aid suffering landlords, bring more housing, force tenants to double up.

FACTS PROVE living space is still short (0.2% vacancies in Detroit); landlord profits up 25%-35% in 10 years; higher rents won't bring new homes.

WHAT TO DO: Write Senators to kill rent hikes in Hawkes Bill (S. 415); urge them to support the Murray-Wagner bill to extend rent control one year without change.

'Everybody Do It But Me'

IN an optimistic let-the-other-guy-do-it frame of mind, 44% of American businessmen polled in a recent Fortune magazine survey predicted prices would go down in 1947—but only 15% said they expected to lower their own.

The poll, also revealed that while business heads look to the coming year for bigger profits, fewer strikes, higher wages and greater production, they are not at all optimistic about what the longer range future has in store.

Of the 30,000 executives in manufacturing, commerce, transport, utilities and finances who were polled, 58% said they expect a full sized depression within 10 years.

The contradictions between what businessmen think will happen and what they themselves are prepared to do pops up at every turn. Over half anticipated a general downturn in business this year. But 59% expect their own profits to equal or surpass those of 1946.

PROTECT THE AMERICAN HOME

EVERYONE knows "there's no place like home." But there will be no place even remotely resembling a home for countless lower-income Americans, if the real estate operators and Congressmen trying to raise rents 15% immediately, and to lift all rent controls soon, have their way.

In a 10-day period after rent controls were temporarily lifted in July, 1946, there were 3,500 rent increases and 1,394 eviction notices in Kansas City alone.

Yet proposals are now being made that would lead to even more wholesale evictions on a nationwide scale.

Most lower-paid families are already paying all the rent they can afford, considering present high living costs. A 15% rent increase would mean a further increase of 3 or 4% in day-to-day living expenses.

Such families would either have to cut down still further on food and other essentials or else find themselves homeless.

Rent controls were imposed to prevent landlords from taking advantage of the housing shortage by charging exorbitant rents. With this shortage now worse than it has ever been, it is madness to talk of lifting rent controls at this time.

The arguments made for raising rents and lifting controls are that landlords are getting a tough break and that somehow this might relieve the housing shortage. But neither of these arguments holds water.

The net income of landlords has increased substantially under rent control, alleged "hardship" cases are most generously treated, and OPA has already granted far more and far greater rent increases than it should have done.

Run-away prices are the chief cause of the continuing housing shortage. To put adequate housing still further beyond the means of ordinary Americans would certainly not relieve it.

What is needed is a national housing program such as Wilson Wyatt tried to put into effect, and legislation along the lines of the old Wagner-Ellender-Taft bill.

The present rent-raising proposals would only grant an unjustified windfall to wealthy landlords at the expense of the living standards and homes of millions of Americans.

TALKING OF INCREASED PAY

HOW would you like to have your take-home pay increased by anywhere from $5,000 to $110,000 a year?

You would? Well, Congressman Knutson and other influential Republicans, who object violently to CIO's much more modest wage demands, are proposing such pay increases.

They would bring them about through a 20% across-the-board reduction in income taxes.

The only catch is that you have to enjoy an income ranging from $50,000 to $1,000,000, to start with, to rate such Republican boosts in your take-home pay.

If you're just a working stiff, a farmer or someone else with income ranging from $1,200 to $3,000, all you'd get, at most, would be from $8 to $78 a year.

The above figures represent the increase in spendable income that would result from a 20% tax cut, even with the cut reduced to 10.5% in the millionaire brackets.

Percentage-wise, those with $1,200 incomes would get a 0.7% boost in spendable income; those with $2,000, 2.1%; those with $3,000, 2.9%; those with $5,000, 3.8%—while the $50,000-a-year man would get 19.7%; the $100,000-er, 34.3%; the $300,000-er, 71.7%; the $500,000-er, 70.6%; and the millionaire, 69.2%.

This is what we'd call "relief for the greedy but not for the needy."

BY LEN DE CAUX

THE back-to-the-land movement continues to be popular among industrialists.

Following the lead of Tom Girdler, who once said he would "dig potatoes" rather than sign up with the CIO, Charles E. Wilson of General Motors now expresses a similar ambition.

Telling a Senate committee he'd never sign a union shop agreement, Wilson declared: "When it gets around to that, they can make a farmer out of me."

SUCH rural interests are more healthful than the usual threat to enlist in the Legion of the Damned.

The subsequent damnation of those thousands of employers who once said they'd "be damned if they'd ever sign a union agreement" served little purpose.

But if Wilson and a lot of other union-fighting employers, politicians and publishers take to farming they will increase the nation's food supply—besides removing some obstructions from the path of progress.

BUT let us not underestimate the sincerity with which many persons of power bewail loss of freedom for themselves in granting more freedom to others.

Many American plantation-owners considered their freedom of operation severely curtailed by the freeing of the slaves.

Nero would doubtless have resented too much activity by the Rome fire brigade as an infringement of his artistic freedom.

And most American employers have considered union organization and labor protective legislation as restrictions on their freedom to "run their own business their own way."

SO LET us sympathize with the big landlords who find their "free enterprise" sadly curtailed by rent control.

The landlords' rake-off (net) from residential rents has gone up 35 to 45% since 1939, and OPA has granted about one million rent increases under rent control.

So let us attribute the landlords' efforts to end rent control to a pure yearning for more freedom, rather than to any gross desire for more of the pelf they so plentifully possess already.

It is too bad that this desired freedom conflicts with the desire of most Americans to be free from eviction for non-payment of exorbitant rents and to have housing they can afford.

WE DON'T need to sympathize with the big newspaper publishers. They've already won most of the freedoms they sought, including freedom from newsprint rationing and freedom to monopolize the country's press.

Under newsprint controls, smaller papers (including the labor press) were able to get a reasonable share of the then short newsprint supply.

But now, with record newsprint production, the 200 big dailies that consume 85% of the supply are lavishly increasing their consumption at the expense of 17 to 18 thousand smaller dailies and weeklies, many of which are having to reduce their size or discontinue for lack of newsprint.

It seems that full "freedom of the press" for a few multi-millionaire newspaper monopolists means decidedly less freedom for less wealthy publishers—and practically no press freedom for those who want to start new papers in competition with the monopolists.

IN THE name of "freedom"—for a few employers—members of Congress are also tumbling over each other to push new bills that would destroy practically every union freedom enjoyed by American working people.

MAYBE Charley Wilson has hit on a solution for this conflict between freedom for a few wealthy monopolists and freedom for the rest of us.

If he and other industrialists who find their freedom curtailed by the workers' freedom, will take to counting chickens instead of super-profits—

If the big landlords who resent rent control will take to milking cows instead of tenants—

If the newspaper monopolists will quit spreading mental manure and instead spread real fertilizer over the fields—

If the labor-baiting politicians will go to work restricting the freedom of livestock instead of workers—

Then all these gentlemen may enjoy the relative freedom of a farmer's life without infringing on the freedom of the rest of the American people.

'CORNER' ON NEWSPRINT THREATENS FREE PRESS

Two hundred big news publications consume 85% of the newsprint; small papers, including the labor press, face a phony "shortage." Result: a serious danger to freedom of expression. Needed: action by Congress.

UNDER American concepts of a free press, any man has the right to publish a newspaper or magazine.

Today that freedom is being limited rapidly by a newsprint shortage which threatens to develop into the proportions of a national calamity. While the largest newspapers and magazines print larger editions than ever before, thousands of small papers are in danger of going out of business.

The Senate Small Business Committee, headed during the last session of Congress by liberal Sen. James Murray (D. Mont.), last week issued a report which spoke soberly of the dangers in the present situation. Its conclusions pointed strongly towards the tight controls vested in a small number of monopolistic corporations with connections in the U. S. and Canada.

"One of the devices used to prevent anti-trust action by this government is for the giant newsprint manufacturers to escape to Canada," the Murray report declared, "operating there through wholly-owned units and working back and forth across a free international border without hindrance to their reprehensible practices of monopoly pricing and other arrangements."

A principal effect of this practice has been to make continued operation of small publications a hazardous undertaking, subject to the whims and caprices of large paper suppliers.

Situation Gets Worse

WITH the ending of wartime price controls and rationing, the situation has become even more serious. Big publishing companies are able to use tremendous quantities of newsprint, while the smaller publishers face the threat of suspending operations for lack of paper.

One expert advised The CIO NEWS that nine large publications operating in N. Y. City used 540,000 tons of paper a year, compared to 5,000 tons consumed by a host of small fraternal, neighborhood, religious and labor publications.

On a nationwide basis, it is estimated that 200 papers use 85% of the total newsprint supply, leaving thousands of small publications to scramble for the remainder.

For example:

• The N. Y. Times, on one Sunday last November, used 80 pages—with much of the space devoted to advertising—in its main news section alone. The newsprint thus consumed was more than that used by the largest job printer of small papers in N. Y. City during the course of an entire year.

• Striking Philadelphia newspapermen, anxious to publish a small daily tabloid paper of 10,000 circulation, were unable to find newsprint, though they scoured the eastern markets.

• A national fraternal organization was forced to skip at least one issue of its monthly magazine. Numerous labor paper editors have been forced to trim the size of their official publications, while the big papers consume more newsprint than ever before.

"There is almost no such thing as an open newsprint market," says Sen. Murray. ". . . Now thousands of small publications . . . are defenseless in the face of growing big publisher-big mill arrangements which cut small users out."

Add to that a startling increase in price of newsprint—from $48 to $84 a ton on the open market, and as high as $150 to $200 in private deals—and the small consumers are finding life difficult.

Trusts Set Prices

SEN. MURRAY cited a 1939 report of the Federal Trade Commission, which charged that newsprint prices are set at quiet meetings in Canada, out of reach of federal anti-trust investigators. As of 1929, the report showed, one-quarter of the entire newsprint supply was consumed by three large publishing groups: Hearst, Scripps-Howard and McCormack-Patterson.

Several larger papers were mentioned in the FTC report as guaranteeing their paper supply through substantial holdings in paper mill companies. Among the papers so protected were the N. Y. Times, the Chicago Tribune, the Hearst papers and the Minneapolis Tribune.

The newsprint shortage has been a major factor, Sen. Murray said, in the high mortality rate among American newspapers. Less than one out of every 10 cities now has two competing papers, and only one out of four small communities support two sources of news and editorial comments.

While "the combined circulation of all newspapers has gone up a sixth in the past 15 years, a tenth of all our dailies have gone out of business in that time," the Senate committee said.

It added:

"Our traditionally valued American system of small competing press units is now in such serious jeopardy as to warrant the immediate attention of Congress."

Ask Congress' Aid

PLUGGING hardest for action in Washington is the Newsprint Consumers Emergency Committee, supported by an expanding group of editors of community, religious, labor and specialized papers. The committee, with headquarters at 17 Murray St., N. Y. City, fought the lifting of newsprint allocations several months ago, and has since turned its attention to seeking Congressional relief.

"Paper mills in the U. S. and Canada are producing more paper than ever," says the Committee. "Reports by the trade indicate their output is 110% of capacity. The apparent shortage is due to diversion of nearly all this paper to the metropolitan newspaper press, which has in the past taken more than 85% of the supply."

Efforts to get Congressional relief are developing no rapid action. Hearings scheduled by the Senate Small Business Committee for early January were called off when Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R. Nebr.) took over the chairmanship from Sen. Murray under the GOP reorganization of Congress. No announcement of hearings has been forthcoming since that switch-over.

Meanwhile, Rep. Clarence Brown (R. O.), himself a newspaper publisher, has filed a motion to establish a probe under the jurisdiction of a five-man group in the House. Brown's motion significantly made no reference to the tight control over newsprint held by the big publishers and the big manufacturers.

Labor union members, who in many cases have seen their papers cut their size, should keep that warning in mind. Further cuts in the newsprint available for smaller papers may force some unions to shut down their papers altogether. Such a move would be a blow to freedom of expression by every group in the nation.

'RAISE WAGES—NOT PRICES'

CIO's new sound filmstrip based on the Nathan Report and the CIO pamphlet, "Why Wages Must Be Raised" was produced in black and white by the CIO Dept of Research & Education.

The filmstrip has dialogue, music, and 30 lively charts. "Raise Wages —Not Prices" requires a sound filmstrip machine which will play a 16-inch record at 33-1/3 r.p.m. It cannot be used on a 16 mm. sound movie machine. Available, February 15.

Sale price for the filmstrip and record is $15; rental price, $5. (please give two alternate dates). You may purchase a silent filmstrip with a mimeographed script for $5. 8 "Wages went up too, Hank admits, "but not nearly so much as profits."

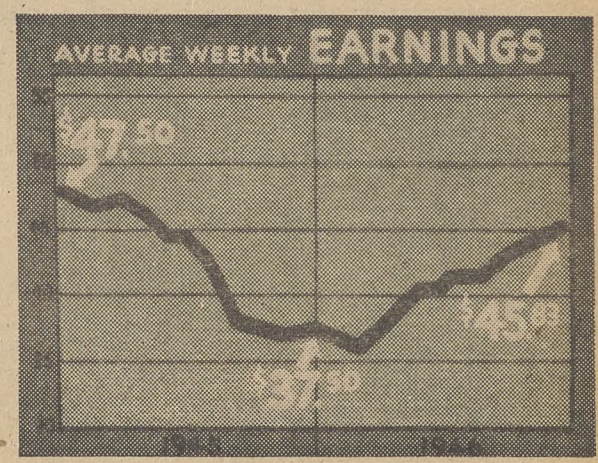
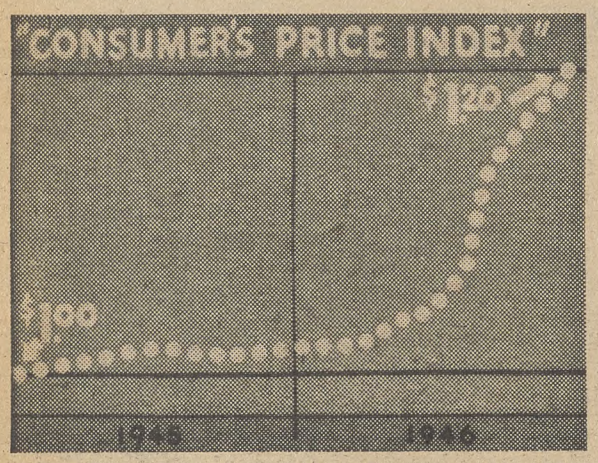
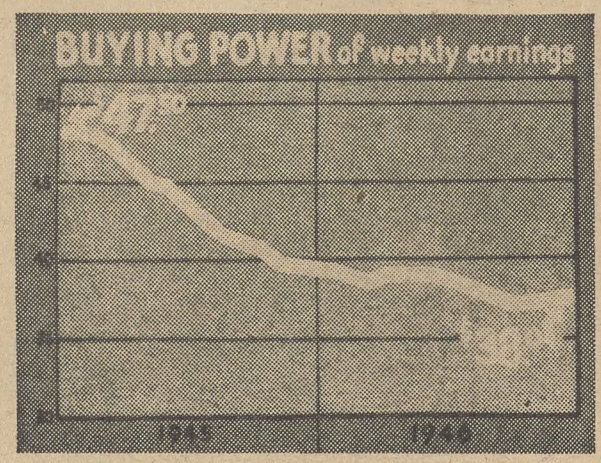
9 Hank shows that since January, 1945, profits are up 33%; farm income up 24%; wages down 5%.



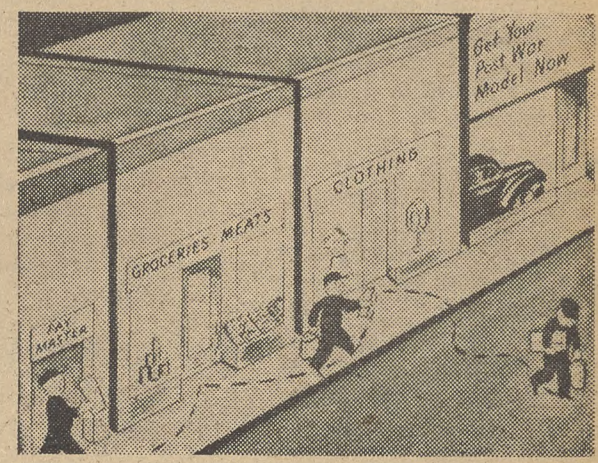
10 For the same two years, average wages dropped from $47.50 a week to $37.50, then rose to $45.83.



11 Conservative figures show, however, that during 1945-46, the cost of living went up at least 20%.

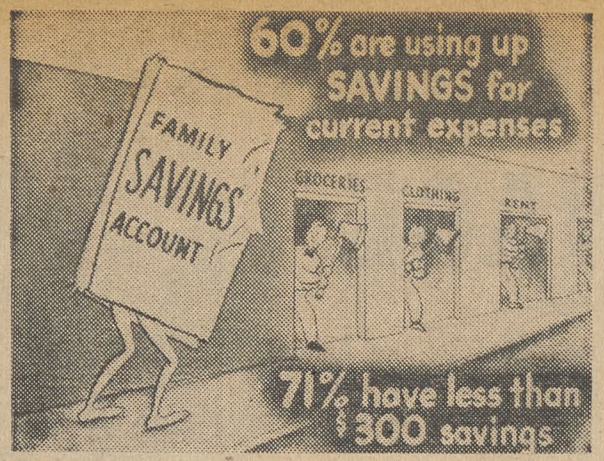


12 Buying power of workers' weekly earnings dropped from $47.50 to a low of $38.04.



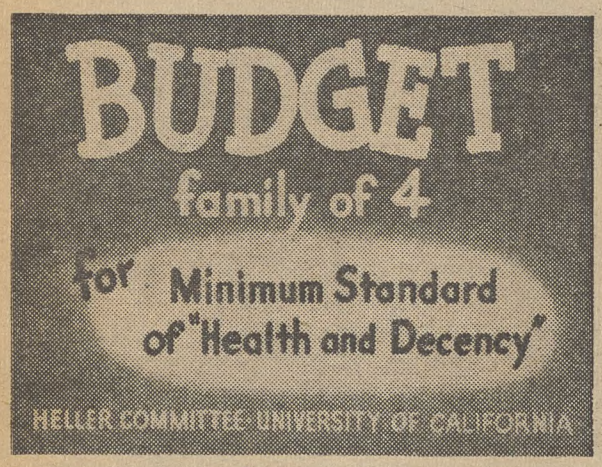
13 These wages cannot buy enough food and clothing for a family, let alone a new car.

14 CIO's recent study shows workers are buying less milk, butter, eggs and clothes.



15 60% of the families are using up savings; 71% have less than $300 saved.

16 Government studies show 40% have 1% of the savings. Top 10% have 60% of the savings.

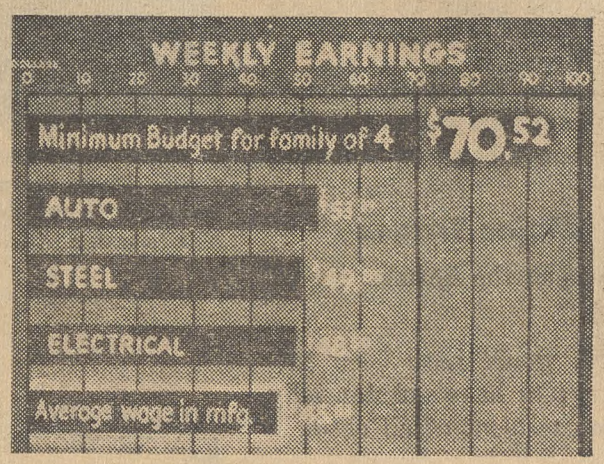


17 What does a family of 4 need to live on? University of California's Heller Committee says:

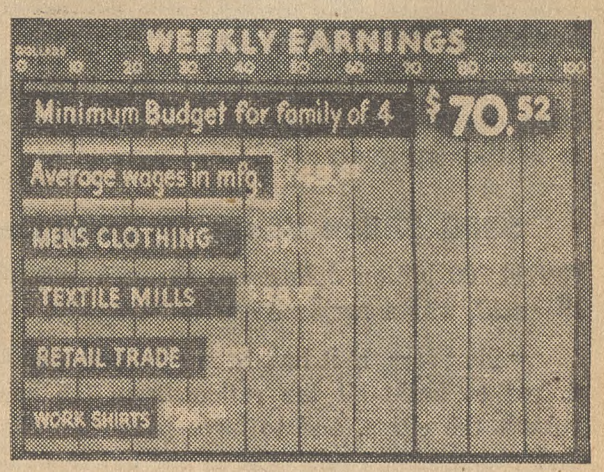
18 For Dad to have a new overcoat every seven years, a new suit, two regular shirts and 6 work shirts;

19 For Mom to have two house dresses, two regular dresses and two pairs of shoes;

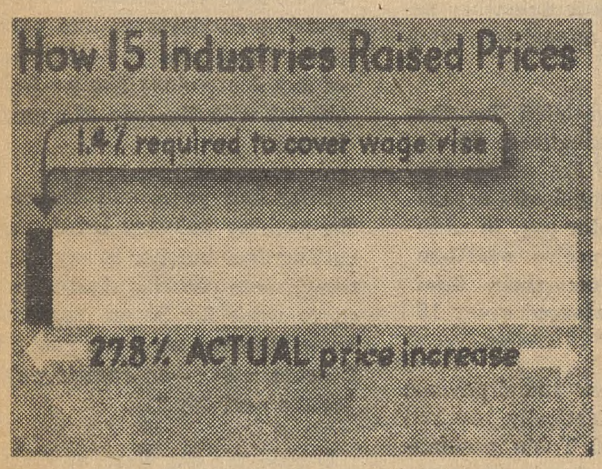
20 For a low family food allowance and no provision for savings;



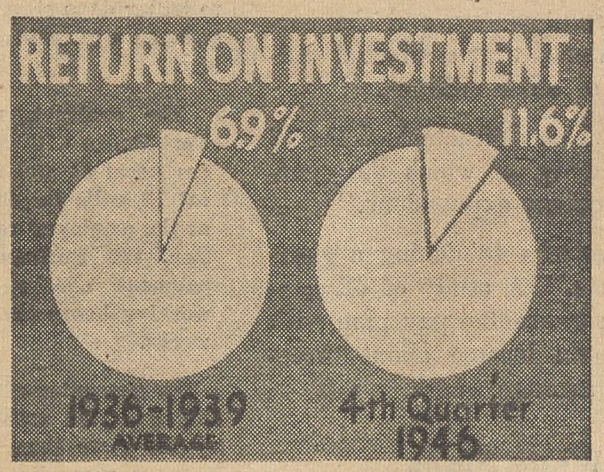
21 This Heller budget takes $70.52 per week. Average weekly wage in auto, $53; steel, $50; electrical, $48.



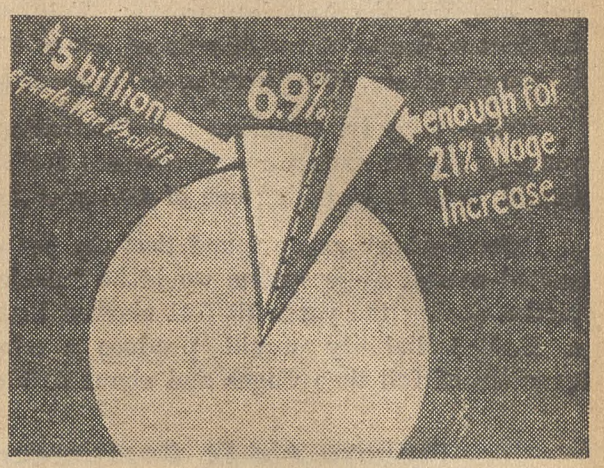
22 Heller standard: $70.52; U. S. average weekly wage, $45; textile mills, $38; work shirts, $24.



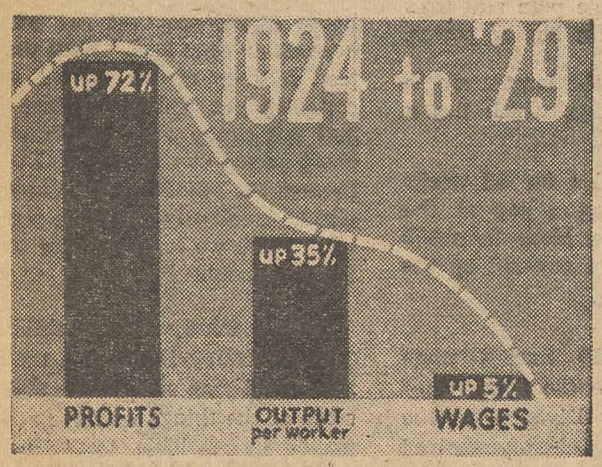
23 Meanwhile, industry has raised prices 28% to "cover" a wage increase costing 1.4%.



24 And return on investment has jumped from 6.9% in 1936-39 to 11.6% by the end of '46.



25 Wages can be raised 21% without increasing prices, by holding return on investment to 6.9%.



26 From 1924-29 profits increased 72%. Output per worker 35%. Wages only 5%.

27 Low purchasing power of workers brought about great depression of the 30's.

28 Today, wages must be raised substantially. This will help the U. S. to avoid another big depression.

U. S. REPORT BACKS ANNUAL WAGE

GUARANTEED annual wages should be encouraged by the federal government as an aid to removing "the dead hand of fear" in labor-management relations, according to a federal study of the problem reported last week in the daily press.

The study showed that companies like U. S. Steel or Bethlehem Steel could institute guaranteed yearly pay-systems with an increase of only four-tenths of 1% in prices, or a cut in profits ranging between 3½ and 4%. The estimate was based on assumptions that cost of the plan would be no more than 1% to the company.

General Motors would be even less affected, the study found, while the telephone company could institute the guarantee system by cutting profits only a bit more than 1.5%.

The report, prepared for the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion by a group headed by Murray Latimer, has been sent to the Government Printing Office and will be presented to an OWMR advisory group on February 25.

The report said that legislation to help development of guaranteed annual wages for workers in the nation's big industries will help ease the effects of unemployment. Cost of that unemployment in the 12 years after the 1929 collapse was estimated by the study to be three hundred billion dollars.

The report also asks for strong liberalization of present unemployment compensation benefits and the removal of any legislative barriers to setting up guaranteed-wage agreements between labor and industry.

$300 Billion Unemployment Loss 'Major Tragedy'

THE 300 billion dollar loss through unemployment, the Latimer report said, was a major American tragedy.

"That loss, if it had been productively used, would have been sufficient to build all the railroads in the country; to have substantially rebuilt the cities, and to have permitted the replacement of all obsolete and obsolescent equipment in the entire country.

"But this was not done. The principal loser, but by no means the only one, was the American worker. Total unemployment, and the partial loss of income through reduced hours of work, which affected millions of workers, also threatened the security of other millions.

"The tragedy, suffering and frustration which characterized the 12 years produced a deep-rooted demand for security, of which the guaranteed wage is becoming one of the most important expressions."

The Latimer group found that the net cost of establishing a guaranteed annual wage system would be "moderate." A study of 42 companies during the years 1937-41 showed that a guarantee pay plan with a limited liability would produce a minimum income about three-quarters of full time wages and about 90% of average wages.

Propose Aid To Guaranteed Wage Plans

TO ENCOURAGE institution of the year-round pay guarantees, the Latimer study suggested that companies be permitted to charge off the costs as a legitimate business cost in the eyes of the government's tax laws.

"The guarantee of wages is not a panacea," the study noted, "but a tool, and a tool which becomes sharper, not duller, with wide and more intensive use."

The problem of guaranteeing wages on a 12-month basis, the study noted, is in reality an extension of existing unemployment insurance mechanisms.

If certain supplementation of present jobless benefit funds were permitted by law, the study declared, "the liberalization of unemployment insurance payments might well have the same stimulating effect on wage guarantees as the creation of old age and survivors' insurance had on the inauguration of the voluntary retirement annuity systems."

A guaranteed annual wage means security, and that's what the Demery family needs. There are nine children, from three to 17 years old. Father Harry, a maintenance man at Tobin Packing, says that the annual wage "means that we should be able to save a little, and buy some of the things we should have had before."

By BOB BOLLARD

Educational Dept., CIO Packinghouse Workers

PACKINGHOUSE workers at the Tobin plants at Fort Dodge and Estherville, Iowa, are looking forward to better days since their union has negotiated a guaranteed annual wage contract.

The contract, negotiated by the Fort Dodge CIO Packinghouse Workers Local 31 and the Estherville Local 79, calls for 52 paychecks a year at the employes' regular pay. In addition, the workers receive overtime payment checks after their total working hours are balanced every 13 weeks.

The guarantee of year-'round pay not only has been enthusiastically received by the more than 800 Tobin packinghouse workers but by local merchants and community leaders as well. They point out that the wage plan stabilizes employment and assures buying power.

The Tobin plant is the largest single company in Fort Dodge, which has a population of 25,000.

The contract provides for 52 weeks employment for 40 hours pay at the employe's regular rate. More than 600 production workers are covered by the wage plan.

THE GUARANTEED annual wage clause is subject to the approval of the Wage and Hour Division of the Dept. of Labor, but has already received strong aproval by the majority of the workers affected by the plan.

George Fritz, Chairman of the Bargaining Committee for Local 31, who led the negotiations for the contract feels "that the annual wage should stabilize employment and purchasing power" and also "help to steer clear of any depressions like we had in the thirties with the help of a guaranteed income."

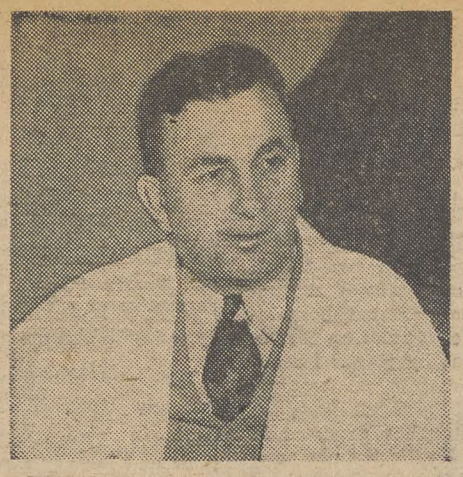
Fifty-four years and four months in the packing industry led James Erb, a cutting floor butcher to say "it's a great thing, more security than when I started to work for 5c an hour and never knew whether we were going to work 2 hours a day—or even if we'd have a job the next day."

Orville H. Du Pey, another cutting floor butcher and hog splitter, felt "it's the first time in my 19 years of packing-house experience that our wages have been on an even keel." With the guaranteed security of our annual wage "we can step out and bpy things we need and not worry about short weeks and short paychecks coming." Du Pey expressed his belief that "the annual wage should eventually eliminate seasonal lay offs, which we have had for as long as I can remember."

With a family of nine children, ages 3 to 17, Harry Demery, a maintenance man, said "we should be able to buy some of the things we have needed, and maybe save a little, too." His wife explained further that "a straight 40 hour paycheck is small to cover all our

Orville H. Du Pey, hog splitter and cutting floor butcher: "It is the first time in my 19 years in the industry that wages have been on an even keel. I feel that the workers can step out and buy things and not worry about a layoff or short weeks coming."

George Fritz, hog splitter and loin puller: "Being a resident of Fort Dodge all my life, I remember prosperity in the past and the depression of the thirties. We hope to steer clear of depressions in future years with the help of an annual wage."



Fred J. Clark, vice-president, Tobin Packing Co.: "I think the worker is entitled to security and should have it so he can provide for his family. I feel he will have security in this plan. We will do everything in our power to make it satisfactory."

Harold J. Williams, superintendent of schools, Fort Dodge: "The annual wage should help the community. I'm sure that a regular, ample income will improve a school attendance and will enable pupils to make better progress."

expenses, but better than some 25 or 30-hour checks, and the bonus at the end of each 13-week period should help us get by."

NOT ONLY are the workers happy over their contract that the union negotated, but local merchants, businessmen, religious and educational leaders are proud of the guaranteed annual wage. They feel it will be beneficial for the whole community.

Dave Lurie, owner of the Model Clothing Store in Fort Dodge, said "it is good for the merchants, and everyone in the community should prosper through the security of a steady income of the workers."

The owner of another store, Aaron Glazer of the Larson Clothing Co. thinks "the annual wage at Tobins is the only thing—the best that could be." He stated further that he was "happy to see the union and the company agree on the plan that will give steady employment with year-round paychecks."

Grocers who handle numerous packinghouse workers' trade were especially pleased with the new wage plan.

The Castagnoli brothers, co-owners of Spud and Mickey's Food Market, declared that "for a merchant in business such as ours, there has never been anything better than the annual wage plan. Customers buy more now and pay up every week."

Both brothers formerly worked at the Tobin plant and "hope other industries sign similar contracts because it means so much to the workers and businessmen as well."

Eugene Cornell, owner of Cornell's Self-Service Grocery just a few blocks from the plant, stated "I am highly in favor of the new annual wage plan at Tobins because the workers now have steady incomes and can plan their budgets accordingly." He believed that if the "plan proves successful in the meat packing industry, it should be extended to others."

A former Tobin worker, Joe Balchitis, who served as a chairman of the Bargaining Committee for Local 31 several years ago, and was a leader in establishing and building the local union, called the annual wage a "modern way of cooperation between labor and industry." He said that as a past employe of the Tobin Company he "commends it and Local 31, UPWA-CIO, for taking such a lead in this locality," and cited the new annual wage plan as "a step years ahead in the way of a cooperating system between labor and management."

Edward Breen, manager of Radio Station KVFD in Fort Dodge, and also a former State Senator noted: "From a standpoint of Fort Dodge, for the employes and management, I think the guaranteed annual wage is a wonderful thing." He looked for "happiness and industrial peace" and said the "effects will undoubtedly be reflected in other industries in Fort Dodge."

Wishing it every success, Breen hoped it may "become a landmark in good labor relations history."

RELIGIOUS leaders also had a good word for the annual wage plan. Reverend William T. Paden of the First Presbyterian Church of Fort Dodge thought there is "no doubt that if it can be worked out widely, it will mean a great sense of security to many people, and also grant greater stability in community life."

Educational bodies, too, are interested in agreements between unions and managements.

Harold J. Williams, Superintendent of Schools, expressed his belief that "the guaranteed annual wage should stabilize not only the industry, but also help in the community."

He pointed out that regular, ample income will improve school attendance and also enable pupils to make better progress.

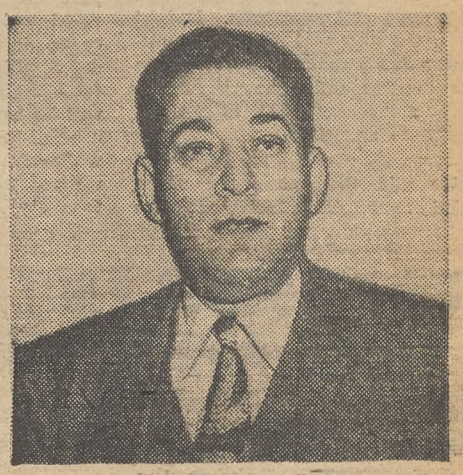
Fred J. Clark, vice-president of Tobin Packing Co. and manager of the Fort Dodge Division said:

"It seems to me the annual wage plan which we are working out with your union should be a fine thing when tied in with cooperation and a satisfactory production. I think the worker is entitled to security and should have it so he can provide for his family.

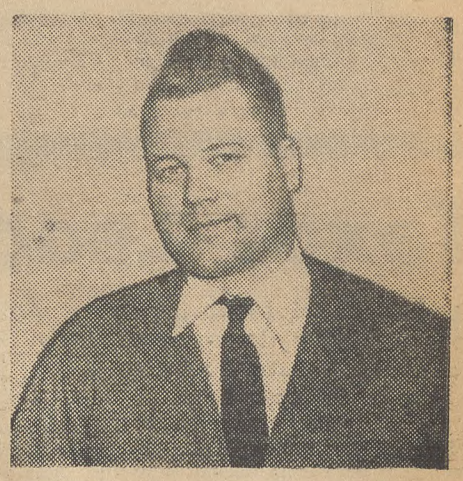
"I feel he will have security in this plan. We realize that this is an innovation to some extent, and we will do everything in our power to make it satisfactory for the company and the worker."

The Tobin Packing Co. itself is looking forward to even greater prosperity in Fort Dodge. An expansion plan is underway at the present time and construction is well on its way.

Although over 600 workers are now employed in the hog killing and processing plant, the company anticipates employing a force of some 2,000 when the expansion has been completed to include the killing of cattle and sheep.



Aaron Glazer, owner, Larson Clothing Co., Fort Dodge: "I think the annual wage at Tobin's is the only thing. The best that could be! Now the workers will have steady employment with year-round paychecks and should be good for business."



Eugene Cornell, owner, Cornell's Grocery: "A fellow with a good steady income can pay his bills much better than a man whose income is irregular. It is a fair system for both employer and employe. If the plan proves successful, it should be extended."

Edward Breen, manager, station KVFD, Fort Dodge: "I believe the annual wage will do much to bring happiness and industrial peace to the entire community. I think its effects will undoubtedly be reflected in other industries here."

OIL INDUSTRY FORCING STRIKE

PRES. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers declared this week that the uncompromising attitude of the oil industry to the union's demand for a 25c an hour wage increase is forcing the union to consider strike action.

OWIU filed strike notices against all major oil companies and most smaller ones in California in January. The month's notice required by the Smith-Connally Act expires Feb. 15.

OWIU's policy committee met this week at Fort Worth. Knight with the approval of the committee pointed out that for three months the union has been getting a "run-around" in its attempt to negotiate.

He said that when the union tried to bargain locally it was told "management will meet the prevailing wage scale in the area," but when it conferred with the national management, the union was "informed that bargaining must be conducted on the local level, plant by plant." Knight continued:

"The industry has persisted in this attitude despite the net profits which last year exceeded those of the lushest war year. Increases in the price of gasoline last week promise to increase profits even above the peak 1946 figure . . .

"It is apparent that as in the past the industry will listen to nothing less than the show of economic strength . . . In the event collective bargaining is not forthcoming before Feb. 15, we will be compelled to resort to the use of full economic pressure wherever such pressure can be utilized without violation of contracts."

UE PRESENTS PACT DEMANDS TO GE AND WESTINGHOUSE

GENERAL ELECTRIC and Westinghouse this week are presumably studying the demands of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers for substantial wage increases. Demands went to GE this week and to Westinghouse last week.

The union is also asking a guaranteed annual wage; pay for holidays, union shop, strengthen union security, improved grievance procedure.

UE requested that Westinghouse open negotiations Feb. 10, and that GE also begin discussions at an early date.

No specific sum was set forth in the wage demands, in accordance with the recommendations of the union's general executive board and the specific directives of the GE and the Westinghouse conference boards.

GLASS WINS EQUAL PAY

THE CIO Glass Workers this week won two signal victories in its new contracts with Big Glass—equalization of minimum pay for men and women, and time and a half for certain days irrespective of whether time worked is over five days.

Time and a half will be paid for any Saturday and Sunday work in non-continuous operations and for any Sunday in continuous operations.

Big Glass is Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. and Pittsburgh Plate Glass Co. The new minimum rate is $1.01 an hour—an increase of 3c an hour for men workers and as high as 16c an hour for women workers. The contract may be opened for wages anytime after May 1.

BIG FOUR HALT RUBBER TALKS

THE Big Four rubber companies — U. S. Rubber, Goodrich, Goodyear and Firestone—this week broke off negotiations with the CIO Rubber Workers at Cincinnati on the union's demands for a 26c an hour wage increase.

Negotiations were severed after the Rubber Workers' policy committee turned down the companies' request for a 90-day delay.

The new U. S. Rubber contract provides that if no industry-wide settlement of wages is reached, pay shall be determined by negotiations between the company and the union.

Fishermens' Conclave

CALLS ANTI-TRUST SUIT 'COVER-UP'

THE CIO Intl. Fishermen and Allied Workers at their eighth annual convention at Wilmington, Calif., Jan. 21-24 accused the U. S. Justice Dept. of bringing anti-trust action against the union "to divert attention" from its refusal to enforce the anti-monopoly laws against real offenders.

The union, Sec.-Treas. Jeff Kibre and 15 members have been indicted under the anti-trust laws.

The union declared that these "big corporations and combines of capital" which the Justice Dept. refuses to prosecute are endangering the "well-being and freedom of the whole nation."

IFAWA accused the department of ignoring the "intolerable spread between producers and consumers, a condition, which the Congress, at long last, has authorized the Dept. of Agriculture to investigate for the purpose of promoting better prices for producers and lower prices for consumers."

The Justice Dept. was criticized for branding as a "criminal conspiracy" the program of guaranteed prices for producers, similar to the one used to obtain maximum farm production. The union said this program is responsible for needed stability and greater productive effort in the fishing industry.

The CIO, AFL and all persons of good will were urged to help defeat the attack on the union.

ORGANIZATIONAL activities during the past year included chartering locals on Lake Erie and the South Atlantic Coast and in Corpus Christi, Tex. The likelihood of greater growth was seen in the announcement by Hiram McAllister, head of the Crab Fishermen's Assn. of Grays Harbor, Wash., that he would press for affiliation of his organization with IFAWA.

Fraternal delegates represented the United Fishermen and Allied Workers of British Columbia, an independent organization of some 7,000 fishermen and shoreworkers.

Pres. Joseph F. Jurich, Seattle, and Kibre were re-elected president and secretary-treasurer respectively without opposition. Oscar Anderson, Alaska Fishermen's Union, Seattle, was elected vice-president to succeed Fred Scheel.

The convention called for action to protect the rights of American fishermen through international treaties, particularly with Mexico and Canada. This action was taken after a delegate reported that measures discriminatory to American fishermen were being introduced in the Mexican Congress.

The U. S. State Dept., the delegate said, had been dilatory in pressing negotiations for a fishery treaty covering Mexican and American offshore waters.

The convention called for a three-plank program to increase producer and shoreworker shares of the consumer's dollar, to control and develop the by-product field, and to boost production and distribution of fish.

Texas Leads in CIO's Southern Campaign

AN industrial leader in a notoriously low-wage section in Texas stated recently in an interview:

"Lured by an abundance of good, cheap labor, industry is moving in here from the north so rapidly that we can't keep an accurate list of new firms."

Robert Oliver, director of the CIO Organizing Committee in Texas, dispatched this terse statement to the editor:

"We should be happy to supply the gentlemen with an accurate list of all plants in that area. We plan to organize them all in 1947."

This appeared no idle boast. For since mid-May, 1946, Oliver's youthful staff of Texans, fresh from local unions, had piled up 64 election victories to lead the South in triumphs with the result that approximately 14,500 new CIO members had added an estimated $3½ million annually to their paychecks.

Oliver predicted an even more impressive record for 1947. Organization has been completed in 41 plants for which certification petitions have been filed with the National Labor Relations Board, and organizational activity in 46 other plants is progressing satisfactorily.

Reviewing his staff's progress, the graying 37-year-old ex-sergeant who saw combat with an anti-tank outfit in Europe regarded as most significant the establishment of CIO "beachheads" in several low-wage sections in the state. Moving out from CIO bases in Dallas and the Houston-Gulf Coast areas, Oliver's representatives, working in close cooperation with international CIO unions, won victories in virtually every section of the vast Lone Star State's industrial checkerboard.

As evidence that one CIO contract in a low-wage section would spark unionization in the entire area, Oliver cited the record of quick victories in Waco.

CIO Rubber Workers organized the General Tire & Rubber plant in Waco in 1945 and sought to win a wage pattern comparable to the scale held by CIO workers in General's plants in Ohio. A strike resulted during negotiations for renewal in mid-1946. The company asked the public, in full-page ads, why CIO workers getting from $90 to $105-a-week would go out on strike, ran photostats of the outsized checks in a series of two ads.

Workers in unorganized Waco plants took a look at the photostats of the $100-a-week checks, then swamped the CIO organizing office. Six large plants were won by CIO in rapid-fire order. Resultant payroll increases amounting to approximately $750,000 annually did much to win solid support of Waco merchants.

Following the Waco success, Oliver moved his staff into the Marshall, Tyler, Longview and

ROBERT OLIVER

Lufkin areas to set up similar "beachheads." A Tyler candy firm engaged in interstate commerce was found to be paying some employes only 35c an hour, 5c below the Wage-Hour minimum. The plant was quickly organized and a settlement of $2,300 in back pay claims was made to 40 workers.

In addition to the estimated $3½ million payroll increases won by new CIO members, Oliver said the CIO activities in the low-wage areas had resulted in hundreds of companies announcing attractive bonuses, wage increases and paid vacations in attempts to block organization.

One plant in Dallas increased wages 30c an hour within three months, meeting three seperate leaflet distributions with 10c increases. Another Dallas firm gave a $35,000 "profit-sharing" bonus shortly after CIO appeared at the plant gates.

"Directly and indirectly, the drive in Texas has succeeded in cracking the 40c pattern which has been an economic drag on this state," Oliver said.

Oliver said the flood of national industry moving into rich Texas industrial areas was a boon to organization, and would in the next few years wash away much of the wage differential which exists between Northern and Southern workers.

"When a northern company with which CIO has contracts moves into Texas, we have little difficulty organizing it," Oliver said. "It's foolish for a company to attempt to explain to Texas workers why they are paid 25 to 50% less than a CIO worker with the same company in the north. We're using them to open beachheads in sub-stand-..ard wage sections. We anticipate a dozen such stampedes as in Waco."

Oliver's staff has met no show of violence from anti-unionists, he said. The only "annoying opposition" was encountered in Longview when three CIO organizers and seven local union members were arrested for alleged "use of threats" on a picket line. Thirteen felony indictments under the O'Daniel anti-violence law were returned against three organizers and one local union member. Acquittals were won in all cases.

Oliver said organizational activities for the first part of 1947 would be centered in the Dallas and Houston areas.

RALLY TO FIGHT ANTI-LABOR BILLS!

The CIO Legislative Committee has called for support of our unions, their officers and members in resisting the threatened measures against organized labor pending in Congress.

CIO Regional Directors have been called upon to call in the representatives of international unions and councils in their respective area for the purpose of mapping out plans to present the position of the CIO to the local leadership and then to the membership to activize all of our people and our friends against these unwarranted onslaughts being waged against labor's basic freedoms.

No stone should be left unturned to let your Congressmen and Senators know your position in these matters. Labor must not and with vigilance shall not be driven backwards. Our struggle for greater security and economic freedom for all Americans must continue. When the call is issued for action, do your part.

NLRB Finds Workers Favor CIO

THE NLRB this week reported that in December, 1946, the CIO won 73% of the elections in which it participated compared to AFL's score of victories in 59% of the contests.

Total votes cast for the CIO in the month were 13,213 and for the AFL 10,197. The CIO won 23 elections and 3,959 votes in elections in which it was pitted against the AFL alone, with the latter winning 16 of these election and 3,439 votes.

The need for increased appropriations to provide sufficient personnel for the board—as Pres. Truman has requested—was emphasized by the backlog of 5,065 cases, an increase of 37% over the number pending a year ago.

Six hundred and forty-six petitions for elections were filed in December and constituted 67% of the month's total of 962 cases.

MORE THAN 500 CIO members this week jammed the Los Angeles CIO Council's Auditorium this week and gave the council a flying start in a campaign against anti-labor legislation.

The conference enthusiastically adopted a program to raise $20,000 for the overall CIO campaign in Los Angeles. Additional money will be spent by local unions.

SHIP WAGE MEET URGED

DELEGATES to a policy meeting of locals of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers this week visited Senators and Representatives to press for a meeting of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee, which has set wage rates in the industry for six years.

Congressmen also were urged to take action to stimulate foreign trade. Delegates pointed out that about one out of every ten workers are in industries related to the export and import business and that increased foreign trade would also stimulate world peace.

The last meeting of the Shipbuilding Stabilization Committee was held last July. The decision to set new wage rates was postponed until a meeting scheduled for January, which was not held because a quorum was not present.

Failure to have a quorum was due to the withdrawal of three employers representatives, Bethlehem Steel, Todd Shipyards and Maryland Drydocks.

The policy committee met for a day at CIO headquarters in Washington prior to the day spent on Capitol Hill. IUMSWA Pres. John Green presided at the meeting and at earlier sessions of the union's executive board.

AFL HELPS CIO STRIKE

FIVE hundred members of Local 13, CIO Shipbuilding Workers, are on strike this week at the Ira S. Bushey and Sons repair yard, Brooklyn, N. Y., in answer to the firm's long anti-union history.

The strike is supported by five AFL and CIO unions in maritime and other operations of the Bushey Co. and its subsidiaries.

The IUMSWA shut the yard down tight. Members of the AFL Seafarers Intl. Union joined the strikers on the picket line in a stirring demonstration of solidarity.

Also backing the Bushey strikers were: the CIO Natl. Maritime Union, whose members were refusing to operate oil tankers for the company; members of the CIO Oil Workers who refused to cross picket lines to enter the plant; Local 333 of the United Marine Division of the AFL Longshoremen, which refused to give tug boat service, and the AFL Masters, Mates & Pilots.

Early in the walkout, rank and file members of Local 553, AFL Teamsters, also supported it, but later officers of the AFL local aided by police led the drivers through the picket line.

The walkout was called after all union efforts to settle a long list of grievances had failed, and the company had also spurned the intervention of the U. S. Conciliation Service and Mayor O'Dwyer's labor relations committee. The employer this week agreed to meet with an official of the U. S. Maritime Commission.

U. S. PROBES SALE OF STRUCK PAPERS

WITH the sale of the Record this week, Philadelphia—third largest U. S. city—has only two standard-sized daily newspapers.

The Record was sold by its publisher, J. David Stern, while he was conducting negotiations for settlement of the strike of 580 members of the CIO Newspaper Guild employed on the Record and two other Stern papers, the Camden Courier and Post.

The Camden papers as well as the Record and radio station WCAU—which Stern bought six months ago for $6 million—were purchased by the Philadelphia Bulletin. The Bulletin now shares the standard daily field in Philadelphia with the Inquirer, morning pubication, and has its own radio station.

The anti-trust division of the U. S. Justice Dept. has requested Stern and Robert McLean, president of the Bulletin Co., and of the Associated Press, to come to Washington to discuss the transaction.

The Bulletin has announced that it will incorporate some Record features in a Sunday edition, and that it is seeking purchasers for the week-day Record and other Stern papers.

Pres. Milton Murray of the natl. Guild, declared:

"Suspension of the Stern papers in Philadelphia and Camden represents a tragic failure of collective bargaining."

"It is tragic to the 580 courageous employes who went on strike to achieve economic goals which have been won without conflict in other cities.

"It is also tragic to the citizens of Philadelphia and Camden who see the possibility of three of their newspapers being engulfed in the increasing trend of American newspaper monopoly.

"Stern, in selling out his publications, can rest no blame on the American Newspaper Guild. In no other city, where strikes have occurred, has it been impossible with competent negotiators on both sides of the table to reach a mutually satisfactory agreement."

The Bulletin, considered one of the wealthiest newspapers in the U. S., is owned by the McLean family, having been purchased for a song in 1895 by William L. McLean, Robert's father.

The open-shop Bulletin helped force three other Philadelphia newspapers out of business—the Ledger, the Press and the North American—because they could not raise their subscription and advertising rates in face of the Bulletin's low ones.

The Bulletin is reported to have paid between $11 and $13 million for the Stern properties, but there was a rumor that the transaction was a phony and a move on Stern's part to break the strike.

In any case the Guild is not taking any chances. The strike is being continued to insure the unity of the three staffs so that they will be immediately available to prospective new publishers.

This action was decided at a meeting of the strikers when Pres. Arthur Pierce, of the Guild local and Executive Vice-Pres. Sam Eubanks of the national Guild, expressed the belief that the newspapers have been suspended only temporarily. The Guild has pledged a quarter million dollars to carry on the strike if necessary.

The sale was being treated seriously by the House Labor Committee considering anti-labor legislation. In an apparent attempt to recapture the anti-labor hysteria which was dying down in the absence of any big strikes, the committee announced that it was inviting Stern and the Guild to explain their differences at a hearing Feb. 10.

PAPERWORKERS MEET FEB. 17

The first Policy Convention of the CIO Paperworkers, to convene in Cleveland on Feb. 17, will report a membership growth of better than 150% in the three years since CIO Pres. Philip Murray chartered the organizaiton.

The original 78 locals that formed the Paper Workers Organizing Committee on January 1, 1944 have grown to 147; the membership has increased some 150%; 200 contracts are in force.

The convention will also be able to point to vast improvements in wages and working conditions obtained by UPA-CIO since its formation. The highest minimum day rates in the entire paper industry — $1.13½-$1.16½ — now obtain in the northern New Jersey paper board mills under UPA agreements.

THE DRIVE AGAINST LABOR

THE REAL MOTIVES

Behind The Drive For Law By Injunction

IT may be astonishing to realize that there was a time before the Norris-LaGuardia Act when injunctions could be issued without notice to the union, without a hearing, and without any effort to prove that the injunction really was a necessary device.

This is what the Norris-LaGuardia Act was intended to terminate. This is what most of these proposals would now attempt to revive.

The issue thus is not whether "coercive" or "violent" or "unlawful" picketing shall be protected. There is not a state in the nation where "violence" is not already unlawful.

The issue is whether such "violent" picketing shall be curbed by the proper officials, namely, the local police authorities; or whether an occasional scuffle or fist fight on a picket line shall be made the excuse once more, as in the days before the Norris-LaGuardia Act, for sweeping anti-labor, anti-strike injunctions issuing out of the Federal courts without notice or hearing, as was the custom in the heyday of "government by injunction."

Sometimes these proposals for curbs on picketing are not satisfied with a revival of the injunction, but provide for vindictive criminal penalties.

In other words, the people who offer these proposals are not satisfied to allow any criminal conduct which may occur on the picket line to be treated and punished in the same manner as any similar criminal conduct, whether it occurs on the picket line or elsewhere. These people are not satisfied to have the police treat a fist-fight on a picket line the same as they would treat a fist-fight anywhere else. These people wish to punish conduct occurring on a picket line more severely than they would punish the same conduct occurring anywhere else.

UNIONS FAVOR PEACEFUL PICKETING

Existing Laws Provide Penalties For Violence

It is clear that these proposals are based fundamentally on a principle of discrimination against those who participate in picketing.

There is still another discriminatory side to the proposal. When an individual engages in physical violence or coercion, he is usually subject to punishment in municipal or state courts. Does it make sense, solely because he is a striker, to subject the same individual to special treatment in the Federal courts? Under our system of government, it was not intended that our Federal courts be converted into gigantic police courts for the punishment of local violence by strikers.

This is the last installment of a pamphlet exposing the union-busting intent of "curb labor" proposals in Congress. It was prepared by the CIO Legal Dept., headed by Lee Pressman.

LABOR unions do not urge or condone any violence or unlawful conduct on picket lines. Every responsible labor organization makes every effort to prevent any outbreak which might arise as a result of the increased tensions of a strike situation. But that is not satisfactory, apparently to those who wish to utilize every possible device to crush labor organizations.

These people wish to punish far more severely certain minor conduct of an offensive nature—which may occur on a picket line just as it may occur anywhere else. They wish to create a reign of legal terror over the pickets in the course of a strike, and they wish to revive the institution of the labor injunction as a device for attacking the entire union and all of its membership. They wish to do so on the thin justification which may arise from a single minor incident in the course of the activities of workers on the picket line.

It is this discriminatory effort of those who urge these proposals which exposes in full their true intent and purpose.

The simple fact is that existing laws are fully adequate to take care of any actual force or violence which may arise in the course of picketing. The proposals contemplate something far more than the elimination of force and violence on the picket line. They are aimed at the right itself.

THE year 1946 brought a large number of strikes. This was not at all unexpected.

Workers throughout the war period had been subjected to a constantly rising cost of living while their wages had been under sharp control. In addition, during the war years, there had been an accumulation of grievances of major and minor proportions throughout the entire nation. Employers, taking full advantage of the pledge of labor not to engage in strikes, had gone ahead on their own program of doing as they pleased with respect to working conditions. They knew that, in the main, their workers would not violate the no-strike pledge given to the nation.

It was therefore to be expected that if employers continued, after the war [as they did] to refuse justified demands for much needed and long overdue wage adjustments, a substantial number of strikes would be provoked.

Those who have always hated labor unions have seen in these strikes an opportunity once and for all to do a crippling job upon the labor movement.

Pointing excitedly to the strikes of 1946, these individuals have revived old campaigns, and started new ones, to eliminate the right to strike in a multitude of circumstances.

Trying to build a fire of discontent over the 1946 strikes for which employers were primarily responsible, the NAM calls for laws to outlaw jurisdictional strikes, sympathy strikes, strikes to force recognition, strikes to enforce featherbedding, strikes for this or strikes for that. Another group advocates outlawing strikes against utilities.

● Were any of the major strikes of 1946 "jurisdictional strikes"? The answer is "No."

● Were any of the major strikes of 1946 "sympathetic strikes"? The answer is "No."

● Were any of these strikes which are supposed to justify all of these proposals strikes to force recognition of an uncertified union? The answer is "No."

● Were any of these strikes called in order to enforce featherbedding? The answer is "No."

We could go on down the list of the strikes on which the NAM and others call for prohibitions and ask whether any of them were of the types which the NAM would outlaw. The answer would be "No."

What this all adds up to is very clear. The strikes of 1946 are being used as a smokescreen for attacking all of the various kinds of strikes which the NAM and its friends and members have been trying for years to outlaw.

Does the CIO support feaatherbedding"? The CIO does not engage in "featherbedding." But to the NAM "featherbedding" includes any demand for a safe crew and any opposition to the speed up.

Are "jurisdictional strikes" good? To the NAM, a "jurisditional strike" includes any attempt by a union to protect itself against an employer who is starting a company union or imposing an undesired union on his workers.

But over and above all these facts, it is important to realize what the NAM is trying to do when it tries to outlaw a strike.

This country has always recognized the basic right of our people to work or not to work as they see fit. The Thirteenth Amendment abolished involuntary servitude. The United States Supreme Court in interpreting the Thirteenth Amendment has declared that it is a violation of the Constitution for any state or the federal government to try to make it a crime for anyone to refuse to work for someone else. That would be involuntary servitude.

In a decision recently rendered by the U. S. District Court in Chicago, in a case involving the constitutionality of the Lea Act passed by the last session of Congress, the court pointed out

"Gentle plain and resolute," Walt Whitman called him. If we name these qualities to our children as part reason for his greatness we will add a little to his honor—and a great deal to their strength. There are many good yarns about Abraham Lincoln that every family should know and enjoy. Try looking up some to share with your children. (Monkmeyer Photo.)

GIRL ORGANIZES COUNCIL TO AID BLIND

(Federated Press)

THE organizing ability which made her father one of the early leaders of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers (CIO) turned up in young Mildred Weisenfeld when she discovered that a possible cure existed for the disease which was slowly depriving her and 35,000 other Americans of their sight.

It began when Miss Weisenfeld, who had been going from hospital to hospital ever since childhood in the hope of finding a treatment that would save her from total blindness, heard that in far-off Russia a famous scientist, Prof. Vladimir Filatov, had developed a cure which proved successful in 77% of his cases. This hitherto incurable disease, retinitis pigmentosa, manifests itself in night blindness and a gradual shrinking of the field of vision. All its victims eventually go blind.

Together with Harry A. Sloan, another victim who has the disease in a much less advanced stage and is able to move about unguided, Miss Weisenfeld wrote to the more than 600 foundations for the blind and the U. S. Public Health Service, asking if the Filatov treatment would be tried in the U. S. The answer was No in every case. There was polite interest but not enough to finance any research.

Then Sloan and Miss Weisenfeld pooled their union backgrounds and set up the Natl. Council to Combat Blindness. To carry out its work the council needs $500,000. A membership drive to enroll not only the visually handicapped, but all those interested in the fight against blindness, will get underway in February. All inquiries or donations should be sent to the Natl. Council to Combat Blindness, 545 Fifth Ave., New York 17, N. Y.

that the right of individuals to leave their jobs under protection of the Constitution is a right which workers have whether it is one worker quitting by himself or a large number of workers acting together.

In other words, the right of a group of individuals to leave their jobs is just as sacred as the right of each individual among them to leave his or her job.

When the NAM calls for a law prohibiting jurisdictional strikes, sympathy strikes or the so-called secondary boycott, what is it that they are requesting?

They are asking for laws to make it a crime for a group of workers to refuse to work under certain conditions.

No matter how such laws are dressed up and surrounded by slick slogans, these are simply proposals for involuntary servitude.

MILLIONS FOR WAR, NOTHING FOR CANCER RESEARCH

(Federated Press)

SEN. Claude Pepper, pro-labor liberal from Florida, has reintroduced a bill into Congress (S. 93) to provide a hundred million dollars for cancer research. The bill was defeated in the last Congress in spite of the almost solid backing of public opinion. Labor and the people must see to it that it passes this time.

The $100 million asked for by Sen. Pepper amounts to less than half the cost of a single day of war. It is a small sum compared to the President's budget requests of $530 million for army and navy research and $693 million for atomic energy development. It is a drop in the bucket compared to the more than $2 billion spent to make the atomic bomb, the most destructive weapon in the history of mankind.

Cancer research is needed to save lives. Cancer is our public health enemy No. 2. It is second only to heart disease as a cause of death in the United States. An all-out drive against cancer is needed right now.

What is cancer? It is thought by most doctors to be a disease in which certain body cells get out of hand, multiply rapidly, invade normal cells and destroy vital organs. Cancer cells operate like the Nazis, infiltrating peaceful neighbors then overrunning and destroying them.

THE cause of cancer is unknown. We know that some cancers result from long exposure to certain chemicals. A good example is the bladder cancer which occurs among workers in the aniline dye industry. Certain kinds of cancer, such as cancer of the mouth and stomach, occur more often among workers than in other groups. Why this is so is not clearly understood.

Cancer can be cured but so far only by surgery, X-rays or radium. Any claim that cancer can be cured by medicine taken internally or by injections is a fake. Beware of slick operators who advertise such claims. They are interested not in your welfare but only in your money like any other confidence men.

Cancer is most curable early in the disease. That is why it is important for a person who has one of the cancer danger signals to see his doctor at once. Most of the time it won't be cancer, but it's a nice feeling to be sure. And if it does turn out to be cancer the fact that it's discovered early makes a big difference in the chances for cure. The cancer danger signals are:

1. Any sore that doesn't heal, especially around the tongue, mouth or lips.
2. Any irregular bleeding or discharge from any body opening.
3. Any unusual lump or thickening, especially in the breast.
4. Persistent indigestion, often accompanied by loss of weight.
5. Sudden changes in the shape or growth of a mole or wart.
6. A persistent change from the normal habit or action of the bowels.

IN the last few years cancer detection clinics have been set up where people can be examined by experts for early signs of cancer. These lucky people have the best chance for cure, because their illness is picked up earliest of all. So far these clinics have been limited to a few big cities and have been almost entirely for people who can afford such luxuries. They are out of the reach of the majority of the people who put off going to the doctor when they are sick because they can't afford doctor bills.

ASK CHURCH, LABOR UNITY

Race discrimination, economic injustice and mass exploitation are problems which must be met by church and labor acting together, stated the report approved by delegates to the Southern Religion and Labor Conference held last week in Atlanta, Ga.

The conference, first of its kind in the South was attended by more than 50 representatives from 12 states. Dr. Alva W. Taylor, conference chairman, presided. Dr. Willard Uphaus was executive secretary of the conference.

Van A. Bittner, director of the CIO's Southern Organizing Drive, told the delegates that there is "no more religious institution in America or in the world than organized labor." Labor must set a new economic pattern in America, he told the conference, by abolishing poverty and giving security to all people.

Dr. Taylor called labor's drive today "the greatest effort in human history to emancipate man from poverty."

Studying at the Central Institute for Christian Social work at the YWCA in Amsterdam, where 150 girls are undergoing a three-year, three-month course in social welfare, care of youth and teaching of leaders.

Washing her clothes in a small wash basin in the Shanghai YWCA hostel is Chu Hsin-tze, a worker in a municipal health center.

Hard Time for Women Around the World

WHAT is happening these days to working women abroad? How are they faring in these first postwar years?

The Young Women's Christian Assn. made an initial survey in preparation for the current Round-the-World YWCA Reconstruction Fund Campaign for $2,100,000, and found that, without help from America, the outlook for industrial workers overseas is gloomy.

Conditions vary in different countries, of course. But the YWCA found that certain basic hardships are common to all employed girls, from the borders of Czechoslovakia to the shell-racked cities of China. Housing is at a premium. Food is scarce and not nutritious enough to offset the malnutrition of the war years. Clothing from America has helped to ward off the most dire suffering, but prices prohibit the purchase of new clothing.

CONSIDER Hana, a girl in Czechoslovakia. She and tens of thousands of other girls in their 'teens were deported to Germany to work in the munitions factories during the war years. She lived in a barracks near a munitions plant in Nurenburg, where the moral standards were low. She existed in constant terror of Allied bombings and fear of reprisal for any unintentional mistake, which might be construed as sabotage.

One night during a particularly severe air raid she snatched up a blanket from her cot and fled from the barracks to safety. For having "stolen" the blanket she was imprisoned for two years.

Today Hana is back in Prague, working in a factory. She was deprived of a high school education. She hasn't the training to make a decent wage. She is exhausted physically by the undernourishment of war and prison life, and bewildered morally by the things she has seen.

Multiply her case by thousands and you see why Hana needs help, education, companionship before she can dream hopefully of the future.

In Czechoslovakia, however, where since 1918 women have received equal pay for equal work, and where every woman is required to work, either at study or volunteer service or paid employment to rebuild the Republic, there is at least incentive for improvement on a job.

DIFFERENT, on the other hand, is the situation in Holland where, reports say, there is a "labor scare" on the part of young people who are afraid to work. Both here and in Belgium, 'teen-age girls were either deported or forced to work in enemy-controlled plants at home. Girls were taught as a matter of patriotic duty to loaf and dawdle on the job, in unobstrusive sabotage. To take two hours to do a job requiring 15 minutes was a service to their countries.

The postwar results, however, are paying unhappy dividends now, when, uneducated, untrained for skilled work, girls who must work for a living are unable to see the need for competent craftsmanship.

In France, authorities report, "both in the cities and in the country . . . the ubiquitous black market, the lure of easy money and the war-bred recklessness and irresponsibility among youth are formidable opponents of those who wish to preserve and uplift the young women of France . . ."

AS it can, under present circumstances, the YWCA is meeting the needs of working girls in Europe, but lack of equipment, devastation and the dispersal, imprisonment and execution of its trained personnel is limiting its work.

In Czechoslovakia, makeshift centers have been established in Prague, Brno, and Karlovy Vary (the former Carlsbad), to provide a meeting place for the migrant industrial workers, 90 per cent of whom work far from their homes.

In Holland, 150 young women are studying sociology at the YWCA in Amsterdam. At a girls' hostel in Paris, a few women can live for $4 a month rent. Girls in Italy make use of the six reestablished hostels to sew ingeniously and unravel old sweaters which they reknit into new garments.

But more hostels, more leaders, more classes in languages, current events, and workers' problems are desperately needed everywhere.

PROBABLY nowhere in the world do working girls so need assistance as in China where, added to the civil conflict, the war and migration that they have endured, there is the new poverty engendered by the mounting inflation and the still hopeless blight of an almost national illiteracy.

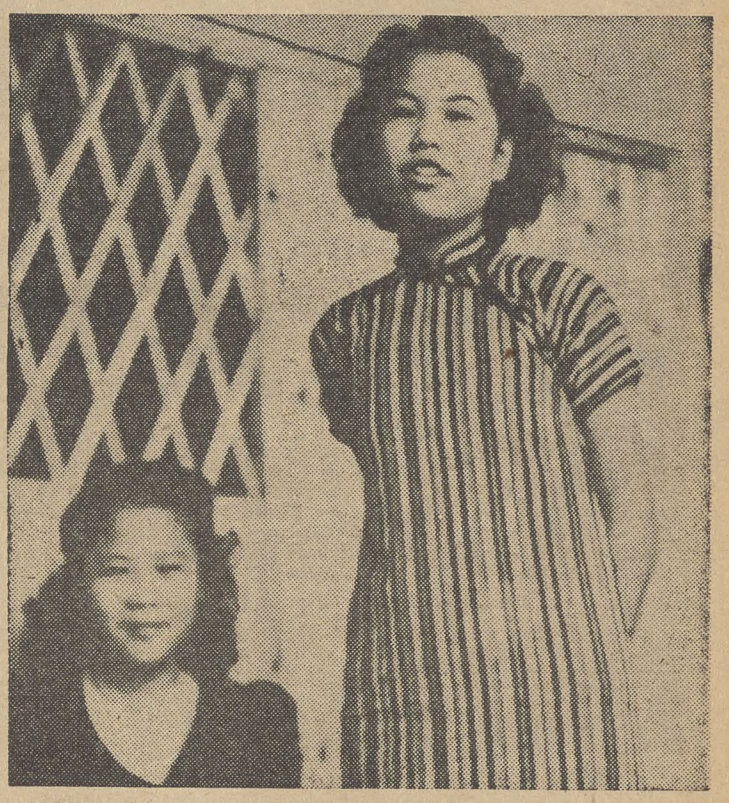
The housing shortage is one of the major postwar problem in every city of China. It is an especially acute problem to the unmarried working girls of China's cities—the girl who has been separated from her family and who must now earn her own living, rather than depend on the security of the old-fashioned Chinese household.

In Hong Kong, where industrial revival has been slow, unemployed —and unskilled—'teen-age factory workers are making their living by peddling cigarettes, shoestrings, needles, or any other articles they can obtain.

Girls in Shanghai work ten hours a day in the knit-goods, cotton and tobacco factories. They live six or eight in a room, and exist on whatever food they can buy on their scanty wages.

THE YWCA's entire emphasis in the Reconstruction Fund is on training of native leaders so that after the three-year postwar emergency period is over, they will be self-directing in their community service.

The fund will give time for rest to the exhausted prewar leaders, many of whom were in concentration camps, and supply temporary substitutes for the badly needed hostels for working girls around the globe.



Liang Hsiao-he, unemployed electrical worker now earning her living by peddling cigarettes, makes a welcome speech to a visitor at the Hongkong YWCA factory workers' club.

The plight of the working girl in Czechoslovakia is not a happy one these days. Here Hana Hovorkova, 22, has a lonely meal in her rooming-house in Prague.

ANOTHER BALL BILL!

SEN. JOSEPH BALL (R. Minn.), apparently seeking a new altitude record for high fliers, dropped another bill into the Senate hopper this week.

With the introduction of S. 360, a bill to tear the heart out of the Wagner Act, Ball raised to four the proposals he has sponsored to rob labor of its basic rights.

The Minnesota Senator, whose anti-labor views were disavowed even by his state GOP organization during the last campaign, has also sponsored measures to break up national unions, outlaw union security, and hamper collective bargaining.

WHILE Ball was busy spearheading the drive against unions on Capitol Hill, the Senate Committee on Labor & Public Welfare, of which he is a member, plowed through another dreary week of testimony by corporation spokesmen.

Unanimously, they allowed that industry-wide bargaining by unions with great national corporations is bad, that union security is bad, that the Wagner Act is bad, that every strike is bad, that unions are usually bad —and that the bills introduced by conservative Senators and up for consideration are just what the company doctor ordered.

Heading the list of pleaders was Homer Hartz, chairman of the U. S. Chamber of Commerce's Labor Relations Committee, who offered a 16-point program. The Chamber, he said, would like to think about compulsory arbitration of disputes in some cases, and it favors "wholesale" revision of the Wagner Act and a variety of other measures designed to make unions an unequal partner at the collective bargaining table.

CHARLES E. WILSON, head of General Motors — which refused government offers for a basis of settlement of the long auto workers' strike last year— had a good word for all the proposals during a two-hour period on the committee witness stand.

Questioned critically only by Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.), Wilson solemnly asserted that he would sacrifice his income of several hundred thousand dollars a year and go into farming before he would sign a closed shop agreement with the union.

Meanwhile the House Labor Committee opened its study of anti-union proposals with testimony by Rep. Gerald Landis (R. Ind.), who has sponsored a bill to slash the Wagner Act.

"We gave the Wagner Act to the people and we certainly can take it away from any group," Landis told the committee.

Union witnesses to counter the proposals will start appearing before the Senate labor group Feb. 18, with Pres. Philip Murray taking the stand sometime during that week.

To End Filibusters

CIO last week urged the Senate to adopt rules which will avoid filibusters in the future.

Hoyt Haddock, CIO maritime committee spokesman, urged a three-point standard for the rules changes.

He suggested that a majority vote of Senators present be sufficient to place limits on debate, that any Senator have the right to introduce legislation at any time, and that a majority quorum be permitted to determine the relevancy of any particular debate.

DRY THOSE PORTAL TEARS

THE CIO continued this week to call the bluff of employer spokesmen who have wailed bitter tears for weeks to convince the public that portal-portal wage claim suits are a cruel and surprising trick pulled on industry by those nasty old unions.

"Big business bet on sevens and now it's howling because snake-eyes came up," David McDonald, secretary-treasurer of the United Steelworkers, explained to a House Judiciary sub-committee. Committee members, not known for their outstanding pro-union sentiments, grinned understandingly.

Irving Richter, legislative representative for the Auto Workers, put it this way:

"The employers' claim of surprise in the face of these facts is as phony as the cry of an adventurous young lady who suddenly remembers her virtue when a lawyer shows her the possibilities in a breach of promise suit."

And from CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, the House committee received a well-documented report on decision after decision, interpretation after interpretation made since 1939—all pointing clearly to the fact that sizeable amounts of time spent in traveling to the job under the employer's control or in preparing for the actual job, should be paid for.

And Elizabeth Sasuly, spokesman for the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, warned that bills weakening the Wage-Hour Act would wreak particular havoc on some 13,000 newly-organized tobacco workers—90% of them Negroes—who were working for the legal minimum of 40c an hour before their first union contracts.

THE CIO appearances before the House group followed those of a long series of industry statesmen who have argued in favor of the Knutson Bill (HJR 91), which would outlaw portal suits, and the Gwynne Bill (HR 584), which would go a step further by imposing a variety of serious amendments to the Wage-Hour law. The Senate Judiciary Committee meanwhile is digesting several thousand words of testimony on two similar measures, the Capehart and Wiley Bills (S. 49 and S. 70), which would also serve to tear down the Wage-Hour law structure under the pretense of illegalizing portal suits.

Senate consideration of the bills is scheduled for Feb. 17, according to Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.), boss of the GOP in the upper house.

Sec. McDonald of the steel union offered some clarifying testimony on the position of the union in the widely-publicized portal claims situation.

"We as a union have no direct financial stake of any sort in any lawsuit. Neither my union or any of its officers or staff have a single thing personally to gain or lose by the winning or losing of a single lawsuit now pending in court."

But, he pointed out, the USA-CIO feels strongly that "American workers are entitled to receive from their organizations and representatives full information as to their legal rights," and guidance in exercising those rights.

"The question as to whether each individual member did or did not choose to undertake any legal action was left to each individual member," McDonald noted.

For the benefit of the committee members, McDonald explained that travel time inside a steel plant is no "pleasant and leizurely stroll" but entrance into a world "of overhead cranes and cables, railroad and dinky crossings . . . a world of hazards" in which the worker is subject to company rules and is for all practical purposes at work.

World Labor

CIO'S REPRESENTATIVE on a world labor mission to Japan and the Far East will be Willard Townsend of Chicago, head of the United Transport Service Employes.

The group, similar to one which studied union conditions in Germany a year ago, will include Louis Saillant, secretary of the World Federation of Trade Unions; Patrick Waldberg of the WFTU Paris staff; and representatives of the Soviet, Australasian and Chinese labor organizations.

SHORT WAVE RADIO fans can now tune in on a program sponsored by the Czechoslovakian trade unions (URO) each Tuesday night at 7 p.m., EST. Broadcast by Prague radio, the program may be heard in English, Czech and Slovak languages at 19.70 meters, 11,320 kilocycles on the dial.

In a letter to CIO, Secretary Evzen Erban of the Central Council of Trade Unions in Czechoslovakia said the programs will describe the experiences of the unions in rebuilding the republic since the war.

FRENCH UNIONS have had experience with an over-all price cut program, which some U. S. businessmen have recommended as an alternative to wage increases.

While many firms obeyed the 5% reduction, the great majority lifted prices an additional 10% before the government decree went into effect, according to an Allied Labor News report. As a result, the consumer got no benefit.

The Confederation of Labor (CGT) is pushing for a minimum wage of 7,000 francs a month (about $60) despite promises of the government to enforce former Premier Leon Blum's program to cut all prices by 5%.

Prices have jumped about 900% in France since 1938, the report said, while wages have risen only 300% in the same period.

BRITAIN'S COAL CRISIS is the end-product of 20 years' administration by the Tory party, Allied Labor News reports from London. During two decades, the conservatives did little to keep the industry from running downhill and to make its jobs attractive to workers.

Immediate cause of the shortage was an unprecedentedly cold winter, which ate heavily into reserve supplies. Despite Tory propaganda, the record in the mines has improved steadily since they were nationalized by the government on Jan. 1. Production is almost back to 1939 levels.

CANADA IS REAPING the same effects of price decontrol as we suffered in the United States last summer.

Government action in mid-January removing ceilings from a wide variety of articles "was a serious blow to the wage-earner," says Pat Conroy, secretary of the Canadian Congress of Labor. "Sharp increases have been approved in foods, which enter into the budget of practically every Canadian family." Sounds familiar!

LABOR GOVERNMENT of Great Britain has no intention of banning the right to strike against the state-owned industries, which may soon amount to 20% of the United Kingdom's economy, according to Patrick Gordon Walker, parliamentary secretary to Cabinet Minister Herbert Morrison.

"We will not dream of putting any sort of legal prohibition on striking," Walker said. "We regard the right of a man to decide whether or not he shall work for another man as a fundamental right equal in importance to the right of free speech."

Wages in the state-owned firms will be set by collective bargaining, as in private industry, the British government spokesman told a Washington audience.

URGE BLANKET COVERAGE FOR SOCIAL SECURITY

IMPROVEMENTS in the Social Security Act long recommended by the CIO, including extension of old age and survivors insurance to all gainful workers, increase in benefit amounts, national health insurance and other benefits are among the suggestions included in the 11th annual report submitted to Congress last week by the Social Security Board.

A maximum weekly benefit of $25 up to 26 weeks duration and a reduction in the severity of certain requirements and penalty clauses are called for under the unemployment insurance provisions.

Under old-age and survivors insurance, the report, in addition to extension of coverage of the system to all gainful workers, recommends reduction of the qualifying age for women beneficiaries from 65 to 60 years and addition of benefits during periods of permanent disability.

Other recommendations include:

Special Federal aid to low-income states and distribution of federal and state funds to localities in accordance with their needs; abolition of state residence and citizenship requirements as a condition of eligibility; and cash benefits to insured workers during temporary total disability, in addition to permanent total disability.

The problem of paying for adequate medical care was held equally as serious and important as the wage loss from disability. The nation's bill for health services of all kinds, the Board stated, amounts to about 4 or 5% of the national income.

Although the SSB's recommendation do not go as far as the CIO Social Security program calls for, they are a decided advance over the present act.

CIO Top Officers Meet Feb. 18

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week called a meeting of CIO executive officers for Feb. 18 at CIO headquarters in Washington, D. C. No announcement was made of problems to be discussed.

FARMER-LABOR UNITY MAKES GOOD SENSE, SAYS GOLDEN

INTERESTS of farmers and industrials workers are more closely aligned than most people appreciate. This was the theme of a talk by Clinton S. Golden of the CIO Steelworkers to the Natl. Farm Institute, meeting last week in Des Moines, Iowa.

Golden, former vice-president of the union, pointed out that farmers and industrial workers and their families total 85% of the population.

"These men and women and their families form most of the 'public'," Golden said. "These are the people who make up the bulk of the consuming class. The dollars they earn and spend make America's economic machine tick."

America's big problem is to find ways for industry, agriculture and labor to cooperate effectively in maintaining high levels of production.

There cannot, for instance, "be a prosperous agriculture when the workers of America are unemployed and underpaid," Golden declared.

"The day has gone for men in overalls to quarrel with each other over the size of the piece of national pie each gets. Bigger factory production can find a growing market on the farm—if the farmers' net income remains high. Bigger farm production assures wage earners of plenty of food to eat and fiber to wear out—if they have jobs at good wages."

Labor's interest in achieving better relations with agriculture and industry, is therefore fundamentally an interest of all patriotic Americans, Golden said.

Labor believes that "workers have a right to jobs; farmers have a right to security and that industry has a right to profit," he declared.

Brotherhood Week Backed by CIO

American Brotherhood Week, sponsored by the Natl. Conference of Christians and Jews to fight the "social disease of prejudice," is being observed this week throughout the country. CIO unions have been urged by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to support the movement.

Leaders of Protestant, Catholic and Jewish faiths have joined with civic, labor, educational, business and citizens groups in promoting observance of the week of Washington's birthday, Feb. 16-23, to rally the nation's citizens against the divisive forces of prejudice, ignorance and selfishness.

Organizing Paradise

The CIO Woodworkers report that a majority of the workers at the Cottrell and Helena Logging Co. in Paradise, Mont., have been signed up and that the company has agreed to meet with the union to negotiate a contract.

MINNEAPOLIS FEPC LAW

MINNEAPOLIS last week became the third city in the nation to pass a fair employment practices ordinance. The CIO aided other progressive groups in forcing the action.

The law forbids discrimination in employment and in membership in trade unions based on "race, color, creed, national origin and ancestry." Violators can be punished by 90 days in jail or $100 fines.

Other cities passing such laws have been Chicago and Milwaukee.

MEANWHILE, in Michigan, Gov. Kim Sigler was urged by the CIO Auto Workers Union to work for passage of a fair employment bill by the legislature rather than permit it "to evade its responsibilities" by submitting the matter to referendum.

A letter from William H. Oliver, co-director of the UAW Fair Practices Dept., said that discrimination is rife in the state.

"Plants which during war years employed Negroes, today have 'white only need apply' signs in large bold letters," Oliver said.

"Our office almost daily receives complaints from white and Negro members of our organization that certain plants practice discrimination at the hiring gate."

Education Parley

The CIO Dept. of Education & Research is sponsoring a national education conference to be held at the Neal House, Columbus, Ohio, March 13-16.

Attendance will be limited to 500 delegates. Each State Council will be entitled to two delegates and each City Council one delegate.

International Unions are being represented on the basis of the number of full-time educational workers and the size of the union.

All those interested in attending the conference are urged to write to the Dept. of Education & Research, CIO, 718 Jackson Place, N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

The conference will open March 13 at 8 PM with a discussion of the Nathan Report. It will close March 16 with an address by President Murray.

1 One of the biggest blessings of rent control has been its check-rein on landlords' power to evict tenants. Even with rent control there were one million "legitimate" evictions in 1946. Without rent control, landlords who have not signed leases could double rents, evict tenants who couldn't pay, and rent to the highest bidder.

2 This is an eviction. Movers pass belongings of the Theodore Zandarskis of Cleveland out the window to a van, to be hauled away for storage. The silent witnesses are Eleanor, 3, and Raymond Zandarski, 5. The family could not find adequate shelter, had to separate its members to put a roof over all their heads.

THE PEOPLE'S STAKE IN RENT CONTROL

Every family that rents a home or an apartment has a major stake in bills to end rent control or to increase rentals from 10 to 15%. These bills are being considered by Congress.

If Congress abolishes or weakens rent control—either this year or next—tenants are going to be badly squeezed by some greedy landlords who will capitalize on the housing shortage by sharply raising rents. Tenants who want to make sure that this doesn't happen should write their Senators and Representatives at once urging that rent control be continued without change. Ask them to support the Wagner-Murray rent control bill (S. 528).

Tenants in N. Y. City have already set up the Emergency Committee on Rent & Housing, with a program that calls for firm rent control, for construction of low-cost housing, and for a halt on evictions until the housing emergency is ended. Similar groups are forming in other sections of the country.

3 Space costs plenty now. Without rent control it will cost much more. Millions of Americans, like this war veteran and his family, will be forced to live like sardines. They have one sleeping room, for husband, wife and three small children. Abolishing rent control will not solve their problems. Building more low-cost housing will. That's what the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill would have done if the last session of Congress had passed it.

4 The end of rent control would mean less food for workers' children. A family faced with a rent increase—and no other place to move to—cannot use less living space to save money. Cuts in the family budget would have to come from funds for food, for clothing, for medical and dental care.

A CASE OF MISTAKEN IDENTITY

A DRUNK hung swaying to a lamp-post. He hailed a very sober minister passing by. "Help me hold this lamp-post up," he hiccoughed. "It's falling down. The sidewalk won't shtay shtill either—must be an earthquake."

The Minister started to reprove him. But the drunk drew himself up indignantly and sputtered: "Your're drunk! Everyone's drunk!—that's wassamatter."

THIS incident may throw some light on the puzzling propaganda dished out in such quantities nowadays by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the big-business press.

Labor unions are being accused of monopolistic practices, restricting production, raising prices, being dictatorial and having too much power and privilege.

Working people who have witnessed the uphill fight waged by their unions against the great monopolies, to win a little better conditions and more democracy, may well look around wondering against whom those charges are directed.

APPARENTLY big business is so drunk with its own power and self-importance that it can see in others only the reflection of its own condition.

So we have the queer spectacle of corporate monopolies, with an economic stranglehold over the livelihood of millions of Americans, accusing their employes of being "monopolistic" when they try to combine their bargaining power in self-protection and to get a better deal.

We see these monopolies, which have held up production to beat down their workers and to extort maximum profits, and which have recently succeeded in robbing the American people of billions of dollars through exorbitantly increased prices, accusing the unions of restricting production and raising prices!

We see a tiny group of multi-millionaires, who run their corporations like absolute dictatorships and ride rough-shod over smaller stockholders as well as over labor and the public, charging that the unions are dictatorial.

We see big business, enjoying record profits, cracking the whip over a subservient Congress and using the country's press as its Charlie McCarthy, turn on the great masses of underpaid and under-privileged American working people and charge their organizations with being too powerful and over-privileged!

ACTUALLY big business has its tongue in in its cheek when it puts out such propaganda. It is using Hitler's "big lie" technique—when you lie, make it a whopper and spread it on as thick as possible—to put over union-crippling and wage-cutting legislation.

Most of the American people want to see decent wages paid, the cost of living kept down, fairer taxes, restrictions on corporate monopoly, more social security and other steps to get to the roots of social and industrial ills and to build a healthy and expanding economy.

But big business and its press and political spokesmen are apparently blind to everything else but what they conceive to be their own immediate self-interest—bigger and bigger profits through anti-union laws to weaken the resistance of their workers and the common people generally.

BY LEN DE CAUX

THE FAKER who peddles quack medicines is a stock character in western movies.

He fills a lot of bottles with creek-water and then moves from town to town, selling them for a stiff price to the unsuspecting natives as a cure for all that ails them.

His sales-talk includes long-winded gibberish and dog-latin, which is meant to sound like learned medical language and to impress the suckers.

The politicians who are trying to sell the public on anti-labor legislation have evidently seen these movies, too, and gotten some ideas from them.

They are peddling bottled poison as a cure-all, with a line of complicated double-talk that most folks won't even try to understand, and that would make little sense if they did.

A RECENT Gallup poll reveals that only one person in eight, among thousands interviewed, knew the meaning of the term "jurisdictional strike."

Seventy-one percent just said they didn't know, 17 percent gave the wrong answer, and only 12 percent could say what it meant.

If the public were similarly polled on the meaning of "secondary boycotts," "industry-wide bargaining," "the closed shop," "making unions suable," "cooling-off," "coercive picketing," "monopolistic labor practices" and the rest of the jargon so plentifully used in Congress and the press nowadays, the results would probably be very similar.

THE FACT is that big business and its press and politicians don't want the public to know the real contents of the quack medicine they're peddling.

If they did, they could explain it in much simpler terms—which would be a give-away, however.

They are taking advantage of public confusion as to what the shouting is all about, to give the false impression that they have a cure for all social ills and abuses.

And they lie outright when they say their "medicine" won't hurt the workers' rights to organize, to bargain collectively or to strike—rights which all freedom-loving Americans want to see preserved.

ACTUALLY every one of the anti-union measures now being pushed in Congress would infringe on American liberties and weaken the chances of working people to improve their conditions.

The "anti-closed shop" label covers proposals to destroy all forms of union security and to encourage every kind of union-busting.

The "ban industry-wide bargaining" label conceals a plot to break up strong unions into small, separate and powerless bargaining units, and to under-cut present wage standards by varying rates from plant to plant and locality to locality.

The "cooling-off" and other similar labels cover schemes to reduce American workers to involuntary servitude by restricting their right to quit work jointly, when they find their conditions intolerable.

The sales-talk about the "one-sidedness" of the Wagner Act is a cover-up for destruction of the rights which workers enjoy under this Act, and for attempts to make it an instrument of employer oppression, strike-breaking and union-busting.

IF YOU disregard the long-winded double-talk of the political quacks, and analyze the real content of the measures they're peddling, you will find in every case some poison for the rights and living standards of ordinary Americans.

They didn't get their "medicine" from any such harmless source as a creek. It was handed them ready-bottled by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and other big-business outfits, whose sole interest is to cripple the unions and increase industry's inflated profits through wage-cutting and unrestricted exploitation.

These monopolists are also trying to distract attention from their own picking of the people's pockets, and from progressive measures that would really get to the roots of our social and economic ills—and deliver us from quacks.

Like other fakers and swindlers, they think they can make suckers of the American people. Let's hope they have another guess coming.

'FREE PRESS' FOR THE RICH

IN England, the lordly masters still follow their ancient hunting custom. They mount their purebred steeds, unleash a pack of baying hounds and off they go—after a few thin foxes.

In this country, the moneyed masters have a hunting custom of their own. They sit astride the nation's wealth, let loose their mechanized hounds of the press and radio, and set out after the American working people and their unions.

The hunt is on now. The press is yowling for labor's blood, obeying its master's voice.

There was a time when the American press took orders from no one. After the Revolutionary War, in which freedom of speech and press were fighting slogans, the press was on the side of the people. The small newspapers said what the people felt, without fear of moneyed interests or power politicians.

Those days of the editor who wrote with a six-shooter on his desk beside the ink-well are gone. The growth of American industrial power buried the free press beneath fields of green dollars.

Today, the dollar controls the press, and the radio. And a handful of industrial giants, holding the reins on the nation's banks and king-sized industrial combines, control the billions of dollars.

TAKEN by itself, the newspaper publishing industry is big business. The pennies, nickels and dimes collected at newsstands, and the millions in advertising, bring in close to a billion dollars a year to American publishers.

The yearly take in the magazine publishing industry is less, while the radio business, including stations, networks and manufacturing facilities, which are practically in the hands of a few corporations, brings in over a billion a year.

Naturally, the big boys of industry and banking who are interested in turning an honest or dishonest buck whenever they can, stuck their fingers into the news and magazine pie and dug their hooks into the radio waves.

Money, for once, wasn't their primary interest. They also wanted control over the news dished out to the 98 million daily newspaper readers, the 100 million magazine scanners, and the owners of 60 million radio sets.

IS IT any wonder that the three largest disseminators of news and opinion should support the position of the $8,000 a week executive, rather than the $45 a week worker? Is it any wonder that they loudly proclaim the views of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and just as loudly denounce the views of the CIO and its millions of members?

In the great steel, auto and electrical strikes of early 1946, the big business press ganged up on the workers. It came to the rescue of its monied backers who, at the same time, poured millions of dollars into a full blast advertising campaign.

During the steel strike, ads by the Timken Roller Bearing Co., appeared in hundreds of daily and weekly newspapers, proclaiming: "We feel that the USA-CIO wage program smacks far too loudly of Marxism and Communism, Fascism and National Socialism to go down with most Americans."

Today, the dollar controls the press. Only the wealthy can enjoy its vaunted "freedom." This is the first of two articles on the monied men behind the headlines, and the job they do against labor.

Editorially, the papers nodded their heads and said "me too." And their front pages reflected their editorial opinions. The Wheeling, W. Va. Intelligencer screamed across eight columns: "Nation in Grip of Worst Labor Crisis" when the steel strike began. In The Boston Herald a note of hysteria appeared in its big, black eight column streamer: "Industry Disaster Seen as 750,000 Quit."

In the General Motors strike, editorials took the words right out of the company's mouth. They maintained "it ain't so" to the union's charges that General Motors was an economic dictatorship. They said the union was seeking to kill free enterprise. They insisted the auto workers were led into the strike by UAW leaders.

The invectives hurled against the auto and steel workers were strangely reminiscent of a N. Y. Times editorial printed during the big railroad strike of 1877. The Times called the workers "hoodlums, thieves, looters, Communists, agitators, law breakers, bummers, idiots and terrible fellows."

That's what was said in 1877 and every year since then. That's what will be said with droning regularity.

THE BIG papers can't help but say it. Their interests are the same as the interests of their backers. They must protect those interests and also defend the "rights" of big corporations to become monopolies because facts and figures prove that the press itself is rapidly becoming a monopoly.

To start with, there are 1,394 daily newspapers in the country. Exactly 1,277 of these papers have no competition in their cities. That leaves only 117 cities in which there is daily newspaper competition.

Competition has been wiped out in all but 117 cities by the outright buying out of rival newspapers, or mergers. In 174 of those cities there are two daily papers, but both papers are owned by the same publisher. This elimination of competition has established virtual monopolies for newspaper publishers in cities below the 100,000 population mark.

When the local news monopolies were being weakened by the growing popularity of radio newscasts, the newspaper publishers stepped into the radio field. Now 285 of about 900 stations are owned by the publishers, most of them in cities in which the newspapers already had a monopoly.

PUBLISHERS didn't stop at their local news monopolies. They broadened out on a state and regional basis.

The Lee Syndicate, directed by F. P. Adler, operates 10 dailies in Iowa, Nebraska, Wisconsin, Missouri, and Illinois. The Warren S. Booth Newspapers direct dailies in eight Michigan cities. Two daughters now operate the late H. C. Ogden's chain of 14 West Virginia and one North Carolina papers.

In Ohio, Brush-Moore newspapers control seven dailies and two radio stations. Seven Texas papers are issued by Fentress-Marsh Newspapers. Four Illinois dailies are owned by H. C. Schaub's Decatur Newspaper chain. Guy P. Gannett operates five Maine papers. And so it goes, state by state, region by region.

There are 54 such chains of two or more papers. They hold absolute control over 370 papers

Part of the fleet of more than 100 purse seiners, on which CIO fishermen of San Pedro, Calif., make their li ving, is shown tied up at the docks near the union headquarters. The average annual catch of each of these purse seiners is 3,500 tons of fish.

WORLD'S GREATEST FOOD PRODUCERS—CIO

By DOROTHY CONNELLY

THE world's greatest producers of food stuffs are CIO men, members of the Intl. Fishermen & Allied Workers of America, who fish the waters off the west coast of the United States.

Southern California is the greatest fishing area in the world with 1,173 million pounds being taken from these waters every year. And San Pedro, where IFAWA locals 33 and 36 are located, is the greatest fishing port in the world from the tonnage standpoint.

Fish is more than food. Its products are essential in medicine . . . required in high-speed machinery . . . important to the farmer as feed for stock . . . and indispensable to the health of children.

In a single year the average West Coast sardine or tuna fisherman catches as much as 636,000 pounds of fish! This is the way he figures:

- The average catch for a purse seiner is 3,500 tons of fish, or seven million pounds each year.
- There are 11 members of the crew.
- Seven million divided by 11 gives you over six hundred thousand pounds of fish caught by each fisherman.

These fishermen produce more food per man than farmers! The average production of a farmer is 35,000 pounds of food. Even the big grain farmer does not contribute as much as the CIO fisherman.

THE sardine is the chief cause of the large California catch. This little fish, seldom over ten inches in length, runs in schools of tremendous size.

The tuna is next in importance to San Pedro fishermen, and for this they go many miles away, into the Gulf of California, as well as catching them near at home.

Probably the most significant feature of the sardine to the CIO fisherman is the fact that he is paid $40 a ton, or 2 cents a pound for the fish, while the 15-ounce can of sardines sells for from 20 to 25 cents a can. The enormous difference between what the worker gets for the fish, and what the consumer has to pay for the same fish in a can, has been growing larger with every month of the inflation.

Everyone takes his turn. Ship's cook R. E. Brown steers the boat while his mates eat. In sardine fishing, five lookouts for schools of fish are posted—on the bridge, in the crow's nest on the mast, and in the rigging.

FISHING may sound like a glamorous profession, but, according to the insurance people, it is the most hazardous of occupations. Each year, boats, with their entire crews, completely disappear, and no word is ever heard of them again. In addition many boats sink in storms, while their crews are saved. Men are washed overboard at sea and lost, for if there is a bad storm, the boats cannot turn back to save them.

Rheumatism, lumbago, arthritis attack the fishermen, because of their prolonged exposure to cold and wet. Broken legs are an occupational hazard, and not a minor one, because of flying ropes and tangled nets.

From the human angle, the hardest part of fishing is the separation from families that takes place several months each year, when the purse seiners go to Mexican waters for tuna.

The roster of the fishermen's locals at San Pedro includes men of all nationalities, but about 80% of them come from Yugoslavia. A good ex-

'The Case of The Fishermen'

"The Case of the Fishermen," an exciting new 16mm sound film, will be ready by the end of February. The picture is being made by Union Films in collaboration with H. Arthur Klein.

The movie has been made for the CIO Fishermen's Union, which was indicted by the Dept. of Justice as a "monopoly" under the anti-trust act. The story of this case offers a stimulating opportunity to convey graphically the features of a real monopoly and to oppose this with the portrayal of the fishermen's method of operating and of their life on the sea.

The film will combine live action shots on board an actual union-manned vessel with new animation techniques developed during the war.

ample of the cosmopolitan character of the crews is that of the Yankee Clipper, a purse seiner. The captain, Yank Kasaroff, is a Russian, as is John Shubin, one of the crew. Larry Kozida is of Polish descent, while Anton Hegland is from Norway. Ray Matsushida, one of the youngest men in the crew, was born in Los Angeles of Japanese descent. The cook, better known among the crew as the "belly robber," hails from Georgia, by way of fishing trips in Boston, Florida and Galveston. Equally cosmopolitan in ancestry, according to the crew, is the mascot, a small black dog called "Meat Ball." The rest of the crew is of Yugoslav descent.

FISHING is a cooperative venture. Sometimes the captain owns the boat. Sometimes several members of the crew own it jointly. Very often, one of the local canneries owns a big share. A purse seiner will cost anywhere from $60,000 to $300,000, while the nets cost $15,000 to $22,000 each. Only one net can be carried on board ship at a time, but replacements or extensive repair work raise the cost.

The gross receipts for the season are divided between the crew and the "boat and net," with the latter getting 28.42%. The remaining 71.58% is divided equally between all members of the crew, the captain, engineer and cook included. This method of payment is traditional among fishermen, and has always been in force in this port.

There are two locals of the CIO Fishermen in San Pedro: No. 33, consisting of the crews of the purse seiners; No. 36, the crews of the smaller boats. The latter are usually "scoop" boats, which fish for mackerel and albacore for the canneries and fresh fish and lobster for the fish markets.

Eleven hundred members make up Local 33. The local meets once a month, at the full moon when fishing is poor, and is noted for its democracy. Balloting is going on now for new officers, with two weeks being given to perform this union duty. In case any member does not vote, he will be fined $5.

ONE of the most vicious attempts to break a CIO union through court action is now being pushed against the Fishermen's union. A suit has been brought against Jeff Kibre, international secretary-treasurer; Gil Zafran, secretary-treasurer of Local 36, and 15 other members of that local, charging them with violation of the Sherman Anti-Trust Act, and alleging that they conspired to fix prices. This is an attempt to frighten the fishermen out of the union, and so break any attempt to hold earnings at a decent level, according to the officials. The case will come to trial in Los Angeles Feb. 18.

Half the time of fishermen is spent ashore, repairing boats and gear. Antone Pereca (left) and Kuzma Anich are putting a new net through boiling tar to preserve it against the rotting effect of salt water. Tuna nets like these cost $20,000 each.

Typical crewmen from the purse seiner Yankee Clipper is Howard Forgy, with a sample of a blue fin tuna. The crew on a recent trip netted 100 tons of these monsters—weighing up to 400 pounds each—but not for long. Half of them escaped.

These small boat fishermen want agreements on all varieties of fish, and claim that this system is comparable to the establishment of a piece rate in a factory.

Otherwise, the fishermen are always at the mercy of the fish market buyers, because, although fishing boats are iced, there is not enough refrigeration to keep the fish until the following day. And it is impossible—as well as bad economy—to throw the fish back into the water if the markets are trying to beat the prices down, because the Fish and Game law provides that no fish can be destroyed.

TO the charge that they are a "monopoly" under the Anti-Trust Act, the CIO Fishermen say:

- Monopolies control the supply of their product. Fish is a natural resource, over which man has little control or even knowledge.

- Monopolies try to limit the number of producers. California fishermen have nearly doubled in number during 10 years of unionization, with higher pay scales keeping workers in the industry.

- Monopolists limit production to get higher prices. The union has stimulated production, has encouraged increased consumption of this high protein food.

- Monopolists set prices. The fishermen do not. They get about a third of the price—the rest goes to dealers, industry, wholesalers, brokers, etc. And fish prices vary with the prices of other protein foods, principally beef.

And no monopoly, the union points out, would have vigorously campaigned for minimum wage legislation . . . for regulations to achieve greater production while practicing scientific conservation . . . for extension of social security and unemployment insurance to thousands of small fishermen.

Fishing is a tough job. Its worst aspect is its insecurity. Instead of wages, the workers—including the owner of the boat—get shares of the catch.

If these workers are denied the right to act together to get a fair price for their fish, they will be completely at the mercy of the fish dealers ashore.

The fish won't wait while the fishermen and the dealers haggle over prices. It's only by collective bargaining in advance that the individual fisherman can achieve some measure of security, by having minimum prices set before he goes fishing.

The union contends that this is NOT monopoly at work. It is the extension of collective bargaining to the situation that is peculiar to the industry. It is the basic relationship which caused the formation and growth of the union as the best instrument of the workers to secure a fair return for their labor.

CIO Educates Workers, Bosses

THE CIO has been conducting an organizing campaign during the past 6 months in sections of Louisiana in which labor unions were virtually unknown.

Combining education with organization, field representatives established 23 new CIO unions, Fred C. Pieper, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reported this week.

After serving with the Marine Corps in the Pacific, Pieper returned to his New Orleans home and found organized labor fighting for its life during a session of a hostile legislature.

This fight delayed start of the organizing campaign in Louisiana. A quick check then showed all of the larger industries of New Orleans had been organized by the CIO. Employes of Celotex, Higgins, American Sugar, Godchaux Sugars, Johns-Manville, Lane Cotton Mills, New Orleans Furniture, Todd-Johnson, American Paint, Henderson Sugar, and other big firms already belonged to CIO unions.

Organizers, therefore, were sent out into the smaller towns. They contacted workers in saw mills, box factories, canning plants.

Their first job was primarily one of education. This meant explaining, step by step, the CIO and its program.

The educational program was not confined to the workers alone. Employers, it was found, knew little about unions.

A typical example is the story of the Sorrento Co. at Sorrento, population 300.

A group of Sorrento employes asked Pieper to assign an organizer to help them set up a union. A staff member went to the plant and signed up 145 persons. It was found later that the company employed 135 persons and that only 126 of these were eligible for union membership.

Friends and relatives had signed up, the organizer learned, "just to help get the union started."

Pieper learned the following day that every Sorrento employe had been discharged and had been told they'd "stay fired" until they gave up the idea of forming a union. Pieper called on the factory owner and explained the laws governing the organization of workers. The owner was adamant. Pieper then advised, "Get yourself a lawyer—a good one. You're in trouble with the Federal Government."

Evidently this advice was heeded. By the end of that week the owner telephoned Pieper, saying, "Please ask the men to come back to work; they will be paid for the four days they were off." This was the first paid vacation the employes had enjoyed in the history of the company.

Susequently an election was held and the vote was 125 to 1 in favor of CIO. A contract was signed, increasing wages 17½c an hour, providing paid vacations, holidays and all of the usual benefits found in CIO agreements.

Petitions for eight NLRB elections are on file and organizing work is being concentrated on six additional plants with a combined potential membership of more than 10,000.

Of the 23 plants organized during the last five months, ten have been for the Woodworkers, four for Transport Workers, 3 for Food and Tobacco Workers, and 1 each for the Steelworkers, Textile Workers; Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union, Chemical Workers, Clothing Workers and the Brewery Workers.

RUBBER WORKERS TAKE STRIKE VOTE

PREPARATIONS for strike votes in the Big Four rubber companies were under way this week following refusal of the companies to bargain on the 26c an hour wage demand of the CIO Rubber Workers.

The Big Four are U. S. Rubber, Firestone, Goodyear and Goodrich.

The strike votes were ordered by the union's International policy committee following a breakdown of wage negotiations at Cincinnati.

The union's 18-man bargaining committee will meet Feb. 28 with the general executive board and make last-minute attempts to settle the wage issue through collective bargaining.

The Rubber Workers this week completed a company-wide agreement with the second one of the Big Four, Goodyear. The contracts provides union security with check-off and is similar to a company-wide agreement signed last month with U. S. Rubber.

Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the Rubber Workers bitterly assailed the companies' attitude. "For three long months they have stalled and delayed on this wage issue," he said. "We have done everything humanly possible to settle this issue through process of collectively bargaining. Our attempts have not been met with similar responses from the companies.

"It is now up to our membership to strengthen the hands of their bargaining committee by making the strike votes in each local union as decisive as possible."

Buckmaster emphasized, however, that the union had not closed the door to bargaining on wages.

AMALGAMATED WARNS GOP OF '48 SURPRISE

THE CIO Clothing Workers' executive board this week warned that Congressional anti-union efforts will cause the organized labor movement to "demonstrate its resentment at the ballot box in 1947 and again in 1948."

The board, which last week held its quarterly meeting in Atlantic City, specifically warned the "reactionaries in the Republican party" that they will be unpleasantly surprised by the 1948 Presidential outcome.

The board said that pending anti-labor bills were a definite threat to plunge organized labor back into the 19th century when "efforts to unionize were met with punitive measures, including imprisonment.

A cable was sent to British Foreign Minister Bevin declaring that "the conscience of the world demands" that displaced European Jews "find some measure of peace and security.

"The British government, because of its mandate, has the responsibility of meeting their minimum needs without martial law, violence and bloodshed. We urge this forthright policy on the British government in the interest of world labor and civilization."

CIO Pres. Philip Murray was among those named to the advisory board for the proposed million dollar Sidney Hillman Foundation which will perpetuate the late ACWA president's work through scholarships and awards in education and industrial relations. Pres. Jacob Potofsky presided at the board meetings.

ACWA Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum denounced AFL efforts to discredit WFTU by charging that it is "communist controlled." Rosenblum, a WFTU vice-president, declared that in the case of any controversy the CIO and the British can outvote the Soviet trade unions." He pointed out that since its inception all decisions reached within the WFTU have been unanimous.

ACWA Executive Vice-Pres. Hyman Blumberg reported that $3,700,000 have been paid in health, life, accident, hospital and maternity benefits in the last 3 years out of its insurance funds, maintained by company contributions. He announced that beginning this year workers reaching the age of 70 will be entitled to a pension equal to the Social Security old-age payments, and that it is expected that the retirement age under the union's plan will be reduced to 65.

UE TALKS OPEN

The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers this week announced that contract negotiations with General Electric and Westinghouse for substantial pay increases will start Feb. 17.

WILL YOU WORK FOR NOTHING? NEITHER WILL FISHERMEN

HOW would you like to work for two or three weeks without pay?

You wouldn't. Neither did the CIO Fishermen and Allied Workers who have been in strike at Erie, Pa., since Oct. 4.

The Erie fishing companies have not been paying fishermen for two or three weeks every spring spent perparing nets.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO director of organization and vice-president, this week pointed to this outlandish practice as he called on all CIO unions in the Greak Lake area to support the strike and to assist regional directors in the area in conducting an organizational campaign among the fishermen.

The CIO Fishermen last spring and summer won consent elections at five Erie fishing companies. The union was forced to strike in October by the management's stubborn attitude, after state and federal conciliators were unable to bring agreements.

The union's demands are modest: $1.25 an hour for experienced fish dressers, a 8-day 40-hour week with time and a half for overtime. The fishermen are asking a greater percentage of the profits and were able to establish their right to $1 an hour for shore work. The companies are flatly refusing to pay for the "free work" in the spring.

When the strike started there was no effort to operate any fishing boats at Erie. Five boats, operated by relatives of owners or scabs, put out at the end of October and started to fish off Astabula, Ohio. The president of the AFL Longshoremen's local, whose members are employed at the Parker Fish Co., Astabula, where the catch was being handled with the aid of scabs, defied the CIO to set up a picket line.

Ralph W. Tillotson, CIO subregional director at Erie, declared there is collusion between the Lake Erie companies and the AFL Longshoremen to keep the CIO out.

He said that "we have received a report on very good authority that, during the week of Dec. 16, the south shore dealers in conference in Cleveland discussed the Erie strike and its implications and decided that if the Erie dealers signed up with the CIO, they would boycott the Erie firms."

Mine, Mill Asks 25c Hike

A 25c hourly wage increase will be asked by the CIO Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers when it goes into contract negotiations for more than 140,000 workers in the non-ferrous metals industry.

The demand was announced by Pres. Reid Robinson this week following the national wage policy committee sessions in Denver. The union will also seek a group health and insurance program, financed by employers' contributions amounting to 4% of their payrolls.

MMSW this week won its strike against Noranda Copper and Gold Mining Co., Noranda, Que. The settlement provided a 13c an hour increase, retroactive to last Nov. 1, with 10c an hour increase retroactive to last May 16. Office space will be provided for the collection of dues and the vacation clause was improved.

HONOR SIX FOR ANTI-BIAS

The award of plaques to six citizens making outstanding contributions in the field of race relations in and outside the CIO was announced this week by George L-P Weaver, director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination.

Meeting in Washington, D. C., this week, the committee designated the following to receive the awards:

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, Dr. Charles Johnson, president, Fisk University and member of the UNESCO delegation to France and Japan; Michael Mann, secretary-treasurer of the Chicago Industrial Union Council; Pres. Emil Rieve of the CIO Textile Workers Union of America; Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and Pres. Jacob S Potofsky of the CIO Clothin Workers.

The committee approved the re port of its chairman, CIO Sec Treas. James B. Carey, on th work of President Truman's Civi Rights Committee, of which h is a member.

The committee aproved of th action of the CIO Automobile Workers' executive board in re questing all its locals to with draw its teams from tournaments conducted by the American Bowling Congress, and recommended that the CIO executive board request other affiliates to take similar action. The American Bowling Congress bars all teams having any non-white players from participation in tournaments.

ANSWER TO TORY PRAYER

ANTI-UNION employers and labor-hating Congressmen this week found their perfect champion in J. David Stern, former liberal Philadelphia publisher.

The sympathetic reception given Stern by the House Labor Committee indicated that many of its members agreed with his plans for strangling unions.

The publisher—who sold the Philadelphia Record and the Camden Courier and Post to the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin while he made the pretense of negotiating with 580 striking members of the CIO Newspaper Guild—called for the same chains for labor that the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers wants.

He asked that unions be made liable for unfair labor practices, that Congress decide how unions should operate democratically and that the Wagner Act be amended to give "equal rights to employers."

But he didn't stop there. He added a few wrinkles of his own such as curbs for unions in broadcasting and publishing.

Much of his advice had a very familiar ring, such as the Guild has been hearing from the most conservative publishers for years.

Figuratively beating his breast, Stern sobbed that although he had helped the Guild to organize he was shocked a few years later "to find the Guild had turned itself into an industrial union, including clerks, stenographers and telephone solicitors."

Despite repeated prompting from the most reactionary members of the committee, Stern could not bring himself to say that strike against his papers was a communist plot. He went so far as to say that the Philadelphia-Camden Guild leaders "deliberately struck my papers with the intent to destroy them" and that they had "interests foreign to their membership."

Stern testified that he sold his three papers at a "heavy personal loss" in order to "warn the nation" against the Guild, which he called "a cancerous growth" that jeopardizes a free press.

Guild witnesses did not think Stern's motives were noble. Guild executive vice-president Sam Eubanks said:

"It is not an unreasonable conclusion that the sale of Stern's assets had long been contemplated, and that the strike was provoked deliberately as a shabby excuse for a sale."

Eubanks asserted that management "repeatedly and consistently refused to make any wage offers comparable to those of other publishers with whom the Guild was concluding contracts. He suggested that the estimated 45,000-50,000 tons of newsprint used yearly by the Record alone might have been a consideration in the sale in view of the widespread newsprint shortage.

Pres. Michael Harris of the Philadelphia CIO Council, who tried to help the Guild win a settlement prior to the strike which began Nov. 7, told the committee that he found "no spirit of compromise" on the part of Stern or his aides.

He declared that ability to pay was at no time made an issue by management. Harris said Stern rebuffed two citizens having no connection with either parties when they urged him to resume negotiations after the strike began.

Questioned by a committee member as to Stern's published charges that Guild policy tended to "restrict the rights of management," Sec. Arthur D. Riordan of the Guild local answered that the Guild had nothing to do with the editorial policies of any paper, but would fight for a publisher's right to dictate his own policies.

and are the most influential directors in the Associated Press, the monopoly of the monopolies.

One out of every four newspaper readers buys a chain-operated daily paper. And practically every daily reader gets his news fare as dished out by the monopolistically minded AP.

BUT even the chains narrow down to big dogs and little dogs. Of the 54 chains, six are considered the big ones: Hearst, Scripps-Howard, McCormick-Patterson, Frank E. Gannett, Knight and Perry.

Hearst bosses 17 daily papers, two strictly Sunday sheets and the American Weekly, a Sunday magazine supplement, a half dozen radio stations, International News Service, a feature news syndicate and a paper mill. The papers and radio stations are all in cities with populations over 300,000 except for a paper in Albany, N. Y.

Scripps-Howard has 19 dailies strung out mainly in cities of lesser size but not lesser importance. Roy Howard, dapperly dressed head of the chain, is also president of United Press which supplies news to 1,000 U. S. dailies and some 350 foreign papers. A feature syndicate and news photo agency round out the business. Newsprint, a hard to get item for the smaller papers in the country, is nothing at all for the Scripps Supply Service which has ties with the big paper mills.

The McCormick - Patterson chain stops at three—the Chicago Tribune, N. Y. Daily News and the Washington Times-Herald—but the circulation of the three papers is not only the largest in those cities, but the largest in the country. The Tribune sells over a million papers a day, the Daily News over two million. Combined, the circulation is close to 3½ million every day, and 5½ million on Sunday. Paper mills and radio stations have been added to this family affair operated by the Patterson-McCormick cousins.

Frank E. Gannett's chain of 20 papers and seven radio stations is concentrated in New York State where Gannett also operates in the most reactionary wing of the Republican Party.

John Knight's four newspapers in three big industrial cities, Akron, Chicago, Detroit, and in Miami, and John Perry's presidency of the Western Newspaper Union, besides control of a chain of seven dailies, four radio stations, two weeklies and a paper mill, puts them near the top of the heap.

Perry's Western Newspaper Union supplies 3,000 weekly papers with ready-print eight-page papers, with four pages left blank for local news and advertising. Six thousand other papers receive WNU's boiler-plated and syndicated material, most of it ready to be slapped into page forms. Of the 11,000 weekly newspapers, 9,000 are serviced by WNU.

"THE more you have the more you make" apparently is the guiding business principle of the chains and their small town neophytes. The chains are rattling with expansion. They're aiming to get jucier bites of the advertising plums dangled by the nation's largest industrial ballyhooers.

During the war years, more than $2 billion was spent to advertise. Since the government kicked back 80c on the dollar for "patriotic" advertising, we read such pleas as: "Buy War Bonds Now and Save For Your Super-Duper Collapsible Home Later," or "Buy Bonds for a Super-Scooper Roadhog Six."

That $2 billion advertising record is still being pushed by "institutional" ads in which business is dislocating both arms patting itself on the back while breaking its shin bones in kicks at labor's pants.

Radio which depends on advertising to a greater extent than either the newspapers or the magazines doesn't have trouble getting support from advertising sugar-daddies. The magazines get the same cozy support. Then, under the terms of their implied reciprocal trade agreement, the magazines and radio apply the needle to labor and add frills and sugar coating to big business propaganda.

They all figure they're one big happy money-making family with the grim purpose in life of keeping the working people from making no more than a bare living wage.

ARE MEAL TIMES FUN AT YOUR HOUSE?

In some homes mealtimes are jolly get-togethers—in others they're times for squabbling and nagging. Nagging spoils digestions and dispositions. Needed corections should be made at other times and places. When the family is gathered for dinner, turn on your best humor and if you have an amusing story to tell—tell it. If you make meal hours the core of happy family life with good food and good fellowship you'll all be happier. And later on the children will look back with pleasure to "the good old days at home."

Sprucing Up

TO GIRLS WHO WEAR GLASSES

By HANNA SHERMAN

Many girls with 20-20 vision are secretly envious of you gals who wear glasses. That's because modern glasses are so attractive and becoming. Formerly, people considered wearing glasses a definite handicap. Nowadays they can give an extra lift to your appearance.

Modern glasses have shell frames and are easy to take off and put on. They fit your face and leave no disfiguring marks. The modified harlequin is especially becoming to most faces. Your optometrist can show you these pretty specs with their flattering upward slant.

Most important in choosing your glasses is having them right for you. Service is what you're paying for, assurance that the frames you buy are the right size, that the color is flattering, that the shape of the glasses conforms with the shape of your face.

The smaller your face, the lighter weight should be the frames. By all means choose your glasses from the wide variety of colors being offered. Blue is flattering to blondes, but not so good on those with vivid brunette coloring. Flesh and shell color look well on almost anyone. Red suits many and black frames can look very exotic. In the summer time, white is wonderful to give you that clean cool look.

Give a thought to your eyebrows when choosing your glasses. The top of the frame should partly cover them. Remember that the brows should not be entirely hidden. Just as eyebrows that droop at the outer corners give your face a sad expression, so can your glasses. Frames should always go up from the nose, never down.

IF you wear glasses, you'll want to know some makeup tricks too. Blend your rouge carefully so that it won't hit at the rim of your specs. You'll find that off the face hair-dos that show your ears are generally more becoming. If you can get by with a hair style that isn't fussy—that's your dish.

You can wear heavier eye makeup when you wear glasses. Eye shadow and mascara help, if you like them. Brown is your best choice of color. It can be applied more heavily than other shades and will still give you a natural look. Use the mascara on the upper lashes only. Keep your eyebrows neat, pluck out those stray hairs, but do let them seem natural.

Of course you can wear earrings and pretty feminine hats. Choose your hats in lines that flatter your face and avoid those with too much trimming. Make wearing glasses add sparkle and verve to your appearance.

War on Phone Girls

The Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. has declared war on some 12,000 "voice with a smile girls" who man the switchboards in northern California and Nevada.

The challenge came when the PT&T announced it would not extend or renew its agreement with Local 120, CIO Communications Assn., which expires Feb. 28.

"A SURE-FIRE SHOW," SAYS VARIETY

"LABOR-U.S.A."

CIO's OWN RADIO PROGRAM

By MIRIAM KOLKIN

"LABOR-USA! This Saturday, the CIO-USA!" That introduction each week is the signal for millions of Americans to gather around the radio and tune in to 15 minutes of lively drama, music and facts.

The program is now going into its third year on time donated by the American Broadcasting Co. network. It is the only coast-to-coast show which gives organized labor the opportunity to broadcast its views on the issues of the day, in its own way and completely uncensored.

Originating from New York at 6:45 p.m., (EST) each Saturday, the series runs for an entire year, with the CIO taking the first 26 weeks of 1947.

Check your radio listing to see when your local ABC station carries the program; if it doesn't carry LABOR-USA, ask the station manager to schedule it.

UNIONISTS who at first tuned in out of sense of duty, casual radio dial twiddlers, soap opera fans have all become devoted listeners, entranced by the rare combination of a show that presents down-to-earth stories in radio's smoothest professional manner.

Extremely flexible in form, the shows have presented a Christmas parable about Tiny Tim and Mr. Gotrocks, the flint-hearted department store owner; satirized Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers promises for a better tomorrow; interviewed CIO families right in their homes and presented brief talks by Dr. Robert Nathan, author of the famous CIO wage-price report, and CIO leaders.

A STANDING feature on each program are the twangy folk songs of Tom Glazer, who sings not of broken heartstrings, but of broken purse strings and anti-labor laws. Typical of the songs which Glazer composes especially for the CIO program is this ditty:

I am an American working man and I'll tell you what I want.
I ain't got no fancy words so I really must be blunt.
I want to make a living wage with prices that I can pay
'Cause I'm an American working man and that's the American way.
My boss is a very fine gentleman and I love him like a brother
He smiles once a year at Christmas time and is very good to his Mother,
But my family can't make ends meet on my measly take-home pay.
I am an American working man and that's not the American way.

Copyright 1947, The CIO News

The show also prides itself on its 12-man band—union, of course—which is believed to be the only one in radio that includes both women and Negroes. Conductor and composer of the background music is Henry Brant. Well-known radio announcer Walter Vaughn and a group of actors round out the cast.

WRITER-PRODUCER team of the show are Peter and Jane Lyon. Considered one of the ablest writers in radio, Lyon has scripted such shows as the March of Time and Cavalcade of America. He has given up all his commercial radio assignments, however, to devote most of his time to the CIO program and to his duties as a vice president of the Radio Writers Guild.

It's an open joke in radio circles that among the most faithful listeners to Labor-USA are the people who put on the 15-minute NAM show, which comes on the ABC network right after the CIO. All talk, all rehearsing stops as the CIO program is piped into the NAM studio in Radio City.

As a result, the NAM writers have copied some of the CIO techniques and have even gotten themselves a singer who they fondly believe sounds folksy too.

Flicker Front

'YEARLING' IS TOPS

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

THIS is going to be a bad year for most Hollywood pictures crossing my line of vision. Until now I merely complained about what most of them lacked. Now the gun sights are set by the high standards of "The Yearling" and the ordinary run of celluloid is going to be in for a shellacking by comparison.

For here is a picture that throws a warm cloak of dignity and integrity over the shoulders of a poor family struggling to eke an existence out of the unyielding earth. It does not glorify the poverty of the Baxters struggling against nature, but with honesty and directness it does portray the extent to which men will go to clothe and feed and house their families decently.

And from that constant fight in the Florida forests, a sensitive youth matures and a fine family relationship develops. The tow-headed youth, Jody Baxter, seeks relief from his loneliness in the company of animals, particularly the fawn he adopts. But even the question of a pet is a vital one for the Baxters who must tally every stalk of corn and plant leaf in their fight to survive.

When the family's existence is threatened, first by his father's inability to work and then by his pet's appetite, Jody finally realizes that he is no longer a yearling himself and must assume a man's responsibilities.

Gregory Peck as the understanding father of Jody adds to his growing prestige while Jane Wyman as the unsmiling, work-wearied farmwife with a family to feed will strike a responsive chord in the hearts of women everywhere.

"The Yearling" reflects not only the strength in a frontier farmer's life, but also captures the rustic humor and excitement in the day-to-day struggle. The uncontrived comedy in the swap of a worthless hound for a new rifle is worth a million pie-throwing contests, while the hunt through the brush for Slewfoot, the bear, matches any adventure sequence seen recently.

The basic humanity and sympathy underlying the handling of "The Yearling" make it a picture for all to see.

THE pre-war hit team of Frank Capra and Jimmy Stewart are doing business at their old stand again. This time their vehicle for amusing comedy with an appropriate dash of moralizing is "It's a Wonderful Life."

As manager of a small loan society, Stewart leads a life of frustration, always ending up with the part of the chicken that travels the fence last.

He gives up his dreams of touring the world to help support his family; works nights so that his brother may go to college in his stead; and his hopes of pulling up stakes from the small town of Bedford Falls are ended when he is "saddled" with marriage, kids, debts and everything but a two-ton anchor.

Charged with a crime he had no hand in, he decides to end it all. But, through a fantasy, he sees what life in Bedford Falls would have been like if, as he wishes, he were never born.

Old Potter, the banker-slum-owner, would have wielded his evil influence over the entire town. Donna Reed, his wife, would have been a spinster librarian and other similar catastrophes would have happened. Woe. So, Stewart bounces back, solves the crime and his friends, the little people, rally behind him.

He then knows that a man's wealth is measured more by his good deeds and friends than by his bank account. He realizes that no man lives without affecting the fates of others.

The moralizing is skillfully blended in with a warm drama and sparkling humor, brought to a peak by a fine cast and direction.

Ma, young Jody and Pa Baxter, stars of "The Yearling," work from dawn to dusk, coaxing a living from the stubborn soil of their 100 acre farm in the Florida scrub country.

THE basic faith in people expressed so well in "The Yearling" and "It's a Wonderful Life" finds expression in a different form in "The Magnificent Doll."

I don't know the historical correctness of every last word of dialogue and incident in this tale of Dolly Madison's love for democracy and James. But when Ginger Rogers, as Dolly, lends her vivacious charms to noteworthy ideas, its a welcome break in the Hollywood tradition.

A Virginia gentlewoman, Dolly finds herself torn between James Madison (Burgess Meredith) and Aaron Burr (David Niven.) When Burr in a critical time in the nation's history espouses "strong rule" and "one-man dictatorship," she turns to Madison and the political action (even in those days) that brings Jefferson into the White House.

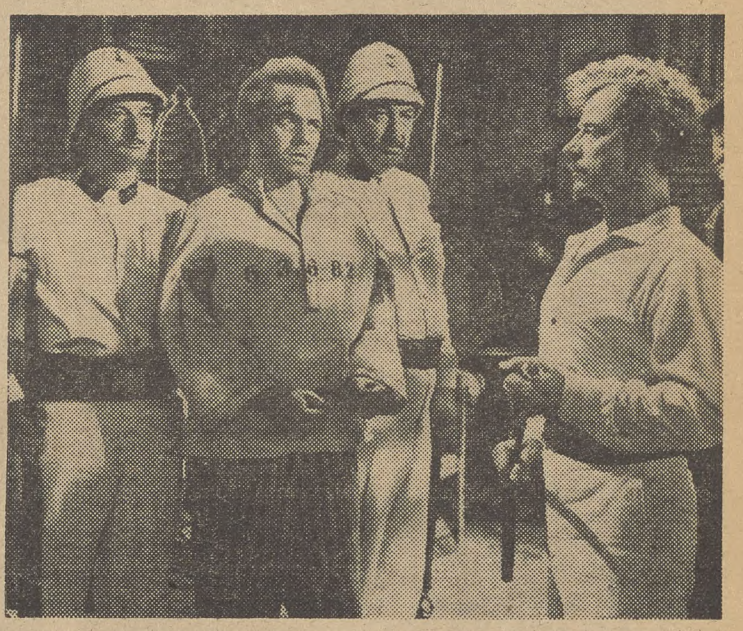
"SINBAD the Sailor," a roistering, swaggering tale of high adventure and low comedy, was surely made by someone with his tongue in his cheek. Doug Fairbanks, Jr., surely fits the high-jumping shoes of his old man—and by the grace of Allah, a few million coins in costumes, technicolor and scenery have been added. And the harem-Maureen O'Hara is the comeliest addition since Cleopatra made her mark.

Needless to say, Sinbad is an ancient version of Superman and if he has to fight 200 guards at the harem, he does it. And if scaling a 30-foot wall is a problem, he solves it with an elastic tree. And if spinning wondrous yarns in high-powered, romantic language is in the script, he can throw it with the best in the fleet.

WHAT Sinbad does with his scimitar, Hank Fonda accomplishes with his shootin' iron in "My Darling Clementine," John Ford's western masterpiece.

This picture, pardner, has everything from spurs to scalpels, two heroines, good and bad women, Indians, rustlers, gamblers, plenty of fast action and men who draw guns faster than finks. And all in technicolor for the better part of a dollar.

Louis Hayward, held by the guards, has little opportunity to dispute the orders of the sadistic governor of Devil's Island in "The Return of Monte Cristo."



Spanish guerilla leader exhorts factory workers to join him in blowing up fascist-held bridge during civil war. Scene is from "Man's Hope," inspiring film of a people's fight for freedom from axis tyranny. Made by Andre Malraux, the picture has just been released for public showing in the U. S.

SHORT TAKES

HUMORESQUE—John Garfield fiddles his way from the slums to symphony, success and Joan Crawford's ever-aching heart. The music is wonderful, the acting superb and the picture a rehash that's worth an evening out.

CALIFORNIA—Ray Milland drops his bottle to tote a gun for statehood in this epic western. Fighting against villainous viper George Couloris who wants to be dictator of a pro-slavery California, Milland has the curvaceous inspiration of Barbara Stanwyck.

TIME, THE PLACE AND THE GIRL—Despite lack of a story, Dennis Morgan and funnyman Jack Carson manage to put this delightful, tuneful three-ring screen circus through some entertaining paces.

SECRET HEART—Probes the inner recesses of June Allyson's mind to show how her strong attachment to her father nearly wrecked the lives of those close to her—as well as her own. Claudette Colbert and Walter Pidgeon play the leads in this psycho that is good screen fare even if it doesn't quite come off.

TEMPTATION—Crawls through the problem of a cold marriage and a torrid extra-marital romance. Merle Oberon is married to archaeologist George Brent, but loves Egyptian Charles Korvin. The Sphinx had better lines.

ABIE'S IRISH ROSE—Retains all the offensive dialect and slanderous characterizations that should have ended with V-E Day in Berlin. In addition to which, the picture isn't worth the tax on the pass.

CROSS MY HEART—Betty Hutton confesses to a crime she didn't commit in order to give Sonny Tufts some legal practice. She manages to bounce out of the hot seat and into Sonny's lap.

Congress Playing

ANTI-LABOR FOOTBALL

ANTI-LABOR legislation—a matter of passing concern to some 14 million union members—appeared this week to be developing into a political football.

As the Senate Committee on Labor & Public Welfare moved into the final fortnight of its open hearings, the House Labor Committee served notice that it will hold back any final action in order to see what the Senate will do.

Washington newspapers were quick to point out that Chairman Fred Hartley (R., N.J.) of the House group is considered friendly to the presidential hopes of New York's Tom Dewey, while the Senate Labor Committee is headed by Sen. Robert Taft (R., O.). Taft and Dewey are sparring for the votes of the GOP nominating convention next year.

Hartley's statement was couched in terms of high diplomacy, whatever his motives. He talked of the "prestige of the House" and his particular committee. He made clear that he wished to take no chance of reporting out a severe anti-union measure, only to have it "emasculated" in the Senate.

The Senate committee has been giving close study to the Taft-Smith-Ball bill, a remodeled version of last year's Case Bill, and to three proposals of Sen. Joseph Ball (R., Minn.). Ball would break up national unions and industry-wide bargaining, outlaw all forms of union security and cut the principal provisions out of the Wagner Act.

Since the hearings opened, the Senate group has been listening to an almost unrelieved attack on funlamental principles and rights of American unionism. The criticism has come from such corporation presidents as Charles Wilson of General Motors and corporation "research" experts.

NEXT WEEK, however, labor will get its innings.

CIO President Murray will take the witness stand February 19, and is expected to provide a detailed rebuttal to the arguments offered by big business spokesmen. Pres. Walter Reuther of the UAW-CIO will testify Feb. 21. Other witnesses will represent the electrical, oil, smelter workers and cannery unions.

Taft has set a deadline during the latter part of March to report out the bill on which the committee decides.

The CIO Economic Outlook, in its most recent issue, charged that the drive against labor stems from monopoly interests which are "diverting attention" from badly-needed social welfare legislation.

"The monopolists are driving to take advantage of the unbalanced situation arising in the transition from war to peace," the Outlook said. "The great bulk of American business, like the majority of farmers, white-collar workers, and professional groups, can only expect to reap disaster from this drive.

"Like labor, they need to have Congress and the Administration act together for the passage of a series of measures designed to stabilize and advance the living standards of the nation."

In Atlantic City, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers executive board warned that union members will answer "at the ballot box in 1947 and again in 1948" any effort to throttle workers' rights.

Mass Rallies Hit Bills To Bust Labor

UNITED labor marshalled forces this week in Tennessee and Indiana to battle bills in both states' legislatures that would ban the union shop and weaken unions' bargaining power.

Mass demonstrations — 1,000 strong to Indianapolis and 2,500 strong to Memphis—impressed legislators with the unity of CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods in opposition to anti-labor bills.

The 1,000 Indiana laborites battled a blizzard to demand that the legislature kill bills banning the closed shop, outlawing mass picketing and secondary boycotts, suspending the law governing night work for women, and allowing state police to intervene in industrial disputes.

The march of 2,500 to Memphis was an unprecendented demonstration of unity, with representatives of all sections of the labor movement, men and women, white and Negro, participating.

The orderly crowd that marched on the Capitol carried only one banner: "We are opposed to the open shop bill."

Together they crowded a chamber to overflowing, and in a two-hour hearing stated their case against a bill which would ban the union shop and another which would make unions responsible for strike damages, even if they might be inspired or caused by agents beyond control of the unions.

The "open shop" bill would prohibit the denial of a job to any person because of membership or non-membership in a union. Violations would be punished by fines up to $500 or by jail sentences of up to 11 months and 29 days, or by both.

In the predominantly rural Senate, 18 members have introduced the bill—sufficient strength for passage by the 33-member body.

THE LINEUP IN WASHINGTON

● RUSH PORTAL BILLS

Legislation to outlaw or restrict portal wage claim suits, and to hobble the Fair Labor Standards Act with serious amendments, may be ready for action in the Senate and House within a week.

Union attorneys, meanwhile, are studying effects of Judge Picard's decision in the Mt. Clements Pottery Co. case. The judge ruled that all portal claims in that particular suit were "trifling" and unworthy of consideration. Counsel for the workers will probably appeal.

● CIO BACKS LILIENTHAL

Appalled by the smear tactics used in an effort to discredit David Lilienthal, nominated by Pres. Truman as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission, CIO has called upon union councils in half a dozen states to rally behind the former TVA chairman.

John Brophy, CIO Councils director, wired council officials in the states represented on the Senate Atomic Energy Committee (California, Connecticut, Georgia, Ohio, Texas, Michigan, Iowa and Colorado) to wire their Senators for quick confirmation of the appointment.

"Such attacks"—on Lilienthal and on the Acheson-Lilienthal atomic report—"only serve to arouse suspicion of our good faith in proposals to the United Nations for international control," Brophy said.

● THE STORY ON TAXES

CIO moved last week in an effort to forestall plans of GOP leaders of the House Ways and Means Committee to write a tax bill without public hearings. Legislative Director Nathan Cowan wrote to members of the committee to protest the move.

"The government's tax program is one which is of such direct concern to the people of the country and has such a direct bearing on their economic welfare that we feel very strongly they should be given an opportunity to present their own views," Cowan wrote.

● HATCH ACT UPHELD

A CIO Public Workers' suit to challenge the Hatch "anti-politics" act was unsuccessful last week, when the U. S. Supreme Court maintained that it did not infringe upon the right to vote.

The act prohibits political activity by government employes. The union, acting on behalf of 12 members, argued that the law permits an unconstitutional abridgement of rights. The court disagreed, maintaining that ballot box rights were unimpaired by the legislation.

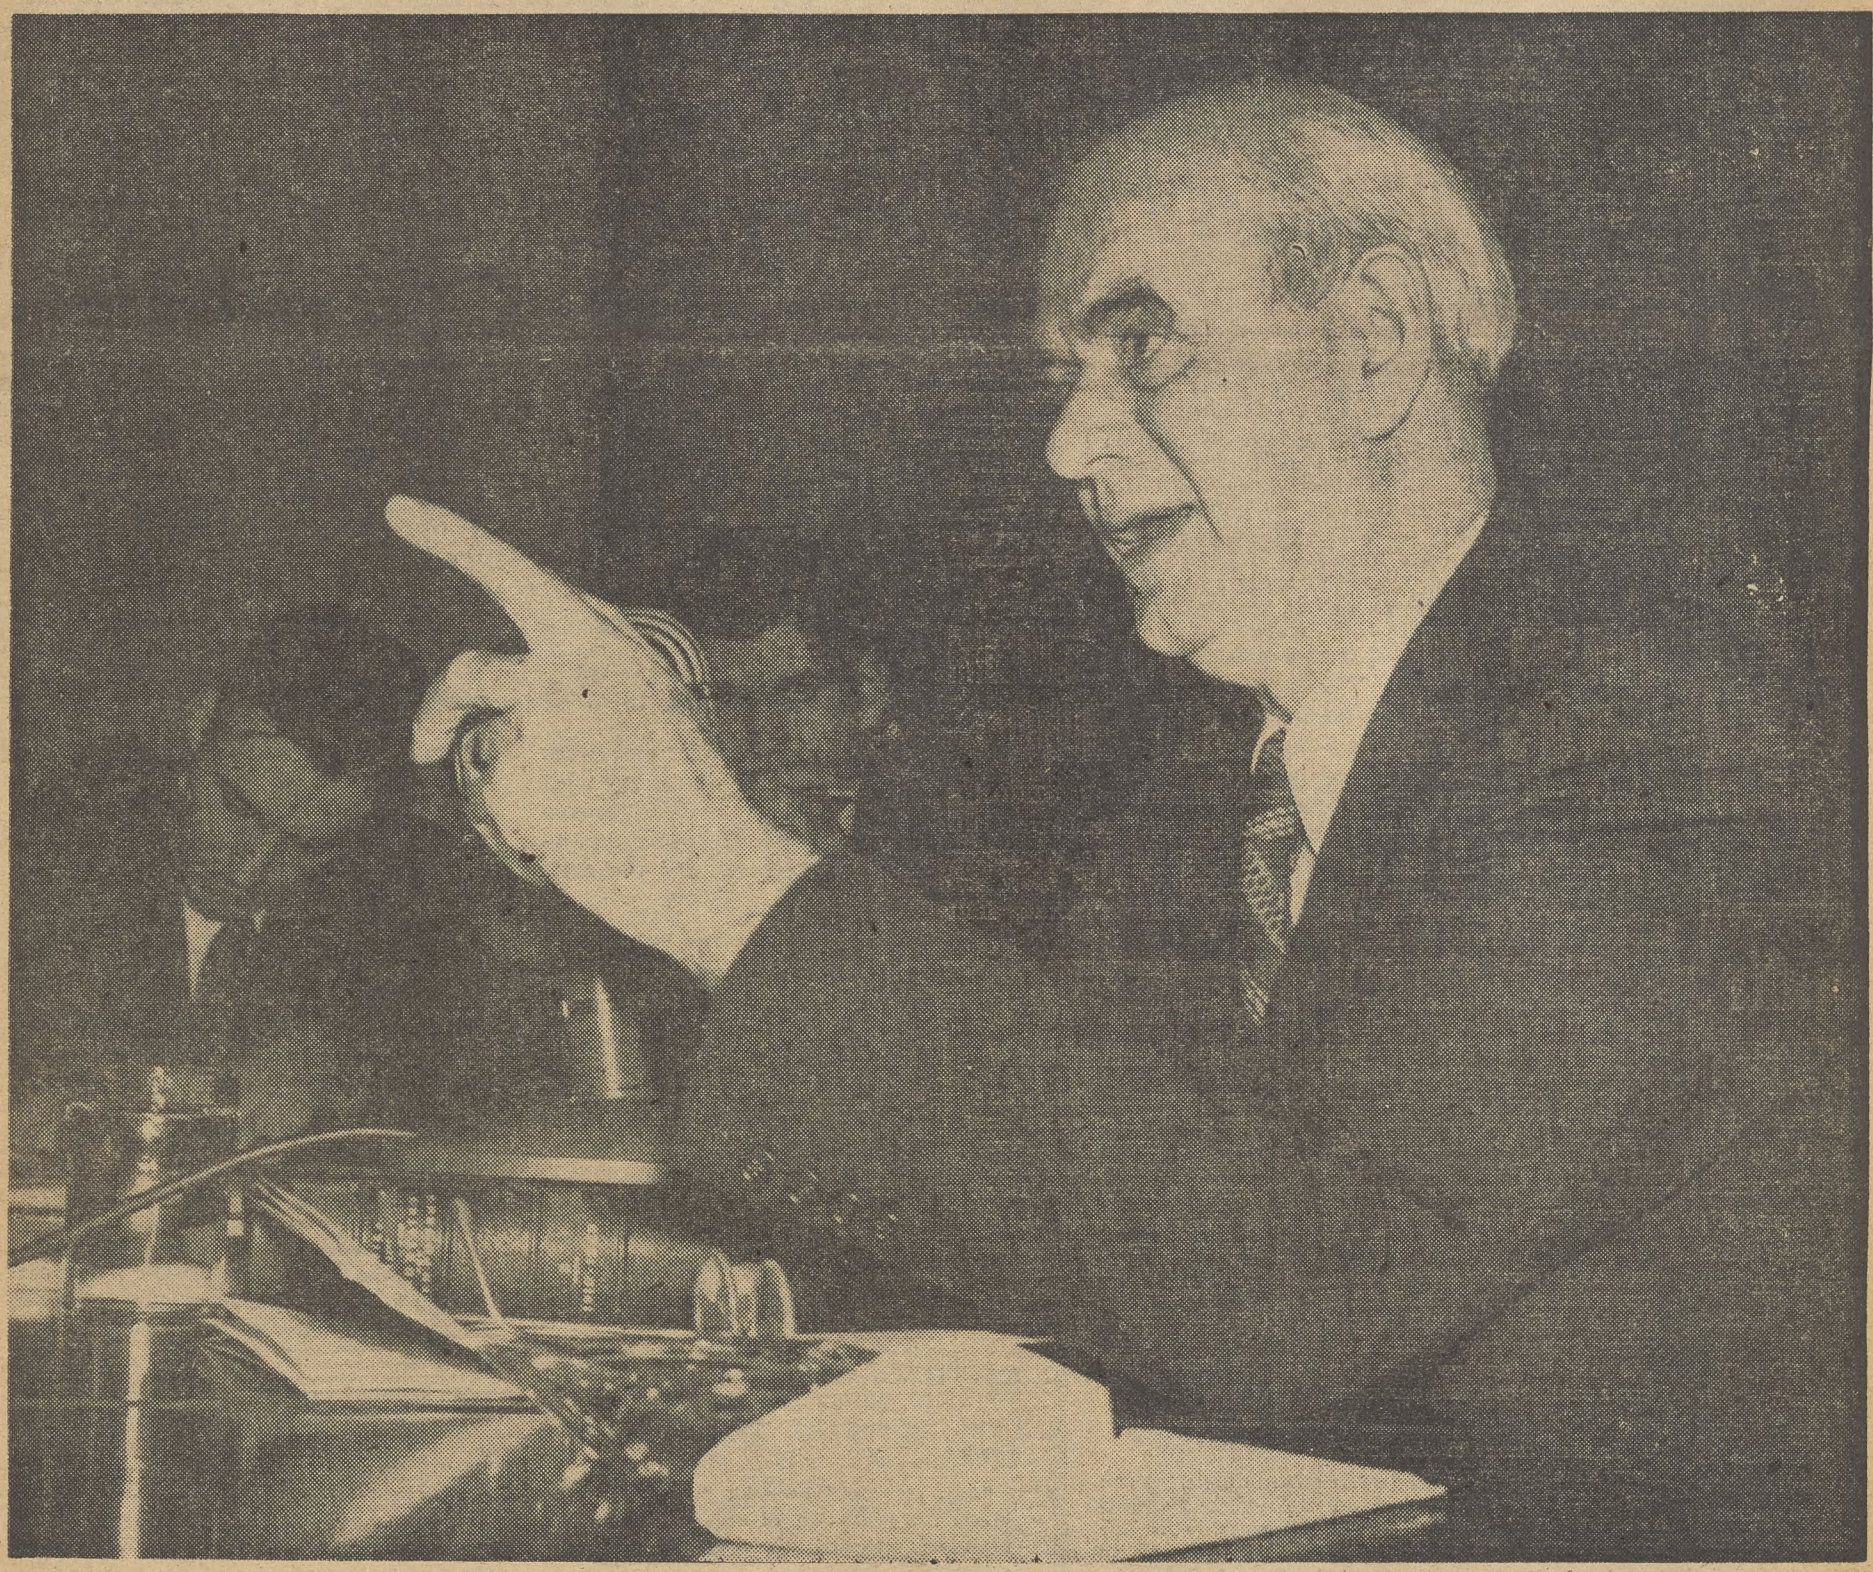
WE DON'T WANT A 2nd '29!



CIO Pres. Philip Murray told the Senate Labor Committee this week that legislation designed to weaken unions would lead to wage cutting and reduced consumer buying power. Congressional support for such a program would be a new departure in American history. For government would not only be permitting a repetition of trends which led to the 1929 crash—it would be taking affirmative steps to lead the nation toward such a catastrophe.

'Essence of Democracy'

Boss Supports Union Shop!

By FEDERATED PRESS

"THE closed shop is the essence of democracy—rule of the majority." No, that's not a quote from a CIO or AFL spokesman, but from a member of the Illinois Manufacturers Assn., Herbert J. Buchsbaum, president of a Chicago plastics firm.

The case for the closed shop is presented by Buchsbaum in a debate with Sen. Joseph H. Ball (R. Minn.) which appears in the February issue of Modern Industry. Ball, who has introduced an open shop bill in the Senate, argues: "Compulsory union membership is a monopoly and a violation of individual freedom."

"The Senator's arguments are directed against unions themselves, rather than against the closed shop," Buchsbaum notes. Warning that outlawing of the closed shop would only result in "misfortune and injustice," the employer sums up his reasons for advocating closed shop contracts as follows:

"The effect on workers of a closed shop agreeent is an immediate improvement in morale. They at once recognize that management has wholeheartedly accepted them as a partner and no longer plots the destruction of their union . . . The workers realize that their fight against management for union security is over, that their future well-being rests entirely on their ability to make the new partnership operate very smoothly and steadily.

"THE effect on management of a closed shop is even more pronounced. Where labor has security, management has it also. Freedom from petty bickering, suspicion, harassment and friction is sweet music to managment . . .

"The effect on business of a closed shop can best be judged by the showing of business in which the closed shop prevails. Labor harmony should produce a wealth of suggestions for improvements in methods. The labor-management committee struggles with production problems rather than with each other. The high morale fostered by mutual trusts will show a corresponding profit for the company."

Most important, Buchsbaum says, is the effect on the public. "The closed shop," he finds, "is the essence of democracy, the rule of the majority. It supplies a sound unit whereby workers can express themselves. To say that this exercises a tyranny over the minority would be to strike at the very roots of our political philosophy. . ."

In his rebuttal to Ball, the Chicago employer says: "Unions, despite all their real or imaginary excesses, have done more to free the working man and raise the standard of living in this country than any other force, including the civil war to free the slaves. Let us be careful not to unduly fetter the hands that so ably fashion our clothing, homes, our countless everyday necessities."

PROFESSORS VOTE 130 TO 1 FOR CIO

Unionism came to the classroom at Howard University, Washington, D. C., last week, when the faculty of the outstanding Negro school voted 130 to 1 for representation by the CIO Public Workers.

THE PEOPLE VS. CONGRESS

CONGRESS has forsaken the people. And it is time they did something about it. That was the nub of a statement made this week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray on behalf of CIO Officers and Vice-Presidents who met last week in Washington.

Murray reviewed Congress' failure to enact an adequate housing program, its wrecking of price control and its program of "petty political maneuver . . . based on dictates of private interests at the expense of the national welfare."

He called for a program which will warn the people of the dangers they face and will mobilize them to protect their living standards and the continued enjoyment of democratic liberties. Main points of his statement follow:

THE national officers and vice-presidents of the CIO at their meeting today have received from Natl. Legislative Representative Nathan Cowan a report on developments in Congress and on the current legislative situation. They have received from General Counsel Lee Pressman an analysis of the various measures on labor problems now pending and under consideration by the committees of Congress.

We feel that the nation may well view with very serious concern the ominous character of the activities of the Eightieth Congress during the few short weeks since the Session opened. The Congress has been meeting in a period in which the people are confronted with very serious, difficult and extremely critical situations.

In a period of critical housing shortage Congress has been directing its serious attention only to proposals for raising rent levels or eliminating rent controls entirely. In a period of declining purchasing power Congress has been directing its serious attention to tax adjustments under the label of 20% across-the-board, calculated to give trivial relief to the lowest income brackets while granting substantial concessions to the highest income groups.

Despite formulation and full agreement last year on a program of development of atomic energy under civilian direction in the interest of the national welfare rather than in the interest of private profiteering, Congress has permitted a tragic program of harassment and attack upon a worthy public servant, David Lilienthal, whose sole offense in the eyes of his attackers is the fact that he has served the people, and served them well.

Congress has completed its program of disregard of the basic needs of the country, by preparing for a general attack on the labor movement through restrictive and punitive legislation and through the publicly announced plan of the Parnell Thomas Committee on unAmerican Activities of harassment, sniping and witch-hunts, in an effort to support the attacks of employers and disrupt the actvities of the labor organizations.

CIO Names 5 For AFL Unity Talks

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week named a committee of five to meet with the AFL "on 24 hours notice" to consider a unified program opposing anti-labor legislation in Congress and the state legislatures.

Besides Murray, the committee includes CIO Vice-Presidents Albert Fitzgerald, Jacob Potofsky, Walter Reuther and Emil Rieve.

Murray made the proposal and appointed the committee following receipt of a letter from AFL Pres. William Green which recommended the discussion first of "organic unity." The Green letter was in reply to one sent last December by Murray, urging a united front against employer legislative activity.

Green, in his letter, named a committee consisting of himself, Sec.-Treas. George Meany, and Vice-Presidents William Hutcheson, John L. Lewis and Daniel Tobin to negotiate.

MURRAY, at a press conference following a a CIO Vice-Presidents meeting in Washington, recommended "putting first things first."

"Any program," he said, "which comprehends the perfection of organic unity comprehends extended discussion over a considerable period of time.

"The immediate situation is what we are concerning ourselves about—to unite to formulate a program of common action to combat anti-labor legislation."

Murray pointed out that if CIO and AFL can develop a common understanding on such problems, they can proceed on discussions of other means of achieving complete unity.

MAIN points of the letter to Green follow:

"Our enemies are united. They seek through the enactment of anti-labor legislation, in Congress and in the State Legislatures, to eliminate the gains which the workers have achieved over many years through union organization.

"This committee representing the CIO is fully prepared to meet with the committee which you have designated and we suggest with a committee which we should request the Railway Labor organizations to appoint for the purpose of taking effective measures to prevent the enactment of anti-labor legislation.

"In addition, we hope that through a demonstration of the ability of organized labor to act in a united manner in the interest of our membership we can provided the basis for a discussion of other means to achieve effective and enduring unity which would actually further the interests of organized labor and oppose the destructive activities of our enemies."

Standing room only was available in the Senate caucus room as CIO President Murray testified before the Senate Labor Committee. The beard belongs to F. E. Gimlet, of Salida, Colo. He made his annual trek to give Congress his views on how the country should be run.

Hot exchanges between President Murray and Senators Ball and Taft marked the hearing. L. to r.: Sens. Ball (Minn.), Aiken (Vt.) and Taft (O.), all Republicans.

PLANS TO BUST UNIONS MAY LEAD TO 2nd '29

By FRED d'AVILA

See Testimony, Pages 8-9

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week presented the case against legislation to weaken unions. He talked for two hours in an atmosphere that was strained with heckling, multiple interruptions and basic antagonism of the Republican majority on the Senate Labor Committee.

A standing-room-only audience filled the huge Senate caucus room, with its 60-foot-high marble walls flanked by 12 giant pillars and lit by six ornate chandeliers, each nearly eight feet in diameter.

The crowd heard Murray warn that the kernel in the problem of industrial relations lies squarely between drastically reduced real wages and postwar profits that have soared to record heights.

"Mark you my words, gentlemen," he told the Committee, "it is the most provocative situation in the U. S. today!"

IN nearly 100 mimeographed pages of written testimony and analysis which supplemented his oral presentation, Murray declared:

"The bills before you can be supported only by a premise that the ills of our economy reflect a need for weakening labor at the bargaining table.

"If you are prepared to embark on a program of consciously weakening labor at the bargaining table, then you are prepared to say the strength of government must be thrown behind those employers who are today prepared to protect their present and future profit levels against any demands for wage increases.

"If that is your program, then we are truly embarking upon a new and dangerous era in the history of American government.

"Not merely will government be preparing to sit by and permit a repetition on a grander scale of the trends which led to the crash of 1929; government will be actually taking an affirmative and active role in impelling the country in the direction of such a catastrophe."

THE CIO leader was in top form as he laid aside his prepared text and launched into a discussion of the record of American labor—the amazing output of weapons to help win the war and a peacetime production and efficiency quota equalled nowhere else in the world.

"What crime have these organizations committed, except to perform their patriotic duty as true Americans?" Murray asked.

"Here, staring in the face of this committee today, is a record of labor efficiency unparalleled at any time in the history of the U.S., and there is thrust in their faces certain legislation designed to shatter them. Is that going to be their reward?"

He compared industrial wages that average $25 below a minimum budget for a family of four, with 1947 profit estimates of over $15 billion.

"Manufacturing corporations on the over-all average," he said, "could set aside $7.7 billion for a wage increase of more than 20%, and without affecting prices still retain for themselves profits after taxes equal to those made during the war years and twice those of the prewar years."

He drew from the history of the 1920's to point out that the march of monopoly control, the drive to cut wages by weakening unions, and the high profits, all combined to bring the 1929 crash. He warned that the trend today is in the same direction—with the same results possible.

"Congress," he declared, "should be straining every effort to assure a sounder distribution of income of the nation"—instead of considering legislation which would aid employers in cutting wages and thus reducing consumer purchasing power.

Attacking the Ball bill to outlaw union security, Murray declared that "as a matter of morality and justice the union security clause embodies the principle that those who share in the benefits should also share in the responsibilities."

He said that bills to ban industry-wide bargaining reject simplified, over-all negotiations in favor of "the encouragement of hundreds of thousands of separate negotiations, separate disputes, and — if they should develop — separate strikes."

Questioned about CIO's position on jurisdictional strikes, Murray declared:

"There is no moral justification for a jurisdictional fight which forces into unemployment a lot of people.

"My own organization (United Steelworkers—Ed.) has not precipitated at any state in its entire career jurisdictional fights against other unions that caused industrial disturbances."

Asked by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.) what was to be done about the problem, Murray said that he had made repeated attempts to meet with the AFL.

Murray proposed that the Senate Labor Committee meet with him and with AFL Pres. William Green.

"Let us work out an agreement on this jurisdictional question in your presence," Murray suggested. "I am prepared to do it, to set up all the necessary mediation and arbitration machinery that can be established for the orderly adjudication of the jurisdictional issue."

Sen. Elbert Thomas (D. Utah) sits quietly by while Sen. Ellender (D. La.) shakes his finger at President Murray. Ellender was one of the most active hecklers.

Democratic Sens. Hill (Ala.) and Murray (Mont.) listen closely to the testimony, which warned that a program to weaken unions will lead to a repetition of the '29 crash.

ROUNDHOUSE PUNCH

PRESIDENT Philip Murray of the CIO gave a serious warning to Congress when he testified before the Senate labor committee—a warning that went far beyond the immediate dangers to union labor in the restrictive legislation now under consideration.

He dwelt on the maldistribution of wealth, as shown in record monopoly profits and declining real wages, pointing out how this had led to the great depression of 1929.

He explained how the anti-labor bills would weaken labor at the bargaining table, and throw the weight of government behind employers who are trying to protect their exorbitant profits against any demands for wage increases.

"If that is your program," Murray told the Senators, "then we are truly embarking upon a new and dangerous era in the history of American government.

"Not merely will government be preparing to sit by and permit a repetition on a grander scale of the trends which led to the crash of 1929; government will be actually taking an affirmative and active role in impelling the country in the direction of such a catastrophe."

THE National Association of Manufacturers and the Congressmen pushing the NAM program of anti-union legislation are not consciously trying to wreck the U. S. economy, of course.

But any examination of the bills they are promoting will show that they do not go to the root causes of industrial unrest, but are actually designed only to weaken, if not destroy, the unions and to increase the bargaining advantages of the employers.

In taking these vicious swings at the unions, labor's enemies are taking in more territory than they probably intend.

What they mean to be a knock-out blow against union labor is a roundhouse punch which is liable to land on our whole economy.

MURRAY pointed out that "our reconversion from war to peace has been dangerously lopsided, thus strengthening the position of those forces working toward monopoly and weakening the ability of workers, farmers, independent businessmen, professional and white-collar workers to re-establish an equilibrium."

Profits, after all taxes, are running far above even the high wartime levels, he noted. The workers' take-home pay is below wartime levels while living costs, already at record highs, are still rising. Meanwhile, the trend toward monopolistic control of our economy was increased during the war and is still increasing.

Drawing a parallel with conditions following World War I, Murray pointed out that this period was also marked by enormous increases in profits, by increased labor productivity and, at the same time, by reduced strength of the unions.

As a result, the unions were not able to keep the workers' end up. Wages were not adjusted to rising productivity and rising profits. Mass purchasing power was not sufficient to match increased production. And all this maldistribution in our national economy led to the great deprssion.

NOW we see exactly the same pattern being followed again—profits too high, purchasing power too low, monopoly increasing, and a drive launched in Congress to wreck the labor unions and make them powerless to restore the balance. Murray warned:

"We cannot move far down the road of punitive legislation against labor inspired by monopoly industry and invoked by the legislative arm of government without disastrous consequences. These measures are forerunners of a serious depression involving all Americans."

BY LEN DE CAUX

THE LITTLE storekeeper was scared to death when two tough mugs walked into his store, deliberately spoiled some of his goods and began pushing him around, with threats of worse damage and violence if he didn't "come across."

He was almost relieved when a third and smoother character followed and said: "Lay off the rough stuff, boys. Don't you know how to treat a gentleman?

"I can see you need protection, mister. I wouldn't want these boys to get real rough with you. I believe in moderation. So I know you're going to be smart and pay for your protection."

FAR BE IT from us to suggest that any of the eminently respectable NAM leaders, publishers or Congressmen responsible for anti-labor strategy bear any resemblance to racketeers.

But maybe they got some ideas on smart tactics for putting over union-breaking legislation from going to gangster movies and seeing scenes like the one above.

ONE OF the most extreme anti-union measures, the Case bill, was passed by the last Congress but vetoed by the President.

Since then, the NAM, the big-business press and a number of Congressmen have been shoving the unions around verbally and threatening them with virtual arson and murder.

Hundreds of anti-union bills have been introduced to scare the living daylight out of American working people.

SHAGGY, baggy, professorial Senator Ball is one of the boys who is pulling this legislative rough stuff.

Frankly admitting he is out to weaken the unions, Ball has introduced bills to outlaw all union security and impose the open shop; to destroy national unions on the pretext of banning "industry-wide bargaining"; and to amend the Wagner act into a strikebreaking instrument for the frustration of collective bargaining.

Obligingly, the press has played up these three measures. The very simplicity of their extreme union-busting character has helped to concentrate public attention on them.

Meanwhile, the tough guys of the House, Hoffman, Smith and their ilk, are preparing for their innings before the House labor committee, with threats to cut the unions to pieces and trample on every one of labor's rights.

WHEN the top strategists feel that labor and the public have been sufficiently "softened up" by this barrage of rough stuff and threats, the stage will be set for the "smoothies" to move in.

Then Senator Taft and other Republican top-shots, oozing sympathy for labor and offering it "protection," will come forward counseling "moderation," in the form of the very legislation they've had in mind from the first — probably the Taft-Ball-Smith bill.

THIS MEASURE which is the old Case bill with some new frills, is actually as extreme as any. But it is smoother-sounding and more complicated. It is also more acceptable to those employers who are fearful of the "bull-in-the-china-shop" bills used for the softening-up process.

The CIO analysis of this bill shows that, under various fair-sounding pretenses, it would bankrupt union treasuries, revive the anti-labor injunction, tie up labor relations in the courts, and supply anti-union employers with almost every kind of strikebreaking and union-busting weapon their hearts desire.

THE SUCCESS of this strategy in fooling some of the public is shown by the fact that Taft, one of the authors of this new and more vicious Case bill, has actually been called a "liberal" by some columnists for criticizing the deliberate crudities of the Ball brand of rough stuff.

And Harold Stassen came near to being hailed as a champion of labor by some innocents for expressing some differences with Taft and Ball, although he actually approved most of the Case bill principles at the very same hearing.

The fact that the GOP high command feels such tactics are necessary, however, is evidence of some concern about the labor vote. While labor should not allow the wool to be pulled over its eyes, this should encourage it to increase public pressure against every kind of anti-union legislation.

HOME FRONT BATTLE

1,000 N. Y. State employes marched to the State capitol at Albany last week to attend hearings on Gov. Dewey's budget. Among the marchers were members of the CIO Public Workers Union, seeking pay increases. A few days later Republican presidential hopeful Dewey used state troopers to bar from the capitol another 1,000-strong delegation seeking housing and rent relief. In other states too, the legislators are hearing from the people.

BIG guns against labor are being aimed in Congress, but in 16 of the 45 state legislatures meeting this year employer interests are conducting a local battle designed to cripple unions and sap their power to bargain for better wages.

Five state legislatures have passed laws banning union shop contracts. In five other states such laws are imminent. In one third of the 48 states, legislatures are considering proposals that in some cases restrict picketing, require registration of unions and even outlaw the right to strike.

Laws banning the union shop in Arizona, Arkansas, Florida and Nebraska have already been matched this year in Virginia. In Tennessee both houses of the legislature have passed a similar measure. Only the governer's signature is needed—and his administration supported the bill.

In Georgia, North Carolina, Indiana and Massachusetts laws barring union security contracts are imminent.

Thus, out of 48 state legislatures, 10 either have passed or are expected to pass laws that strike at one of the strongest parts of labor's collective bargaining mechanism.

And among 45 legislatures meeting this year, 16 have had presented for consideration legislation that would in one way or another hamper union activity.

TYPICAL proposals range from the outright prohibition of strikes in utility industries to the requirement that strike notices be posted.

There are picketing restrictions, penalties withdrawing a union's bargaining rights, supervised strike votes, fact finding boards, requirements for union registration and for publication of unions' financial records, among the proposals.

Anti-union shop laws in four states already are being tested in the courts, either by CIO, AFL or jointly. These states are Arkansas, Florida, Arizona and Nebraska.

Among this year's crop of laws or proposed laws are those of Virginia, Tennessee, Georgia and Arkansas.

Virginia has banned the union shop and outlawed strikes in public utilities.

In Tennessee the legislature—with the Governor expected to sign the bill—has banned the union shop and provided penalties up to a fine of $500 or a jail sentence of up to 11 months and 29 days, or both, for denying a person a job because of membership or non-membership in a union. Both houses passed the bill by large majorities.

In Georgia, the Senate unanimously approved bills barring the union shop and the check-off of union dues, and limiting picketing rights.

Picketing is described as the presence of two or more people at a place of business where a labor dispute is in progress. The law would prevent pickets from using "force, violence, threats or intimidation" to prevent any person going to or from work.

Meanwhile, the Georgia House rejected by 157-28 an unfavorable committee report on bills similar to those passed by the Senate, and ordered full debate on them. House approval is predicted.

In Arkansas Gov. Laney signed a bill passed by the legislature which makes effective immediately an anti-union shop amendment to the state constitution. Severe penalties are provided for anyone making union membership or non-membership a basis for employment.

AMONG the variety of laws that have been introduced, are the following samples:

COLORADO: Prohibits use of any union funds directly or indirectly for political purposes. Provides that on request from 10 union members an official state reporter shall be hired to report proceedings of a union meeting, and file a copy with the state.

CONNECTICUT: Directs the appointment of three judges to act as a compulsory arbitration board in labor disputes. Makes it unlawful for employes in any public utility or in any business or public service affecting the health and welfare of the people to strike.

DELAWARE: Provides that any person who strikes against the state or who belongs to an organization of government employes which asserts that right and who accepts employment with the state, shall be guilty of a felony.

IOWA: Provides that labor unions may sue and be sued and that their funds and assets are liable to judgment.

MICHIGAN: Requires unions to incorporate and make monthly financial statements to the state.

MINNESOTA: Declares strikes and other concerted action by public employes to be unlawful. Violators would be ineligible for re-employment for six months.

PENNSYLVANIA: Provides that contracts with public utility concerns shall be subject to compulsory arbitration when disputes cannot be settled otherwise.

The lineup is far from encouraging. Defeat of such measures will be accomplished only by the broadest possible unity of all forces—including CIO, AFL, legitimate independent unions and other liberal forces.

WHY am I sounding off about our membership meetings? Brother, I'll tell you...

Here's Why the attendance has DOUBLED in the last few months...

My idea is that maybe you should have a little notice in the paper every week, asking the locals to subscribe to The CIO NEWS, as we did.

It informs members who never come to meetings, and I'm sure helps attendance at meetings, as OUR MEETINGS HAVE DOUBLED SINCE WE HAVE BEEN GETTING THE CIO NEWS.

From a letter written by an officer of a CIO United Steelworkers local which recently subscribed to The CIO NEWS for all its members.

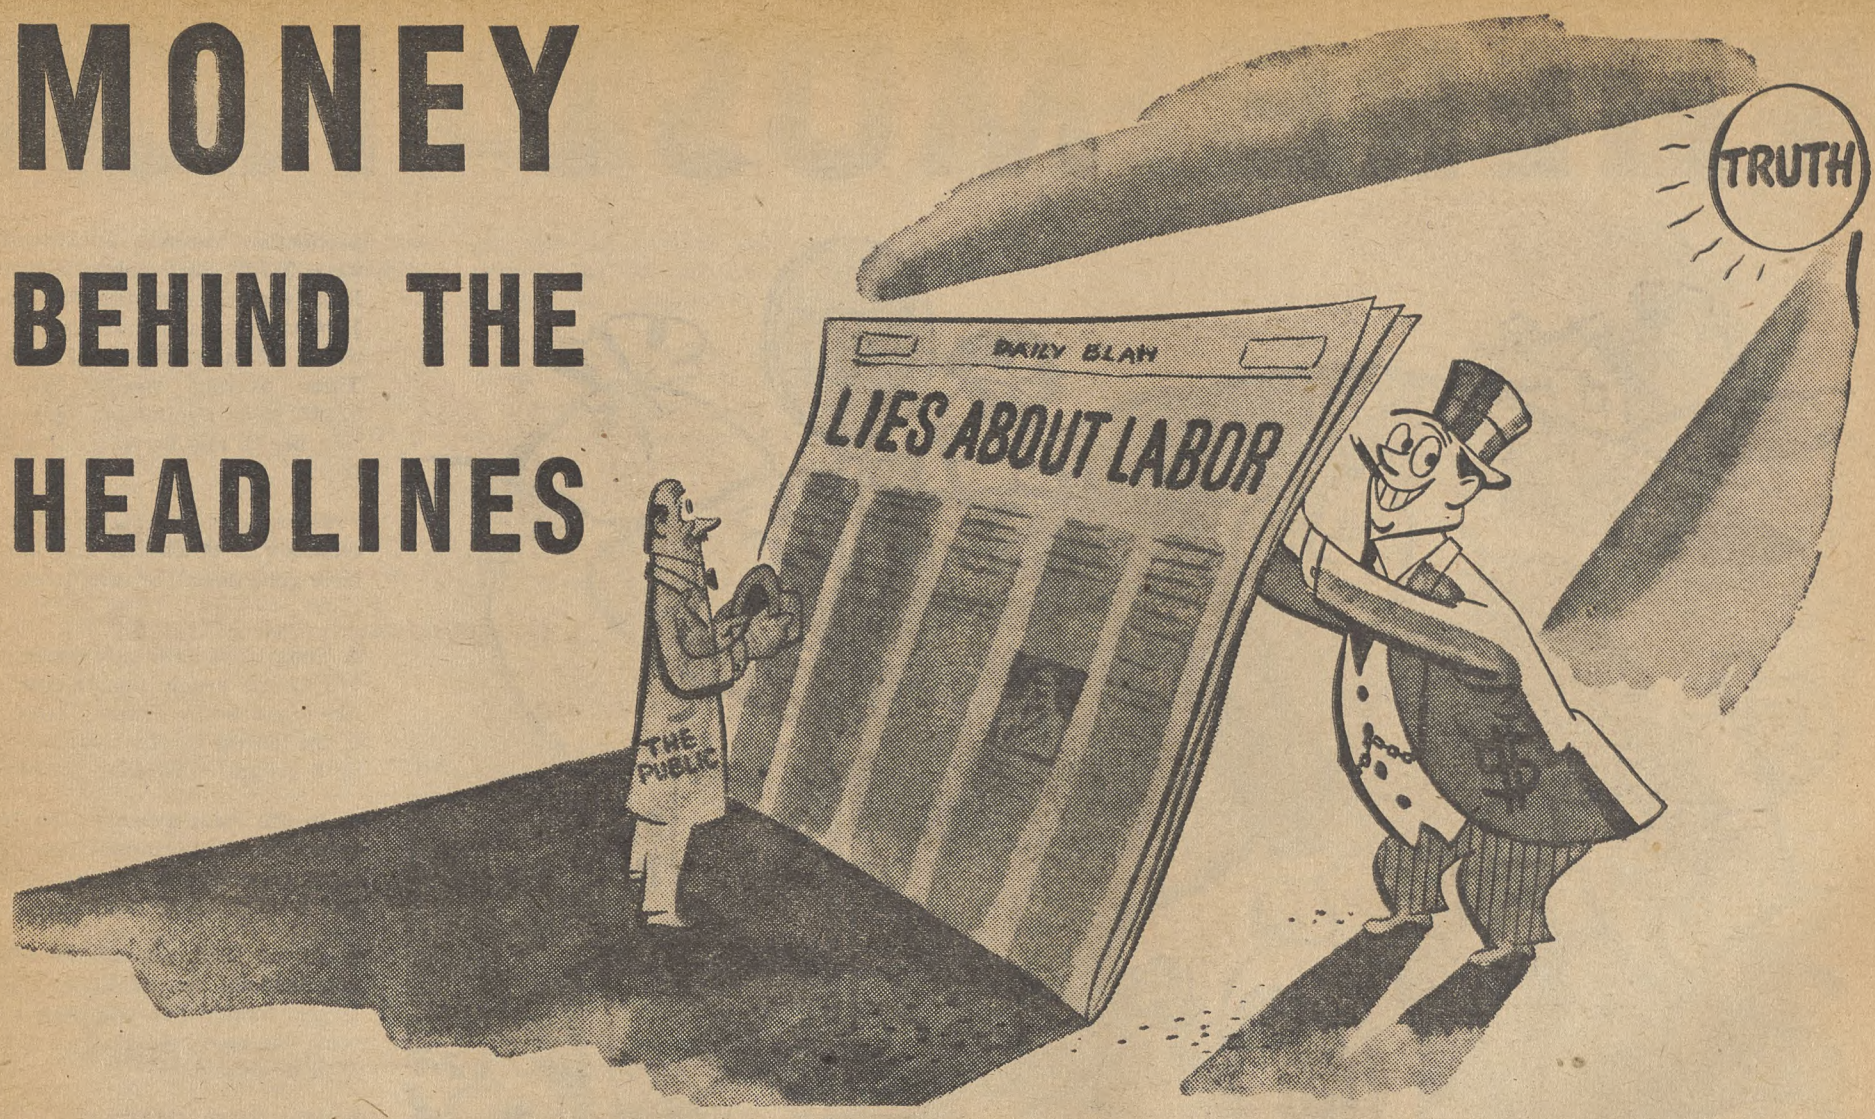
MONEY BEHIND THE HEADLINES



A vast outpouring of propaganda—millions of printed words and thousands of hours of radio time—is designed to convince the American people that labor is a "monopoly" and that its organizations should be weakened "to give business an even break."

Why is the propaganda so uniform? Has practically every publisher and radio network received some God-given gift of identical insight? Or is there another explanation for their policy of damning labor at every opportunity while carefully glossing over the sins of the banking and industrial magnates who really control the nation?

TAKE the case of William Randolph Hearst who directs his extensive chain of 17 daily newspapers from a lordly manor in the California hills. Hearst is ostensibly the owner of his vast network of papers, his International News Service, his handful of radio stations, his American Weekly Sunday magazine supplement and a few magazines. But a close look into Hearst's financial ties shows otherwise.

Sitting as a director of the Hearst Consolidated Publications is Henry S. MacKay, Jr., a lawyer. MacKay is also, it happens, a director of the Pacific Mutual Life Insurance Co. The chairman of the $319 million insurance outfit is A. N. Kemp who flies across the country to attend meetings of the Chase Natl. Bank board of directors.

The Chase National Bank chairman is Winthrop W. Aldrich, brother-in-law of John D. Rockefeller, Jr. Also on the Chase board is Bertram Cutler, a very close buddy of Rockefeller who is also a director of the Radio Corp. of America, and the Natl. Broadcasting System.

When Rockefeller's Standard Oil plants are being organized, is it any wonder that Hearst's press flashes pink and red at the mere thought of oil workers getting together to increase their wages and living standards?

Or when Rockefeller's brother-in-law, Aldrich who is also president of the Int. Chamber of Commerce, voices an opinion, is it any wonder that the Hearst press spreads it around with typical Hearstian gaudiness?

CHECKING the directorates of other large information enterprises reveals, in most cases, the close financial tie-ups of the newspapers, radio, movies and magazines with the giants of industry and banking.

Frank Gannett, publisher of 21 newspapers and owner of seven radio stations, is tied to Morgan's apron strings. One of the Gannett chain's directors is T. J. Hargrave, president of Eastman Kodak Corp., and holding a seat on the Eastman Kodak Board is J. F. Bell, chairman of General Mills Corps., the giant cereal and grain combine.

On the board of directors of General Mills is H. S. Sturgis, a vice-president of the First Natl. Bank of New York which outranks Chase Natl. Bank in size and influence. First Natl. Bank Pres. Alexander C. Nagle is also a director of U. S. Steel, and on the U. S. Steel board are a couple of J. P. Morgan partners, with Thomas S. Lamont as chief Morgan man.

So when Morgan's Big Steel opens it perennial fight agaist the CIO Steelworkers, Gannett is right on tap with his big guns. Morgan rolls out the ammunition and Gannett fires it. Gannett also operates a secret weapon, a backdoor fascist outfit called the Committee for Constitutional Government which is now bombarding the market with anti-Wagner Act propaganda.

JOHN Knight, publisher of four large daily papers, one of them the Chicago Daily News which he purchased for a million dollars two years ago, is also tied with Morgan's string.

A director on Knight's papers is John Stuart, chairman of Quaker Oats Co. One of Quaker Oats directors is Edward L. Ryerson, chairman of the Inland Steel Co. board and also a director of the New York Life Insurance Co., one of the largest insurance firms in the country. Ryerson's associate on the insurance company's board is Charles D. Dickey, a top man in the $30 billion Morgan monopoly.

This is the second of two articles exposing the financial tieups of the publishing industry. Behind the headlines are men whose interests are basically anti-labor.

Lester Armour of the meat packing Armour's also is dealt in on the Quaker Oats board and that could account for Knight's Chicago Daily News opposition to the CIO Packinghouse Workers. In addition Rawleigh Warner, a director of the City Natl. Bank of Chicago, also is represented on the Knight board of directors.

ARTHUR Hays Sulzberger, publisher of the New York Times, holds hands with both the Rockefeller and Morgan interests. Sulzberger is a trustee on the Rockefeller Foundation in which big industrialists such as Walter S. Gifford, president of American Telephone & Telegraph, are enthroned.

Sulzberger is also a director of the Spruce Falls Power and Paper Co. which is owned jointly by the Times and the Kimberly-Clark Co. On the Kimberly-Clark board of directors is John M. Hancock, a director of the City Bank Farmers Trust Co., affiliated with the Natl. City Bank of New York.

Directors of the National City Bank are G. H. Milliken. president of Deering, Milliken and Co. and a director of the New York Life Insurance Co., Gerard Swope, a General Electric director; and C. E. Dodge, vice-president of the Phelps-Dodge copper interests. Thomas S. Lamont, the Morgan partner, holds a Phelps-Dodge directorate while other Morgan luminaries shine on the GE and N. Y. Life Insurance boards.

When the Times adopts its "reasonable innocent bystander" attitude, in reality it's spinning a gambling wheel for Morgan or Rockefeller.

Such a wheel is now being spun by Morgan against small newsprint users. Morgan's partners are embedded in the Natl. Paper Co., the largest producer of newsprint. International has been squeezing out dribbles of newsprint to the labor press and small independent news publishing firms while shipping the greater part of its production to the larger newspaper chains.

An investigation of this squeeze play against small papers was slated by the Senate Committee on Small Business a few weeks ago but the hearings were suddenly called off under mystifying circumstances shortly before they were to start.

Ever since 1929, when the International Paper Co., was forced to give up its holdings in 10 newspapers, the large publishers have been buying their way into paper mills. The New York Times has its mill. Hearst has the Pejepscot Paper Co. in which Herbert Hoover had a large interest. Gannett. who once borrowed $2½ million from International to help finance four of his papers, still has credit with International.

One of the papers International was forced to sell was the Boston Herald-Traveler. It was snapped up by a group of Boston industrialists and bankers headed by S. W. Winslow, Jr., chairman of the United Shoe Machinery Co. board. J. L. Hall, the paper's vice-president, is a director in Westinghouse Electric, and Westinghouse is classified by the Senate Small Business Committee as being under the influence of Mellon millions.

TWO big chains, Scripps-Howard and McCormick-Patterson, are closed corporations. Though they are big business by themselves, their ties with bigger business haven't been exposed in any black and white financial statements usually published by other industrial firms.

Scripps-Howard is a family affair that is supposed to go, in 1952, to the grandsons of E. W. Scripps, founder of the chain. Roy Howard, guided by Napoleonic concepts of his power, now directs the 19-paper chain, its United Press and a couple of feature and photo syndicates. A cohort of his, William G. Chandler, is president of the American Newspaper Publishers Association, the NAM of the press.

The McCormick-Patterson trio of papers, the N. Y. Daily News, Chicago Tribune and Washington Times-Herald, is also a family affair, operated by a brace of cousins.

The News and Tribune have the largest circulation, daily and Sunday, in the country. They also had the largest amount of praise for Hitler, before it became treasonous to spout too much of it. And they led the press pack against Roosevelt and his program of economic security for the people.

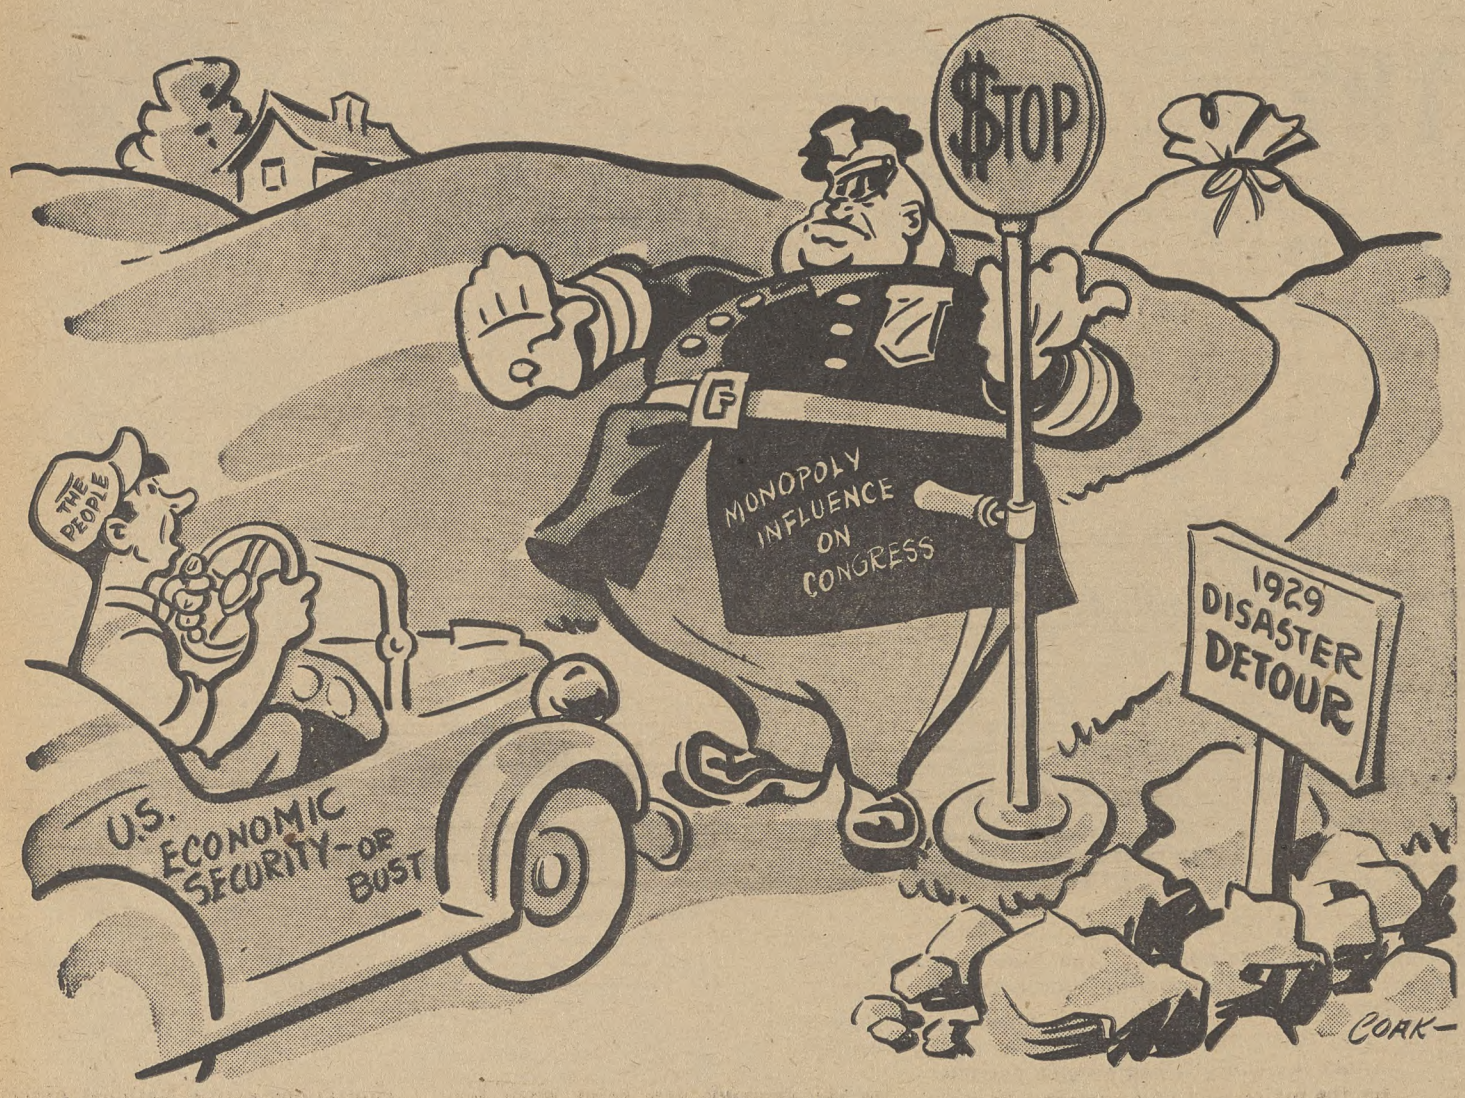
THERE MUST NOT



Prosperity and low wages don't ride the same bus. Some employers can't see this. They want to keep wages down while profits soar. They have influenced certain Congressmen to support their position . . . to help weaken unions . . . to undercut sharply labor's power to bargain for higher pay. If this happens, government will be taking an active role in pushing the nation toward another 1929 depression. Why this is so was developed by CIO Pres. Murray in testimony filed with the Senate Labor Committee this week. Excerpts from it follow.

FOR MANY months the American people have been subjected to a barrage, by speech, by press, by radio and by Congressional proposal—all seeking to show that the major ills of our nation are attributable to one group, to one class—labor. It is argued that national salvation lies in subjecting this culprit to all sorts of limitations, curbs, restrictions, in the public interest.

Before debating how far down the road we are to go, isn't it fair to ask whether we are on the right road at all?

If we are to establish an American economy of continuing full production and full employment, we must reverse the trends of the year and a half since V-Day. Unrestrained monopoly in finance and in industry is generating this trend. We must restore a balance within our national economy which will make possible a continuing expansion of our national income and its equitable distribution.

Our reconversion from war to peace has been dangerously lopsided, thus strengthening the position of those forces working toward monopoly and weakening the ability of workers, farmers, and independent businessmen, professional and white-collar workers to re-establish an equilibrium.

The time is very late, but it is not too late. We can achieve an expanding peace-time economy of full production and full employment by measures of co-operation between industry, labor and agriculture which run directly counter to the present drift. But Congress must make clear to the people of this country that it will not tolerate the efforts of monopoly to defeat the possibility of achieving such cooperation.

We cannot move far down the road of punitive legislation against labor inspired by monopoly industry and invoked by the legislative arm of government without disastrous consequences. These measures are forerunners of a serious depression involving all Americans.

HERE IN American which spent $2 billion to produce the atomic bomb, millions of men, women and children are living far below the levels of health and decency.

This is the problem to which, I submit, we must address our immediate attention. I therefore urge you to consider in more detail what the situation is today.

Here are some of the signs of danger in our situation:

Profits, after all taxes, are running far above even the high wartime levels set by leading corporations. At the same time take-home pay is below wartime levels while living costs, already at record highs, are still rising. And to complete the picture, the trend toward monopolistic control of our economy was accelerated during the war and proceeds apace today.

The President has estimated corporation profits for 1946, the first full peacetime year, at twelve billion dollars. This is approximately two billion dollars higher than the highest peacetime year. For 1947, estimated profits before taxes for all manufacturing corporations are $15.5 billion.

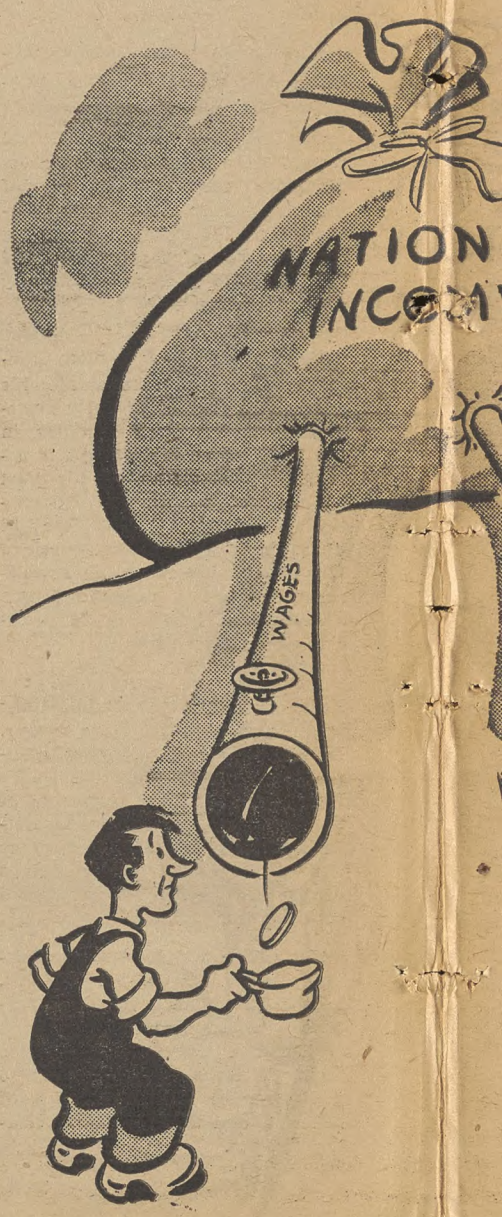
Meanwhile, the share of the national income going to wage and salaries has declined from 68% in the 1942-45 period to 62.5% in 1946, with a correspondingly larger share of the national income going to business. Consumer income must rise by $22 billion above the level of the third quarter of 1946 if the goods coming into the market are to find buyers.

Despite the wage increases of early 1946, the average weekly earnings of production workers in manufacturing were $45.83 in October 1946, or $1.47 lower than the January 1945 level. These 1946 wages could purchase only $39.27 worth of merchandise of 1945 dollars. These average weekly earnings are $24.69 below a minimum budget to maintain health and decency for a family of four.

These facts indicate how lopsided our economy is becoming, and how far we have gone down the road toward monopoly:

- Today 250 large corporations control 2/3 of the usable manufacturing facilities of our entire country. More than 180 of the largest corporations are controlled by 8 groups of banking interests.
- In the steel industry, the 10 largest corporations hold more than 3/4 of the ingot capacity; 3 banking houses control 8 of these 10 producers.
- As of 1935, among the 200 largest non-financial corporations and the 50 largest financial corporations a group of some 400 men held nearly a third of the 3544 directorships.

CONSIDER the parallels between the steps being taken today by industry and government and those taken after World War I. These parallels are frightening especially because it is difficult, for me and I suppose for all of us, to imagine the consequences of another depression and another world war.



T BE ANOTHER '29!

The 1920's witnessed several developments which in sum total contributed mightily to the crash of 1929:

1. A savage uncontrolled onslaught on the labor unions. This was an era of unbridled use of discrimination, the labor spy, flagrant provocation, company police, black lists and every other weapon in the arsenal of employers to cripple old organizations and prevent new ones. This open-shop drive of the early '20's led to a decline from a little over 5 million trade union members in 1920 to about 3,400,000 in 1929. Unions in basic industries were almost universally suppressed.

This was in part accomplished by "the judges of certain federal and state courts, who, by issuing almost as many anti-union injunctions as had been granted in the previous half-century, effectively blocked many unionization programs."

Closely related to this drive on the labor movement were two other major developments:

2. During this period of union weakness which corresponded with the boom '20's, profits of all corporations, after taxes, increased from $4 billion to $7 billion or 72% (1924-29.)

3. During this same period output per man hour or efficiency of the workers in manufacturing plants increased 35% according to the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The rise in productivity was not reflected in higher wages as they increased but 1/2c an hour per year, but instead was reflected in higher profits.

The failure to adjust wages for rising productivity and rising profits resulted in a great maldistribution in our national economy. This maldistribution led to the most drastic depression America has ever known.

MANY if not most of the dangers I have described are the results of powerful economic concentrations, unnatural and improper in our economy, which more and more shape the destinies of this country.

These powerful economic concentrations were the unyielding enemies of labor throughout the 1930's. They demonstrated during that period that they had no program for leading the country into a period of lasting high-level production and full employment.

It is important to recall that it was possible for the most important part of American industry to operate with a very substantial profit when there were still 12 million unemployed.

A computation of the profits of the leading corporations for the first half year of 1939 by a conservative banking firm estimated their average profit at 7.1%. Thus, for the first time in our economic history it had become possible for the major part of American industry to operate at substantial profit levels while a quarter of the working population was unemployed.

It is this situation which existed right up until the beginning of the War boom which today overshadows the thinking of the average veteran and the rest of America's workers in farm, plant, office and store.

OUR people learned from the war what our economy can produce. Millions of our members and their sons and daughters entered the armed forces. New millions joined our unions to wage the battle of war production. And thousands of CIO representatives served in official capacities in the defense program, the War Production Board, the War Manpower Commission, the Office of Price Administration and Civilian Supply, the Office of Civilian Defense, and the War Labor Board.

The continuing efforts of labor on behalf of the war production program were given without stint and with a remarkable adherence to the no-strike pledge. Pressures on labor and its leaders increased, however, after the middle of 1943. Cancellation of war orders began and the problem of reconversion came to the fore. Congress passed the War Mobilization and Reconversion Act, creating an Advisory Board to work with the new Director of that agency.

The machinery was never adequately used toward an orderly transition from war to peace. The failure to use and to perfect this machinery by legislative and administrative action towards these ends is, I believe, responsible for many of our present difficulties. It has led more or less directly to the demands now being made for anti-labor legislation.

Instead, throughout the war and ever since, Congressional committees have been actively pressing for the more rapid abandonment of controls on industry while maintaining them on labor. Meanwhile a host of anti-labor bills have been introduced to revise the basic principles of the National Labor Relations Act, to establish crippling restrictions on the right to strike, on the union shop, and on labor organizations generally, to impose compulsory arbitration, deprive labor of the right to any political voice, impose on unions devastating penalties for minor offences.

Congress should be straining its every effort to assure a sounder distribution of the income of our nation. You should be aware that the workers have not achieved sufficient strength to enable them to operate more effectively in defense of the national living standards, against the depredations of those powerful groups who are responsible for the situation in which we now find ourselves. We are faced instead with the danger of a drying up of the economic resources of the consumer.

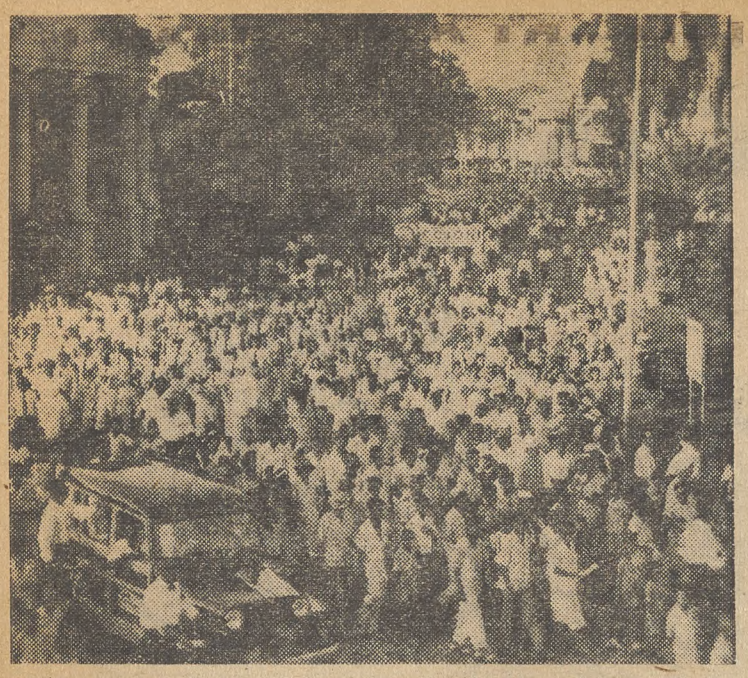
AS you consider the bills before you, it is important also that you pause and consider the exact nature of the institution which you are attacking. Do not fix your mind on the exceptions, the extreme, the occasional abuse. Remember that the legislation before you is directed against the institution itself. Trade Unionism: its form and its struggle to develop.

Yet today we actually find such organizations as the National Association of Manufacturers expressing the view—echoed unfortunately in the halls of Congress—that it is just as necessary to outlaw the combined efforts of the employees of several employers to act jointly in the formulation of decent standards of wages and other working conditions as it is to outlaw combines calculated to fix the prices of commodities. One of the bills before you accepts in full that principle.

I FEEL it important to return to those issues. The bills before you can be supported only by a premise that the ills of our economy, the ills of our nation, reflect a need—and solely a need—for weakening labor at the bargaining table, for weakening labor at the expense of management, for compelling labor to accept from management without resistance the answer "NO."

If you are prepared to embark on a program of consciously weakening labor at the bargaining table, then you are prepared to say that the strength of government must be thrown behind those employers who are today prepared to protect their present and future profit levels against any demands for wage increases.

If that is your program, then we are truly embarking upon a new and dangerous era in the history of American government. Not merely will government be preparing to sit by and permit a repetition on a grander scale of the trends which led to the crash of 1929; government will be actually taking an affirmative and active role in impelling the country in the direction of such a catastrophe.



Approximately 20,000 U. S. government employes in the Panama Canal Zone celebrated the six-month anniversary of the founding of the CIO Public Workers in the zone. Two parades were held, one at Bilboa and other at Colon. About 12,000 took part in the Bilboa parade shown here.

BOSS-MADE INCIDENT PANICS TENN. ASSEMBLY

THE day bfore the Tennessee Senate voted this week for a bill to outlaw the closed shop, a union-hating firm created an incident that aided in the passage of the measure by both Houses.

The incident occurred at the Dickson shirt plant of Henry I. Siegel, where Vice-Pres. Gladys Dickason of the CIO Clothing Workers said an attempt was made to move goods in violation of an agreement made by management with the U. S. conciliators.

Workers at the plant, members of the CIO Clothing Workers, who have been on strike since Dec. 10, attempted to stop the trucks, but were restrained by U. S. deputy marshals. An hysterical legislature overlooked the facts and passed the bill to outlaw the closed shop.

This is not the first time that the Siegel firm made news. Last month a mob believed to have been inspired by anti-union companies broke up a picket line at another plant of the concern at Bruceton, near Dickson and ordered two Clothing Workers women organizers to leave town. Just last week a car driven by another ACA organizer was riddled with bullets in the Dickson area.

The ACW in Feb., 1943, won an NLRB election at the Dickson plant, but mangement resorted to every subterfuge to avoid collective bargaining and did not sign a contract until Nov., 1945. The strike occurred when the firm failed to negotiate a new contract.

Miss Dickason said that Siegel refussed to send bona fide negotiators from N. Y. City, firm headquarters, pleading that he could not make the trip because he was sick,

One of the things that enraged the Dickson plant workers, mostly women, was that they were forced to buy $100 worth of stock in the Bruceton plant, $5 being deducted from every pay envelop, ACW officials said.

Textile Workers

WIN $3 MILLION HIKE FROM 2 DIXIE FIRMS

A 10% wage increase that will put nearly $3 million a year more into the pay envelopes of 15,000 employes of the Dan River Cotton Mills at Danville, Va., and the Marshall Field Mills at Spray, Leaksville, and Draper, N. C., was negotiated this week by the CIO Textile Workers.

TWUA Executive Vice-Pres. George Baldanzi said the increase, which is subject to the ratification of the local unions, is expected to set the pattern for southern textile workers generally.

The raise amounts to an average increase of about 9c an hour and will boost its average straight-time hourly earnings from 86c an hour to 95c The average straight-time hourly wage of southern cotton textile workers was 39c an hour when the union started organizing textile workers in 1937.

"The successful conclusion of these negotiations virtually eliminates the possibility of widespread strikes in the southern textile industry," Baldanzi said. "In our opinion this increase for 10,000 workers in the Dan River mills and the 5,000 in the Marshall Field mills will become a south-wide pattern in a very short time.

"It is gratifying to be able to announce these increases. Although many obstacles had to be overcome, both the union and the mills stuck doggedly to their negotiations. The result is further proof that when both sides approach the collective bargaining table with a clear understanding of each other's problems and a will to make collective bargaining work, there are few problems that cannot be resolved.

"With the new southern textile wage pattern set, the union will enter into negotiations with employers of the other 135,000 southern cotton textile workers under contract with TWUA. We are confident of the outcome."

GENERAL ELECTRIC TALKS POSTPONED

Wage and contract talks scheduled to begin Feb. 17 in N. Y. City between the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers and the General Electric were postponed by mutual agreement until Feb. 25.

Negotiations with Westinghouse opened Feb. 17 in Pittsburgh as scheduled.

Meanwhile, the NLRB this week found the Western Electric Co., Kearney, N. J., guilty of discriminating against UE in favor of Western Electric Employes Assn. A dispute between the Association, which is affiliated with the independent Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers, caused a four-hour strike of all telephone workers in Dec., 1945.

BIG MONEY BEHIND THE HEADLINES

biggest corporations, have the economic life of the country tied up tighter than a lynch rope.

They've directed the gradual elimination of competition among newspapers so that a virtual monopoly of the printing of news and opinion exists in 1,277 cities. In only 117 cities are there rival newspapers.

While throttling competition on a local basis, the newspaper publishers have been extending their monopolies statewide and regionally. Of the 54 existing chains, only 14 have blossomed out on a national basis.

The same tight hold has been established among the 11,000 weekly newspapers, 9,000 of which get the same ready-to-print material from the Western Newspaper Union. "Boiler Plate King" John Perry who runs WNU also has a string of seven daily papers, two weeklies, four radio stations and a paper mill.

Topping it all off is the Associated Press which collects and passes on national and world-wide news to 1,250 member papers. AP's directors represent the leading publishers and chains in the country.

Monopoly is plainly seeking to shape and deaden the thinking and opinions of the American people and it has all the propaganda resources of the country at its command, doing the job day after day.

WHILE labor has established a substantial press of its own, its influence scarcely touches a good-sized unorganized portion of the population. Important industrial cities still do not have any labor press to counteract the poison in the non-competitive dailies.

Yet labor is well able, through its broad and vast membership, to create weekly newspapers on a local scale. The CIO NEWS has led the way in this relatively unexplored field by developing local editions on a cooperative basis, cutting printing and circulation costs to a minimum. The development of more local editions is possible.

Other cooperative editing and printing firms, privately owned, are now operating in New York, New Jersey and Georgia. Many state CIO Councils are publishing statewide papers and many local CIO unions have papers of their own. These are mere scratches on the nation's surface.

If there is any force that will loosen the monopolistic grip on the daily and weekly press, it is labor's efforts to support and broaden the labor press that will do it.

CALLS PLAN TO TRANSFER U. S. WORKERS JOB CUTTING

The CIO United Public Workers this week asserted the news that 4 federal agencies operating from N. Y. City are planning to move to Washington has aroused vigorous protest from 7,000 federal employes and their families. The protest is based on lack of living quarters in the Capital.

Three agencies are scheduled to return to Washington by Feb. 28, and another by March 22. They are Personnel Research Section of the Adjutant General's office; Wages and Hours Division of the Labor Dept.; Program and Accounting Division of the Production and Marketing Section of the Agriculture Dept.; and the N. Y. Branch of the Central Office of the Veterans Administration. UPW Pres. Abram Flaxer said:

"How can any responsible government official decide to move thousands of workers and their families to an area where it is practically impossible to find a place to live? This can only mean one thing, it is a job cutting device aimed at firing thousands of employes. Those who wish to keep their jobs will have to separate from their families because of the housing shortage in Washington."

22,000 JOIN CIO IN NORTH CAROLINA

THE CIO has gained more than 22,000 new members in North Carolina since its Southern organizing drive got under way last May and "our campaign is picking up speed," State Director William Smith of the CIO Organizing Committee reported this week.

"We have won 47 NLRB elections and lost 16 since the drive started," Smith said.

"Although textile manufacturers have strongly opposed the unionization of their employes, workers in more than 50 North Carolina mills are now represented in collective bargaining by the CIO Textile Workers.

"Employes of 8 plants of the huge Marshall Field Co., in Leaksville and Spray have the TWUA-CIO as their bargaining agent. The same is true at the 2 plants of the Entwhistle Mfg. Co., in Rockingham, at the 6 plants of the Erwin Mills in Durham and Cooleemee, at the 3 plants of the Clifton Cotton Mills in Clifton, and the Chadick-Hoskins Mills in Charlottee.

"Manufacture of cotton textiles in North Carolina is largest of any state in the South, employing more than 217,000 people, and we expect a tremendous step-up in organizing activity in this industry in the very near future.

"As an indication of this, at several mills where the TWUA lost earlier NLRB elections we have since been victorious.

"Six petitions for elections in textile mills are now pending with the NLRB.

"The campaign in the state's tobacco industry has been a tremendous success. One local union of the Food & Tobacco Workers in eastern North Carolina now has more than 10,000 members.

"An all-out drive among the woodworkers of the state is under way and already three 'wood' elections have been won by the CIO at Rocky Mount, Wilson and Kinston. Four more 'wood' elections have been petitioned for.

"Prospects for a very large woodworkers union are extremely bright. The drive is now being concentrated around the Lumberton-Laurinberg-Elizabethton area and is being extended to the entire eastern part of the state.

"Response to our Furniture Workers drive has exceeded our fondest hopes. It is now centered in the High Point-Thomasville and Hickory-Lenoir-Morganton areas. Elections have been won in several plants and others are expected soon.

The AFL Teamsters have conducted a campaign of terrorism in order to force these workers to join in their Union. When the election was called for they refused to go on the ballot.

They still continue their ruthless methods which are giving the best argument for the enemies of labor. The Brewery Workers have negotiated a contract with these firms for more than 50 years. President Dan Tobin of the Teamsters professes much piety in the observation of contracts, yet permits this ruthless un-American conduct to go on. The Brewery Workers have given their answer.

Meetings have been held all over the country protesting the vicious attack on labor taking place in Congress and in State Legislatures. If our movement is to be progressive, if we are not to be driven back to government by injunction, industrial spies, gunmen and whatever, every member of organized labor and every friend of labor must rally now and protest this vicious onslaught.

Profits of corporations are soaring. Cost of living has advanced rapidly, monopolistic interests are gaining ground in their attempts to destroy private enterprise. The wealth of the nation is rapidly getting in the hands of a few. Yet, certain representatives in Congress can only see one thing—and that is to attack labor, the only force that can prevent a debacle like the country experienced in the days of Hoover.

Not one word is being said in Congress against these gigantic combines and their excessive profits. Now is the time to rally to protect your liberties. Let your Congressman know how you stand and tell him what the trusts are trying to do to the country.

CIO, AFL PROTEST ATTEMPT TO PUBLISH STRUCK PAPER

A DEMONSTRATION of 500 CIO and AFL strikers and union sympathizers encircled the Springfield, Mass., Daily News building Feb. 18, protesting distribution of the newspaper, which had appeared the day before for the first time in 144 days.

Strikebound for more than four months by a walkout of AFL typographers, sterotypers and pressmen and the CIO (Mass.) Newspaper Guild, the paper made its comeback Feb. 17 with nonunion supervisory workers doing the printing. Next day management admitted the comeback had been brief when it saw the size of the demonstration around the plant.

Springfield residents are depending for their news on today, tabloid published by striking members of the American Newspaper Guild (CIO).

CHARGE BLUE BLOOD PANEL DRAWN TO TRY FISHERMEN

THE trial of Local 36 of CIO Fishermen, 14 members — with average annual earnings of $2,500 a year — and their international's Sec. Jeff Kibre on monopoly charges opened this week in Federal court in Los Angeles.

Defense counsel challenged the selection of the jury—charging the jury panel was studded with blue blood names drawn from country club lists—and moved for dismissal of the indictment.

The government's suit accuses the local and the union officials of conspiring to fix prices on fish. The San Pedro local is composed mainly of small boat fishermen who catch mackerel and albacore for the canneries and fresh fish and lobster for the fish markets.

Viewing the government suit as an attempt to destroy their union, the fishermen point out that their system of agreeing on prices in advance is comparable to the establishment of a piece rate in a factory. It is only by collective bargaining in advance, they say, that they can avoid haggling over prices with dealers after each haul, always a disadvantage because the fish cannot keep for more than a day.

The price obtained determines the take-home wage of the fishermen, who get paid on a percentage basis of the gross receipts. The fishermen also point out that they have none of the characteristics of a monopoly since their union can not possibly control the supply of fish and has in fact encouraged production.

The question of racial discrimination was also introduced but union counsel told Federal Judge Pierson M. Hall that he would not "press the point because of lack of time and because the defendants are convinced they can prove their point on grounds of occupational discrimination alone."

A defense request that some defendants be excused until the following week when the trial will actually get underway was denied. Hearings on the move to quash the indictment were expected to take several days.

Joining in the defense was former state Attorney General Robert W. Kenny, who argued that the case should be dismissed because the government had failed to bring specific charges against the defendants.

PACKING UNION HEAD ENTERS CUDAHY TALKS

Hopes were raised this week for a peaceful settlement of contract negotiations between the CIO Packingtonhouse Workers and the Cudahy Bros. Packing Co., Cudahy, Wis., as the union's Pres. Ralph Helstein met for the first time with company representatives.

Negotiations have been in progress since last August. At a mass meeting held last week, the union's membership had expressed their willingness to strike "in order to secure the same kind of a contract covering other packinghouse workers."

1,500 CLERKS WIN BROAD INSURANCE

A liberal contract for insurance coverage providing that the employer pay the premiums for his 1,500 employes, was signed this week by the C. F. Smith Co. chain stores, Detroit, Mich., and the CIO Retail, Wholesale and Dept. Store Union.

Workers in 315 stores in Detroit will get 60% of their average weekly earnings up to 52 weeks of sickness or disability, payment of surgical, medical and hospitals bills and lump sums for partial or total dismemberment or accidental death.

PAPERWORKERS BAR ALL 'ANTI-DEMOCRATIC' OFFICERS

By Nathaniel Goldfinger

WITHOUT a dissenting vote, 250 delegates to the CIO United Paperworkers, policy convention at Cleveland this week decided to bar opponents of democratic government from positions as officers or representatives.

The convention decided to apply the CIO wage policy to the paper industry. Other convention action included unanimous agreement to boost the per capita tax to the national Paperworkers' office to 75c.

Reports of officers showed that during the three years of its existence locals have increased from 78 to 147 and the membership has grown more than 150%. The Paperworkers now have 200 contracts.

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization who is chairman of the Paperworkers, presided, but on Tuesday while Haywood was attending the CIO vice-presidents' meeting in Washington, Robert J. Davidson, former Paperworkers' director, pinch-hit for him.

Other speakers included Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers; Sec.-Treas. Charles Lanning of the CIO Rubber Workers, and Kermit Eby, director of the CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

The convention went on record for continuance of the Wagner Act without amendments and for the 65c minimum wage bill, and pledged the Paperworkers to fight anti-labor legislation.

The resolution on democracy declared:

"We condemn Communists, Nazis, Fascists and all other political parties groups and philosophies that advocate the destruction of our democratic form of government and the establishment of dictatorship. Only those who subscribe to the democratic form of government as stated in the U. S. Constitution shall be eligible for position as officers, representatives or agents of UPA or its subdivision."

Another resolution pledged UPA to "fight for full enjoyment of all rights by all Americans regardless of race, color or creed or national origin."

SIOUX CITY CIO GIVES $4,000 TO POLIO DRIVE

Contributions totaling $4.001 were made to the March of Dimes campaign by Sioux City, Iowa, CIO affiliates. Contributors included the Packinghouse Workers, United Mill Workers, Office & Professional Workers and the Newspaper Guild.

Two Steelworker's staff representatives, Ernest Mitchell and Archie Casanta, collected 22,000 dimes at a Columbus, Ohio, corner. They attracted attention by using a loud speaker hidden in a barrel.

Some Tires Are Death Traps

TIRE FRAUD: Tire Companies were called upon this week to destroy rejected tires "beyond repair."

The request was made by Dist. 1 Rep. Rex Murray of the CIO Rubber Workers, who said that certain dealers who were buying mutilated "rejects" as scrap rubber, were patching them up and selling them to the general public.

"These tires are regular death traps for those who use them," Murray said.

Murray cites one instance where he witnessed several hundred such tires being repaired for resale "at the rate of several hundred per week. This practice is being followed in other sections of the country."

PROTEST BIAS: A sharp protest on government discrimination against Negro workers was sent this week to Charles E. Wilson, chairman of the President's Committee on Civil Rights, by Vice-Pres. Thomas Richardson of the CIO Public Workers.

Richardson cited names of agencies which openly stated that they were not hiring Negro clerical workers who had become available during the process of liquidation of a Federal wartime agency.

GOP's AIKEN HITS PARTY TACTICS

A high-ranking Republican severely criticized his party this week for obeying "a little group of blind, selfish, ruthless men, whose voices are loud and persistent and whose influence is far out of proportion to their numbers."

The critic was Sen. George D. Aiken of Vermont, who warned that the country will hold the Republican Party responsible—"we can no longer sustain our claim to the support of the voters by simply asking, 'had enough?'"

Aiken declared the people gave the Republicans "no mandate to take from the American working man his high standard of living and his right to organize effectively to maintain that standard."

"They gave no mandate," he said "to repudiate the agreements which the U. S. has made in good faith with other countries.

"They gave no mandate for this Congress or the government to blunder along a diplomatic and military path which leads straight to a third world war."

With Republican leaders sitting in stoney silence, Aiken continued:

"They gave no mandate to set the railroads of America and other businesses controlled by great financial interests above the provisions of the anti-trust laws.

"They gave no mandate to cut the taxes of those best able to pay by 20%, and leave the great burden of taxes on the shoulders of those least able to bear it."

Ask Open Tax Hearings

CLOSED tax hearings, scheduled by the House Ways & Means Committee, are unfair to the public, the Committee for Progressive Taxation charged this week. CIO is affiliated with the Committee.

The Tax Committee urged Rep. Knutson (R. Minn.), chairman of the House body, to give liberal organizations the right to present their case for a program which would "help bolster the purchasing power of the low and middle income groups which has been drastically cut by the inflationary rise in living costs."

The Tax Committe pointed out that Knutson's bill, H.R. 1, "would give the bulk of tax savings to the 3% of the families who make more than $7,500 a year, while providing a pittance in the way of savings to the 97% of families who make less than this amount."

"A married man with two children who makes $3,000 a year would only get $27.40 in savings, or 53c a week. By contrast the married man making $300,000 a year would get $46,654 in savings or $897 a week."

The Tax Committee is supporting a minimum cost of living exemption of $3,000 for a family with two children.

Included on the committee are the Natl. Farmers Union, Natl. Assn. of Consumers, Natl. Lawyers Guild, Consumers Union, League of Women Shoppers and Progressive Citizens of America.

NEW BILL GUARDS RIGHTS OF WOMEN WORKERS

AN important new Women's Bill which has wholehearted support of the CIO was introduced last week in Congress. Sponsored by representatives of both political parties, including all seven of the women members of the House, this bill (H.R. 2007) aims to remove unwise discriminations against women and yet preserve labor laws which protect women in industry.

The new bill proposes that it be the declared legislative policy of the U. S. to make no distinctions on the basis of sex, "except such as are reasonably justified by differences in physical structure, biological or social function."

It calls for the appointment by the President of a Commission authorized to study political, civil, social and economic sex discrimination and to recommend legislation needed to correct it. Federal agencies would be required to report their practices on sex equality, and state agencies would be asked to cooperate.

CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan has urged all CIO unions and members to cooperate with other groups in supporting the new bill and to continue to oppose the so-called Equal Rights Amendment long opposed by the CIO on the basis that it would actually deprive women workers of all protective legislation on hours of work, minimum wages, etc.

The Natl. Committee on the Status of Women stated in Washington that the Women's Bill is backed by more than 25 national organizations and many women leaders including Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Miss Frances Perkins, Mrs. Gifford Pinchot and Judge Dorothy Kenyon.

Blast 'Bloody Shirt' Carson Nomination

A man who has achieved the doubtful title of "Bloody Shirt" because of his strike-breaking activities is not fit for appointment to the U. S. Maritime Commission.

That was the stand taken this week by the CIO Maritime Committee in opposing the nomination of Joseph K. Carson, former mayor of Portland, Ore.

In a letter to the Senate Interstate & Foreign Commerce Committee, CIO Maritime Committee Exec. Sec. Hoyt S. Haddock cited official government reports exposing "the shootings, tear gassing, planting of bombs and the improper use of city police for investigation of matters within the province of the federal government which the Carson Administration used to thwart the organization of unions and to terrorize workers."

CIO PLEADS FOR CO's

MEYER Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee this week charged that "the prosecution of conscientious objectors is indicative of lack of faith in the endurance of our free government."

Bernstein appeared before the President's Amnesty Board, headed by former Supreme Court Justice Owen J. Roberts. The CIO convention at Atlantic City called for freeing of 1,000 objectors and the restoration of civil liberties to 5,000 others.

Bernstein also pointed out that the prosecution of conscientious objectors abridges religious freedom. He said that the treatment of conscientious objectors was in sharp contrast to that accorded war prisoners, who had been freed.

He declared that the arrest of conscientious objectors who struck against forced labor was similar to the sort of abuse organized labor had suffered.

The board appeared favorably impressed by Bearnstein because he told them he was appearing as a result of convention action. The board members asked representatives of the Disabled American Veterans and the Veterans of Foreign Wars whether they had taken a poll of their members.

RANKIN BARS WITNESSES

The American Veterans Committee this week was denied the opportunity of requesting the House Veterans Committee to raise the present $200 a month on-the-job veterans' training ceiling to $325.

This led Charles G. Bolte, national AVC chairman, to charge that the committee refused to hear AVC witnesses because Rep. John Rankin (Miss. polltaxer) objected to AVC's endorsement of anti-lynching and anti-poll tax legislation. Bolte said Rankin had threatened the committee with filibustering or taking "a walk."

The CIO at its Atlantic City convention asked for the removal of on-the-job training ceilings.

Despite the committee's refusal to hear the AVC, observers believe that the prospects for passage of one of the several bills, which range all the way from raising the ceiling by various amounts to lifting it.

Gen. Omar N. Bradley, Veterans' Administrator, who suggested the present ceiling, this week told the committee that he felt that it is Congress' job to fix the ceiling.

WOMEN AT WORK

WHAT has happened to women's jobs since the war? What postwar gains have been made in minimum wage laws for women? Is there any government job training program available for women?

These are some of the questions answered in publications recently issued by the Women's Bureau, U. S. Dept. of Labor and now available for distribution.

A new bulletin, "Employment of Women in the Early Postwar Period," reveals that while women's jobs are gradually returning to the prewar pattern, some of the wartime gains made in manufacturing and trade occupations appear to be lasting.

Some of the distinct problems which involve working women in the postwar period as outlined in the bulletin are: Lack of job openings at their highest skill levels; sharp drops in earnings; low seniority rating in lay-offs because of their later entrance to the labor force; the larger number of older women drawn in during the war who want to continue working; and the desire of many women formerly employed in the household and other service fields to remain in manufacturing.

IN A REPORT on "Progress in State Minimum-Wage Rates since V-J Day," Women's Bureau Director Frieda Miller tells of postwar gains under State laws which will mean better pay at minimum levels and improved working conditions in industries employing more than a half million women in 11 States and the District of Columbia.

To date the only state which has set minimum wages for household and agricultural workers is Wisconsin. It has a top minimum in larger towns of 45c an hour for all types of employment.

Oregon has the highest basic hourly minimum—66c for women and minors employed in canning and related industries, and Massachusetts has a 60c minimum for an estimated 126,000 women in clerical, technical and similar jobs.

FREE JOB TRAINING for women in daytime or evening classes is being offered in local trade and high schools throughout the country, under a program financed by local, state and federal governments, states a leaflet issued by the Women's Bureau.

Training classes can be started for almost any kind of job provided that at least 10 persons request the same course, and attend the required number of hours.

Almost every large community offers training to women who want to work in beauty shops, garment factories, restaurants, stores, offices, cleaning and dying shops and bakeries.

Instruction is also offered in various places for other fields, such as hotel service and management, practical nursing, doctors and dentists' assistants, interior decorating, pattern drafting and household service.

Women wishing information on classes available in their community should contact their local school superintendent or director of vocational education.

"LAND OF WOMEN" is what a recent Women's Bureau report on working conditions in Paraguay calls this South American republic.

This preponderance of women is due to the long and bitter wars that have torn Paraguay and decimated its male population.

"Women are the farmers, the shopkeepers, the factory workers, the school teachers, and in many instances they are the mainstays of the family," states the report which is based primarily on an official visit to Paraguay made by Miss Mary Cannon, chief of the Women's Bureau's Intl. Division.

She found that wages in the plants she visited were seldom more than 400 pesos a day, or the equivalent of slightly over $1. Hours were generally eight per day and 48 per week.

AMERICAN DELEGATES to the first meeting of the national councils of the Women's Intl. Democratic Federation which opens in Prague, Feb. 20, will bring up the question of the treatment of Negro women in the U. S. The two delegates from the U. S. representing the American Congress of Women are Vice-Pres. Eleanor S. Gimbel and Treas. Helen Phillips. They sailed for Europe Feb. 4.

CHILDREN IN THE CAR

All of your attention is what you want to give your children—some of the time! But when you are driving the car, they must learn to take their place in the critical situation. If you will make common sense rules for them and stop the car when they do not conform they will become good passengers. They will learn that safety demands that (1) they must sit, not stand (2) they must not touch the wheel or control board (3) sometimes you cannot answer them or even look at them. A glance off the road may be costly in lives and dollars.

Sprucing Up

LEG FLATTERY

By HANNA SHERMAN

AMERICAN women are known the world over for their pretty legs. We deserve that reputation because it's true of enough of us. However, some girls—even movie stars—do have legs that are far from perfect and nobody ever notices it.

The reason: they know the art of effective dressing and make their bad points seem non-existent. You too, can give your legs the illusion of shapeliness.

A common plaint is that legs are too heavy. The new fashions, with their wider and longer skirts, are a boon to the girl with heavy legs. They are wonderfully slimming. Wear them by all means.

On the other hand, tight, very short skirts are especially unbecoming and should be shunned. On the positive side, wear sheer, dull textured hose and simple shoes.

Your legs will look slimmer too, with shoes that are not too delicate and too narrow looking. Choose a shoe of simple style, one that's not cut too high over the instep. Square or round toes are good along with low soles, platform and the wall last type.

The heel of your shoes should be sturdy in appearance, no matter what its height. Watch out for delicate French heels and avoid them if you can. Don't worry about your feet looking too big.

The wider your foot looks, the more slender the leg will appear. It's the total effect that counts.

Bow legs also look better in skirts that are slightly longer. (Choose the longest length in the mode.) Have your skirt reasonably wide at the hem line. Slanting your stocking seams slightly inward will also help to create the illusion you're after. Again avoid fancy hose and shoes.

Knock knees are obviously less noticeable when the knee is covered. The legs look prettier in skirts of moderate width. Very wide or very narrow skirts tend to accentuate knock knees.

IF YOUR LEGS are too thin, remember that they will look more rounded in light colored, lustrous hose. Low heeled shoes are especially good for you. And with thin legs you'll find flattery in skirts that fall in soft folds.

If you have one of these problems, keep in mind that the rest of your costume can draw attention away from this bad feature. Trimming above the waist will help draw the eye upward. Becoming hats, interesting necklines, do the same. Keep your hair neat looking and wear it in an attractive style. All to make sure that attention will be focused on your good points.

The thing to do about a figure fault (or any feature you don't like) is to minimize its importance. If you draw attention to your good feature and never talk about a drawback people may never notice it.

TEN STORMY YEARS FOR FRENCH LABOR

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

If you've been doing some thinking about the CIO's relationship with the World Federation of Trade Unions and want to know more about union developments in foreign countries, you'll find Henry W. Ehrmann's new book, "French Labor—From Popular Front to Liberation," a timely and informative study.

It tells the stirring story of the rise and fall of the French labor movement from the height of its power during the stormy days of the Popular Front to its disintegration under French appeasement and German occupation, and concludes with the account of labor's heroic part in resistance, final liberation and regeneration from the ashes of defeat.

No organized labor movement existing today has ever been tested in hotter fires than French labor was during the decade from 1934 to 1944, the period Dr. Ehrmann covers in his book. In this trial by fire, many past errors, bitter animosities between conflicting labor groups, and outworn theories were burned away, and formerly respected labor leaders fell to their destruction.

In March 1936 at the famous convention at Toulouse which reunited labor's right and left wing after a split of 14 years, Leon Jouhaux, general secretary of the General Confederation of Labor (CGT) told the delegates: "A new dawn rises. It shines with a brilliancy that begins to drive off the darkness."

EVEN as Jouhaux was speaking, Dr. Ehrmann points out, Hitler's troops were occupying the Rhineland. The chaos and disaster facing French labor in the years ahead through which it had to fight its way before it was again to face a "new dawn," is told in the book with keen insight and understanding.

Dr. Ehrmann relates in damning detail the record of the collaboration of big business in France with the Germans, showing how certain reactionary elements hated and feared French labor so bitterly that they willingly and eagerly became traitors to their country to get revenge on the unions.

His carefully documented study answers squarely the lie, so often repeated in this country during the war and occasionally now, that labor, by its unreasonable demands, brought on the downfall of France.

The tragic mistakes made by some French labor leaders who were led to ruin by their failure to recognize that they were following wornout theories inherited from the past and no longer applicable, offer valuable lessons for labor everywhere.

SKETCHED in the book are the careers of a number of outstanding labor leaders, including Jouhaux, the grand old man of the CGT, whose union record extends over a period of 50 years, and who came through the stormy decade unbowed. Turned over to Hitler's forces by the Vichy government in 1941, Jouhaux was released from a German prison camp after the liberation of France, and today is one of the vice-chairman of the WFTU.

The original draft of this study of French labor was done in connection with a research project conducted by the Graduate Faculty of the New School for Social Research. Later it was revised, enlarged and published by the Institute of World Affairs as one of a series of investigations dealing with problems of European reconstruction.

CIO BUYS BLANKET BUNDLE

THE National CIO Community Services Committee has purchased 2,500 of CARE's new blanket packages for distribution to CSC's labor trustees in Czechoslovakia, announces Leo Perlis, director of the Committee. Total cost of the order was $25,000.

CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe) introduced the new blanket package for Europe recently at a special conference at the New York Dress Institute. Men's women's and children's clothes, fashioned out of the blankets by top American designers, were shown.

Each CARE blanket package contains two all-wool blankets from Army surplus. Due to the shortage of sewing materials abroad, each parcel contains a pair of scissors, package of needless, thread, safety pins and thimble. In addition two pairs of composition heels and soles with nails are included.

Total cost of the package is $10. Orders for these packages can be sent with check or money order to CARE, 50 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y. CIO members can place orders through the CIO Community Service Committee, 1776 Broadway, N. Y. 19, N. Y.

A STUDY OF UNIVERSITIES AND LABOR

A valuable aid for CIO unions and Councils which have been cooperating with schools and colleges in sponsoring courses for workers is a study by Caroline F. Ware, "Labor Education in Universities," issued by the American Labor Education Service.

In general these programe fall into five principal types—resident programs for one or two semesters; resident institutes ranging from a wek-end to six or eight weeks; weekly classes held at an academic center; extension classes and programs in the union hall, neighborhood school or other convenient place; and special projects.

The book gives a brief description of various programs of these types, including those sponsored by CIO unions, and lists in the appendix all those held in the academic year 1945-46.

CIO Teacher On Town Meeting Program

New Film

ARE FISHERMEN WORKERS?

A new film, "The Case of the Fishermen," showing the hard, grinding toil of the workers of the sea, will be introduced in whole or in part as evidence on behalf of the CIO Fishermen & Allied Workers of America at the anti-trust trial against the union, which opened Feb. 18 in Los Angeles.

The Dept. of Justice has charged the fishermen with engaging in monopolistic practices.

Going to the heart of the Government's case which hinges on the question of whether fishermen are businessmen or workers, this two-reel, 16mm sound film tells the story of a typical fishing trip made by the America II, a union boat from San Pedro, California. The shots of the hardships and grueling nature of fishing and the close-ups of the kind of men who follow it give a convincing negative answer to the claim that they are "businessmen."

Shots of CIO Counsel Lee Pressman explaining what constitutes real monopolies give the legal aspects of the case. Examining the main points in the monopoly charges, Pressman holds that the fishermen are exonerated on every count.

Union Films produced this movie. Price of "The Case of the Fishermen," is $45 for sale to unions; $10 for rental. For further information write Union Films, 1908 Eye St., N. W., Washington, D. C.

NEW PRICE RECORD!

THE high cost of living is still going up! The Bureau of Labor Statistics this week reported that wholesale prices hit a new postwar peak during the week ending Feb. 15.

The new price level (which will soon be reflected in retail price increases) was:

- 33.5% higher than for last year.
- 66.4% above 1937.
- 50% above 1929.

The Bureau said the wholesale price level is 143.1% of the 1926 price average.

The rise was principally due to higher prices for agricultural products, led by livestock, grain, poultry, fruits, vegetables and cotton, according to the BLS.

10 MILLION FACE LOSS OF WAGE-HOUR RIGHTS

THE House Judiciary Committee this week voted to wipe out the rights of about 10 million workers under the Wage-Hour Law.

The Committee, which was discussing legislation to outlaw portal pay, approved an amendment to the law which would allow employers and employes to negotiate compromise settlements of wage claims.

While 10 million organized workers covered by the Wage-Hour Law need not unduly fear the provision, the 10 million unorganized workers would find the law had become meaningless, according to Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.).

Celler said the clause which would ban any floor on settlements would allow an employer to put an extra $10 in the pay envelope of a worker who might be entitled to much more, along with a release form for the worker sign. Result: injustice.

ON the Senate side, a subcommittee of the upper house's Judiciary Committee allowed a three-year limit on claims, but also barred portal suits and hedged them with restrictions which will make them unprofitable. The hedging was "insurance" against the possibility that the Supreme Court might declare unconstitutional the outright ban.

The bill would outlaw present claims arising from work or travel performed outside the working day, as understood by custom or contract, and would bar future claims.

RENT CONTROL IN PERIL DUE TO BUDGET CUT

HOUSE Republicans cut President Truman's 1948 budget by six billion dollars this week, thereby imperiling vital public services, including the entire rent control program

The vote was 239 to 159. Twelve Democrats voted with 227 Republicans for the cut. One Republican, 157 Democrats and one American-Labororite voted against it.

The vote followed another earlier in this week, with the House approving by 320-25 the so-called Urgent Deficiency Appropriation Bill. The bill not only cut the appropriations requested by serveral government agencies but demanded that the Office of Price Administration return to the Treasury nine million dollars previously reported.

OPA officials have stated that if the Senate upholds the House action, the OPA will be unable to maintain rent control, sugar rationing or any of the few functions still left to that agency.

Removal of rent control by failure to appropriate funds would undercut the people's fight to protect themselves from proposed blanket 10 to 15% increases, and would leave them open to mass evictions by landlords who would thumb their noses at the law.

Warn Rent Hike Would Hit Trade

It's plain business common sense to fight for rent control, employers are advised in a business tipsheet issued by Prentice-Hall, Inc.

The biggest threat to profits in the near future, the publication says, "is the likelihood of a general adjustment in rent ceilings that would raise the nation's rent bill about 10-15%."

"Quite apart from the merits of the landlords' case for higher income, taking an extra $500 million from consumers every month for rent is sure to dent sales and bend prices for many consumer goods," it warns.

TENANTS MAY APPEAL OPA EVICTION OKAYS

TENANTS in rent control areas throughout the nation were benefited this week by an OPA regulation outlining their right to appeal if the area rent office should okay their landlord's application for a certification of eviction.

The OPA regulation flowed directly from a Jan. 20 U. S. Supreme Court ruling that a group of determined New Yorkers were within their rights in protesting eviction by appealing to a higher echelon within OPA.

From now on, any tenant whose landlord has been given a certification of eviction may file an appeal with the OPA regional office, of which there are eight in the U. S. If the application is filed within 30 days, the tenant gets an automatic stay of his eviction until 30 days after a decision has been made on his appeal.

If he is turned down by the regional body, he may still appeal to OPA's national office, and beyond that to the five-man emergency Court of Appeals in Washington. OPA warns, however, that the regional office may turn down an appeal if it is "frivolous, dilatory or not made in good faith."

Another important regulation now provides that a tenant will be notified and brought before the proper appeal body to explain his side of the story when the landlord appeals a turndown on his application for certificate of eviction.

But in all cases, OPA cautioned, landlords must proceed under state law, and OPA certificates merely state that the contemplated eviction does not violate the rent control laws.

Landlords, the agency said, never had to clear evictions with OPA for such cases as non-payment of rent, committing a nuisance or using the rented dwelling for immoral purposes.

Committee Action

VETERANS' PAY HIKE

THE House Veterans Committee this week approved a bill to boost the ceiling for monthly salaries for on-the-job training from $175 to $250 for veterans with no dependents, from $200 to $325 for veterans with one dependent, and from $200 to $350 for veterans with more than one dependent.

Subsistence rates of $65 a month for no dependents and of $90 for one or more dependents for veterans studying under the GI Bill remained unchanged under the bill.

Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee—like the representatives of the American Veterans Committee—this week was denied the opportunity to ask that all limits be lifted for on-the-job training ceilings and that subsistence payments for veterans be increased.

When the committee decided to bar the AVC it ruled that only veterans' organizations would be permitted to testify. Rep. Rankin (Miss. polltaxer) who is able to muster enough votes to control the committee even though he is not chairman, argued that the AVC is not a veterans organization because it admits former members of the Merchant Marine.

Aid to Vets Praised

A SPEECH by Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee in which he declared that the CIO seeks to champion the veterans' job rights drew the applause of the American Legion Employment Conference at Washington, D. C.

The meeting was in contrast to previous Legion Employment Conferences where there were sharp differences of opinions over seniority between the CIO and the Legion.

That issue was settled by the U. S. Supreme Court, which upheld the CIO's position that a veteran is entitled to seniority equal to all the time he spent in the service. The Legion wanted to give the veteran a job without respect to other workers' length of service.

BERNSTEIN pointed out that the Steelworkers are seeking to obtain contracts providing that a veteran shall be given the same wage rate promotions, and other benefits he would have received had he not gone away; training to enable him to do his job, and a leave of absence to study.

Another objective is to provide that a disabled veteran shall not be "bumped" from his job by anyone. Bernstein said that such a contract had just been negotiated by the Steelworkers this week.

Bernstein declared in his speech that 39.1% of the employes in the nation's steel mills —201,488—are veterans, and that one-fourth of the CIO's members are ex-servicemen.

"You mean the Republicans haven't ended rent control yet?"

LAND GRAB WOULD ROB NATION OF $13 BILLION

THE cattlemen's and the sheep growers' lobby is on the loose. Their objective is to buy 266,611,300 acres of U. S. forests and grazing lands for as little as 20 cents an acre.

This means that the American people would be fleeced out of $13 billion.

A little arithmetic shows the proportion of the proposed "steal." In Colorado alone the land is valued at $50 an acre. Multiply 226 million acres by $50 and then by 20 cents. Subtract the smaller figure from the larger one.

The $13 billion difference is the cattlemen's and sheep growers' gain.

Fantastic? Not at all.

This scheme was aired at a meeting of the Natl. CIO Committee for the Missouri Valley Authority, in a speech by Benton J. Stong, editor of the National Union Farmer, publication of the Farmers' Union.

John Brophy, director of CIO Councils, who is chairman of the CIO Committee, presided at the meeting at Denver last weekend.

Anthony W. Smith, assistant Councils director, told of the efforts of the steering committee in behalf of the bill for the Missouri Valley Authority, which would assure that a large area of public lands would be administered for the benefit of all the people.

The MVA Bill was re-introduced this week by Sen. Murray (D., Mont.). The bill would set up a system of dams and power plants along the Missouri River similar to those operating under the Tennessee Valley Authority.

The CIO Committee passed resolutions to support the MVA bill, oppose the scheme of the cattlemen's and the sheep growers' lobby, continue cooperation with the Regional Committee for the MVA and endorse the publication Voice of the Valley, which Stong edits.

Red Cross Support

Pres. Philip Murray has pledged CIO support of the 1947 Red Cross drive for $60,000,000 through the program of the Natl. CIO Community Services Committee.

"I know that CIO unions and members throughout the nation will respond generously to the American Red Cross appeal for assistance in the unfinished task of serving our servicemen and veterans and their families," Murray told Red Cross Chairman Basil O'Connor.

Veterans of the Mexican border warfare have organized to seek pensions and other benefits. Those who served in the Army in that area between 1911 and 1919 should get in touch with Louis E. Aldrich, 131 Second Ave., West Haven, Conn., a CIO Steelworker, who is Senior Vice-Commander of the Mexican Border Veterans.

10% RENT HIKE UP IN SENATE

A double-barrelled attack on rent control and OPA moved into its final phases on Capitol Hill last week.

A Senate Banking sub-committee, after conducting several weeks of hearings, came up with 3-2 approval of a measure to grant an immediate 10% hike in rents and weaken every phase of rent control activity. The bill was drawn up by Sen. C. D. Buck (R., Del.).

At the same time foes of rent control moved to cripple OPA activities by sharply slashing funds for the government agency, already weakened by previous assaults on its functions.

At issue is the question of appropriation of needed funds to keep OPA in effective operation until the end of the government's fiscal year on June 30.

The House has already voted 320-25 for H. R. 1968, which would have rescinded nine million dollars already appropriated to OPA and left the agency with scarcely sufficient funds to close its operations at once.

Relief for the government agency came in partial form from the Senate appropriations subcommittee, which voted to give OPA 22 millions for operations and liquidation expenses sufficient to carry the agency on a limping basis until the June 30 deadline.

THE Buck Bill, which spells doom for any effective rent control, moved out of the Banking sub-committee with a 3-2 vote. In opposition were two liberal Democrats, Taylor (Ida.) and Sparkman (Ala.). Majority votes were cast by Sens. Buck, Bricker (R. O.) and Cain (R. Wash.).

The bill, which goes to the full Senate Banking Committee and then to the Senate floor for debate and vote, supercedes the Hawkes bill, behind which foes of rent control had previously rallied.

It provides a 10% rent increase at once; ends federal control in any state which passes its own rent measure—regardless of quality; eliminates OPA as a rent enforcement agency by leaving all action up to individuals, who would have to file suits in federal courts; and removes controls from housing which rents for $225 a month or more.

MEANWHILE the CIO, through Chairman R. J. Thomas of the CIO Housing Committee, warned the Democratic party leadership on Capitol Hill that it could not expect to attract workers' support by bowing to the whims of the conservative Republican majority.

"The American people have been told that the official position of the Administration . . . is to continue the present federal rent control program through OPA," Thomas wrote to Sen. Alben Barkley (D. Ky.).

Thomas pointed out that leading spokesmen of the Democratic party were conspicuously missing from the small group of 25 Congressmen who voted to keep OPA in business.

'Unity' Says Green, 'But Only on AFL Terms'

THE AFL wants "organic unity" with CIO before it will consider a united campaign against anti-labor legislation.

That was the gist of a letter sent this week by AFL Pres. William Green to CIO Pres. Philip Murray. The letter was in reply to one from Murray urging joint action against bills to cripple labor.

Green also turned down a suggestion that jurisdictional disputes be discussed by him and Murray with the Senate Labor Committee. Murray had advanced the plan with the hope of reaching an agreement which would eliminate them.

Meanwhile, Congress has before it over 200 bills designed to weaken unions, and a third of the state legislatures either have passed or are considering anti-labor legislation.

Green said that until organic unity is achieved, "no good purpose will be served by attempting to deal with a vital problem in a temporary and make-shift way."

Murray, however, had called for "putting first things first." He said last week:

"Any program which comprehends the perfection of organic unity comprehends extended discussion over a considerable period of time.

"The immediate situation is what we are concerning ourselves about—to unite to formulate a program of common action to combat anti-labor legislation."

CIO Board Meets March 13-14

The CIO Executive Board will meet at Washington, D. C., March 13 and 14, according to a call sent out this week by President Murray and Secretary-Treasurer Carey.

The meeting will be at CIO headquarters. No announcement was made of subjects to be discussed.

Clothing Cost Up 68-84%

MEN'S clothing costs 84% more than it did in August 1939 and women's clothing 68% more, the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics reported this week.

The Bureau said cotton clothing is 127% higher than in 1939, wool clothing 60%, and silk, rayon and nylon apparel 56%.

Leading the field are shoes, men's topcoats, suits, business shirts, work clothing and socks, and women's hosiery, house dresses and rayon underwear.

One small ray of sunshine was the report that the retail prices of all consumers' goods and services had dropped one-tenth of 1% from mid-December to mid-January.

Most of the small drop in the general cost of living was due to a decline in retail food prices. This decline was almost matched by a 1% rise in the cost of clothing from Dec. 15 to Jan. 15. During the preceding month, just after price controls were abolished, clothing prices jumped 3.2%.

The drop in retail food prices, however, is expected to be wiped out soon, as retail markups follow a rise in wholesale prices—particularly for hogs, corn and wheat.

Wheat futures on the Chicago market hit their highest level in 30 years and corn futures their highest level for 27 years.

Warning to the Senate

UNION BUSTING WON'T PAY

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

USING the twin yardstick of practical experience and democratic goals, a dozen CIO witnesses last week sought to convince the Senate Labor Committee that proposed anti-labor legislation will do the country no good.

A dozen officials of CIO unions followed up the appearance of Pres. Philip Murray before committee members in the high-ceilinged Senate caucus room. They filed statements amounting to several thousand words. They cited experience after experience from practical industrial relations. They pointed to dangerous loopholes and hidden traps in the various bills up for consideration.

In effect, they said, "Why follow the lead of reactionary business interests in crippling American labor unions? Look instead, to the real causes of discontent in America — high prices, declining purchasing power, poor housing, the unwillingness of government to adopt badly-needed social legislation."

What effect the testimony had on the committee, headed by Ohio's presidential aspirant, Sen. Robert Taft, will be known in the next three or four weeks when the committee delivers its report. Hearings, in session for several weeks, will terminate March 8.

FOR the Automobile Workers, Pres. Walter Reuther told the committee that a man's wages "have depreciated" to a point below that required to provide his family with a decent living . . . There is nothing in the proposed legislation which your committee is considering that will give him that sense of security or that will avert the industrial conflict that will inevitably grow out of this situation if it is not corrected."

As Reuther hammered away at the idea that the bills deal with "symptoms rather than root causes," he clashed on several occasions with Sen. Ball, the shaggy Minnesota Republican who has beaten the drums most loudly for bills to "protect" workers from their own organizations.

THE clash with Ball, as well as well as with Sen. Taft, reached a climax when three top leaders of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers took the witness stand. From almost the beginning of their testimony, the union officials were heckled about their political attitudes and those of their union.

Pres. A. J. Fitzgerald snapped back at Ball that "we have been called communists more than any other oraginzation, probably because we are doing a good job for our members." He told Taft, in answer to a suggestion for a law that no communist might hold union office, that "I have serious doubt that it would be in accord with the Bill of Rights."

All three officials — including Sec.-Treas. Julius Emspak and Organization Director James Matles — denied communist affiliations. Emspak attributed such charges to "adventurers" who wish to weaken the union.

Fitzgerald, after repeated heckling on the issue, told Taft that he had witnessed at the committee hearing "one of the finest examples of red-baiting."

"We came here to testify on labor legislation," he said. "We had been on the stand only two minutes before you injected the Communist issue."

The UE officials filed with the committee a 54-page booklet which attested to the democratic nature of the union and charged that "powerful employer interests" are seeking to weaken labor at the bargaining table through restrictive legislation.

The Congress, before acting on corporations' requests to "translate into law any of this multitude of bills to fatten the rich on food from the poor man's table," would do well to ponder "what answer they shall give to the people when next they stand before them," the UE statement said.

GEORGE BALDANZI, executive vice-president of the Textile Workers, cited a dozen examples to show that the proposals were badly thought-out and would cause only trouble and unrest—the direct opposite of the stated goals of the bills' sponsors.

Prior to the development of TWUA, Baldanzi said, the textile industry was an economic burden on the country, with a wage-level so low that many decent employers were ashamed of the industry.

Recalling weekly paychecks as low as 15c—after deductions for rent, groceries, etc.—the TWUA leader said that wages in the woolen and worsted industry had jumped from 47c an hour to $1.16 as a result of union activities in the last 10 years.

Baldanzi, talking directly to Ball, said that changes in the Wagner Act called for by the Minnesota Republican, would hurt workers in their bargaining with employers.

He mentioned the Gaffney Mills in South Carolina, where the company has long refused every offer of mediation and arbitration, has refused to bargain, and has kept wages at a low level. Enactment of the proposals would rob the workers of status as employes, take the union's bargaining status away, make the strike illegal, and make it subject to legal action—all because of a recalcitrant employer.

IN the clothing industry, said Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, the effect of cooperation between management and labor, has led through industry-wide bargaining and the union shop to better relations and better production.

"The combined efforts of labor and management have eliminated competition at the expense of the workers through their oppression, exploitation and degradation," Potofsky said.

This "long and successful experience," he added, has led to the solid belief that the anti-labor legislation "would not improve but seriously hamper" happy relations between the union and employers.

The Natl. Maritime Union was represented at the hearings by Hoyt Haddock, who presented testimony prepared by Pres. Joseph Curran.

The anti-labor bills, Curran said, are not proposed " in good faith" but are designed to "wreck the bargaining process and to so weaken the unions that they may not possibly cope with organized and powerful employers.

TOOL 'UNION' DENIED CHARTER

THE so-called Tool Owners Union this week was denied the right to operate in N. Y. State. The "union" was called "a fascistic organization" by a State Labor Dept. board which unanimously denied its application to incorporate.

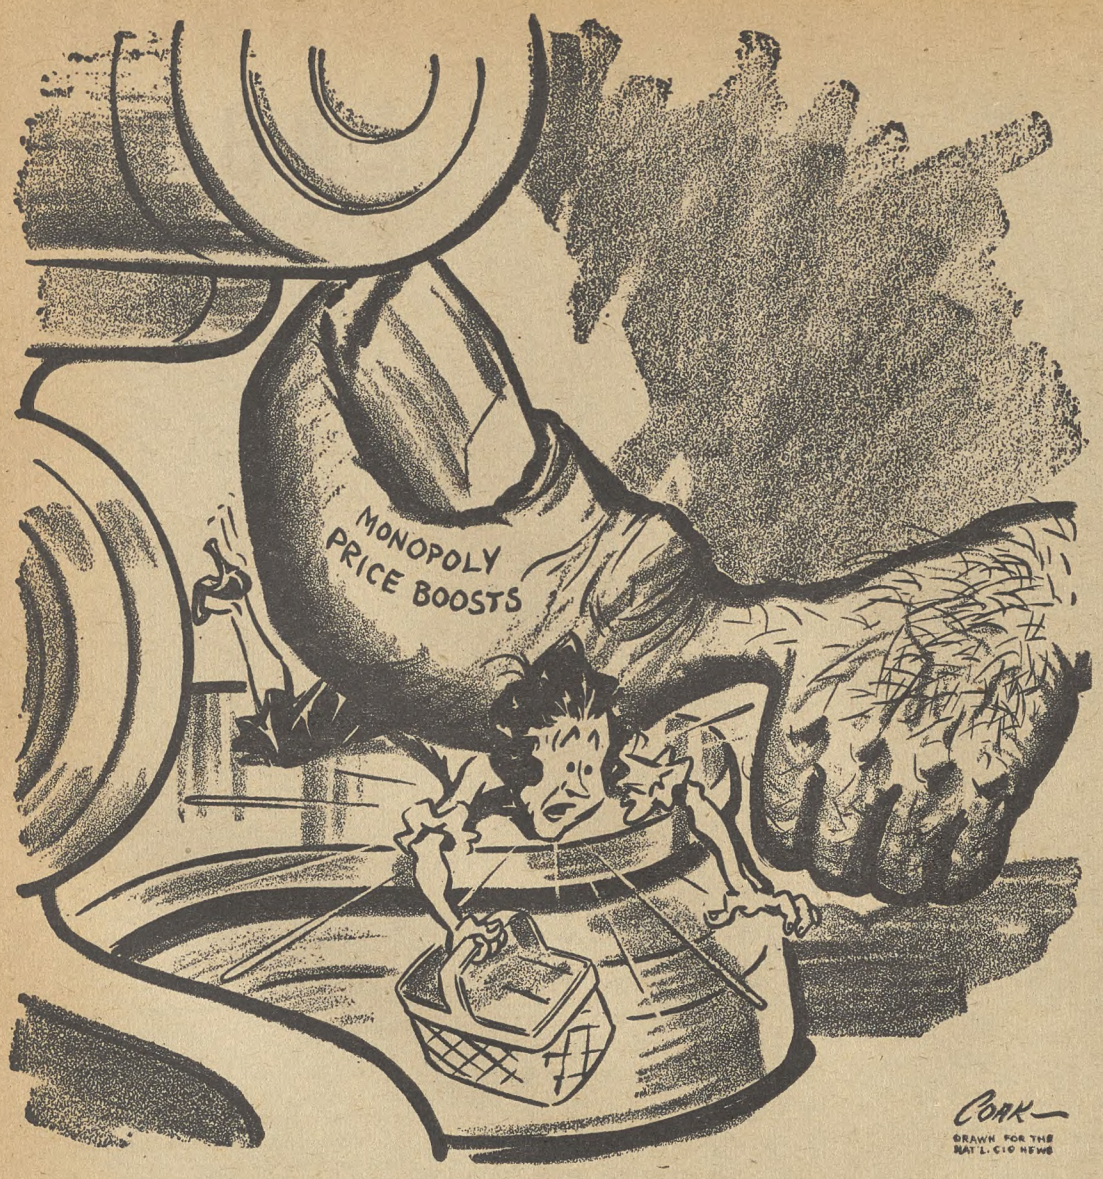
The board sharply criticized the organization's undemocratic aspects—particularly its limitation of all final authority to its three founders, Allen W. Rucker, a Lexington, Mass., economist; his wife; and his business partner, Fred H. Nickels.

The TOU has been buying large newspaper ads to push a program which union representatives testified is anti-labor.

The State has authority over the organization's application to incorporate under a law which requires approval of outfits using in their names such terms as "union," "labor" and "brotherhood."

In denying the application, the State board said:

"No more fascistic organization with all the potentialities for undemocratic action, and danger to our way of life, has yet come before the official attention of this board."



WEIGHTED SCALES

REMEMBER all the advice so freely given to labor a few months back, that it shouldn't ask for increased wages but should just wait for prices to drop?

We were told living costs were going to hit the slides any minute. And when some food prices actually went down a teeny-weeny bit between mid-November and mid-January, the papers all said, "See, what did we tell you? That's just the beginning. Now won't you be good?"

But instead of this little break being followed by a general decrease in living costs, the very opposite has happened.

PRICES have turned sharply upward on nearly everything. Last week hog prices reached new record highs, with predictions of pork chops retailing at $1 a pound. Other meat animals, grains, cotton and eggs joined in the spectacular rise.

Wholesale prices on all commodities have jumped to an all-time peak, according to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics. This foreshadows more increases in retail prices, which have already been rising steadily since January 15 and are expected to continue upward to new high levels in June.

With food, clothing, fuel, furniture and miscellaneous goods and services all on the rise, the only item in living costs that has remained relatively stable is rents. But now the landlords' lobby, with strong Republican encouragement, is hell-bent to raise rents too.

A CONCERTED attempt was made to blame wage increases for last year's price rises, despite the fact that prices were raised out of all proportion to the small increases in labor costs; and despite the fact that by far the greatest price increases occurred after the destruction of price controls, in a period when there were no significant wage increases.

When the Nathan report was published and the CIO announced its intention of seeking substantial wage increases, the greatest hullaballoo was raised that this would only lead to still further price increases.

Since then, the CIO has not yet obtained the wage boosts it is demanding. Existing contracts have been extended in steel and other industries. There have been no widespread general wage increases.

Yet prices have soared upward again anyhow. And, much as they would like to do so, labor's enemies can't blame labor for these increases.

IT SHOULD now be abundantly clear that the monopolists, once relieved of public controls, push up prices as high as the market will bear, regardless of whether or not wages are raised.

Labor's real wages were sharply cut last year, and they are now being cut ever deeper by each new increase in living costs.

Clearly labor has no other alternative than to demand substantial wage increases, if working people are to maintain anything like a decent standard of living, and if there is to be sufficient mass purchasing power to keep the wheels of production turning.

THE RECENT and continuing price increases weight the scales of our economy still further against the workers and other low-income consumers.

These scales have long been upset by what Philip Murray calls the "lopsided, discriminatory maldistribution of wealth."

While prices and profits are soaring to unprecedented heights, while new records are being broken in dividend payments, while labor productivity is constantly mounting, the real wages of the workers are going lower and lower and the consuming power of the people is decreasing.

This shocking maldistribution of wealth, this lack of economic balance, can only lead to another depression, as Murray points out, unless it is speedily corrected by increasing the wages and purchasing power of the people.

BY LEN DE CAUX

I WAS ploughing through the financial section of the New York Times, when whom should I run into but Boo-Baboon!

Boo-Baboon is the leading character in a children's story, which goes something like this:

All the animals were starting out for a picnic. But Boo-Baboon burst out crying, "Boo-hoo, there isn't going to be any picnic. I know, because my feet hurt—and that means it's going to rain."

The other animals were thoroughly alarmed. And when Boo-Baboon said his feet might get better, if he had something to eat, they gave him everything he asked for.

But after he'd eaten their sandwiches, Boo-Baboon burst out, "Boo-hoo, my feet hurt worse than ever. I just know it's going to rain and there won't be any picnic."

So the other animals gave Boo-Baboon their fruit and their candy and everything else they had for the picnic.

But each time, Boo-Baboon just guzzled it up and then complained his feet hurt worse than ever.

The other animals were desperate, until finally two children came along and said to Boo-Baboon: "Why, you big silly, your feet hurt because your shoes are too tight. Just take them off, and your feet won't hurt any more."

IN BETWEEN all the predictions on the financial pages that stocks will go up, if they don't go down or stay where they are, there runs a note of purposeful bewilderment exactly like that of Boo-Baboon.

The Wall Street wizards have been boo-hooing for months that there isn't going to be any prosperity picnic, unless Big Business gets everything it wants.

First B. B. wanted the lifting of the excess profits tax, and got it. Then it wanted higher prices, and got them. Then it wanted an end to OPA, and got that.

Next, B. B. demanded a Republican victory, which was supplied. Then it asked more labor productivity, and got production breaking all records. Then it wanted a truce to labor troubles, and got that.

But each time Big Business has had each wish granted—making its stomach bulge more and more with record-breaking profits and dividends—it has let out a new Boo-Baboonish boo-hoo.

Each time it complains more loudly that its feet still hurt—that the stock market is not reacting as it should to increased profits—and that that means it's going to rain (investors are fearful of a depression) and there isn't going to be any prosperity picnic.

THIS IS how Boo-Baboon now expresses himself in the New York Times, under the by-line of Robt. H. Fetridge:

"Since quite obviously one hardly can find fault with the present direction of corporate earnings, increased dividends, levels of productivity, or the mounting rate of labor efficiency, it is equaly plain that such factors as the foregoing are not in themselves of principal importance to investors or speculators for the time being." (Their feet still hurt.)

He even adds that anti-labor legislation, banning of portal-to-portal pay, reduced Federal spending and lower taxes have been confidently anticipated without helping much, and complains:

"The ease with which corporate profits in recent months have passed from famine to feast levels is suggestive to Wall Street of the ease with which the reverse could develop." (Won't anything stop B. B.'s feet from hurting?)

ALL THROUGH this boo-hooing of Big Business, the CIO has been pointing out that to appease its gluttonous appetite won't stop B. B.'s feet from hurting, but will actually stop there being any picnic by letting it swallow all that goes to make a picnic.

To be perfectly frank, we think B. B. just has a stomach-ache from over-eating.

As to his feet hurting—investors having a hunch there's going to be a depression—there's a perfectly simple solution for that.

B. B.'s shoes are too small—due to low wages and high prices, there isn't enough mass purchasing power to assure the demand necessary for continuing prosperity. To remove this cramping influence, by raising wages and lowering prices, is the best way to remove fears of coming depression.

Report to Truman

Cites Annual Wage Value

GUARANTEED wages on a year-round basis are "valuable to the entire nation" and should be given serious consideration by government, labor and industry, Pres. Truman was told this week.

The Advisory Board of the government's Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion forwarded to the White House the detailed study of year-round wages prepared at its direction by a special committee with strong approval and recommendations.

On the OWMR advisory board are CIO Pres. Murray, AFL Pres. Green and numerous business leaders and economists. The study, which was conducted under the direction of Murray Latimer, former head of the Railroad Retirement Board, is the most important analysis of the problem yet made in this country.

"The Board believes that the study shows clearly that plans guaranteeing wages or employment, when suitably adapted to the needs and conditions of the industry or establishment, are valuable to the entire nation and afford a whosesome and desirable means for improving both worker and employer security," the Board's letter to Pres. Truman emphasized.

THE Board letter contained five major conclusions:

1. Guaranteed annual wage plans should not be placed in operation by law, but through collective bargaining action.

2. "Stabilizing of employment and its effectuation through wage or employment guarantees, wherever possible, are matters of mutual concern to employers and employes. Each party has the definite responsibility of seeking to stabilize operations within a plant or industry in order to advance the level of general economic security of the nation."

3. Progress toward adopting year-round wage guarantees are affected by existing laws covering social insurance, minimum wages, tax and fiscal policies. All such programs should be studied with a view to coordinating them to attain the most stable employment conditions.

4. Guaranteed wages are a "significant, but not an all-sufficient tool" for developing national economic stability and security.

5. "There is urgent need for achieving nationwide economic stability so essential to our national welfare and to the establishment of world security and peace. Since the guaranteed wage is one of the instruments for the elimination of industrial and employment fluctuations, continuing study to advance the frontiers of knowledge in this area should be undertaken. In addition, government agencies should provide data and information to those interested in wage guarantees."

IT'S PRECINCTS THAT COUNT!

THE CIO Political Action Committee dusted off the stoop of its new Washington, D. C., office this week and opened for business with a 1947 program designed to activate union members on a ward and precinct level.

Meanwhile, a statement from PAC Director Jack Kroll called for intensified mobilization against anti-labor legislation pending in Congress and in many state legislatures. Kroll said:

"Full cooperation should be extended to legislative, educational and other committees and all CIO representatives working on this situation.

"Support should be sought from the community and all means of publicity employed to place before the public the fact that whenever labor is weakened or destroyed democracy is the loser."

PAC's emphasis on building ward and precinct organization was praised by CIO Pres. Philip Murray as a "noteworthy development."

"Only when the people in their towns and communities are concerned with the activities of their government on a local, state and national level, and are determined to express their desires through engaging in political action, can genuine progressive government prevail," Murray declared.

PAC's new Washington address is 728 17th St. N.W.

WORLD LABOR

REPRESENTATIVES of some 80 organizations—including the forces of organized labor—sat down with leading officials of the United Nations last week to get a first-hand knowledge of how the new international apparatus really works.

Representing CIO was Michael Ross, director of international affairs. During the course of the week-long conference, Ross explained the functioning of the World Federation of Trade Unions—with which CIO is affiliated—to the spokesmen of the other organizations.

CIO's NATL. Maritime Union last week joined in an appeal to halt the deportation of 217 Indonesian seamen from the U. S. to Dutch-controlled Batavia.

The seamen were detained in late 1945 when they refused to man Dutch ships carrying troops and supplies to reinforce Dutch armies fighting the Indonesian independence movement, according to a Federated Press report.

With Batavia in Dutch hands, the appeal to the Justice Dept. pointed out that the men will undoubtedly be punished for their past activities.

Working with the NMU on the case are the Natl. Lawyers Guild, the American Committee for Indonesian Independence and the American Committee for the Protection of the Foreign Born.

YELLOW DOG contracts are being forced on Filipino government employes by the Roxas administration, and the island trade unions don't like it.

Amada Hernandez, acting chairman of the Congress of Labor Organizations, charged recently that the government is forcing its employes to sign pledges not only against the right to strike but even to belong to union organizations.

Belief of the union officials is that if the government succeeds in extracting pledges from large numbers of workers, it will then pass legislation freezing the situation into law.

The next step, CIO leaders predict, is to extend the practice to private enterprise as well, since the unions represent the principle bulwark against efforts to hand the islands' economy over to complete big business domination.

GRAPES of Wrath, the movie based on John Steinbeck's book on the refugees of the dustbowl ten years ago, isn't going to be shown in Norway's capital city.

Oslo city officials banned the showing because American producers insisted on a tag-line pointing out that the poverty conditions depicted in the movie were not typical and were caused by "natural disasters" and accidents.

It's pointed out that more usual movie scenes of wealthy characters tripping about from swank mansions to swank night clubs and back again, aren't typical of the great mass of Americans, either—but the movie producers don't go out of their way to say so.

'Wolf' Cry Hides Real Monopolies

THE American people are being sold a bill of goods—that labor is a "monopoly." The truth is that cries of "wolf" directed against unions are a cover-up for a steadily increasing control of all phases of business by gigantic monopoly interests.

This was brought out by CIO Pres. Philip Murray in his testimony last week before the Senate Labor Committee.

Citing the cut in real wages and the rise in prices and profits, Murray said:

"These facts are in very large measure the result of the growing control exercised over our economic life by giant concentrations of power in the form of virtual monopoly.

"Have you gentlemen considered the implications of the fact that 250 large corporations control two-thirds of the usable manufacturing facilities of our entire country? Have you considered the implications of the fact that by reliable calculation more than 100 of the largest corporations in our nation are controlled by eight groups of banking interest?

"In the steel industry, the 10 largest corporations hold more than three-fourths of the ingot production capacity; three banking houses control eight of those 10 producers.

"AS reported to the Temporary Economic Committee by the Securities and Exchange Commission, approximately 8/100 of 1% of the population own one-fourth of all the corporate stock in the country and approximately 6/100 of 1% of the population own one-half of all the corporate stock in the country.

"Among the largest 200 non - financial corporations, the top of the book shareholders accounted for 60% of the common stock shares outstanding.

"As of 1935, among the 200 largest non-financial corporations and the 50 largest financial corporations a group of some 400 men held nearly a third of the 3544 directorships.

"THESE are terrifying facts. They pose the Number One problem before this country today. They are all the more significant when it is recognized that they are a product of a trend which is still going on.

"If what I have reported to you as to the present extent of monopoly control is startling, consider that the 200 largest non - financial corporations owned one-third of our national assets in 1909, 48% in 1929 and 55% a few years later.

"Consider that in 1880 the four largest producers in the iron and steel industry owned 25% of the country's rolling mill capacity. In 1938 the percentage was 64.

"I shall not burden you with additional statistics to prove the direction in which we have been moving. There can be little dispute as to the existence of such a movement. As a result, two basic economic facts of today may be stated:

"1. We are now in a situation where a small group of men controlling giant combines and combinations of interests are in a position to dictate the movemet and activities of an overwhelming portion of our entire economy.

"2. The process of amalgamation, merger and concentration is continuing today in a trend whose sigificance is best summarized in some recent remarks of Mr. Wendell Berge, Assistant Attorney General of the United States, in charge of anti - trust prosecution, who said:

" 'The monopoly problem is today more serious than at any time since the passage of the Sherman Act . . . The real source of the threat to free enterprise . . . lies in monopolistic control over our great industries. If we really believe what we constantly say about the necessity of preserving free enterprise then the time to act on this affirmation of belief is now . . . it is sheer delusion to believe that we can tolerate regimentation by monopoly without in time necessitating regimentation by government.'

"There is a peculiar irony therefore—amusing if it were not so vicious and unprincipled and so devastating potentially in its effect on the welfare of the people—in the outcries of those who call Congress to action against the 'monopoly' of labor."

The Buffalo, N. Y. teachers this week formed a united front when the CIO Teachers Union, the Independent Teachers Federation and rebellious members of the AFL Federation of Teachers walked out in a strike for higher wages. High school pupils pour hot coffee for strikers.

TEACHERS REVOLT

THIS was the week of the teachers' revolt.

Their anger against low wages—which become increasingly lower as prices mount—broke out in Buffalo where a strike closed the city schools, in Dover, Del., where half of the State's 1,500 teachers marched on the Capitol, and in N. Y. City and Georgia where strikes were threatened.

Dissatisfaction with low wages was the basis of their discontent, but strike action by members of the AFL Federation of Teachers and superintendent-dominated education associations was a rank-and-file repudiation of their no-strike policies and of their leaders.

The CIO Teachers Union, the independent Buffalo Teachers Federation and the more militant members of the AFL teachers' union went on strike in Buffalo. The AFL union did not strike, and the Central AFL Trades and Labor Council failed to support the walk-out on the grounds that strike was not being conducted by a labor organization.

The Greater Buffalo CIO Council, on the other hand, urged members of its affiliated unions to keep their children away from school during the strike.

Full support for the strike was voted by the CIO Teachers Union in N. Y. City, which has been campaigning for several weeks for a $1050 annual wage increase. The union is fighting a bill to outlaw strikes of teachers and other public employes and Gov. Dewey's plan to make municipalities pay for salary increase through consumer taxes.

Delaware teachers, whose minimum wage is now $1,680, marched on the capitol to oppose a bill passed by the legislature and awaiting the approval of Gov. Brown. The bill would set the minimum at $2,000, and provides increases of $200 to $800. The teachers want a flat increase of $1,000.

Teachers in Bulloch and Fannin counties, Ga., threatened to walk out if the state assembly fails to continue the present 50% increase after March 31. The Bulloch County Education Assn. went on record as being in favor of a state-wide walk-out.

SHOULD WIN IN A WALK

The CIO American Communications Assn. this week consented to a NLRB election March 28 to determine the collective bargaining agent for 6,000 Western Union employes in the N. Y. City area.

The choice will be between ACA and the AFL Commercial Telegraphers' Union, which petitioned for the election. The ACA has defeated the AFL union in 3 previous elections.

The CIO union notified Western Union Feb. 5 of its intention to open negotiations for a new agreement to succeed the present contract which ends March 31.

ACA leaders are confident of victory and declare that the AFL petitioned for an election solely to stall negotiations on wage increases and other improvements.

NEWS GUILD PRINTS A DAILY

THE eleventh daily newspaper in 89 years got under way in Camden, N. J., this week.

It's the only one currently published in Camden and it's not like any of the others that have gone before, for it is published by a union, the CIO Newspaper Guild. Its staff is made up of the men and the women who put out J. David Stern's Camden Courier and Post before they went on strike and he suspended publication and sold out.

The paper is called the Camden Free Press, had 10 pages and plenty of advertising on its first appearance as a daily, but it came out amid difficulties.

One of the chief headaches was getting newsprint. The country was combed to find it.

Robert McLean, president of the Philadelphia Evening Bulletin and of the Associated Press, got an estimated 45,000-50,000 tons of newsprint used yearly by the Philadelphia Record when he purchased that paper and Camden papers from Stern.

McLean said that he was reserving enough of the paper supply for the potential purchaser of the week-day Record, but a story in Editor & Publisher, which reflects the thinking of the big newspaper interests, indicates that he may be casting a wishful eye at this reserve.

The story said that "supplies of newsprint alone are a deterrent to the unleashed progress" of the new Sunday Bulletin, which was started after McLean took over the Sunday Record. The story went on to complain that the two issues of the new paper were "early exhaused." The Bulletin sold 750,000 copies of the 180-page second Sunday paper.

The anti-trust division of the Justice Dept., which caused the Associated Press to change its rules after prosecuting it on an anti-monopoly charge that went to the Supreme Court, continues to study the sale of the papers to McLean. Both Stern and McLean's counsel have been quizzed.

ROBERT McLEAN
Should Princeton Be Proud?

Princeton Univ. last week-end ignored these facts, cited McLean of the class of '13 as "a leader in the continuing struggle for a free press," and awarded him a Doctors of Laws degree.

But the Camden Free Press got enough newsprint for its 10-page paper. Bob Collins of the four-man editorial board said:

"It was a miracle we ever got on the streets at all. I don't think any newspaper in the U. S. ever got going under conditions like ours. We're a Camden paper but we go to press in Wilmington, Del., and even our copy boys have to run copy 30 miles.

"Our city room on the third floor of strike headquarters (Ed. Note: In the Camden local of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers) has no desks, no phones. To answer the telephone we have to go downstairs to strike headquarters. In fact, the editorial dept. is divided in two, half of us in Camden and half in Wilmington where Transradio has set up our wire service.

"We started from scratch—no mat service, no filler service and Transradio is geared for radio, not for a newspaper. But we have one big asset: a Helluva good staff."

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

NINETY percent of the members participating in the referendum conducted by the CIO Rubber Workers voted for a strike against the Big Four, the U. S. Rubber, Firestone, Goodrich and Goodyear.

The union ordered the vote about two weeks ago after the Big Four refused to bargain on the union's demand for a 26c an hour increase.

The Rubber Workers' 18-man bargaining committee was meeting with the general executive board to prepare an offer to the companies, as the CIO News went to press.

A local of the CIO Public Workers has been set up at San Quentin prison, including guards and other staff workers. Among demands of the new local are a reduction of weekly hours from 48 to 40, restoration of choice of shifts according to seniority and furnishing of uniforms by the state.

The first union contract in the history of brokerage was signed last weekend between the CIO Office and Professional Workers and Herzfeld and Stern, N. Y. City. The contract includes a $5 general increase in weekly salary, retroactive to Jan. 1, a guaranteed annual bonus of 7½% of net profits before partners' drawings, and improved vacations.

CIO Thrives On Opposition In Virginia

"KNOWLEDGE of the benefits of unionism is having much more effect on Virginia workers than the opposition of groups which call themselves 'Citizens' Committees,' so the CIO campaign in this state is making steady progress," State Director Ernest B. Pugh of the CIO Organizing Committee said this week.

"The CIO has won 34 NLRB elections in Virginia since our drive began late last May," Pugh said. "We have lost only five.

"When the news got around that a 10% increase had been won for 10,000 CIO Textile Workers at the Riverside and Dan River Mills at Danville, bringing the minimum wage there up to 80c an hour, there was a noticeable increase in requests for organization from workers in unorganized mills throughout the state.

"All Danville welcomes the $2 million addition to the local payroll.

"In another successful wage drive, the City of Richmond, as a result of persistent efforts by the CIO Public Workers, increased the pay of all city employes by 15%, effective Feb. 1.

"Also spurring the organizing drive are the wage increases the Textile Workers already have obtained or have pending in 10 woolen, synthetic, cotton and carpet mills in Danville, Roanoke, Lynchburg, Grottoes, Buena Vista,

ERNEST B. PUGH
Leads Virginia Drive

Front Royal, Fredericksburg, Staunton, and Waynesboro. In organized mills this affects some 25,000 workers and represents some $6 million in additional annual payrolls.

"Other than in textile mills, wages have been increased by new CIO contracts in Norfolk, Martinsville, Bristol, Lynchburg, Roanoke, Big Island, Richmond, Covington and Waynesboro.

"New local unions established as a direct result of the organizing campaign have about 5,000 members. Old, established locals have increased their membership about 2,000 since the drive started.

" These two figures, however do not reveal the true progress the CIO has been making because they do not include members in the 16 plants for which petitions for certification are pending or at the plants where we have been organizing but have not yet asked for elections."

Pugh said the elections won involved employes of automobile, brewery, clothing, tobacco, furniture, chemical, glass, newspaper, oil and gas, paper, shoe, steel, textile, utilities and woodworking plants.

"Organization is rolling along despite the opposition of so-called 'Citizens' Committees' in Smithfield, South Boston, and Altavista and, to a lesser degree, in two other Virginia communities," Pugh said.

"The 'difficult' places are being organized in due time. The 'impossible' places take a little longer."

OIL UNION WINS 22c

The CIO Oil Workers last weekend won a 22c hourly wage increase for all contract-covered employes of the Texas Co. east of the Rocky mountains. OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight recommended ratification of the proposal.

At the same time a threatened strike against Standard Oil of California, thrice postponed, was called off to permit union members to vote on a company offer of a 20c hourly raise which Knight approved subject to ratification. Other major California oil companies have indicated they would agree to settle on similar terms.

Texas Co. employes at Port Arthur, Tex., largest single group affected by the Texaco proposal, have ratified the settlement and other groups are expected to take similar action shortly.

The United Paperworkers of America last week held their first policy convention last week, which was distinguished by the unity that prevailed and the determination of the rnak and file delegates and officers to maintain such and to build their organization stronger by fullest degree of cooperation in organizing the unorganized.

The writer presided over the convention and then proceeded to Cincinnati and met international representatives of our various international unions to map out a program to give the fullest support to the CIO's position, resisting this vicious unwarranted program as is being proposed in the halls of Congress and in the various state legislatures.

From there I went to Knoxville and Memphis, Tennessee, addressing Southern Organizing Committee meetings of local unions, which were well attended, particularly in Memphis where the hall was packed to capacity. With Sec.-Treas. Sherman Dalrymple of the CIO Organizing Committee and CIO State Director Paul R. Christopher, I addressed these gatherings.

The workers were enthusiastic and pledged to establish local committees in enabling the workers to organize the unorganized plants. They also declared for full support to CIO's position against these attacks being made upon us in the legislative halls of the nation.

I attended a similar meeting in New York City which was an enthusiastic one and which was called under the auspices of the CIO Regional Office, CIO City Council, and various international organizations.

Similar meetings are being held all over the country under the auspices of CIO Regional directors. Labor is becoming aroused over these unwarranted attacks upon them, while employers are allowed to run rampant making unprecedented profits and openly defying the Wagner Act, receiving encouragement to do so by the activities of certain members of Congress.

New Yorkers Fight Legislative Threat

Support of 23,000 white collar workers in the fight against anti-labor legislation was pledged to CIO Pres. Philip Murray by Regional Dir. Aaron Schneider of the United Office and Professional Workers in N. Y. City.

The union is conducting a series of lunch-hour meetings in white collar centers to swing office workers behind the fight against restrictive legislation.

CIO RALLIES TO SAVE UNIONS

CIO is aroused by the threat of U. S. and state anti-labor laws and is holding protest rallies throughout the nation.

Rallies have been held in Cincinnati, Kansas City, Mo., St. Paul and Chicago, and in Knoxville and Memphis organizational and protest meetings were combined. Meetings are planned in Detroit and other industrial centers.

These rallies are following the directives sent out by CIO leaders, Allan S. Haywood, vice-president and director of organization; John Brophy, director of the industrial union councils, and Nathan E. Cowan, legislative director.

Plans were made at a meeting of CIO State, city and regional leaders and international union representatives this week in N. Y. City for a monster rally sometime March 15 and 25—to which CIO Pres. Philip Murray will be invited.

Haywood, who spoke at several of the rallies, warned that the purpose of the pending bills was to remove the gains labor has made in the past 50 years, and issued a call for immediate action lest labor regret failure to act for a generation.

The makers of the famous Louisville Slugger ball bats, Hillerich-Bradsby Co., Louisville, found that they could not push around their employes, members of the CIO Steelworkers. They struck this week for higher wages.

Union Shop Ban Seen in Georgia

Georgia's House of Representatives followed the Senate this week in passing identical bills outlawing the union shop and banning mass picketing. The House votes were 157-28 and 146-16 for the respective bills.

The Senate, meanwhile, 40 to 1, approved submission of a constitutional amendment forbidding union shop contracts. It is expected that the House will concur. If the governor signs the measure, the issue will be submitted to the voters.

One resolution praised Murray for his "eloquent and vigorous defense of the rights of the American people" when he appeared before the Senate Labor Committee to challenge the anti-labor proposals and their proponents.

At Albany, Lee Pressman, general CIO counsel, warned the Capital District CIO legislative conference that labor must fight for its life today at Washington just as hard as it fought in the picket lines last year.

Efforts are being made to enlist prominent people in these rallies. In Los Angeles, a jury is being impaneled from a list of 100 outstanding non-labor leaders to hear the facts of the CIO wage demands and the people's case against anti-labor legislation. A judge will preside at the trial and an attorney will present CIO's case.

PROTEST BIAS IN U. S. HIRING PRACTICES

THE CIO Public Workers, the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the Natl. Negro Congress and the American Jewish Congress this week protested growing discrimination in government hiring.

Representatives of the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People and the Natl. Negro Congress met with UPW Vice-Pres. Thomas Richardson to formulate a policy to meet discrimination, as the union issued a U. S. government memorandum showing shocking evidence of bias against Negro employes.

The memorandum sent by mistake to a Negro employe of the Wage Stabilization Division who had been recommended for another job in the Agriculture Dept. said:

"Attached are the applications I talked to you about. EXCEPT FOR COLOR—they look like good girls." The memorandum was intended for the agency personnel head.

Rabbi Stephen S. Wise, president of the American Jewish Congress, this week sent a letter of protest to Senate Majority Leader Wallace H. White, Jr., (Me.), because, he charged, applicants to his office for jobs on Senate Committee are being asked their religion.

CIO STRIKE LEADER ENDS JAIL TERM

Philip Connelly, Los Angeles CIO council secretary will be released from Los Angeles County Jail custody March 3. Connelly originally was sentenced to serve 60 days for his part in leading a peaceful picket line during a CIO strike last year. He was given 10 days off for good behavior.

FISHERMEN FIGHT 'LOADED DICE' IN SUIT AGAINST THEM

By CHARLEY ELLIS

Final arguments to dismiss a jury panel and quash a grand jury indictment on a Dept. of Justice charge of monopoly against 15 members of the CIO Fishermen's Union were made by defense attorneys this week in Judge Peirson M. Hall's Federal Court in Los Angeles.

After five days and 65 exhibits presented in support of the defense motion, Attorney Ben Margolis wound up the defense case against jury selection by drawing an analogy between games of chance and methods of selecting federal and grand jurors.

He described as similar to using two loaded dice the current practice of selecting jury panels from Blue Book lists of rich blooded society citizens. He urged use of the County Registrar's voting list which is not done now and said "no one has to pay anything to get on such a list nor do they need golf clubs."

If Judge Hall denies the defense motion to dismiss the Government's suit, a prosecutor representing the Anti-Trust Division of the Dept. of Justice will attempt to prove that the $2,500-a-year fishermen are actually monopolists.

Tomorrow's Citizens • By Rose H. Alschuler

WHEN TEEN-AGERS ARE ANNOYING

Constant nagging about the way 'teen-agers hog the family phone, dress like tramps and use slang we cannot understand, does not mend matters. It only makes these youngsters feel we don't understand them—that they are misfits in our world and we in theirs. The more certain a boy or girl is that mother and dad are on the whole sympathetic to their growing pains, the more acceptable are our suggestions and corrections. We are apt to be less sharply critical of 'teen-age behavior if we remember what we were like at that age. Our parents, too, wondered what we were coming to.

Sprucing Up

YOUR CROWNING GLORY

By HANNA SHERMAN

"WHAT shall I do about my hair?" is the question I hear most often. And there's a reason. It's the thing people notice first about us. If you fret about your hair —don't. Because you can change all that.

Nothing responds to intelligent care as obligingly as your crowning glory. Any gal, unless she has a very rare ailment, can have beautiful hair. It will take a few minutes of your time every day and the price of some very inexpensive aids to hair beauty.

Brush, brush, and brush your hair nightly with a clean brush. This removes accumulated dust and gives the hair fine lustre. Also massage your scalp with your finger tips. It's a fine way to stimulate circulation. Your well brushed hair should be shampooed every ten days — at least.

It's a good idea both from the standpoint of saving money and for the care of your hair to shampoo it yourself. Give it at least two soapings. Rinse it thoroughly and rinse again.

A softening next-to-the-last rinse will give your hair beautiful highlights and sheen. Use half a cupful of vinegar to a wash basinful of water for dark hair, the juice of a whole lemon for blond.

You can give yourself one of those expensive hot oil shampoos at home. Just heat castor oil, or salad oil and apply with cotton directly to the scalp and on ends of the hair. Then wrap your head in a steaming hot towel.

After fifteen minutes remove the towel and shampoo as above. Or cover the hair carefully and leave the oil to do its good work overnight. Shampoo in the morning. A hot oil treatment will work wonders for dull looking, dyed or bleached hair.

USE the right shampoo—especially for problem hair. For dry hair, the coconut oil type is best. For oily hair we suggest the new cream type shampoo.

For excessively oily hair physicians and surgeons soap should prove a boon. Normal, healthy looking hair will respond to any good shampoo.

Experimenting with setting your own hair can be fun. After a shampoo, partly dry it with warm towels. Then brush your hair while it is still wet. Comb it smooth and set it. When you set your own hair, you will find that big pin curls will result in more natural looking ringlets.

Whether or not you need wave set is something for you to decide for yourself. It can do no harm. Allow your hair to dry thoroughly and brush it well again before you dress your hair. A small amount of brilliantine brushed into the hair will make it behave better.

There are some things that absolutely require the services of an expert and are dangerous to experiment with yourself. Do not trim your own hair, dye it, or give yourself a permanent.

Hair care requires little but consistent effort. Ask the girl with the hair you admire. She knows it's worth it.

U. S. Report

SHOWS IMPORTANCE OF WORKING WOMEN

WOMEN are playing an increasingly important role in the world of today, states the annual report of the Women's Bureau, U. S. Dept. of Labor, issued this week.

Chief among the factors responsible for this, says the report, are:

1) The Nation's need for goods and services made and performed by women.

2) The economic need of millions to support themselves or supplement the family income.

The 16 million women in the labor market today comprise close to 28% of all employed persons. During the war women formed more than a third of all workers.

Certain industries and occupations, states the report, are almost entirely dependent on women workers. In 1940 women formed 75% of the nation's teachers; 98% of the nurses, nine-tenths of the telephone operators and household employes; two-thirds of the workers who waited on the public in hotels and restaurants; two-fifths of those who sold merchandise in shops and stores, and more than three-fourths of the operatives who made apparel and accessories.

The report also pointed out the falsity of the notion that women do not need to work. A wartime survey of 13,000 women made by the Bureau revealed that 84 in every 100 had to support themselves, and in many cases dependents also.

Monopoly At Work

PICKING THE POCKETS OF THE PEOPLE

The price of almost everything—from matches to auto tires, from vitamin pills to house paint—is influenced by business combinations called monopolies. Monopolies on an international scale are called cartels. This is the story of how they work.

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

FEW people know it, but a sinister and invisible pickpocket dogs their footsteps day and night, sneaking their money away from them in dozens of different ways. This pickpocket is the cartel.

A cartel is a complicated and confusing thing, purposely made hard to understand in order to conceal what it is doing. And yet everyone should know what it is and how it works, for the cartel system vitally affects the daily lives of practically all the people on the globe.

The stenographer, powdering her nose, before going out for lunch, is probably using powder containing the cartel - controlled chemical, bismuth.

An excellent job of simplifying this complicated subject, by putting it into bread-and-butter terms that everybody can grasp, has been done by Darel McConkey in a new book, "Out of Your Pocket," just published by Pamphlet Press. McConkey for three years was on the staff of the Kilgore Committee, one of the Senate groups which made an extensive investigation of cartels.

In the medicine cabinet nearly every item contains some element or chemical that has been carefully cornered by the cartels.

The amount of material dug out during these investigations is enormous, but little of it has reached the public in a form the average reader can understand.

As Senator Harley M. Kilgore states in a foreword to the book, "There is no lack of information about the solemn treaties negotiated among the governments of sovereign nations," but unfortunately "there is another kind of international agreement whose details and principals are never made public except by compulsion or accident. And this kind of international agreement — made in secret among business interests—is frequently of greater importance." Such agreements are called cartels.

The cartel (pronounced cartell, with accent on last syllable) is defined in the book as "an arrangement among companies in the same industry to prevent, control, or eliminate competition with a view to making the greatest possible profits. The companies involved in cartels are frequently the largest in the field, so an international cartel may be defined as a system of monopolies, usually in different countries, doing business by a series of agreements."

McCONKEY explains in terms of people's daily lives, how these international trade treaties and their restrictive methods affect jobs, prices and quality of goods.

He says:

"You can't light a match, turn on a light, dress in the morning, put on your shoes or glasses, take a vitamin pill, cook a meal, paint anything from a chair to a house, or go for a ride on rubber tires without, many times each day, putting a few dollars, or dimes or pennies or mills into the cash box of one of the many corporations which are or have been members of cartels.

"You can't bring in the morning paper without putting your hands on a cartel. Newsprint paper is tied up in a cartel, which helps to account for the newsprint shortage during the war and for many months after.

"You can't even get a glass of water from the tap without a three-way pay-off to cartels. The water is purified with chlorine, which is controlled by a cartel. The glass you drink from has in it certain arsenic compounds controlled by a cartel. And the glass was shaped in a machine controlled by a cartel . . . .

Woven about the earth is the web of the dyestuff cartel. It controls every color on every clothesline in the world.

"Cartels, with the greatest thoroughness, penetrate and cut across the lives of men, women, and children, on every level, in every home, and in every profession, avocation and recreation."

A cartel does business by a system of undercover restrictions. "It restricts everybody but the master-cartel," states the book. "Cartels make money — and keep control — by making less goods and selling less goods —at higher prices."

The capacity to produce, new inventions and technological changes, supply, and use of new materials—all are subject to restriction. Cartels conceal what they are doing by making secret agreements with big businesses in other countries, and by undercover attempts to evade the anti-trust laws.

Numerous cases are cited in the book to show how big American companies were conniving with foreign firms and making deals harmful to the United States defense program up to and even some months after a state of emergency was declared.

ONE of the strangest of the cartels described is that built on matches. The story of Match King Kreuger and the huge international empire, founded on these little tipped sticks costing the smallest fraction of a cent, is as fantastic as an Arabian Nights tale.

There's also the story of how the powerful optical cartel, through a system of patents and licenses limiting the right of manufacture, kept a rigid control of prices and forced up the cost of spectacles two to four times what they should be.

The American Optical Co. in 1920 had more than 35% of the nation's business in spectacles. By 1941 it had acquired 261 branches. Bausch and Lomb, another big concern, dictated to 165 wholesalers through control of six big wholesale chains.

Ira Mosher, who in 1945 was elected president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, that great believer in Free Enterprise, was general manager of American Optical and under indictment for violating laws guaranteeing free competitive enterprise.

TAKING up the problem of what people can do to fight cartels, McConkey suggests some practical steps that will help:

Keep the trustbusters at work. Join and work with consumer cooperatives. Press for consumer information and government research. Support a bill to control the use of patents for monopolistic purposes. Urge the regulation of trade associations.

And above all, he warns, "Watch out for an atom cartel! It hasn't come out in the open very far yet, but there are unmistakable indications of a desire to form a cartel in atomic power. If that ever comes, God help us!"

Out of Your Pocket—The Story of Cartels by Darel McConkey, Pamphlet Press, Reynal & Hitchcock, $1.00.

28 million people in the U. S. wear glasses. 34 million others need glasses but can't afford them. Domestic monopolies have kept prices high.

CHURCH HEARS FROM LABOR

By CHARLES C. WEBBER

A number of CIO leaders took an important part in the National Study Conference on the Church and Economic Life held in Pittsburgh, Feb. 18-20. It was one of the most significant gatherings of church people ever held in the U. S.

Convened under the auspices of the Federal Council of Churches in America, this nation-wide affair was attended by 350 Protestant laymen and clergy representing 27 religious demoninations. Congressmen, businessmen and professional men and women, farmers, consumer representatives and CIO and AFL labor leaders were among the 230 or more lay delegates who made up two-thirds of the body.

The primary purpose of the conference was to initiate a process of face-to-face discussion among church people who have had first hand experience in the economic order. Representatives of labor played a very important role in the achievement of this purpose.

Lucy Randolph Mason, Southern CIO public relations representative, by her insistence on the church's responsibility to help establish the commonwealth of God and man on earth, helped the delegates reach almost unanimous approval of the important statement that "the principles of the Christian Gospel are applicable to the structure of social relations, to the organization of society, as well as to the personal relations of human beings."

KERMIT Eby, CIO director of education & research, and chairman of one of the three sections of the conference, made several contributions that greatly influenced the final "Report of Findings."

"Government," Eby said (its role was much debated), "is the expressed will of the majority of the people who vote. We in the CIO are concerned with the degree of participation of people in government. We believe if the majority of people express themselves in government, that government will be liberal."

The conference declaration that "the responsibility to provide the opportunity (for all) to work rests on all segments of our society" and the conclusion that "churches should encourage their young people to recognize leadership opportunities in the labor movement to exercise Christian vocations" are in the final report because of Eby's suggestions.

VICTOR G. Reuther, United Auto Workers education director, made the discussion on "freedom" realistic by asking the delegates if they meant "freedom to exploit or freedom from exploitation." When the role of clergymen in strike situations was under consideration, he maintained that clergymen had "little right to intervene if they had not familiarized themselves, before the strike, with problems."

His observations, like those of Kermit Eby, influenced the final report, for in it we find the conference declaring:

"The Clergy should have the special training needed to secure a basic understanding of economic problems and their impact upon individual and social life. This specific training should not be book knowledge alone but should include first hand contact with individual and economic groups."

A. WHITEHOUSE, Cincinnati district representative of the CIO Steelworkers, and J. Robb, director of USA-CIO District 30, asserted that the issue of guaranteed annual wages should be dealt with both as a crucial problem in economic life in which church people should be concerned and as a specific matter for immediate action.

In consequence of their efforts, the conference declared that "it is desirable to work toward an economy which provides an assured, adequate, annual income for every family."

Charles C. Webber, Chaplain to organized labor and president of the Virginia CIO (who covered the conference for The CIO NEWS, together with Harold Fey of the Christian Century and Nelson Cruikshank of the AFL, were instrumental in getting the conference to include in its final report a statement that the churches must face up to their "relations with labor unions in church printing houses and elsewhere."

NUMEROUS attempts were made by the conservatives at the conference to get statements into the final report against the closed shop. Their efforts, however, were defeated, due in no small part to the able rebuttal by Cruikshank and Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO assistant director of research.

S. Sponseller, CIO regional director, Cleveland, Ohio, made a valiant attempt to eliminate the reference to labor as a monopoly. His efforts, however, were in vain. The conservatives triumphed on this issue as they did in preventing the conference from going on record that "the larger community cannot tolerate the excessive concentration of wealth."

Highly significant from the Christian Labor point of view are the recommendations in the Report urging Protestant Churches to:

"Develop an informed, objective, unprejudiced and Christian attitude in the approach to economic problems.

"Promote equal and unsegrated opportunity for all, including members of racial or other minority groups.

"Seek to discover and proclaim the truth about economic conditions and speak out against clear instances of specific injustices."

During a recent cholera epidemic, the YWCA organized nurses to fight spread of the plague during their off-duty hours. A drive for funds to aid the YWCA's work abroad is now under way. CIO Education Conference

A LIVELY and instructive program on down-to-earth issues has been planned for the National CIO Educational Conference to be held March 13-16 in Columbus, Ohio. Some 500 delegates representing state and city councils as well as chairmen of educational committees from locals affiliated to CIO International unions will attend the affair, which is sponsored by the National CIO Dept. of Education and Research.

Here are some of the specific problems which will be discussed:

- How to organize a one-week summer school or a one-week after-work school.
- Methods used in distributing pamphlets and getting union and non-union people to read them and act on them.
- Use of visual aids in the union. Delegates will have the opportunity of learning how to run a sound movie machine and sound filmstrip machine. There will be continuous showing of good movies which unions can use, and instruction in how to get the most out of these movies. The new filmstrip on the Nathan report on a National Wage Policy will be among those shown.
- How to run interesting local union meetings, and increase attendance and encourage members to serve on union committees; how to build local women's auxiliaries.
- How state and city councils and locals can cooperate with community groups.
- Programs for education against intolerance.

More than 100 staff people from various CIO unions will aid CIO Education & Research Director Kermit Eby and Asst. Director George Guernsey in conducting the various sessions of the conference.

Representatives of city and state CIO Councils who have not yet sent in the $2 registration fee are urged to wire George Guernsey, CIO Dept. of Research & Education, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C., by March 7 if they wish to attend the conference. After March 10 all communications about the conference should be sent to the Neil House Hotel, Columbus, Ohio. Reservations at this hotel will be made for those who register in advance.

UNION BUSTING

Oil Workers Intl. Union, the committee heard the proposed prohibitions on industry-wide bargaining and union security condemned as upsetting established precedents in the industry.

G. L. Patterson, testifying for Pres. L. S. Buckmaster of the United Rubber Workers, warned that suggested changes to bring union contract cases to the courts would add to litigation, delay and unrest.

America is not suffering from the effects of trade unionism, the committee was told in a brief submitted by Pres. Harry Bridges of the Longshoremen and Warehousemen. The country, Bridges said, "suffers from the abuses and excesses of employers. It is the monopolistic drive for profits which is at the core of America's economic problems today."

Pres. Joseph Selly of the American Communications Assn. suggested that the heart of the problem is the fact that "too great a proportion of our national income is going into profits and too small a proportion into wages." Legislative enactment of Pres. Roosevelt's Bill of Economic Rights, rather than punitive measures against the unions, will be the best aid to the situation, he told the committee.

DONALD Henderson, head of the Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, derided employer arguments that "unions such as ours are monopolies. You cannot have a monopoly that is run by all the people; it is a contradiction in terms," he said.

Henderson charged that food process workers, far from being deprived of their present union rights, should be given the same status under the law as workers in other industries. He pointed to discrimination against the food workers in both the Fair Labor Standards Act, the Social Security Act and the Wagner Act.

Several hundred white collar workers, members of the Office & Professional Workers, converged on the Senate Office Building during the hearings to protest failure to permit UOPWA Pres. Lewis Merrill an opportunity to appear before the committee.

"He doesn't like the editorial policy."

WAGE-HOUR LAW CRISIS

WORKERS' rights under the wage-hour law appeared headed for a crippling blow last week as the House passed HR 2157, the first anti-labor bill of the 80th Congress to come up for a vote.

Based on the alibi that it is intended to curb portal-portal wage claims, the bill of Rep. Gwynne (R. Ia.) will weaken all enforcement of the wage hour law and make difficult workers' claims for every type of chiseling on the part of unscrupulous employers.

The vote was 344 to 56.

Liberal Congressmen were quick to attack the bill in the course of the House debate.

The measure, said Rep. Sabbath (D. Ill.) is "an ill-advised, and poorly-constructed catch-all for harrying labor unions . . . it aims, if not utterly to destroy labor, at least at weakening the cause of labor by taking away legal rights of equity."

Commented Rep. Celler (D. N. Y.): "He (Rep. Hobbs of Alabama) spoke truly when he said that we are doing this thing piece-meal, this destruction of the Fair Labor Standards Act."

"When we contemplate voting out a bill which will undermine the Wage-Hour Bill," said Rep. Helen G. Douglas (D., Calif.), "we are jeopardizing the earning power of millions of American people."

"When the buying power of one-third of the people goes down, what happens?" she asked. "Production goes down. When production goes down, what happens? Employment goes down. That is what this Congress should be concerned with.

"Full production, full employment, sound consumer buyer power alone will keep our economy sound and healthy."

THE bill reported out by the House Judiciary Committee went far beyond the terms of last year's Gwynne bill, and it even went further in some respects than the bill proposed by the sub-committee which had conducted hearings on the portal and wage-hour situations.

As reported by the committee, the bill gives workers only one year to file claims under the Wage-Hour law. This one-year statute of limitations is unique in American law, since in almost every other type of busines proceeding, from three to seven or more years are provided.

It allows workers and employers to settle wage claims under the wage-hour law out of court, and will thereby give employers —particularly in non-union shops —an easy way of violating the law and settling their damages at bargain rates.

And by setting up standards of custom and "good faith," it opens a very wide portal for chiseling employers to escape from Wage-Hour law provisions. Any employer will be able to argue that his law violation was done in "good faith," and having established his claim will be immune to damages.

CIO witnesses at the Judiciary sub-committee hearings pointed out at considerable length that the good faith clause, together with the one-year limit for workers to file claims, will practically undo the benefits when the Fair Labor Standards Act.

S. 70, the bill reported out by the Senate Judiciary Committee, is somewhat milder in its provisions, although this bill too would cause major changes in the Wage-Hour act. It provides for a two-year term to file damage suits, in contrast to the 12-month period in the House.

OPEN SHOP DRIVE IN FLORIDA

The logical successor of open shop laws—an outright drive to crack the CIO and AFL—was proposed to a conference of employers this week at Tallahassee, Fla., by state Atty. Gen. Tom Watson.

Watson told the conference, which he called especially for the purpose, that Florida industrialists should "combat closed shop unionism with open shop unionism" and specifically urged the bosses to "encourage" the entry into the state of the Confederated Unions of America, a group of alleged independent unions.

UN-AMERICANS ON THE LOOSE

• UN-AMERICAN COMMITTEE

Fifteen bills will be introduced in the 80th Congress by the House un-American Activities Committee, according to Rep. Parnell Thomas (R. N. J.), chairman of the group.

One of the bills will provide for dismissal of any government employe whose loyalty to the United States is "found to be in doubt"—presumably by a new government agency which the Committee wishes to establish to centralize all witch-hunting among government workers.

Second on the list of bills is one to raise the crime of contempt of Congress from a misdemeanor to a felony, with punishment set at $5,000 or five years in jail.

• SUBPENA POWERS

By a vote of 349-29, the House Labor Committee won the right last week to subpena witnesses and books, records, correspondence, memorandum and other data in connection with investigations the committee may wish to make.

Backing the request for additional powers were Rep. Hartley (R. N. J.), head of the Labor Committee and an outspoken critic of unions. A leading proponent of the measure was Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.), one of the most reactionary members of the House.

Rep. Vito Marcantonio (ALP, N. Y.) warned, however, that "this power of subpena will be used against labor in every single critical period in industrial relations. It will not be used for the purpose of obtaining information, but it will be used as a sledge hammer to smash the rights of labor by indirection."

"That was my fear," added Rep. Sabath (D. Ill.. And the veteran Illinois liberal pointed out that he had heard no complaints that the Labor Committee was unable to find witnesses to appear before its legislation hearings.

• NEWSPRINT HEARINGS

Sen. Kenneth Wherry (R. Nebr.), who heads the Senate Small Business Committee, has ordered hearings on the newsprint shortage to start March 4. The newsprint tightness has had a serious effect on smaller papers throughout the country, while big publishers, who work closely with the newsprint monopoly, have had little trouble.

A report issued by Sen. Murray (D. Mont.), former committee chairman, pointed clearly to the effects of monopoly controls in the industry as a major basis for the shortage of paper.

It is unlikely, however, that the committee under Sen. Wherry's direction will proceed along similar lines. Wherry, a leading foe of OPA and price controls last year, has hired as counsel for the committee Ray Dickel, who conducted a war against OPA in behalf of a wholesale food group.

First witness for the committee will be Cranston Williams of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn., the big business or ganization which helped lead the fight against controls over newsprint supplies and prices.

CAREY ON U. S. 'CREDO'

An American Credo based on "a lack of fear of the stupid traditions and false patterns of the past, and likewise of lack of fear of what the future holds" was voiced last week by CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey in a speech at Rollins College, Winter Park, Fla.

Carey, awarded an honorary doctor of laws degree, addressed the college's annual "Animated Magazine" meeting, along with leaders of government, industry and cultural affairs.

The American credo, the CIO officer added, "cannot accept less for its proponents than world citizenship. It must continue to proclaim its fearlessness abroad as it must continue to proclaim it at home."

What the world accepts as the spirit of Americanism, Carey noted, is the thought expressed recently by David Lilienthal that all institutions must be designed "to promote and to protect and to defend the integrity and the dignity of the individuals."

HOUSE VOTE ON WAGE-HOUR BILL

Here's how the House of Representatives voted on HR 2157, the bill to pass serious weakening amendments to the Wage-Hour Law. The bill, strenuously opposed by all labor, was passed by a vote of 345-56. 230 Republicans and 115 Democrats voted for the bill; 5 Republicans, 50 Democrats and one American Labor Party Congressman voted against. A vote against the bill is marked with a plus sign; a vote for the bill is marked with a dash; and not voting is signified by a circle. (Story on page 16.)

VAN A. BITTNER

Bittner Tells House Group:

BLACKSMITHS PLAY 'DOCTOR' TO LABOR

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

DOES the House Labor Committee, now studying a score or more of labor bills, have the background of experience and understanding to write a fair bill on the complex problems of industrial relations?

Van A. Bittner, veteran union official and director of the CIO Organizing Committee, provided the House group with an answer last week, during the course of more than six hours of testimony and grilling interrogation.

The committee, considered one of the most reactionary in the GOP-dominated Congress, didn't like his answer.

"Twenty-five blacksmiths would be a poor crowd to deal with medical and health problems," Bittner said. "Twenty-five doctors probably could improve it."

Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R., N. J.), the committee chairman, who has offered a new anti-labor proposal on the average of once a week since Congress opened, reddened. "I think the inference is clear," he said.

"The inference is that men who know nothing about a proposition shouldn't deal with it. That's not an inference. That's a statement," Bittner bluntly declared.

TIME and again through the day, Bittner underscored the thesis that views or facts brought out by the hearings would have little effect on the committee's bill.

Puffing thoughtfully on a cigar, Bittner leaned forward to the microphone on the witness table and charged that Rep. Hartley had publicly admitted that the committee would come forward with a "seven-point, or an eight-point, or a ten-point bill."

And with equal insistence, Bittner told the committee that they would never be able to solve industrial relations matters by fiat. He proposed instead that Congress pass a resolution calling upon CIO and AFL to sit down together to work out a voluntary method of eliminating jurisdictional strikes, as proposed to the Senate by CIO Pres. Murray.

THROUGHOUT the day, the Republican members showered their venom on the CIO, and its affiliated unions and on the witness before them.

Said Rep. Gwinn, who comes from New York's wealthy Westchester County: "I have watched these labor witnesses come to the stand, and there is hate, hate in their hearts."

"God bless your soul," Bittner replied, "there's not a man in the country that I hate."

Rep. Graham A. Barden of New Bern, North Carolina, a Democrat who talks like a Republican, wanted to blame the CIO for the price of pork, now nearing $1 a pound.

"I've raised hogs, too," Bittner replied to Barden's statement, and he pointed out that the real profits are going not to the farmers or workers but to the big packing companies.

Backed into a corner, Barden finally cried out, "Let's forget about the pork chops."

Most appealing to the GOP Congressmen was the subject of communism, which was toted back and forth across the hearings like an advertising commercial on a Lucky Strike radio program.

Rep. McConnell (R., Pa.) started the ball rolling with a request for comments on a recent Saturday Evening Post article by Joseph and Stewart Alsop. The article quoted from the Wage Earner, a Detroit publication, to charge that a large number of CIO unions are Communist-dominated, and it leveled specific charges against Lee Pressman, general counsel, and Len De Caux, publicity director.

The CIO official vehemently denied the charges of the magazine writers, adding that "neither the head of the legal department of CIO nor the publicity director is a communist. I deny it." He added that there are "no reds in CIO unions who weren't hired first by industry," and charged that the Alsop brothers "are a couple of parlor pinks."

Bittner also sprang to the defense of the CIO Political Action Committee. He defended the right of union men to engage in political activity, and denied assertions by Gwinn that CIO has any intention of running the country.

IT WAS not until the questioning swung over to the Democratic side of the committee that questions were asked to bring out the CIO's affirmative viewpoint on issues confronting labor. When Rep. Klein (D., N. Y.) expressed regret at the type of interrogation that had gone on for several hours, the CIO leader commented: "Oh, this is better than in the Hoover days, when a union man couldn't even appear before a committee."

In his prepared testimony, which was read into the record, Bittner charged that the present flood of bills "are part and parcel of a single national drive to attack the organizations representing the working people of America."

His experience among workers both organized and unorganized had convinced him that the American people want not "laws to protect monopoly profits but action to set our feet on the high road to peace and prosperity."

HIGHLIGHTS OF BITTNER TESTIMONY

Highlights of the testimony by Van A. Bittner, vice-president of the Steelworkers and director of the CIO Organizing Committee, before the House Labor Committee.

Your committee is considering a flood of bills poured into the hoppers in this session. All of these bills are part and parcel of a single national drive to attack the organizations representing the working people of America.

For whose benefit are these bills offered? Who are the people who constitute the spearhead of this intense campaign to discredit and attack labor?

There has been a lot of talk and there have been a lot of speeches about the welfare of the American people.

But the parade of witnesses before this very committee demonstrates that what actually is happening is that the same groups and interests which profited to the extent of billions of dollars out of the war itself are today pressing this punitive legislation against labor, against the millions of war veterans in the labor movement, against the men and women in the labor movement who fought and sweated and toiled both on the production front and on the war front.

The period after the first world war should have taught us a lesson. In the 1920's American industry used every weapon known to man, from fraternalism and company unionism to machine guns and tear gas bombs in order to cripple and smash the unions representing their workers.

Between 1924 and 1929 profits rose from four to seven billion dollars; productivity increased 35%; but the wages of the average industrial worker increased only ½c per hour each year. In 1929 this country wound up in the biggest depression in its history up to that date.

Today, the President has already reported to Congress that profits after taxes for 1946 have reached a record high of twelve billion dollars, for 1947 the figure is estimated to be in the neighborhood of fifteen billion dollars. Today your committee is being pushed into a drive to smash labor unions.

I can only urge on you, gentlemen, that you must not let yourself become a tool of profit grabbing interests to repeat the union smashing history of the 1920's and carry us into a depression which may be worse than any we have ever had.

This type of proposed legislation reveals a complete ignorance of how unions operate. . . .

Have you inquired as to how many corporations take a ballot among their stockholders before they determine to adopt a particular labor policy? How many presidents of corporations submit the issues involved in collective bargaining to their stockholders? I have never heard of one.

In unions it is the membership that controls the activities of the organization. That is not true insofar as control over large corporations is concerned. If there is to be peace in industry, get a little democracy into the large corporations. That is where the attention of Congress should be addressed—and not to the issue of how to curtail the rights of workers functioning within their own democratic labor unions.

Corporations are fattening on extortionate profits derived through sheer profiteering at the expense of the American people. Food corporations tripled their profits after taxes in 1946 as against 1945.

The cost of living is steadily rising. The prices of hogs and wheat have gone completely out of bounds, yet the American people were promised that with the elimination of OPA, the so-called law of supply and demand would see to it that the price of food and necessities would decrease.

The weekly wages of workers have decreased steadily since V-J Day. Returned veterans are still suffering, without adequate housing or being compelled to purchase ill-built homes at outrageously inflated prices.

These are the hard, stubborn facts facing the American people. They are looking toward Congress for legislation to alleviate these burdens.

Needed—New Crystal Ball

IF YOU'RE looking for advice, don't go to the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

Last summer, the NAM successfully destroyed OPA with propaganda and promises that supply and demand would lower prices.

● This week wholesale prices reached a 27-year high.

Last autumn, the NAM said that greater productivity would cut prices.

● Productivity rose; but last week the wholesale price index jumped 1.5% during a seven-day period.

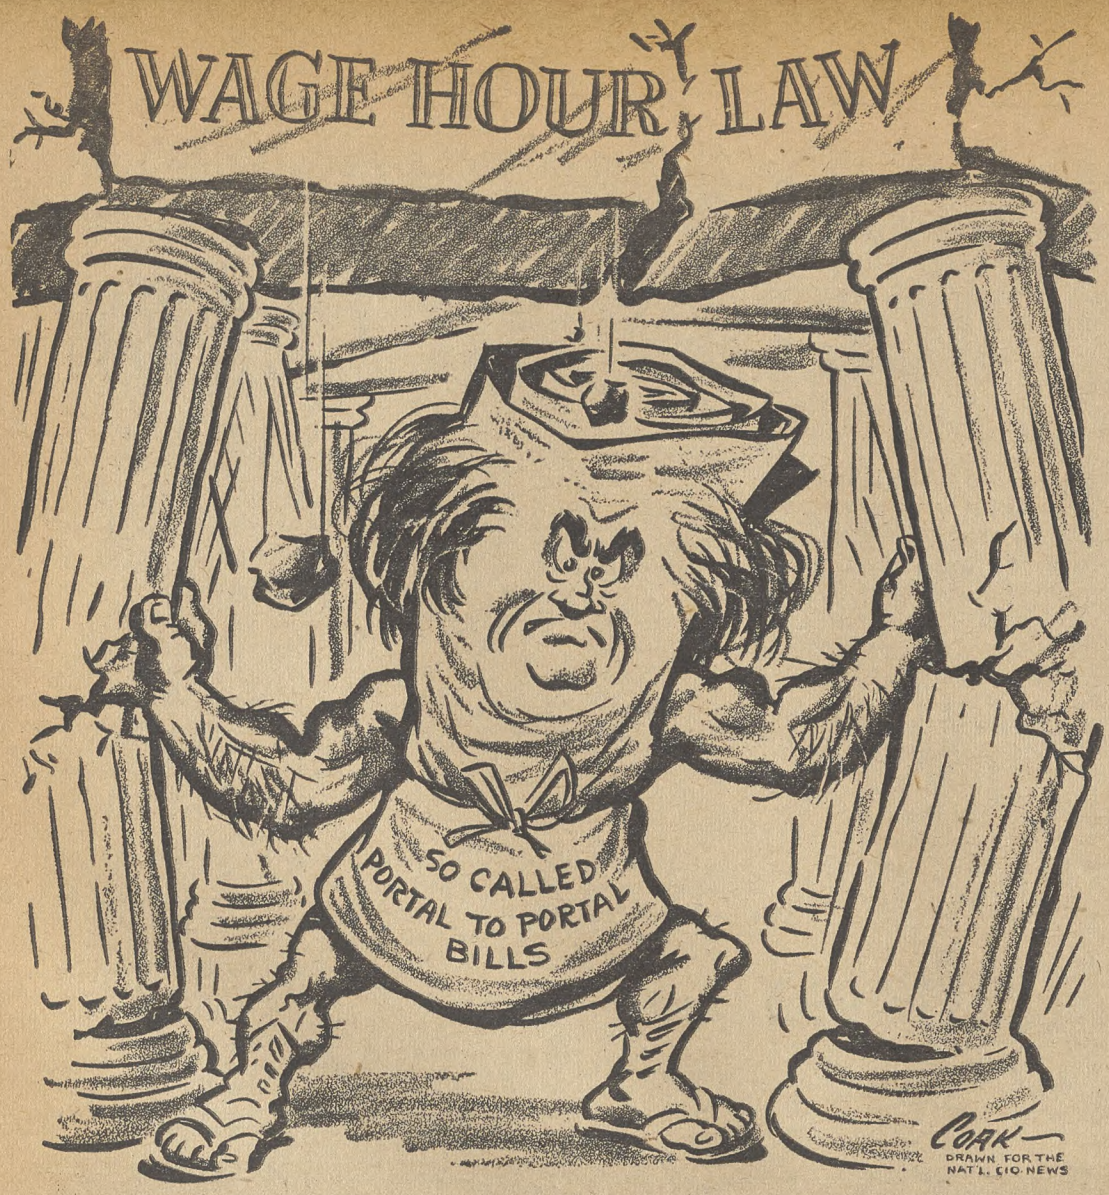
Last winter, the NAM said strikes were keeping prices up.

● Strikes, according to the U. S., were down to two-tenths of 1% in January—but prices were 4.3% higher than a month ago, 36% higher than a year ago.

Higher wages will cause inflation, the NAM said; what we need is lower prices.

● But wages have been stable for nearly a year—and wholesale food prices are up 55% in one year.

Maybe the NAM should get a new crystal ball!



PULLING DOWN THE PILLARS

UNDER cover of all the hullaballoo about portal-to-portal pay, there has been dirty work afoot.

Enemies of the Roosevelt social reforms have seen their chance to undermine the Fair Labor Standards Act, which establishes minimum wages and maximum hours.

Talking only about banning portal-to-portal suits, they have induced the House to pass the Gwynne bill (HR. 2157), which is actually a bill to undermine this Wage-Hour Act and to open the portals wide for sweatshop exploitation.

AMONG the many bad features of the Gwynne bill, the following stand out:

(1) It would reduce the time limit for filing wage claims to one year—though business men are allowed from three to seven years for seeking redress against damage in the courts.

Frequently workers are not properly informed as to what is due them. Government inspectors spend considerable time trying to secure employer compliance before suits may be filed. So this one-year limitation would encourage employers to ignore the law and stall, and would lead to many workers losing their rights.

(2) The bill would require proof of "bad faith" on the part of the employer, leaving the door wide open for the boss who illegally pays sub-standard wages to escape his obligations by claiming he acted in "good faith."

(3) It would provide for employers to settle wage-hour claims with individual employes out of court and without supervision—a principle repeatedly rejected by both Federal and State legislatures.

This would place the worker at a disadvantage in dealing with the boss who controls his job. It would encourage the latter to work employes over-long hours for as small wages as possible, and then buy them off from filing suits with small cash payments.

THIS BILL, as CIO Pres. Philip Murray points out, is the first major blow struck by the present Congress at the New Deal social legislation, which has meant so much to American working people.

It is also (and typically) directed against the living standards of the poorest, most exploited and least organized section of the working public.

If this entering wedge is driven home, all the rest of the Roosevelt social reforms will be in danger.

Urge your Senators to reverse the action of the House and to reject this noxious measure for the emasculation of the Wage-Hour Act.

PUBLIC NOT ANTI-NEW DEAL

POLITICIANS who are trying to undermine the Wage-Hour Act, destroy the Wagner Act and do a job on other New Deal social reforms, claiming they have an "election mandate," would do well to study a recent Fortune Magazine opinion poll.

This shows a majority of consistent Democrats and "converted Republicans," as well as 47% of consistent Republicans, in favor of extending social security.

It shows an overwhelming majority of Republicans as well as Democrats favoring retention of the Wage-Hour law; and many more Republicans and Democrats in favor of the principles of the Wagner Act than are opposed. The Fortune survey concludes:

"The Republican landslide in 1946 has been characterized by some as a swing to the right, but an examination of the popular trend of thought does not bear this out. There is no wish to do away with many of the social reforms instituted by the Democrats; more specifically there is no demand even to abolish the basic tenet of the Wagner Act."

BY LEN DE CAUX

DADDY Bunting's gone a-hunting—against the CIO.

Cut to the quick by an illustrated feature in The CIO NEWS showing how "Mr. Rich Beats The Tax Law," Earl Bunting, president of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, got out his blunderbuss.

He shot off a letter to Secretary of Treasury Snyder, accusing the CIO of being "vicious, intemperate and dishonest," and claiming "no taxpayer could get away with practices as alleged by the CIO except by connivance and collusion with employes of your Department."

OUR FACE is not red—nor even pink.

It is easier for a camel to pass through the eye of a needle than for a rich man to enter the Kingdom of Heaven, according to the Bible.

But, by way of compensation, the loopholes in the American tax laws are so wide a rich man can drive through them with a whole caravan of camels—or Cadillacs.

THE TAX loopholes described in the CIO article are all legal. Tax lawyers regularly point them out to wealthy clients.

In fact, the article was compiled by a tax expert with first-hand experience as a corporation consultant.

It casts no reflection on hard-working Treasury agents, who have enough trouble tracking down illegal tax evasions without bothering about legal loopholes.

MR. BUNTING'S namesake of the nursery rhyme didn't go-a-hunting just for fun. As we remember, he went to "get a little rabbit-skin, to wrap the Baby Bunting in."

It might be a little intemperate to say the NAM is hunting for mink coats to wrap its members' "babies" in, through a tax-skinning of the workers.

But it would convey a general idea of what is happening.

THE CIO has long been trying to clear up public confusion about the tax laws.

Looking at the higher income tax rates on higher incomes, a lot of people imagine the rich are really soaked, while the poor pay little.

But this is very far from being the case.

THE CIO pamphlet, "The Case of the Vanishing Paycheck," shows that, besides income tax, the average worker pays dozens of other sales and "hidden" taxes, which fall with much greater weight on the poor than on the rich.

In fact, it demonstrates that a $45-a-week worker may be paying about one-fourth of his income in taxes, without realizing it.

ON THE other hand, in "Mr. Rich Beats The Tax Law," the CIO shows that a man with a yearly income of $236,000 a year may actually pay less proportionately than a man making $45 a week, if he takes advantage of tax-law loopholes.

Moreover, Mr. Rich and his friends in Congress have recently been shifting more and more of the tax burden from their shoulders onto those of the poor.

Individuals earning less than $5,000 a year paid less than 10% of the total individual income tax bill in 1939. In 1942, they paid almost 50% of the total.

BESIDES being NAM president, Mr. Bunting is president of the O'Sullivan Rubber Corp., which boasts of producing America's "No. 1 Heel."

So it is perhaps understandable that he feels for heels—and imagines the CIO is accusing wealthy tax-dodgers of lawbreaking (which is another long story in itself) rather than of just jumping through legal loopholes.

But when, in his letter, he disclaims any NAM interest in "the personal tax problems" of its millionaire members, we feel he deserves to be dubbed Earl Bunting of Buncombe.

WE DO endorse this statement of Earl Bunting, however:

"The manner in which tax adjustments are made in the coming period can spell the difference between unemployment and economic stagnation, on the one hand, and an expanding prosperity and increased well-being for all, on the other."

That is precisely why CIO has been campaigning to close the loopholes through which the rich avoid paying their fair share of taxes; and to lighten the tax burdens on lower-income groups, so they may have enough purchasing power to promote an expanding prosperity.

ASK UN TO BACK LABOR RIGHTS

LABOR's rights are basic to a democratic society and should be protected by an international guarantee through the United Nations.

That proposal was laid before the UN's important Economic & Social Council last week by the World Federation of Trade Unions, global labor federation of which CIO is a charter member.

It urged, among other points, establishment of a UN Committee for Trade Union Rights.

Taking advantage of its right to present matters for consideration before the UN group, the WFTU offered a document of major significance to workers in every country. The resolutions, embodying a five-point program of action, will be considered by the Economic & Social Council, now meeting at Lake Success, N. Y.

HIGHLIGHTS of the resolution proposed for adoption by the UN:

"1. Trade union rights are recognized as an inviolable perogative enjoyed by workers for protection of their professional and social interests.

"2. Trade union organizations should be able to administer their own affairs, to deliberate and freely decide on all questions falling within their competence, in conformity with the law and with their constitution, without interference in their duties from governmental or administrative bodies.

"3. There should be no obstacle to the federation of trade union organizations on the occupational or inter-occupational level, whether locally, regionally or internationally.

"4. All legislation which places restrictions on the above-mentioned principles is contrary to the economic and social collaboration laid down by the Charter of the United Nations.

"5. The Economic and Social Council decides to set up a Committee for Trade Union Rights which will safeguard in a permanent fashion respect for trade union rights.

"On every occasion on which the afore-mentioned principles are violated, the Committee will make the necessary inquiries and will submit recommendations to the Economic and Social Council as to the measures to be adopted."

IN amplifying the resolution, WFTU pointed out that unhampered unions, as they grow, tend to go beyond the interests of their members and to act increasingly in the general interest. It pointed out out that this evolution has led many unions to a point where they have power to make regulations of a broad character, and to act in important ways in preparing and administering all forms of social laws.

This evolution, the resolution pointed out, "is merely the expression of the democratic principle" that producers should have a voice in setting economic and social policies. It came to a climax during the war, when the help and sacrifice of workers' organizations contributed mightily to victory for democracy, WFTU noted.

China Relief Change

THE Natl. CIO Community Services Committee will no longer use the Chinese Assn. of Labor as a channel for the distribution of CIO relief funds in China.

The announcement followed a conference in Pittsburgh with CIO Pres. Murray and Irving Abramson and Leo Perlis, national chairman and director of the committee, together with Michael Ross, CIO foreign affairs director and John J. Schulter, vice-president of the Retail and Wholesale Workers.

The decision is based upon the findings of Schulter, who has returned from China where he made an investigation of CIO welfare projects for the Community Services Committee.

Since 1942 the CIO co-sponsored health, welfare and recreation projects in China in the amount of $2,500,000. The funds for these projects were channeled through the Chinese Association of Labor (CAL) and were handled under the supervision of a board of custody, composed of Chinese and Americans.

Schulter reported that he found no evidence to substantiate Chinese Government charges that CAL officials, including Pres. Chu Hsue Fan, had misappropriated funds.

"Chu," said Schulter, "protested against Government control of the trade unions and moved in the direction of a greater degree of self-determination of the Chinese labor movement."

RESEARCH GROUP

Research officials of several CIO unions have been named to a new Joint Labor Research Advisory Committee of the Labor Dept.'s Bureau of Labor Statistics.

Together with officials of the Department and representatives of AFL and the railway brotherhoods, the committees will meet frequently for discussion of economic issues affecting organized labor. A number of sub-committees to handle specialized subjects, such as industrial relations, prices and the cost of living, etc., will meet from time to time.

CIO research officials, with their union affiliations, who have been named to the committee, follow:

Mrs. Katherine Ellickson and Stanley Ruttenberg, assistant research directors, CIO; Solomon Barkin, textile; H. H. Bookbinder, clothing; Patricia Crozier, automobile; William Glazier, longshoremen; Everett M. Kassalow, rubber; and Bruce Waybur, electrical.

NAM Says 'Ouch'

THE Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers expressed public pain this week over an embarrassing (for the NAM) article in The CIO NEWS.

The article was entitled "Mr. Rich Beats the Tax Law." It showed, in two pages of text and illustrations, how a corporation executive could use legal loopholes to scale down his tax rate to only 16% of a $236,000 a year income.

A $45-a-week worker has to pay a tax rate of 17%.

The NAM said the article was a "libel" on the Treasury Dept. Such a low rate on such a large income could not be achieved without connivance of governments officials, said the NAM.

In answer, CIO Legislative Director Nathan Cowan declared the NAM is weeping "crocodile tears over the reputation of the U. S. Treasury Dept. in an effort to cover up the NAM's opposition to a fair tax program."

"The NAM," said Cowan, "would be on better ground if it recommended that Congress pass a law closing the loopholes which allow wealthy individuals to evade paying their fair share of the tax bill."

SAYS LABOR PRESS NEEDS U. S. AID TO GET PAPER

THE American labor press depends for its very life on government help to get newsprint, Tom Wright, chairman of the CIO Publications Committee's newsprint group, warned the Senate last week.

Appearing at Senate Small Business Committee hearings on the newsprint situation — which has forced hundreds of small papers to reduce their size, or even suspend publication—Wright said:

"The amount of newsprint small users consume is negligible, but they can't get even that." He estimated that 250 CIO papers consume only 10,000 tons of paper a year out of the nation's four million ton consumption.

Calling for the government to re-impose a fair-share allocation system like that used during the war, Wright said equitable distribution would prevent the small number of big publications from hogging the total supply.

NEW ISSUES FOR LABOR

SO-CALLED "fringe issues" such as health and welfare funds, portal-portal payments and guaranteed annual wages are of major importance to workers, the February issue of the CIO Economic Outlook points out this week.

Labor's demand for guaranteed wages on an annual basis, the Outlook pointed out, has "already forced many companies to consider very seriously how they can provide steady employment."

"Some new plans have been written into contracts, and in many more cases employers are analyzing their employment, payroll and marketing records to find out how much labor's demand will cost.

"If unemployment becomes acute, the demand for guaranteed wage plans will become far greater. Under such conditions, it will be clear that these plans must be part of a larger program for bringing about full employment.

"Labor has shown its statesmanship in demanding that steps to secure regular employment be taken before depression strikes."

1 ATTACKS AGAINST UNIONS. Big business led the drive to bust labor. Spies, company police and the black list were used to cripple old unions and prevent the growth of new ones. The open shop drive of the early 1920's caused union membership to drop from five million to 3,400,000. In the basic industries, unions were suppressed.

2 INFLATED PROFITS. With the drive to weaken labor, came two other developments that contributed mightily to the world-shaking 1929 depression. The first was the boom in corporation profits. In five years (1924 to 1929), profits of all corporations, after taxes, increased from four billion dollars a year to seven billion dollars a year—72 per cent! Meanwhile . . .

3 LAGGING WAGES. Output per man hour jumped 35% from 1924 to 1929. But wages were raised only ½c an hour per year. The rise in productivity brought higher profits. And failure to raise wages according to the rise in productivity, sharply reduced workers' purchasing power. Store sales dropped. Men were laid off. The great depression began.

HOW THE CIO AIDS UNIONS' EDUCATIONAL ACTIVITIES

ALONG with the growth of educational departments in international unions, the CIO Dept. of Research & Education has marked out an extensive area for its work. Its publications and news of its activities reach more than 80,000 persons through mailing lists covering 42 different fields of interest and occupation.

Available to local education committeemen for the last three years has been the monthly bibliography of free materials. For the last two years, the Department has taken the leadership in calling quarterly meetings of educational directors of international unions and state councils.

Four regional conferences of three days each have been held during the last two years, at Ft. Worth, Tex., Chapel Hill, N.C., New York City and Chicago. Funds have been made available by a national foundation for 17 scholarships for the southern regional conferences. Follow-up observations in the field indicate that these conferences are very worthwhile.

The Department has been instrumental in stimulating international unions and state councils to hold such conferences and has worked closely with various union group in developing them. The Oil Workers Intl. Union has been especially active in this respect.

In recent months the Department has set up a 16 mm. sound film library and sound slide film library, and is now making arrangements whereby unions can purchase a nationally advertised $500 sound movie projector for $385.

THE Department has also instituted a visual education kit which includes six sound film-strips and a sound filmstrip machine which will play standard phonograph records. Two CIO filmstrips—one in color, "Guaranteed Wages the Year Round," and "Raise Wages, Not Prices" — have been produced. Fifty copies of the latter which has just been released, have already been sold, and a new pamphlet which reprints all of the frames and the complete script of the film strip has just been published.

A new series of posters of economic charts is being initiated by the Department, the first one of which is based on the Federal Reserve Board's study of the distribution of savings in the United States. This will be followed by other posters which can be used in teaching as well as for display in union halls.

MINDFUL of the expanding needs in labor education, the Department has supervised a series of fellowships giving a three months' training in the field to young college graduates interested in entering the union education field. Funds for this were provided by a national foundation.

The Department has taken an active part in the work of the Committee for the Extension of Labor and in advising the Division of Labor Standards. The National staff has also helped numerous universities in setting up programs for labor education.

CIO TERM AT HIGHLANDER

The CIO Education & Research Dept. is planning to run several summer schools during 1947. The first one is scheduled to be held at Highlander Folk School, June 1-28. The school will be limited to 40 students.

In addition to the regular Highlander faculty, the following National CIO officers will be available for teaching: Kermit Eby, George L-P Weaver, James B. Casey and Michael Ross.

The tuition for the one-month course includes room and board and probably will be around $50. Except in exceptional cases, applications must be for the full month. Applicants should write to George T. Guernsey, Asst. Education Director, 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D.C.

An outstanding school was this one held by the United Packinghouse Workers at Ft. Worth, Texas, in September. Svend Godfredson, the union's education director, was in charge.

CIO EDUCATION AC

DURING the past year, CIO unions have expanded their education programs at a rapid rate. Filmstrips and movies, steward training courses and summer schools are routine in more and more unions, and brand new techniques adaptable to any labor education program have been developed.

The United Automobile Workers, under the direction of Education Director Victor Reuther, in February held the Third Annual Education Conference which attracted more than a thousand education committeemen. A feature of the conference was the Fair, an exhibit of materials useful in education programs. The UAW also introduced its "Turnover Talk" kits, a new technique in workers' education.

Kits have been issued on subjects of current interest to local unions and consist of data for an informal talk illustrated by a set of large posters, which are turned over one at a time by the speaker. The UAW's new movie, "Brotherhood of Man," has been released and will be shown in thousands of schools, churches, and community groups.

THE United Steelworkers, whose education director is Vincent Sweeney, are planning to expand their very successful summer institutes, held last year at Pennsylvania State College and Antioch. This summer they will probably be held also at Alabama, New Hampshire State, University of Chicago, Wisconsin, Illinois and a West Coast University. The Steelworkers will release this week a new sound movie on their last summer's session at Penn State.

A special grant of funds has been made by the United Steelworkers to the Industrial Relations Section of the University of Chicago, under the direction of Fred Harbison, to assist in developing new education material for use by local union leaders.

The Amalgamated Clothing Workers now employs a national education director, Robert Levin, who has been working with ACU Joint Boards in developing education programs. He also has been demonstrating to Amalgamated locals a sound filmstrip machine and a kit of film strips, purchased from the CIO.

THE United Electrical, Machine & Radio Workers, after making the political action film, "Deadline for Action," budgeted $50,000 for sound movies during the coming year. The UE plans a tremendously expanded education program by which they hope to reach every steward in the union. Again, the use of 16 mm. sound motion pictures has increased by leaps and bounds.

staff and has sponsored after-work institutes in Omaha, Nebr., and Fort Worth Tex.

Under Larry Rogin, education director of the Textile Workers Union, an expanded program of institutes and summer schools is under way. At least ten will be run during the summer of '47 in addition to special schools for business agents. TWUA is finding increasing use for filmstrips and 16mm. sound movies and has made additions to its film library.

The National Maritime Union recently purchased 20 of the CIO's kit of filmstrips and shipped them to NMU port agents. Union leaders are planning to produce several filmstrips and a sound movie and hope eventually to have a small filmstrip machine on every ship.

EDUCATION Director A. L. Lewis of the United Rubberworkers is developing charts and posters for use by locals. Big news in this union is that the Executive Board has appropriated funds for 50 scholarships to enable rubber workers to attend union summer schools.

Bill Rafsky has been running weekend institutes for the Federation of Hosiery Workers during the last year at Pendle Hill, near Philadelphia; Penn State; Highlander Folk School; and the University of North Carolina.

The Marine Cooks' and Stewards', under Louis Pinson, set up a leadership training school on the West Coast. In Joplin, Mo., the Mine & Smelter Workers held a ten-day school with the assistance of staff members from the Highlander Folk School. One of the most interesting union institutes was that of the Longshore and Warehousemen's Union. Sixteen officers of their Hawaiian locals came to San Francisco for a one-month leadership training course.

The Food & Tobacco Workers, under Education Director Connie Anderson, has been active in developing leadership training schools and education committees.

One of the most significant developments in CIO education in the past year was the purchase by the Michigan CIO of the site for the Franklin Delano Roosevelt Camp at Port Huron, Mich. The first union-owned center for education and recreation in the United States, the camp will be a permanent base for schools and other union activities for locals throughout the state. Michigan locals helped finance it by purchasing non-interest bearing bonds.

Other State Councils with active educational programs are Ohio, New Jersey and New York.

TENNESSEE FARMERS GO TO SCHOOL

FARMERS from all parts of Tennessee came to the interracial one-week leadership training school held last month at Highlander Folk School near Monteagle, Tenn., atop Cumberland Mountain.

Sponsored jointly by Highlander and the Tennessee Farmers Union, the school initiated a projected rural education program to promote better understanding between workers and farmers and to combat racial and religious prejudice in the South.

THE teaching staff was headed by Aubrey Williams, former head of the Natl. Youth Administration and now president of the Alabama Farmers Union, and included Ben Stong, editor of the National UNION FARMER; J. Lewis Henderson, Mississippi Farmers Union; Highlander Director Myles Horton, and others.

DISCUSSIONS centered on the problem of raising the standard of living of the southern family-type farmer and farm tenant; elimination of racial discrimination, and cooperation between farmers and working people.

The school was unique in that it was the first interracial resident meeting for farmers to be held in the South.

A representative of the Tennessee Farmers Union visits the home of a farm family in Grundy county to explain the FU program calling for cooperatives, legislative measures of benefit to both farmers and workers and better education for southern rural folk.

Ike Church reads the report of his local in the Farmers Union newspaper sent to every union member in Tennessee. The paper urges closer unity between industrial workers and farmers on a program of higher wages and better buying power for all people.

Farmers and teachers assembled at the Farmers Union school held in February at Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., are singing the famous union song, "Solidarity Forever," under the direction of Zilphia Horton, Highlander's singing director. Being snowbound did not seem to bother the hearty farmers who came from Farmers Union locals all over the state to attend the week-long educational session.

UR UNION!

ACKS AGAINST UNIONS. More than 200 bills to weaken unions have n introduced in Congress. The 250 large corporations that control two ds of the usable manufacturing facilities in the U. S. have cracked the o. Their aim is to force Congress to pass laws which would weaken ns' power to bargain for decent wages.

LATED PROFITS. Meanwhile, profits are soaring, just as in the 20's. President has estimated that corporation profits for 1946 will be 12 bil- dollars. This is about two billion dollars higher than for the previous rd peacetime year. For 1947, it is estimated that profits for manufac- g corporations, before taxes, will top 15 billion dollars.

GGING WAGES. The average weekly earnings of production workers anufacturing were $45.83 in October, 1946— $1.67 lower than in Jan- 1945. Prices had risen so high that a 1945 wage of $46.50 a week d buy only $39.27 worth of merchandise. The factory workers' aver- weekly earnings were $24.69 below a minimum budget to maintain th and decency for a family of four.

N HAPPEN AGAIN!

Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

By CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

Published as a 4-Page Leaflet—See Note, Bottom of Layout

YOUR union is in trouble. Its strength to bargain for higher wages is being attacked in Congress. The House and Senate are considering more than 200 bills to hog-tie labor. Some bills ban union security. Some forbid industry-wide bargaining. Some would force unions and employers into lengthy and expensive suits in court. Nearly every form of union activity is attacked in one bill or another.

> These anti-labor bills can be supported only by a premise that the ills of our economy, the ills of our nation, reflect a need—and solely a need—for weakening labor at the bargaining table, for weakening labor at the expense of management, for compelling labor to accept from management without resistance the answer "NO."

If Congress is prepared to say that the time has come to weaken unions, then Congress will have to be prepared to say that the American working men and women have through their unions or otherwise achieved more than Congress is prepared to concede to them as their right with respect to wages, hours and working conditions.

If Congress is prepared to embark on a program of consciously weakening labor at the bargaining table, then Congress is prepared to say that the strength of government must be thrown behind those employers who are today prepared to protect their present and future profit levels against any demands for wage increases.

> If that is Congress' program, then we are truly embarking upon a new and dangerous era in the history of the American government. Not merely will government be preparing to sit by and permit a repetition on a grander scale of the trends which led to the crash of 1929; government will be actually taking an affirmative and active role in impelling the country in the direction of such a catastrophe.

WHAT can your union do about it? Plenty! (1) Write or wire your Senators and Congressmen to oppose the bills. (2) Contact other liberal organizations and urge them to do the same. (3) Get together with other locals to distribute leaflets like this one . . . to buy newspaper ads stating your case . . . to put speakers on the radio so the public can learn the facts. (4) Organize mass meetings . . . and get elected city, county and state officials to attend. Enlist their help in telling Congress that the people back home want progressive legislation—not laws to weaken unions. The time to act is NOW. Tomorrow may be too late!

OIL WORKERS WIN 20-25c HIKES

PRES. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers announced this week that the union is more than half-way through its fight for a 25c wage increase.

More than 40,000 members of OWIU have already settled for wage increases ranging from 20c an hour to 25c. With the settlement of the California wage dispute, 20,000 union oil workers averted a strike in the public interest, Knight announced. The West Coast workers won a straight 20.2c increase for the entire year of 1947.

The union has also settled with the Texas Co., biggest of the non-Standard Oil majors, for a straight 22c wage increase, effective from February through September. Texaco workers, members of OWIU, also won retroactive pay of $30 a month for November, December and January.

OWIU's first settlement in its current drive for a 25c increase came in November when Sinclair Oil signed a national agreement for an 18c hourly increase, effective in the last quarter of 1946. Under a sliding scale arrangement based on the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics consumers price index, the scale went up to 25c an hour for the first quarter of 1947. It is expected that this rate will extend into the second quarter. The agreement ends Sept. 30.

Major companies with which OWIU is still bargaining on its 25c wage demand are Cities Service, Socony-Vacuum, Gulf, Pure Oil and Shell.

CIO TEACHERS BLAST DEWEY'S MERIT PLAN

THE nation's teachers are still in ferment, although the Buffalo teachers this week returned to their classes after 80% of them won wage increases of $625 for the next school year.

The Buffalo teachers belonged to the CIO Teachers Union, and the independent Buffalo Federation of Teachers and were joined by insurgent members of the AFL teachers union, which did not go on strike.

Dissatisfied with the report of Gov. Dewey's special education committee's report, the CIO Teachers Union and the AFL Teachers Guild were pressing for a strike vote in the N. Y. City Schools. While proposing wage increases to upstate teachers, the commission would cut salaries in N. Y. City.

The CIO teachers are asking a $1000 a year permanent increase. Through their militancy they have won a $900 increase from city and state authorities, but only $550--granted by the city—has been made permanent. Sara T. Walsh, direction of the National Teachers Division of the CIO Public Workers—with which the N. Y. CIO Teachers Union is affiliated—declared:

"Dewey's dog-eat-dog merit increase plan would make teachers fight among themselves for the favor of principals. The proposal has caught the attention of U. S. teachers because of its effect on the customary practice of giving automatic increase."

Play Detective: Find Three, Help Them Get $5,000

By SAMUEL J. KRAMER

ONLY three "missing heirs" remain to be found to share in the windfall of the $65,000 back-pay settlement won by the CIO Shipbuilding Workers from the North Carolina Shipbuilding Corp., Wilmington, N. C., for 52 workers who suffered discriminatory discharges when the yard was being organized by the union in 1943-45.

According to Walter Oakes, union board member and regional director, joint efforts by the IUMSWA and the NLRB regional office have found three of the six missing claimants for shares in the money in the past two weeks. Forty-nine of the 52 eligible for the back pay have been found in a six-month hunt.

About $5,000 awaits the "missing heirs" who are:

Roosevelt McDuffie, Negro, about 33, last known address, 727 Fremont Ave., Baltimore; also, Route 2, Box 43, Mullins, S. C.; Social Security No. is 249-12-1648; formerly employed in the drilling dept. at the North Carolina yard.

Mrs. Emma Lowder, about 35, widow of H. M. Lowder, deceased, last known address, 6-C-1 Upshur Drive, Wilmington, N. C.; Social Security No. for Lowder, 244-03-7568; Lowder was formerly employed in the pipe and plumbing dept.

J. L. Smith, Negro, about 32, last known address, Reidsville, N. C., formerly of 708 North Fifth St., Wilmington, N. C.; Social Security No. 245-09-5733; formerly employed in the boiler and blacksmiths dept.

Anyone knowing the whereabouts of these six individuals, or their next of kin, if deceased, is urged to advise them to get in touch with Mr. Earle K. Shawe, regional attorney, Natl. Labor Relations Board, 601 American Bldg., Baltimore, 2, Md., telephone Plaza 3474.

RESUME RUBBER WAGE TALKS

The CIO Rubber Workers and the Big Four—U. S. Rubber, Goodyear, Goodrich and Firestone—this week resumed negotiations on the union's demand for a 26c hourly increase.

The companies agreed to meet after workers in their plants voted 90% for a strike unless wage negotiations were resumed. The strike vote was ordered after the Big Four broke off the talks. The union has been trying to get the bargaining started since last Oct. 28.

RALLY TO HALT 'RAILROADING' 15

A STATE-WIDE conference of all New Jersey CIO unions to expose the attempt of the Phelps Dodge Corp. to "railroad" 15 of its workers to jail was held in Elizabeth, N. J., this weekend.

The conference will launch a vigorous state-wide defense movement in behalf of the workers and leaders of a CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers local indicted by the Union County, N. J., Grand Jury on false charges.

The workers were arrested during the eight-month strike at the Phelps Dodge plant in Eliazbeth.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council and James McLeish, vice president of the state body and president of UE District 4, charged the county law-enforcement authorities are "political hirelings" acting for the Phelps Dodge Corp.

New Jersey CIO leaders point out that while the law enforcement agencies willingly framed up charges against the Phelps Dodge workers, they have done nothing to find the murderer of Mario Russo, 27-year-old veteran and father of four children.

He was fatally shot July 30 by gangsters employed as strike-breakers by the Phelps Dodge Copper Products Corp., the UE charges. The union has posted its own reward of $5,000 for information leading to the arrest and conviction of Russo's murderer.

Fink's Career Ends in Pen

Richard K. Franklin, who played every angle in the anti-union game, last week was sentenced to 10 years in San Quentin for robbery. Here is a thumbnail sketch of his "career":

1937, kicked out of the CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen.

1939, flooded Los Angeles with race hatred material and started the American Mechanics Union, specialists in forming company unions which speedily won the approval of the Merchants & Manufacturers Assn.

1942, demanded repeal of the 15th amendment granting Negroes the right to vote and boasted he would like "to hang every CIO organizer in California."

1945, usefulness to employers washed up after the NLRB forced his company union out of business.

1946, arrested as a member of an armed gang.

The legislative dangers are still with us. Southern states are running rampant and a number of members of Congress are determined to shackle labor. Now is the time to act and have your membership and friends tell your Congressmen your resentment against these proposals. Act now!

The Sugar Workers, asking for national affiliation of their choice, met in conference for the purpose of obtaining that objective, and adopted a plan for a vote for the CIO to effectuate.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

MARITIME AWARD: Three maritime unions on the West Coast and one on the East Coast are now looking forward eagerly to the termination of their contracts June 15 since an arbitration award gave them only a 6% increase.

The unions are the CIO Marine Cooks and Stewards, the CIO American Communications Assn., and the independent Marine Firemen, Oilers, Wipers and Water Tenders on the West Coast, and the CIO Natl. Maritime Union on the East Coast. All had demanded a 25% increase.

These unions obtained wage increases last year and the arbitration was provided for under wage reopening clauses of their contracts.

BROOKLYN STRIKE: Pickets marched the Brooklyn, N. Y., waterfront again this week and a nation-wide blockade by organized labor meshed into gear as the Ira S. Bishey Ship Repair Co. virtually thumbed its nose at efforts of the CIO Shipbuilding Workers to settle a month-long dispute. The new walkout ended a 10-day armistice.

BILBO, RANKIN NO MATCH FOR CIO

SENATOR Theo. G. (The Man) Bilbo and Rep. John Rankin went to Laurel, Miss., and delivered tirades against the CIO.

The newspapers joined the attack. So did the merchants.

The situation didn't look good for the CIO. State Director Robert W. Starnes of the CIO Organizing Committee was attempting the "impossible" and he didn't believe he was going to get by with it.

Starnes had heard employes of the big Masonite plant at Laurel were dissatisfied with their AFL union set-up. Within a few days he was able to sign up enough members to petition for an election.

To Starnes' surprise, the election was ordered within two days, giving the CIO only 48 hours to get its message to more than 2,000 Masonite workers.

The CIO won the election by an overwhelming vote, defeating the AFL and an independent union!

A contract soon negotiated with Masonite gave pay increases ranging from 13 to 22½ cents per hour to employes who had not had a raise for 4½ years. Five months later, under a reopening clause, an additional 7c raise was negotiated. The two raises added about $1¾ million annually to the pay of Masonite workers.

THE Laurel "blitz" was staged before Starnes had completed setting up his own staff and long before he had established an office in Mississippi.

The organization of seven more Laurel plants under the CIO banner followed in quick succession.

Starnes then paused long enough to complete his staff and set up state headquarters in Jackson. He then launched membership drives in Central and Northern Mississippi.

The CIO soon won National Labor Relations Board elections in five clothing plants in the New Albany-Hickory Flat-Ecru-Pontotoc area, giving the Clothing Workers its first foothold in Mississippi.

ROBERT W. STARNES
Licked Bilbo at Home

In this region, as in Laurel, nobody but the workers seemed to like the CIO. Opposition came from the clergy, "citizens' committees" and the rabble-rousing Militant Truth, anti-union newspaper.

Starnes and his staff believe persistence pays off. They tell the story of the Buckeye Cotton Oil Co. at Jackson to prove their point. An election was held, and there was a tie between the CIO and AFL. A second election was held—and the results were set aside by the NLRB because of company interference. In the third election the CIO won by a margin of three to one.

Prior to last June, Mississippi was generally spoken of as "the state that can't be organized by the CIO."

DIRECTOR Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee was looking for the right man to tackle the job—and he picked Starnes, a native of Mississippi who attended Mississippi College at Clinton.

About all Starnes had when the drive started was a lot of space in which to operate. There was no staff, no office, no large group of CIO supporters.

The Masonite victory was considered somewhat of a freak and as "just luck" until other victories started piling up. Since the drive started, the Committee has won 36 elections and lost seven in Mississippi. It has 10 petitions for certification pending with the Board.

LABOR BOARD DOING CONGRESS' DIRTY WORK ON WAGNER ACT

By FRANK DONNER
Natl. CIO Legal Staff

THE anti-labor Congressmen who have proposed various amendments to emasculate the Wagner Act ought to stop right now. The Labor Board itself is doing such an effective job along these lines that anti-labor amendments by Congress will be superfluous.

During the past six months the Board has issued a series of decisions both on unfair labor practices and representation which mark a sharp retreat from fair and courageous enforcement of the act.

In the Times Publishing case, the NLRB reversed its Trial Examiner who had found that the certain Florida publishers had violated the Act by refusing to bargain with a striking union. The Trial Examiner pointed out that the employers had actually withdrawn recognition from the striking union and were insisting upon individual dealing with the members of the union.

The Board tossed out all of the Trial Examiner's findings and gave the publishers a clean bill of health. In the process of white-washing the publishers, the Board went out of its way to suggest that it was the union and not the publishers which had refused to bargain in good faith.

A second decision which marks the dangerous path the Board has been traveling is the Thompson Products case, which has an interesting history. Last year the Board in the Columbia Pictures case refused to deprive employes of their rights under the Act because it disapproved of the motives of a strike.

The Thompson case as originally decided represented a compromise of the Columbia Picture doctrine.

The Board asserted that employes who strike for a reason of which the Board disapproved may be denied the protection of the act when they are discharged for that reason by their employer.

However, a majority of the Board said that the employes were not discharged for engaging in an "illegal" strike but were discharged for engaging in a second strike which was legal in character. It accordingly ordered the employes involved reinstated although it denied them back pay.

CHAIRMAN HERZOG later suffered a sudden change of heart. He issued an amended decision in behalf of himself and Board Member Reynolds, reversing himself and saying that the employer did not violate the Act after all. He found that the second strike was also "illegal" and that the discharged employes were not protected by the Act.

The Board thus amended the Act by limiting protection of the strike right to strikes which in its opinion are legal. It also suggested that even if the discharge is not directly attributable to the "illegal" activity the Board will nevertheless not extend the protection of the Act to the discharged employes.

The Thompson case created the suspicion that the Board was seeking to amend the Act by making the protection of the law turn upon the purpose of a strike and by denying the protection of the law where a strike is for an "illegal" purpose regardless of whether or not the employer discharged the striker for that reason.

This suspicion was promptly verified by a decision of the Board in the Dyson Case which was issued subsequent to the Thompson case.

IN the Dyson case an employer discharged some employes for striking and imposed penalty layoffs on others for the same reason. The union filed unfair labor practice charges.

After the Trial Examiner found that the employer engaged in unfair labor practices, the employer for the first time contended that the strike was in violation of a no-strike clause in a collective bargaining agreement.

The Board then took the novel step of remanding the case to the Trial Examiner again to take testimony on the alleged no-strike clause. The Trial Examiner found that there was such a clause in the agreements. The Board then dismissed all of the unfair labor practice charges on the ground that the strike was "illegal" and that the employes were not protected by the Act.

This decision is a vicious one, not merely for the reason that the Board reaffirmed the novel doctrine of the illegal strike. It is vicious for still another reason. The employer never contended that the employes were discharged for violating their contract. The claim of contract violation was plainly an afterthought and a pretext.

IT is well established under the Board decisions that where a permitted reason for a discharge exists an employer may not use that reason as a pretext for discharging an employe for a prohibited reason. An employe may be inefficient and he may be discharged for that reason but an employer may not use the employes inefficiency as pretext for a discriminatory discharge.

Similarly, even if an employe may be discharged under the Board's new doctrine for striking in violation of a contract, where the employe is in fact discharged merely for striking and not for violating his contract, it is obvious that the employer has violated the Natl. Labor Relations Act.

If the Board persists in the trend reflected in the Thompson and Dyson cases, it will legalize a device for destroying employe rights under the Act.

The Board's handling of representation cases is equally alarming. In an early issue of The CIO NEWS, some of the Board's new trends in this field will be discussed.

MOBILIZE PUBLIC FIGHT ON ANTI-UNION BILLS

THE CIO in particular and the rank and file of organized labor in general are leaving no stones unturned in mobilizing support to fight state and federal bills to hogtie unions.

As part of a nation-wide CIO campaign 5,500 N. Y. City CIO shops and offices held special "Save Our Union" meetings this week. Telegrams were sent to N. Y. City Congressmen and Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.), member of the Senate Labor Committee, asking defeat of pending anti-union measures.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council; Sec.-Treas. Harry Block of the Pennsylvania CIO Council, and John Edelman, Washington legislative representative of the CIO Textile Workers last weekend pointed out the viciousness of the anti-labor proposals at a legislative conference of the Lehigh County CIO Council at Allentown, Pa.

Four States Speed Anti-Labor Laws

Georgia, Delaware, North Dakota and New York led the state anti-labor parade this week.

The Georgia Senate unanimously approved bills outlawing union security, check-off collection of union dues, and mass picketing.

The bills previously had been passed by the House. They now go to Gov. Talmadge for signature.

The Delaware House passed and sent to the Senate a bill prohibiting strikes by state, city and county employes. It also bans membership in unions of such employes that allow strikes.

The North Dakota legislature approved bills banning union security, outlawing secondary boycotts and sympathy strikes, and requiring unions to file financial statements with the state.

In New York, Gov. Dewey has reportedly asked for a law banning strikes by public employes. One bill, already introduced, is considered "too weak." A strengthening amendment would provide that striking government employes would forfeit both their jobs and their civil service rights.

WHAT ABOUT THE COMICS?

Like it or not, your children probably find the comics absorbing. No wonder! Adventure, thrills and color make them alluring. They may not be the best, but at least they're an important part of American life. If mother and dad can enjoy the funnies too, and in turn bring other interests and exciting stories into the house, youngsters are likely to find pleasure in a balanced reading. Your public library is an endless source. Help your child get the habit of going to the library to select whatever appeals to him. (Copyright 1947, THE CIO NEWS.)

WOMEN AT WORK

NUMBER OF WOMEN employed in the nation's labor force has dropped to the lowest level since the end of the war, reports the U.S. Women's Bureau. Figures show half a million decrease from Dec. 1946 to Jan. 1947. The 15,480,000 women working in January comprise 27.9 per cent of the total working force.

ENTRY WAGES for women in most department stores are lower than for men, states the Women's Bureau. In 81 per cent of 413 stores reporting, men's beginning weekly wages ranged from $20 to $35, while in 74 per cent of the stores, women's pay ranged from $18 to $30. Women were paid $30 or more to start in only three per cent of the stores, while men were paid this in 30 per cent of the cases reported.

WOMEN AROUND THE WORLD: The Federal parliament in Australia now includes four women members . . . Johannesburg, Union of South Africa has its first woman mayor — Mrs. Jessie McPherson, former member of Parliament. She is also active in the South African Trades & Labor Council . . . In Venezuela 12 women were elected to the Constituent Assembly in the 1946 elections, the first in which women voted.

JURY SERVICE: Women are excluded from serving on juries in 16 states, according to the Women's Bureau.

Health Care Bills Before Congress

THE American people are becoming increasingly aware of health problems and possibilities for their solution. There is a growing understanding of the fact that garde-A medical care can be made available to all the people. More unions are including health and welfare demands in their collective bargaining negotiations. Farmers are organizing into medical care cooperatives. Communities large and small are active in health protection programs.

As a result, 104 separate pieces of health legislation crammed the hopper of the last Congress. Only a few of the important ones were passed, including the Hospital Survey & Construction Act and the Natl. Mental Health Act. Most of the others will probably be reintroduced in the 80th Congress, where the Republican majority can be expected to be less friendly to progressive health legislation than were the Democrats.

Included in this category of unfinished business are the most important of all health bills, the Wagner-Murray-Dingell national health insurance bill, and the substitute measure sponsored by Senators Taft, Smith and Ball, which called for a program of charity medicine.

Around these two bills will center the fight for health in the new Congress. They represent clearly the difference in ideas between an all-out national health program to bring adequate prepaid medical service to all the people, and a stopgap measure offering charity service only to those who can pass a means test.

THE Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, long a vital plank in the platforms of both AFL and CIO, has been redrafted in the light of many constructive suggestions made during extensive hearings last year. It will probably have increased sponsorship and will soon be reintroduced.

A measure which would give every worker complete services for his entire family from a doctor of his choice by paying regularly a small health insurance premium to which his employer would contribute an equal amount, the bill deserves the active support of very union local in every community.

The Republican bill, rewritten with the help of the monopolistic American Medical Assn., has already been introduced by Senators Taft, Smith, Ball and Donnell. It should fool no one. Workers know by now what to expect from these opponents of organized labor. Their so-called Natl. Health Bill would substitute a program of limited medical care on a charity basis for the needy, administered individually by the 48 states.

What is more, the bill would pour public funds into the private prepayment plans of the same medical societies which have been viciously attacking national health insurance legislation. States would pay the premiums of needy persons for membership in these highly inadequate AMA plans, and thus wash their hands of health care for these people.

The Taft-Smith-Ball-Donnell bill must be fully understood and rejected as a cheap imitation of the real thing. Workers who seek health security within the reach of their dwindling pay checks should make Capitol Hill rock with their demand for a real national health insurance program.

Wage-Hour Law First

WRECKING THE NEW DEAL

THE structure of New Deal legislation erected by Pres. Roosevelt has received its first major blow from the 80th Congress.

The House has passed a so-called portal-portal bill which destroys much of the effective administration of the Wage-Hour Act, first passed in 1938 to rid the country of the sweatshop evil. Action in the Senate on a similar bill is expected shortly.

Last week CIO Pres. Philip Murray lashed out at the action of the House of Representatives —whose voting record on the bill is printed on page 2.

"The bill offers an opportunity to employers to go back to the days of the sweatshop," he said.

"They have received a green light for an unprecedented expansion in wage-cutting at the expense of the worst paid and least organized working people in the country, and they have had solemn assurances from the House of Representatives that every conceivable obstacle will be placed in the way of effective enforcement of the Wage-Hour law," the CIO head commented.

MURRAY cited three principal features of the House-passed bill which would weaken wage-hour enforcement:

- A one-year statute of limitation on filing back wage claims—a far more limited time than normally covers damage suits of other kinds.
- A new standard of exemption from the law—the employer's argument that he acted in "good faith." The argument is difficult to disprove, and will tempt many chiseling employers to seek evasion of wage-hour standards.
- Settlement out of court between employers and individual workers —which may give employers a chance to violate the law and then settle their violations at "bargain rates."

CHARGING that the bill constitutes "vicious class legislation" directed against workers, Murray attacked the "good faith" alibi. He said:

"The standard of 'good faith' as a defense against wage-hour suits will prove the wide-open door through which every employer who illegally pays sub-standard wages can march away from his just obligations to his employees.

"To cap the climax, the bill passed by the House of Representatives provides that employers may settle wage-hour claims with individual employees out of court and without supervision.

"This principle has been rejected time and time again, in both Federal and State legislatures. These bodies have recognized that equity cannot be gained in a deal between an economically powerful employer and the individual employee dependent for his livelihood on keeping his job."

AID LABOR'S BATTLE

PROFESSIONAL and farm groups are joining with labor to call for defeat of bills which would curb union rights.

At Amherst, Mass., Prof. Colston E. Warne of Amherst College announced that 160 economists and political scientists had sent a petition to Chairman Taft of the Senate Labor Committee describing many of the proposals as "punitive legislation designed to destroy many successful collective bargaining practices and to jeopardize the rights of workers."

"We strongly oppose any legislation which attempts to wipe out the gains made in the last decade granting the workers a somewhat more equal bargaining position with industry, and which propose now to place workers at the mercy of their employers," the statement said.

Among the signers were Merle Curti of Wisconsin, Thomas Eliot of Northwestern, Rev. Wilfrid Parsons of Catholic Univ., Emily Brown of Vassar, John H. Sheehan of Notre Dame, and M. G. Hayes of Ohio State.

THE National Farmers Union, through Pres. James Patton, told the Senate Committee that his organization is in strong opposition to the proposed labor legislation.

Whatever may be the opinion of "isolated" trade unions or their leaders, Patton declared in a brief sent to the Senate group, "we are compelled by the facts to recognize that unions of workers are the principal non-governmental means of maintaining consumer purchasing power."

The United Shoe Workers, in a brief filed with the Senate Labor Committee, pointed out that not a single employer from the industry had testified before the committee.

"Certainly, if there were any convictions among the employers in this industry that any of the proposed bills would reduce industrial strife, and improve management-labor relations in the industry, at least one employer of shoe workers would have arisen to say so," the union said.

RENT—POLLTAX—BUDGET CUTS

● RENT BILL DELAYED

Hopes of the real estate lobby for quick action on a bill to spell the practical end of rent control and to jack up rent ceilings by 10% have hit at least a temporary snag in the Senate Banking & Currency Committee.

A bill drawn up by Sen. Buck (R. Del.), head of the subcommittee on rent control, has been held up in the Banking & Currency Committee, and Sen. Tobey (R. N.H.) is reported to have asked for a new compromise bill.

Sen. Sparkman (D. Ala.), a member of the rent subcommittee, has introduced a compromise measure which would provide for no increases in the rent ceilings and provides a formula for return of controls to the states under certain conditions. A bill of this sort may emerge with the committee's endorsement.

Meanwhile Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.) charged Senate Republicans with having struck a "double blow" at veterans and their families when the upper house voted 58-29 to put OPA out of business June 30, with orders for "economic operations" until that date.

Pepper said the result of the Senate's action on HR 1968, the deficiency appropriation bill, would be to end practical enforcement of rent control April 30, as well as such housing price controls as are still vested in the Civil Production Authority.

● POLLTAX ACTION

Action on bills to ban the polltax on voting in federal elections in seven southern states is beginning.

S. 94, introduced by Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla.) and supported by Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) has been referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration. Sen. Brooks (R. Ill.), committee chairman, has not yet set date for a hearing.

Seven polltax bills have been filed in the House (HR 7, 29, 66, 225, 230, 779 and 1435). All have been referred to the Committee on House Administration, headed by Rep. LeCompte (R. Ia.) and an Elections Subcommittee headed by Rep. Gamble (R. N. Y.) Meanwhile Rep. Marcantonio (ALP, N.Y.), has filed a dicharge petition for HR 7, in order to dismiss the committee and bring the bill directly to the House floor.

The Natl. Committee to Abolish the Poll Tax, 127 B St. S.E., Washington 3, D. C., asks that letters and wires be sent to Sen. Brooks and Reps. LeCompte and Gamble, calling for fastest possible action to secure committee hearings.

● WHERE TO CUT?

Budget cuts, even at the lower 4½ billion dollar level voted by the Senate, would in reality constitute a 50% slash in funds for government social welfare agencies, Pres. Abram Flaxer of the United Public Workers has informed Congress.

Major items in Pres. Truman's budget for national defense, veterans' aid, debt interest, and Philippine aid, amount to over 29 billion, the UPWA said. It added: "This leaves only 8½ billion dollars from which to make a 4½ billion cut . . .

"It seems to us that a realistic approach to the national welfare must rule out budget slashes of over 50% in this latter category."

Such cuts will affect hospital, housing, social security, health, welfare, education and similar government programs.

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

CALL TO ACTION!

Resolution Unanimously Adopted by CIO Executive Board at Washington, D. C., March 13

THE CIO Executive Board, in recognition of the grave threat that pending anti-labor legislation represents not only to the continued existence of organized labor but to the whole well-being of the American people, is designating the month of April as DEFEND LABOR MONTH.

The legislation now pending in both houses of Congress has but one major purpose—to weaken the ability of the labor movement to raise the wages and better the working conditions of its members. The success of this effort could mean only one thing—a lowering of living standards for all the workers of America.

We urge all union members to use this month to demonstrate to Congress that the labor movement is united against the passage of proposed anti-labor legislation and we invite our many friends and allies through their own organizations and in their local communities to join us in this protest.

The following program of action for CIO international unions, local unions, industrial union councils, and CIO members will be put into operation through all CIO channels.

- Mass labor and citizens' rallies.
- Plant gate and neighborhood leaflet distributions, and petition campaigns.
- Shop and plant gate rallies.
- Delegations to call on governors, state legislators, mayors, city and county officials, local civic leaders, local politicians, fraternal, religious, and consumer organizations.
- Special radio programs.
- Delegations to Washington to call on Senators and Congressmen and report to their local communities (Plans for such delegations to be worked out with CIO Legislative Director).
- An all-out campaign to get resolutions, letters, and telegrams sent to Washington.

We feel confident that through our united efforts in this campaign we can show our elected representatives in Congress that neither we nor the American people want to take this step down the road to poverty and depression but rather insist on moving upward to the obtainable goal of a more abundant life for all.

ANTI-LABOR PUTSCH CAN BE HALTED!

By FRED ROSS

THE anti-labor putsch can be halted.

● It was stopped this week in Indiana when hundreds of CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood members crowded the House gallery in the capitol at Indianapolis to give moral support to pro-labor repersentatives of both parties as they forced the defeat of the anti-mass picketing bill. The measure had won easy passage in the republican-controlled Senate.

● It was stopped in Boise, Idaho's capital, where GOP leaders were forced to let the Senate adjourn after both the CIO and the AFL fought legislative action to re-establish the State Dept. of Labor because reactionary Republicans had tacked onto it anti-labor features.

● And it was slowed in Albany, N. Y., this week when a delegation of 600 CIO Transportation Workers and CIO Public Workers persuaded the Republicans in the Assembly to delay consideration of the Condon-Wadlin Bill which would ban strikes of public workers. The assembly late this week passed the measure and sent it to Gov. Dewey.

CIO President Philip Murray telegraphed Gov. Dewey that the CIO Executive Board meeting in Washington this week "cited" the Condon-Wadlin Bill "as a prime example of unhealthy anti-labor legislation now being considered in the various states," and asked him to use his influence against enactment of the measure.

Murray declared that the measure marked a "departure from the fine liberal traditions of New York state," and would force state employes "into the status of second-class citizens, with conditions bordering on economic slavery."

ANTI-labor action was stopped—at least temporarily—at Jefferson City, Mo., after CIO and AFL representatives accompanied by a crowd of members of both organizations protested against a labor-shackling code at hearings before the Senate and House labor committees.

And in Alabama, Gov. James E. Folsom bucked the anti-labor trend to tell State CIO Director Carey Haigler and a delegation that he recognized the right of state employes to join unions, although the state law prohibits strikes against the government.

In line with the governor's decision, the Alcoholic Beverage Control board agreed to negotiate an agreement with the CIO Public Workers if the union wins an election among state liquor employes.

The anti-laborites managed, however, to sneak a bill through the Indiana legislature which would outlaw the right of public employes to strike and provides for compulsory arbitration. The unions are mobilizing strength for a gubernatorial veto. Organized labor had stopped other anti-union bills earlier.

MEANWHILE, Rep. J. P. Richards (D. S. C.) was put on the spot at an overflow meeting at Rock Hill, S. C. when he tried to explain his anti-labor position to members of the CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhoods.

Richards said that while he was not in favor of "scuttling" the Wagner Act, he wanted to amend it to outlaw the closed shop and jurisdictional disputes, and to give greater freedom to employers to talk to workers about unions.

Members of the audience took the floor to question sharply Richards position, but cheered State Reps. Poliakoff and Wallace. Poliakoff told of his fight against the manufacturers-backed anti-union security bill and his pressure for a state wage-hour and a "little Wagner Act."

REPORTS from throughout the country show that labor—with CIO taking the initiative—is continuing the fight against anti-labor measures and for social legislation.

"The drive against labor is a drive against the living standards of the American people," declared Senator Glen H. Taylor (D. Ida.) at Louisville, Ky., at a rally of 2400 members of the CIO, Railroad Brotherhoods, AFL Teamsters and independent unions. The CIO sponsored the meeting.

William B. Taylor, CIO district director, told his cheering audience that the rally was called "for the purpose of demonstrating to the people of Louisville and the state of Kentucky that labor is strong, and labor is united . . . We intend to hurl back the lies disseminated about us into the teeth of our enemies."

ENACTMENT of the bill barring the closed shop in Virginia stimulated attendance at a meeting this week of the Virginia CIO Council with PAC committeemen from all over the state, despite a blizzard.

The Cleveland CIO Council has initiated a campaign to obtain 100,000 signatures on petitions addressed to the Ohio contingent of Senators and Congressmen at Washington, opposing anti-labor legislation.

"Sorry, Senator. You've come to the wrong place—with your record!"

FOOD PROFITS UP NEARLY 100%

U. S. food corporations, exploiting the death of price control and the hungry bellies of Europe and Asia, have almost doubled their profit take in one year:

These are the facts, as reported in a preliminary survey of net profits published in the March news letter of the Natl. City Bank of New York City:

	Net Income After Taxes 1945	1946	Percent Change
16 Baking Firms	$22,730,000	$44,665,000	Plus 96.5%
15 Meat Packing Firms	34,499,000	67,857,000	" 96.7%
64 Other Food Firms	82,725,000	142,773,000	" 72.6%

The Bank reported that for 840 firms, producing everything from food products and clothing to chemicals and machinery, net profits for 1946 exceeded 1945 profits by 37.4%.

MEANWHILE, over the nation the price of bread — most basic of foods—rose from 7 to 21%. Highest increase was in Atlanta, from 14 to 17c a loaf.

In the commodity markets, the price of wheat jumped to the highest level since 1920, based on speculators' hopes that they will cash in on European food needs.

Soaring prices on other bread ingredients contributed to the rise in the cost of the consumers' commodity. With price control wiped out as the result of the campaign of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the costs of shortening, lard, condensed milk and eggs have sharply increased.

WHAT the abolition of price control means to the average worker was dramatically demonstrated by a report issued this week by the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers at Dayton, O.

The union made a survey at the Frigidaire plant there and found that 71% of the workers are cutting down on their food and that the same number have exhausted their savings.

To the question: "Have you been forced to cut down on any items such as milk, meat, bread, butter, shortening, fresh fruits, etc." the answers were: 71% yes, 10% no and 19% no answer.

On the question: "Have you savings?" the answers ran 16% yes, 71% no, 8% little and 5% no answer. Sam Gray, Negro janitor, pointed out that he has only an empty wallet to show for his week's work, with no chance to save or plan for the future. He is sole wage earner in a family of eleven.

To the final question: "If wages would permit, would you purchase: a home, refrigerator, electric range, washing machine, radio, automobile, insurance, sweeper, clothing, home repairs?", 54% listed from five to nine of these items as being needed. Another 37% said they needed all of them. Many added medical and dental care to this list of so-called luxuries.

PLOT TO CUT FARM WAGES

IMPORTATION of foreign laborers to work on big factory-farms at un-American wages will help to tear down pay standards and bring back the "Grapes of Wrath" conditions of the mid-thirties.

That prediction was made last week to the Senate Agriculture Committee by Elizabeth Sasuly, legislative spokesman for the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers. She voiced opposition to a number of bills now before Congress to allow mass imports of agricultural workers from across the borders.

Charging that the real purpose behind the projected importing of agricultural workers is a desire to "create or intensify labor surpluses, and so cut wages," Mrs. Sasuly said that farm labor supply camps in California and the Pacific northwest are "filled to overflowing" with unemployed U. S. workers.

Call To Action

APRIL—'DEFEND LABOR MONTH'

President Murray announced this week that CIO is planning a nation-wide legislative emergency rally in Washington, D. C., within the next three weeks. The date will be announced later.

A CALL for militant action by every union in the country to halt the trend of vicious anti-labor legislation was sounded last week by the CIO Executive Board. The CIO NEWS went to press before the Board adjourned.

The Board designated April as "Defend Labor Month" and urged a nationwide program of meetings, publicity and action to meet the "grave threat" of bills in both the national Congress and state legislatures.

"The legislation now pending in both Houses of Congress has but one major purpose—to weaken the ability of the labor movement to raise the wages and better the working conditions of its members," the Board.

"The success of this effort could mean only one thing—a lowering of living standards for all the workers of America."

To rouse public opinion against the gathering attack on workers' rights, the CIO urged a program of community meetings, shop and plant gate rallies, leaflet distributions, delegations to state and local civic and political leaders, special radio programs, the sending of union groups to Washington—and, above all, an intensive drive to get resolutions, letters and telegrams sent to Senators and Congressmen in Washington.

THE Call to Action followed solemn warnings, by Pres. Murray, Vice-Pres. Van Bittner of the Steelworkers and General Counsel Lee Pressman, of the shattering effects which even so-called "mild" bills would have on the future of American unionism.

In a detailed study of the national economy, the CIO Board pointed out that the country is in "grave danger" because of rising prices, decreased buying power of workers and falling living standards.

"We urge Congress to reconsider the course it is taking, to look to the need of the people—for better housing, health and education; higher minimum wages; more protection of civil liberties—and to fulfill these needs," the CIO leaders said.

"The Eightieth Congress can have a proud and distinguished record if it will rise to meet its responsibilities, and in such an undertaking it would have the enthusiastic support of the American people."

CONGRESS is looking away from the people's economic needs and instead is focussing its attention on a "widespread drive against the basic civil liberties and general welfare" of the public, the Board charged.

It reviewed the attack on rent control; charged that only "inadequate" health and housing bills have been introduced in Congress; complained that measures to protect minority groups and to end the polltax and lynchings have been "smothered" in committees; and pointed with concern to the prospects of unfair tax legislation.

"Meanwhile," the Board noted, "the Un-American Activities Committee has announced a series of witch-hunting bills, one of which, the Thomas bill, would make government employes second class citizens, subject to loss of their jobs merely on suspicion, with no right to appeal."

Similar patterns of anti-labor activity are to be found in more than a dozen states, the Board was told by General Counsel Pressman. He reviewed legislative actions against labor in a number of states, and warned that the battle to save union rights must be conducted in the state capitals as well as in Washington.

In other actions, the Board expressed strong endorsement of the guaranteed annual wage study conducted for the federal government by Murray Latimer. It also suggested to the AFL that it meet with a CIO committee for a discussion of unity measures.

The meeting, which opened March 13, was due to run through March 15.

CIO Urges AFL Name Date Of Unity Parley

THE CIO this week called upon the AFL to arrange an early meeting to discuss questions of unity.

CIO Pres. Murray, in a letter to AFL Pres. Green, suggested the meeting of the two organizations' five-man committees to discuss "immediate protective measures" against anti-labor legislation in addition to surveying possibilities of "the achievement of organic unity."

Murray's letter was approved by the CIO Executive Board, meeting in Washington. The CIO's five representatives in unity talks were named several weeks ago. They are Pres. Murray, Walter Reuther, auto union; Emil Rieve, textile; A. J. Fitzgerald, electrical, and Jacob Potofsky, clothing.

Text of Pres. Murray's letter follows:

"Dear Mr. Green:

"In my letter to you of February 18, 1947, I advised that a committee had been designated for the Congress of Industrial Organizations to meet with a committee representing the American Federation of Labor for the purpose of taking common action to protect the interests of organized labor.

"The CIO committee awaits word from you as to the date and place for an early meeting.

"It is inconceivable that once we meet we would not, in the face of the stark, pressing danger confronting American labor, determine upon immediate protective measures in addition to engaging in a discussion for the achievement of organic unity."

SENATE GETS HOOKS INTO WAGE-HOUR ACT

THE Wage-Hour Act, passed by Congress in 1938 to protect the country's most badly-exploited workers from chiseling by employers, stands in grave danger of crippling amendments.

Senate action on the proposed changes in the bill appeared to be in the offing as The CIO NEWS went to press. The Gwynne bill, containing a number of weakening changes in the law, was passed a fortnight ago by the House of Representatives.

The bill up for consideration in the Senate differs only in minor details from the House version. After action in the Senate, the two measures will go to a joint conference committee of the two branches of Congress for a compromise of the two proposals.

Enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act would be all but scuttled by the bills. They would force workers to file wage claims inside of a year from the date of violation of the Act—a practical difficulty, since investigation and preparation of cases frequently requires a much longer period of time.

The bills would also give a complete whitewash to employers who could prove that they acted in "good faith," and experts predict it will be difficult to prove that even the most grasping sweatshopper intentionally violated the law.

As a third obstacle to enforcement, the bill provides that employers and employes may get together to settle claims. In unorganized plants particularly, such a device would prove a green light for employers who could convince their workers of the "wisdom" of settling claims on a cheap basis.

WHILE the Wage-Hour amendments neared final action, activity on even more sweeping legislation against organized labor speeded up in both the Senate and House.

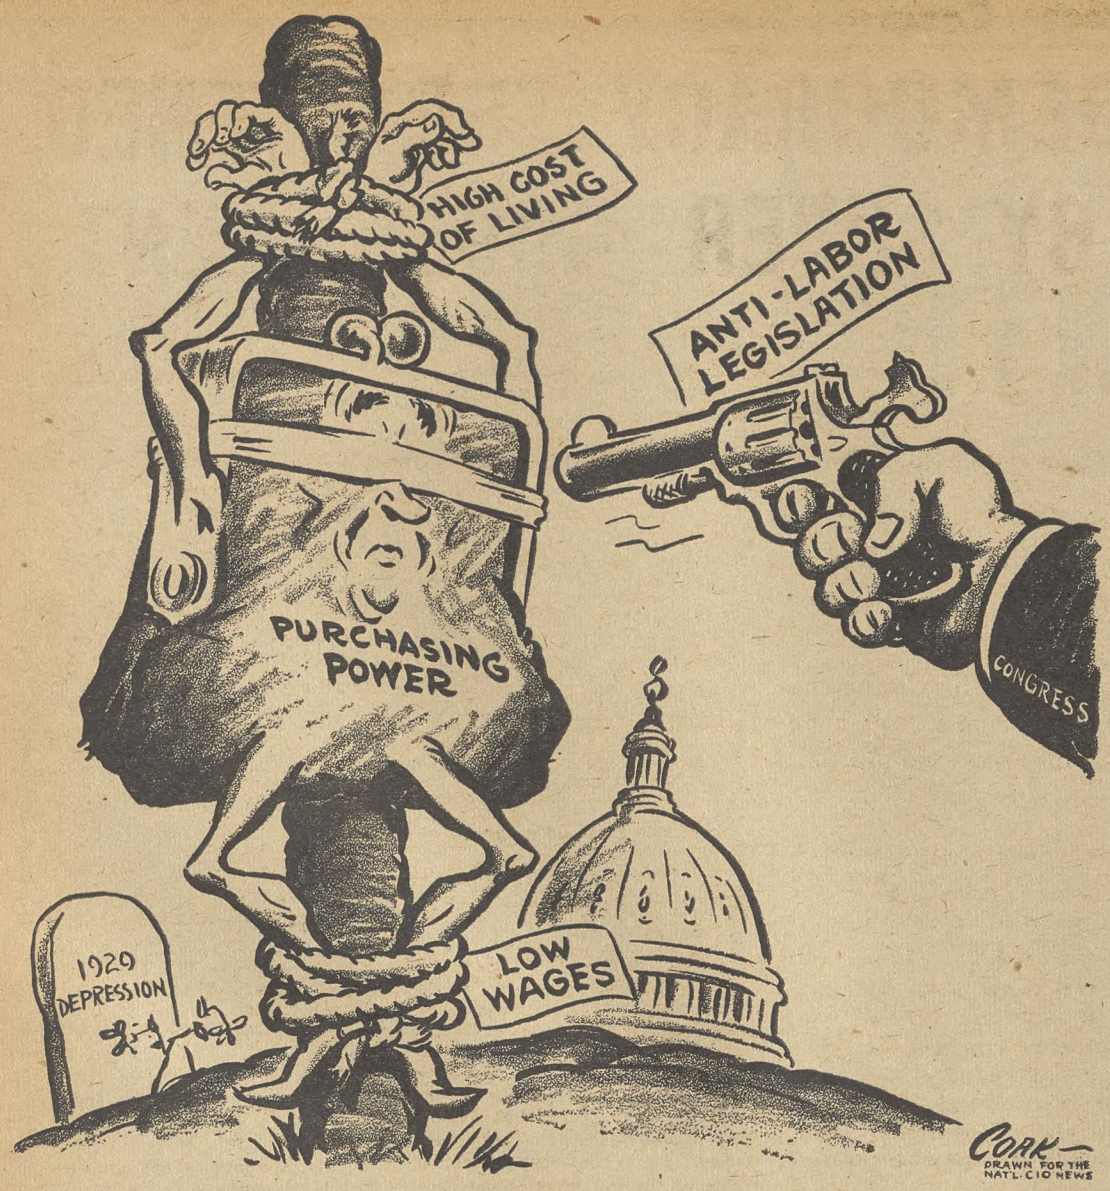
The Senate Labor Committee, having concluded hearings, was studying proposals for an omnibus bill. A straw in the wind as to the committee's intentions was indicated by the hiring of Gerald Reilly, former NLRB member who has proposed sweeping amendments to the Wagner Act, to assist the committee.

At the same time, Senators Wayne Morse (R, Ore.) and Irving Ives (R, N. Y.), both regarded in some quarters as "mild" Republicans, indicated they would support vigorous bills to restrict various union activities.

The Senate Committee's minimum proposals, it was believed, would follow the lines of the Taft-Smith-Ball bill (S. 55), which is a rehashed version of last year's vetoed Case Bill. The bill as introduced would set up 60-day cooling-off periods, invite lawsuits against unions in Federal courts, outlaw the check-off of union dues, and ban secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes—the latter two under such sweeping terms that the bill could easily be used against all sorts of strike activity.

Sen. Taft (R. O.), it has been recalled, indicated in a recent speech that he might favor nominal seizure by the government of any important strike-closed plant or industry. Such a plan, if enacted into law, would give the government a sure-fire strike-breaking weapon in conjunction with the Supreme Court's decision okaying injunctions in the mine union case.

In such a situation, anti-labor injunctions could be used in almost any strike to hamper bona fide union activity.



'CAPITOL' PUNISHMENT

EVERYONE knows by now there's a lynch-gang at work on Washington's Capitol Hill, preparing all sorts of atrocities against labor unions.

But not so many people recognize that what is at stake—in fact, tied to the stake—is the purchasing power of the American people.

The great majority of the people have had their consuming power sharply cut by increased living costs and sky-high prices.

This has resulted in total retail sales declining from an index figure of 172.6 in February 1946 to 159.9 in November, and even lower in December.

The rise in living costs is reflected in the Heller Committee's minimum health and decency budget for a family of four, which was $2,317.99 before the war. By March 1942, the costs of maintaining exactly the same standard had risen to $2,603.73; by March 1945, to $3,075.72; and by September 1946, to $3,576.24.

Particularly hard hit have been the working people. Average weekly money wages of factory workers have declined from $46.06 in 1944 to $44.39 in 1945, and again to $43.75 in 1946; while real weekly wages, measured against prices, have declined from $31.98 to $30.20 and again to $27.87 in the same three years.

The people's purchasing power must be restored and raised if we are not to head into another 1929 depression. The chief agency for doing this job is the labor unions.

So when anti-labor legislation is threatened to undermine unions and weaken their bargaining power, the Capital Hill lynchers are actually pointing their guns at the purchasing power of the American people.

WOMEN'S RIGHTS

ONE OF the basic principles of the CIO is opposition to all forms of unfair discrimination.

In line with this principle, the CIO fights against the many discriminations practiced against women. It organizes workers without regard to sex, grants women equal union rights, demands equal pay for equal work.

But there are many additional discriminations against women, outside of the job field, which are deeply rooted in American life and even embodied in law.

Since the CIO extends its fight against discrimination to these broader fields, some people wonder why it has never supported the so-called "Equal Rights" Amendment.

The CIO is strongly opposed to this amendment, because its chief result would be to deprive women workers of special protections they now enjoy through legislation governing hours of work, minimum wage, working conditions, etc.

But a bill sponsored by representative women's and progressive organizations, including the CIO, has now been introduced in Congress, to establish equal rights for women without destroying protective legislation.

This women's bill is HR 2007, which declares it to be the "policy of the United States that in law and its administration no distinctions on the basis of sex shall be made except such as are reasonably justified by differences in physical structure, biological, or social function."

The bill would set up a Commission to review economic, civil, political and social discriminations against women and to recommend remedial legislation. It also calls on Federal and State agencies to abolish any existing discriminations.

The CIO heartily endorses this legislation, which also has the support of all seven women members of Congress, and is joining in the campaign to have it enacted.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

TWO HEADS are better than one, but only if each head does its own thinking.

If one head does the thinking for both, the me-too head can look mighty foolish at times.

Apparently suffering from a lack of little grey cells in its Washington headquarters, the AFL last year turned over its thinking to the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers.

It issued statement after statement denouncing CIO wage demands, blaming wage increases for higher prices, and saying only greater labor productivity could bring higher wages.

Each time NAM Bergen spoke, AFL McCarthy opened his yap.

FOLLOWING the NAM line that prices just naturally come down when wages are held, the AFL "Labor's Monthly Survey" last October made this gleeful prediction:

"End of Price Rise Not Far Off. Vital to all workers is the news that the living cost rise is coming to an end . . . . Living costs may continue to go up slightly for a few more months . . . . but the major rise is now clearly over . . . . by early next year consumer prices may turn down."

ALAS FOR Pollyanna! Aside from a tiny temporary dip in food prices around the turn of the year, living costs have stubbornly insisted on going up.

It is now six months since the AFL made its prediction. Prices of meat animals, grains, cotton and eggs have recently been hitting new highs; and wholesale prices on all commodities have jumped to an all-time peak.

These record increases in wholesale prices are bound to be reflected in still higher retail prices, and competent authorities now expect a continued steady rise in living costs for months to come—even without the threatened rent increases.

EVEN THE NAM can't say "the CIO done it" this time.

There have been no major wage increases in the past six months and more.

Labor productivity has increased enormously, and industrial production has been at record levels.

Yet in this period of high production and held-down wages, since OPA was destroyed, prices have risen more sharply than ever before.

THE AFL leaders must begin to suspect by now that there was an element of self-interest in the propaganda with which the NAM supplied them.

For some folks have profited from these sky-rocketing prices and this record production—and it hasn't been the workers, whose real wages have fallen sharply.

For 1946, total corporate profits, after taxes, were around $12 billion, the highest level ever reached for a full year. They are increasing to still higher levels in the first part of 1947. And dividends continue to break all records.

PHILIP MURRAY gave the Senate labor committee figures on the exorbitant increases in profits. But Senator Ball said he couldn't see any connection between these profit figures and the labor legislation under consideration.

If he couldn't, he is more obtuse than the NAM backers of his bills.

They want legislation to weaken the unions' bargaining power, precisely to maintain their present enormous profit advantage at the expense of lowered real wages and over-high prices for consumers.

WHILE THE AFL leaders must get the point by now—and are as alarmed as the CIO about anti-union legislation, even though they have refused so far to make common cause—the NAM is not disturbed.

In a recent issue, the "NAM News" features a statement of Senator Taft that, "in the long run" competition will bring prices down if wages are not raised. "It works that way in the long run," he repeated.

With profits and dividends constantly increasing, Taft's NAM friends don't care how long that long, long run may last—in fact, the longer the better.

But working people have to live in the short run. They can get mighty hungry on low wages and high prices, waiting for that long run finally to end in depression.

That's why the CIO is taking the lead for higher wages right now.

The Greater New York CIO Council's Veterans Commiittee turns over a check for $1,000 to the paralyzed veterans at Halloran Hospital, Staten Island. David Finn of Local 2, Wholesale, Retail & Dept. Store Union, CIO, makes the presentation to Martin Slitzky, treasurer of the Paralyzed Veterans Assn. at the hospital.

HOSPITALIZED VETS ARE CIO BOOSTERS

THE Greater New York CIO Council's Veterans Committee has scored its greatest victory for paraplegic veterans —those who have lost the use of their legs through amputation or paralysis.

Through a citizens committee—organized by the council committee and consisting of the wives and relatives of paraplegics—a test pension case was appealed to the Veterans Administration.

The result is that Cecil Holloway, paraplegic vet and former member of the CIO Auto Workers, and seven of his buddies, whose pensions had been $138 a month each, will receive permanent pensions of $360 a month each as well as new cars especially designed for them.

There are two other reasons why the CIO is popular in veterans hospitals in the New York City area. CIO has distributed personal radios, and it has given financial aid to the Paralyzed Veterans Assn. at Halloran Hospital to carry on campaigns for such aims as larger pension payments and for special housing for vets compelled to use wheelchairs.

The response of the unions affiliated with the council was immediate and generous. At Gimbel's store, members of Local 2, Retail, Wholesale & Dept. Store Union, contributed $1,000 from their modest pay and pledged $1,000 more. Local 1227 of the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers contributed $25 per week.

The immediate needs of the ex-servicemen were not forgotten. Local 1227 distributed dozens of radios to four veterans hospitals in the New York City area, and Joint Council 13 of the Shoe Workers this week gave 90 more radios through the Veterans Administration.

CIO CHARGES HOUSE LEADERS BLOCK ON-JOB PAY RAISE

MEYER BERNSTEIN of the CIO Veterans Committee this week charged that "there are insistent indications" that "the House leadership intends to prevent or impede" Congressmen from voting on HR 246 which would increase monthly wage ceilings for veterans taking on-the-job training.

HR 246 would raise the monthly ceilings for veterans having no dependents from $175 to $200; for those with one dependent from $200 to $325, and for those with two or more dependents from $200 to $350.

Bernstein said in a letter to Speaker Joseph W. Martin, Jr., (R. Mass.) that the bill would restore a wage cut that the last Congress "hastily and thoughtlessly imposed." He pointed out that the House Veterans Committee had unanimously decided that an ex-serviceman making up for years lost while in the Armed Forces "is entitled to a normal standard of living" while learning a more highly-skilled job.

"Most of his income would still come from his employer," Bernstein continued. "The Government's share would still be limited to the maximum subsistence allowances provided by law.

"Economies effected at the expense of former servicemen who are taking on-the-job training or apprenticeship courses are false and hollow. They may result in helping to cut down on federal expenditures at present but the inevitable consequence will be a cut in America's productive power in the future."

WFTU Delegation

A World Federation of Trades Unions delegation, including a CIO spokesman, was ready last week to leave for a tour of Japan and the Far East.

After some delay, permission for the WFTU group to visit the American-occupied areas of Japan and Korea was received from General Douglas MacArthur. Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employes is already on the Pacific enroute to Tokio.

The commission, headed by WFTU Secretary General Louis Saillant of France, also includes representatives of the British, Australian, Soviet and Chinese trade union groups. They will investigate labor union conditions in a number of Far Eastern countries.

Press, Congress Silent

DEMOCRACY THREATENED BY SUPER-GOVERNMENT

By FRED d'AVILA

YOU could hardly find the story in the daily papers. Congressmen who have been screaming that labor unions are "monopolies" conveniently looked the other way. The silence assumed the nature of conspiracy.

The so-called "free" press and the men elected to office under the premise that they favor democracy found it convenient to overlook a report which shows that this nation is marching down the road to what Italy called fascism.

The report was issued by the Federal Trade Commission. It showed that huge corporate enterprises, fattened with war profits, are gobbling up smaller fry like whales swallowing herring.

The report said that since 1940 1,800 firms have been purchased by or merged with other concerns. And 242 of those swallowed were bought up by giant corporations—each with assets of more than $50 million dollars.

The increase in monopoly control was dubbed the nation's "number one domestic problem" by Rep. Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.). He said:

"We must face the fact that economic concentration has risen to perilous heights in this country.

"It is a fact that every highly industrialized nation, in which private monopoly has become dominant, has succumbed to one form or another of state control or collectivism.

"If there is one lesson that we can learn from recent history, it is that state collectivism follows private monopoly just as certainly as night follows day."

Kefauver pointed out:

● That most of the 1,800 corporations have been swallowed up in the last three years.

● That their assets amount to $4,100,000,000—nearly 5% of the total asset value of all manufacturing corporations.

● That 70% of those swallowed since 1940 have been small businesses, with assets of less than $1,000,000.

"A striking feature of the present drive is the movement into traditional small business industries," Kefauver declared.

"More than one-third of the total number of acquisitions were accounted for by only three industries—food, non-electrical machinery, and textiles and apparel—all predominantly small business fields.

"Big business has practically taken over such former strongholds of small business as steel drums, wines and tight cooperage.

"For example, the giant steel corporations have increased their ownership of steel drum fabricating capacity from less than 10% before the war to nearly 90% today.

"At the same time that the big steel companies have expanded forward into fabricating fields, some of the big metal-using companies have expanded backward into the basic-metals industry, thereby assuring themselves of a supply of these tight materials, but reducing the amount of such materials available for small business.

"Thus, the General Electric Co., the Borg-Warner Corp., and the Intl. Detrola Corp. have all purchased steel mills, which formerly constituted an important source of supply of steel sheets for small business."

Among the big corporations buying up other concerns since 1940 have been: American Home Products Corp., a drug concern, acquiring 38 other firms; Burlington Mills purchasing 19; Natl. Distillers 17; Safeway Stores 16; Borden Co. 14; and J. P. Stevens & Co. (textiles) 11.

THE FTC, in its report, declared that "the rapid growth of private super-government in industry must be halted" to prevent the rise of a "political super-government." It added:

"The first step to be taken is to halt this alarming increase in mergers and acquistions."

Under present law, the FTC is powerless to stop purchase of a company's assets even if the transaction leads to monopoly. The Clayton anti-trust act now forbids only the purchase of stock.

The FTC has asked that the law be amended to plug this loophole which is allowing huge concentrations of industry to extend their power.

This amendment is incorporated in H.R. 515, the Kefauver bill, which is now before a subcommittee of the House Judiciary Committee. Hearings on the bill are scheduled to start within two weeks.

Unless the law is amended, large corporations with sufficient wartime profits to "support a high level of merger activity for years to come," will accelerate the trend toward industrial—and possible political—dictatorship.

YOUR UNION IS IN DANGER!

Bills now being considered by Congress write a one-way ticket for your union—straight back to the dark ages of the open shop, insecurity, wage-cutting.

HOW?

- By weakening the Wagner Labor Relations Act, and threatening all labor's basic rights.

YOU CAN HELP DEFEND YOUR UNION!

ACT TODAY!

1. Write to your Congressmen and Senators in Washington.
2. See that your union passes resolutions against anti-labor bills.
3. Talk to your neighbors and friends; get every group in your town—the mayor, the council, merchants, doctors, women's clubs—to fight these bills.

Hail U. S. Study as Proof Annual Wage Will Work

THE CIO Executive Board this week hailed the recent U.S. report on guaranteed wages as "ample proof of our contention that guaranteed wage plans can help end the intolerable evils of unemployment and advance the welfare of the entire nation."

Meanwhile, Pres. Truman requested his Council of Economic Advisers to study the economic implications of the guaranteed wage, "particularly as a device for helping to stabilize employment, production and purchasing power."

He asked the Secretaries of Labor and Commerce to assist in the study.

THE CIO Board, in a resolution, said:

"We welcome the unanimous statement of the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion endorsing plans for guaranteed wages. This action by representatives of business, agriculture, labor and the public indicates widespread recognition of the justice and importance of labor's demand for an adequate annual income.

"The research report, prepared under the direction of Murray Latimer, is a note-worthy contribution to understanding of the need for genuine employment security and the means by which it can be achieved. Mr. Latimer and his staff have performed an important public service, and their report, to be available April 1, should receive careful attention from our affiliates and should be given the widest possible publicity.

"Here is ample proof of our contention that guaranteed wage plans can help end the intolerable evils of unemployment and advance the welfare of the entire nation. Business has a clear responsibility to cooperate with us in developing and applying adequate programs for assuring regular employment and income."

'Don't Send Us Back To Corn Bread and Onions!'

"I HAVE sent my little children to school with corn bread and onions out of my back yard for breakfast. The children are living to tell anyone that this is true; they have fainted in school from hunger."

Mrs. Edna Martin of Athens, Ga., thus wrote the General Assembly this week, in a plea against laws that would weaken the CIO Textile Workers Union which has helped to raise her wages.

Her letter was sent this week to the Georgia delegation in Congress by John W. Edelman, Washington representative of the Textile Workers.

Mrs. Martin told the legislators that she has worked for the Athens Mfg. Co. cotton mill for 25 years.

"In this time I had to raise six children," she said. "My husband made $9.95 a week. We paid $7 a month rent for a shack in the mill village. I still live in this house, that is if you call it a house. I invite any one or all of you to see what I live in with four of my children . . .

"UP until the last war my children had no clothes to change. I would wash them out at night after working all day in the mill. You could not buy clothing on a cotton mill's wages.

"You may wonder why I stayed and worked in a cotton mill. Well when you start working in a cotton mill you can not work any where else, you have no money to move, you have no education for other work.

"The last four years through organized labor, we who work in the cotton mills are earning better wages. We have a little more money to better our living conditions. No one can say we would have had these gains without organized labor. We never had these conditions before we organized.

"Please forget these anti-labor bills."

CIO CAMPAIGN DOUBLES MEMBERSHIP IN ARKANSAS

CIO membership in Arkansas has nearly doubled during the last nine months, Walter Harris, state director of the CIO Organizing Committee, reported this week.

"The Committee went into action in Arkansas before we had our staff completed," Harris said. "We supplied men to bolster up the campaign of the Steelworkers at the Hurricane Creek and Jones Mill plants of the Reynolds Metals Co.

"We won both of the Reynolds elections, despite strong opposition from the AFL—and these elections were important because they brought the last of the six Arkansas aluminum plants under the CIO banner.

"From that point on, our campaign rolled ahead steadily.

Our greatest gains have been in wood. We have won 11 NLRB elections for the Woodworkers, accounting for nearly 1,800 members in the new local unions. Old, established locals of the IWA have made sharp membership gains since the drive got underway."

Harris said the campaign had added about 1,200 members in new Steelworkers locals, over 800 in new locals of the Furniture Workers "and from a handful to several hundred" to new locals of each of about a dozen other CIO international unions.

"We have won 39 NLRB elections in Arkansas since the CIO's Southern membership drive began last June," Harris said. "We have six petitions for certification pending with the Board. We have lost 11 elections.

"These figures, of course, do not reveal the complete picture of the progress we have made in Arkansas because they do not take into account the new members we have signed up in plants at which we have not yet asked for certification.

"For example, we have signed up more than half of Arkansas freight handlers and maintenance-of-way employes of the Missouri Pacific Railroad. When we go into an election for these employes, it will be on a system-wide basis with workers in several states voting.

"We have active organizing drives underway at Little Rock, Warren, Pocahontas, El Dorado, Fordyce, Fort Smith and Newport."

Harris said greatest potential membership in the state is in the wood industry. He said he had noted "comparatively few" violations of the National Labor Relations Act, that the CIO has been accorded "a good and wholesome reception" by the state's ministers and that the newspapers "for the most part have been fair in their dealings with us."

Harris said the unions accounting for most of the CIO membership in Arkansas are the Woodworkers, the Steelworkers, Furniture Workers, Oil Workers, Clothing Workers, Glass Workers, Railroad Workers, Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Auto Workers, Food & Tobacco Workers, and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

"Our campaign has been accompanied by some worthwhile wage increases and improvements in working conditions," Harris said. At the two Reynolds plants we organized we increased the hiring-in rate from 60 to 78c an hour, with the rate going to 80c, 30 days after an employe is hired.

"We got general increases of from 9 to 12c an hour at the Crossett Lumber Co. and Crossett Chemical Co. By wiping out inequities we got additional raises, in some cases bringing the total increase to 19c an hour."

FOREMEN WIN FIGHT FOR RECOGNITION

THE U. S. Supreme Court this week awarded foremen the final bout in their four-year-long fight for recognition for their union.

In this case, the Packard Co. foremen chose to be represented by the independent Foremen's Assn. of America.

The Packard Co., back in January, 1943, refused to recognize the union. Then the foremen started their long fight to gain recognition. The NLRB found that they constituted a proper bargaining unit under the Wagner Act. The Sixth Circuit Court also ruled in favor of the foremen in August, 1946.

The Ford Motor Co. made a limited agreement with FAA in May, 1942, but the other Detroit auto companies and suppliers refused to grant the union recognition. As part of the battle, foreman of 13 plants of 16 companies—Packard included—struck in April, 1944.

The Supreme Court in the majority opinion delivered by Justice Jackson waived aside Packard's argument that the FAA should not be recognized because its members were closer to management than the men they boss. The court said:

"Every employe, from the very fact of employment in the master's business, is required to act in his interest. He gives to the employer faithful performance of service in his interest, the protection of the employer's property in his custody or control, and all employes may, as third parties, act in the interests of the employer to such an extent that he is liable for wrongful acts.

"A familiar example would be that of a truck driver for whose negligence the company might have to answer . . .

"Though the foreman is the faithful representative of the employer in maintaining a production schedule, his interest properly may be adverse to that of the employer when it comes to fixing his own wages, hours, seniority rights or working conditions.

"He does not lose his right to serve himself in these respects because he serves his master in others. And we see no basis in this act (the Wagner Act) for holding that foremen are forbidden the protection of the act when they take collective action to protect their collective interests.

"Moreover, the company concedes that foremen have a right to organize. What it denies is that the statute compels it to recognize the union. In other words, it wants to be free to fight the foremen's union in the way that companies fought other unions before the labor act. But there is nothing in the act which indicates the Congress intended to deny its benefits to foremen as employes, if they chose to believe that their interests as employes would be better served by organization than by individual competition."

14-MONTH STRIKE ENDS AT CASE

The Bargaining Committee of Local 180, CIO Auto Workers, Pres. Walter P. Reuther, of the international union, and Regional Director Joseph Mattson announced this week that they are satisfied that the union has proven its ability to stay intact as an organization and has won its fight for survival as an institution within the Case plant at Racine, Wis. The union had been on strike 14 months.

Important wage concessions have been made beyond the company's offer both for hourly rate employees as well as increased guarantees for piece workers.

The vacation settlement represents substantial concessions beyond those offered by the company last December. The company offer at that time only provided for 1947 and 1948 vacations. The final settlement not only provided for 1947 and 1948 vacations, but also gave to the eligible employees additional vacation payments for 1944 and full vacation payment for 1946.

Court Warns Ball, Taft and Smith Would

DECLARE OPEN SEASON FOR ANTI-UNION SUITS

By LEE PRESSMAN
CIO General Counsel

THE Supreme Court of the United States issued a decision last week which serves as a warning of what at least one part of the Ball-Taft-Smith bill would do to labor unions. The decision involved a national AFL union which, along with several local affiliates, was being prosecuted for violation of the Sherman Act.

There is a very important provision contained in the Norris-LaGuardia Act which says that no union should be held responsible in the federal courts for unlawful acts of individual officers or members unless it is clearly proved that the union actually participated in the unlawful acts or authorized or ratified them.

One of the opinions in the case pointed out the reason for the adoption of this provision. A practice, had developed, the court said, "whereby organizations were held responsible not for acts of agents who had authority to act, but for every act committed by any member of the union merely because he was a member."

The theory had developed that unions could be treated as criminal conspiracies and that both the unions and all members could be held liable for all the acts of any of the "conspirators."

The rule laid down in the Norris-LaGuardia Act as outlined above is a simple and fair one. It does not permit a union to evade its fair responsibility. If the union authorizes or participates in or ratifies the unlawful act, then it is held responsible—but not otherwise.

The Ball-Taft-Smith bill, however, proposes to do away with this provision of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. It would declare that, whether the specific act of any individual was authorized by the union or not, the union should nevertheless be bound and held liable if the unlawful act of the individuals was "within the scope of their authority."

THIS could mean that once an individual is authorized to act as a union picket, a union and its members could be held responsible for everything that the picket does, even if it is unlawful. It could mean that once a man is designated as a shop steward, everything he does as shop steward could make the union and its members liable even if what he did was unlawful and neither the union nor the other members knew about it.

The majority of the court recognized the importance and effect of the present provision of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. They declared that the union could not be held responsible unless there was clear proof that the particular unlawful act or acts generally of that type had been expressly authorized by the union.

Justices Frankfurter, Vinson and Burton dissented, insisting that the union could be held liable even if there was no proof of actual authorization of what the individual members or officers did.

The Ball-Taft-Smith bill in substance would do to unions at least what Justice Frankfurter urges in his dissenting opinion in this case—and possibly more. It is fortunate that the majority of the court has decided to enforce the law as it now exists rather than to rewrite the law by judicial interpretation so as to make it do the job that the Ball-Taft-Smith bill proposes to do.

FORMER LEADER OF OIL UNION DIES

Harvey C. Fremming, president of the Oil Workers from 1929 to 1939, died March 1 in a Denver, Colo., hospital following a long illness. He declined nomination for the presidency in 1939 because of his health. Later he served until 1943 as CIO regional director in Kansas City, Mo.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight this week said that Fremming "provided the leadership which resulted in the reorganization of oil workers under the Wagner Act. His diligent and intelligent efforts brought collective bargaining to the oil industry and paved the way for the fine agreements and wage rates now enjoyed by our members."

FIGHT ON BILL HELPS CIO TEACHERS GROW

THE consistent fight of the CIO Teachers Union in New York City against the "most favored teacher" provisions of the Dewey-backed bill to boost teachers salaries this week gained the union hundreds of new members and the respect of the nation's educators, union officials declared.

The New York state legislature this week passed the bill, although the determined opposition of the Teachers Union held up action in the lower house when a large delegation appeared to protest the "most favored teacher" provision.

All teachers whose service is rated satisfactory and who take the required number of courses reach the maximum salary after a stated number of years, under the present bill. The "most favored teacher" provisions of the new bill would give the supervisors power to determine which teachers are to be advanced to the next salary level and which are to be held back.

The new bill also states that only 50% of the teachers in the school system need not be advanced beyond the sixth year salary, and only 10% need to be placed on the maximum salary.

"This brings into the schools politics, favoritism, jealousies, unhealthy and professional intrigues . . . the destruction of the merit system," the Teachers Union declared this week in a full page ad in the New York Times.

CIO OFFERS MINE UNION MEDIATION

THE CIO executive board this week authorized a committee "to conciliate and mediate the existing differences within the Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers.

The statement of Pres. Murray adopted by the Board declared:

"The breach within this union has reached such serious proportions that I am of the opinion that the Executive Board of the CIO must interest itself in the matter. Whilst there may be some who will argue there is no constitutional warrant for CIO intervention I am of the firm opinion that it is the moral obligation and the bounden duty of the parent body to ascertain for itself all of the relevant facts and take such action as will protect the best interests of the CIO.

"Other considerations with regard to the possible impact of the division within the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers upon the structure of the national CIO and its affiliated organizations are of sufficient moment to warrant the attention of this body.

"Therefore in order to ascertain the necessary and pertinent facts concerning this condition within the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers I am recommending to the members of the CIO Executive Board a committee consisting of:

"President Jacob Potofsky, Amalgamated Clothing Workers; Vice President Van A. Bittner, United Steelworkers of America; and R. S. Buckmaster, President, United Rubber Workers, be appointed by this Board for the purpose of (1) securing all pertinent and relevant information that may be of value to this Executive Board and that may be of assistance to the membership of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers in the maintenance of its strength and integrity as an affiliated CIO organization; (2) to render such voluntary assistance to the interested groups in harmonizing their differences and restoring unity within the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers; and (3) that this Executive Board make this offer to the officers and members of the International Union of Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers and all interested groups involved in the present difficulty within the union.

"This committee in no wise is to be considered a Board of Arbitration but rather a Committee to conciliate and mediate the existing differences. In the event both groups voluntarily agree to accept the finding of this aforementioned committee, their decision and recommendation shall be final and binding."

Prior to the Board's action, Pres. Reid Robinson announced his resignation as union president. Vice Pres. Maurice E. Travis was advanced to the office of president by the IUMMSW executive board.

CIO PROTEST GAINS RADIO RETRACTION

While admitting that merchandise sold to the public does not come up to par, a radio commentator, sponsored by a Cleveland department store, blamed this condition on the "carelessness of the workers making the products."

Sec. A. E. Stevenson, of the CIO Cleveland Council, called this statement false and designed to "prejudice the public against labor." Stevenson's protest, which brought forth a lengthy retraction from Burt's Inc., sponsor of the program, showed that management bore the responsibility of seeing to it that products leave the factories in perfect condition.

Two days following the broadcast on Station WHK in which labor was slandered, a correction was made calling attention to the first statement.

SET POLICY ON PCA, ADA

THE following resolution was adopted this week by the CIO Executive Board:

"It has always been the purpose of the CIO and of its Political Action Committee to encourage and promote constructive and progressive American thinking in the political field both within and outside of the ranks of labor. Today, in the face of the concerted offensive by the forces of reaction, the CIO Executive Board believes that the continuation of those policies is more imperative than ever before.

"The Board therefore regards as unfortunate the division existing among progressive forces as evidenced by the recent organization of two independent groups, PCA and ADA.

"It is the desire of the Board to avoid doing anything which might serve to deepen or perpetuate this division. The CIO has its own political arm in the CIO Political Action Committee.

"The Board therefore recommends that the officers of CIO and of its affiliated international unions and industrial union councils abstain from identifying themselves with either PCA or ADA and devote their time and attention to building CIO-PAC and strengthening its work."

ASK GENERAL MOTORS FOR GUARANTEED WEEK

DELEGATES to the CIO Auto Workers' General Motors conference last weekend instructed their collective bargaining representatives to include a demand for a guaranteed 40-hour week in GM plants when they open negotiations with the corporation.

"Justice demands that this double standard be abolished. Since GM workers have to be available for a full work week, the corporation should take on the responsibility of providing full work weeks."

Delegates also approved the UAW wage program, which includes a demand for a 23c an hour wage increase, an employer-financed social security plan, an old-age retirement program and wage equalization fund.

GM will be asked for a revised vacation pay schedule, providing for vacation allowances and will be called on to participate in an industry-wide labor-management committee to study ways and means of achieving a guaranteed annual wage in the industry.

WOMEN'S BUREAU IN DANGER

UNDER the guise of "economy" some leading members of the House Appropriations Committee are seeking to abolish the U. S. Women's Bureau, warns the Women's Trade Union League.

This Bureau, which has served women working in every industry, occupation and profession for more than 27 years, is the one federal agency most vital in promoting the welfare of women wage earners and in expanding their opportunities for profitable employment.

The appropriation requested by the Women's Bureau is $358,640. On this meager budget a remarkable job has been done in practical field investigations of the needs and problems of working women; fact-finding services, and recommendations to improve work standards for women.

Women are urged to express their support of the Women's Bureau by writing to Congressman John Taber, chairman of the House Appropriations Committee, and to Congressman Frank B. Keefe, chairman of the House Appropriations Subcommittee on Budget Appropriations for the Labor Department. Address: House Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

Sprucing Up

YOUR BEST LINES

By HANNA SHERMAN

THE right clothes can make such a difference! They can make you look taller, slimmer, more rounded. They can give you the illusion of beautiful proportions even if your figure is far from perfect.

They can dramatize your good points and make your defects seem nonexistent. It's all a matter of the right lines.

Some movie stars live with as many figure difficulties as the rest of us. But they are very very carefully dressed in the films. Movie designers create gowns for them with lines that emphasize the positive and eliminate the negative. The next time you go to the movies see if you can spot these defects. Chances are you'll not catch a one.

Can we do the same? I think yes. And without spending the fortune that is lavished on a star's wardrobe. Every season there are dresses, coats and suits to flatter your figure in every price range. Choose what is right for you, not only what is fashionable or what the ads are saying this week. And when you pay for style be sure it's the style for you—not for the girl at the next desk or your neighbor down the street.

Why spend your money on a dress with a flaring peplum for hips that need slimming? Or pay extra for that lovely belt that only broadens your waistline. And you should certainly shun a dress that obscures the trim lines of your fine figure.

LET'S look at the "ideal figure." Nowadays the slim but rounded look is the most appealing. It fits the American concept of the active but still very feminine woman. Good proportion means that the hips and bosom measure about the same, the waistline eight to ten inches smaller.

Ideal weight—your drug store scale chart to the contrary—should not vary much with your years. In fact, it is good for your general health to be a little slimmer after you've passed the thirty mark.

Modern ideas of slenderness mean approximately 100 pounds for you girls that are five feet tall, an additional five pounds for every inch over five feet. Give yourself a leeway of five to ten pounds depending on your bone structure, weight distribution and whether your face is inclined to be full or thin. If, for instance, you are five feet four inches tall you can weigh between 118 and 130 pounds and your ideal measurements might be: bust 35", waist 25" and hips 35". No matter what your measurements, choose clothes that will make you appear to have these proportions.

Before deciding on what clothes to buy check with your tape measure and scale. You now know just what to expect from the lines of that new dress or suit. Should it help make your waistline appear smaller, your hips slimmer, your bosom larger?

Rent Protests Mount

PUBLIC WON'T BE DAMNED!

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

THE voice of John Q. Public, demanding continuation of rent control, produced some startling effects last week on Capitol Hill.

Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), GOP boss of the Senate, indicated that he had heard the country's voice and expressed belief that some form of nationwide controls on rent should be kept in effect for another year.

His statement obviously reflected a desire to get the issue out of the Senate with a minimum of trouble and a maximum of face-saving. Proposals outlined by the Republicans would give wide decontrol powers to special area boards, which would be able to raise rents without the public attention focussed on Congress.

The GOP proposal also talked of special attention to a variety of landlords' "hardship cases," through which large numbers of individual rent hikes could be put over.

Supporters of rent control, gathering strength in the past month, continued to call for passage of the Murray-Wagner bill to keep living costs from additional increases in coming months.

The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, prime supporter of the decontrol fight, put the blame on CIO. The Board's attitude changed from quiet confidence to alarm. NAREB predicted that "floods of letters and telegrams" will descend upon Congress from "tenants organized block by block by CIO" and other groups.

"These people have votes, too," the Real Estate group commented sadly.

R. J. Thomas, CIO housing committee head, called for a Congressional investigation of the "housing cartel". Thomas accused "inflationeers" of not wanting new housing since "they don't want their nice comfortable sellers market disturbed."

MEANWHILE a Natl. Fair Rent Committee, headed by F. H. LaGuardia, former mayor of New York, announced its intention of combatting the "real estate lobby's drive to break rent ceilings."

Members of the Committee include CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Editor Henry Wallace of the New Republic, former OPA Administrator Chester Bowles, Gov. James E. Folsom of Alabama, and Pres. Charles Bolte of the American Veterans Committee.

Calling for controls on rent until June 30, 1948, LaGuardia urged support of the Murray-Wagner Rent Control Bill (S. 528), now in the Senate Banking & Currency Committee. At the same time, he called upon Committee Chairman Tobey (R. N.H.) to reopen hearings on the subject before any rent control bill is referred to the Senate for consideration and vote.

In another action, LaGuardia wired Mayor George Welch of Grand Rapids, Mich., head of the influential U. S. Conference of Mayors, to "insist upon full hearings" in the Senate. A ten percent rent increase, LaGuardia said, "will mean at least 48 million dollars more rent a month."

STATEMENTS such as this apparently touched a raw nerve in the Natl. Home & Property Owners Foundation, a close ally of the real estate boards. Arthur Binns, Philadelphia realtor and head of the outfit, ranted that rent control has become the "principal objective of radicals" and an opening wedge in a "world wide campaign to socialize our free economy."

That Binns' wild charges are having little effect, however, was indicated both by Taft's about-face and by a statement of Sen. Tobey expressing doubt that "a flat increase would carry in the Senate." A GOP Senatorial caucus expressed considerable opposition to any flat increase in rent controls.

While the Taft-GOP plan would permit some area-wide rent increases, and would bar rent control in new housing projects, CIO is supporting the Wagner-Murray bill, which would extend rent control on an "as is" basis.

A major stumbling block to enforcement of whatever rent control bill is finally passed, however, is the Congress-approved OPA deficiency appropriation. The government agency is given enough money only to wind up activities by June 30, and in the meantime its effectiveness may be quickly limited.

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

● PEACETIME MERCHANT MARINE

Pres. Philip Murray last week expressed full CIO support for a program to increase the size and improve the quality of the nation's peacetime merchant marine.

The CIO Marine & Shipbuilding Workers Union, which has pushed the peacetime ship construction program, has sent copies of a new handbook, "Keep Old Glory Flying on the Seven Seas," to all members of Congress. The union points out that such a program will lead not only to increased jobs at home but to improved "free foreign trade" and international understanding.

Murray wrote Pres. John Green of the Shipbuilding Union that "obviously we should not repeat the mistakes of 25 years ago by allowing our merchant marine to rust and decay."

"Shipbuilding is an important and basic American industry," Murray said. "Its prosperity contributes to the well-being of the entire nation; but even more important, perhaps, an adequate peacetime merchant marine will stand as an effective symbol of our nation's interest in free, unrestricted trade with the peoples of the world."

● CITIZENSHIP FOR SEAMEN

Easing of citizenship requirements for alien seamen who manned American ships during the war years is being urged upon Congress by the CIO Maritime Committee.

The bill, HR 476, would amend the Merchant Seamen's War Service Act by granting citizenship in three years—instead of the usual five—to alien seamen with three years' service in war danger zones. It would also permit legal entry into the U. S. for such men who served one year in the danger areas.

In a letter to Chairman Fred Bradley of the House Merchant Marine Committee, CIO Pres. Murray pointed out that these "war-service seamen are few in number, but they have already made a valuable contribution to this nation. They were needed at sea, and they stayed with the ships through the greatest of danger. We should pay our debt with the citizenship they have earned."

Murray also voiced support of HJR 76, which would permit the same seamen to find continued employment on American ships and to avoid possible deportation.

Unless laws are passed before March 31, "to avert a shameful injustice," according to the Natl. Maritime Union, these men face "wholesale elimination" from U. S. ships.

● MEMO TO GOP

Refusal of Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.) to permit Miss Moranda Smith, representing the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, to testify for more than two minutes before the Senate Labor Committee, was sharply criticized by the union last week.

Pres. Donald Henderson wrote to Taft and to GOP Chairman Carrol Reece that this attempt "to limit Miss Smith's right to tell the story of the conditions of Negro tobacco workers in this country can only be interpreted as aimed at all workers, white or Negro."

● PROTEST TAX "QUICKIE"

Efforts of Republican leaders in the House to slip over the all-important tax bill with a "quickie" two-day committee hearing brought a quick protest from CIO unions.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, earlier had written to Chairman Harold Knutson (R. Minn.) of the Ways & Means Committee, requesting full opportunity for labor and other groups interested in decent tax laws to present their case.

The committee's back-tracking to the extent of permitting only two days of hearings was scored by Russ Nixon, CIO electrical union spokesman and chairman of the CIO Legislative Committee's economic group. He charged that Knutson, sponsor of a 20% across-the-board tax reduction scheme, was trying to "sneak over a 'soak-the-average-man' tax measure on the American people."

"These are days in which the vast majority of the American people with low and moderate incomes are meeting growing economic hardships," Nixon wrote to the committee chairman. "The type of tax reduction Congress enacts will either relieve or aggravate these difficulties."

WAGE-HOUR LAW FATE IN TRUMAN'S HANDS

Couldn't we just repeal the laws of arithmetic?

Copyright 1947, The CIO NEWS

LABOR'S battle to save the Wage-Hour Act from destruction moved last weekend down Washington's Pennsylvania Avenue from the Capitol to the White House.

Next move in the fight against wage-hour amendments, which have been labeled in Congress as a portal-portal bill, will be to seek a Presidential veto of the bill, it was indicated by CIO legislative spokesmen.

The Senate last week passed its version of the Gwynne bill HR 2157) by a vote of 64 to 24. The House had already passed HR 2157.

Minor differences in the two bills will probably be ironed out in a Senate-House conference committee next week, with the product going back to each branch of Congress for final ratification.

THE SENATE Judiciary Committee's bill, which the Senate passed, would accomplish three main things.

1. Outlaw almost all outstanding wage-hour claims against employers, including large numbers having no relation to the portal-portal issue.

2. Outlaw all future claims for travel-time or make-ready work in the future.

3. Amend the Wage-Hour law to weaken the status of workers' claims for all types of compensation.

A CIO analysis of the bill noted that the two-year limit on filing wage-hour claims, as contained in the Senate version, will cut out many valid claims.

One of the gravest amendments would bar a worker from collecting claims for law violation if he has been gypped as a matter of custom or practice of his particular employer.

Millions of unorganized workers who look to the Wage-Hour law for special protection will find that each employer will be able to decide for himself what the law says.

As yet, Pres. Truman has not indicated where he stands on the bill.

CIO TAX PROGRAM ASKS 'BREAK' FOR LOW PAID

THE CIO this week presented to the House Ways & Means Committee a series of sweeping proposals to transfer a tax burden of $6.8 billion from low income earners to corporations and the recipients of high income.

"The fundamental thesis of this tax program," the CIO statement said, "is the development of a tax structure which will promote full employment through giving complete encouragement to maximum purchasing power. This can best be achieved by relieving the tax burden upon the low income individuals who form the mass of American consumers."

In a statement accompanying the program, the CIO charged that H. R. 1, with its proposals for a 20% across the board cut, "gives tax relief to those people who least need it . . . In reality, HR 1 is a plan to throw a sop to low income individuals, with all the gravy going to high income people."

The CIO position on taxes was sent to Rep. Harold Knutson, chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee, by Nathan E. Cowan, CIO Legislative Director. Cowan said that "we deeply regret" the committee afforded the CIO no opportunity to appear at its hearings.

THE CIO tax program proposes the following main points:

1. Personal exemptions, for earners of less than $5,000 yearly income, of $2,500 for a married couple, $1,250 for single persons, and $500 for each individual.

2. Carry-over provisions for individuals who do not use up their personal exemption in any one year.

3. Closing up of loopholes on income taxes to require filing of joint returns by husband and wife; revision of capital gains taxes from 25% to "at least 50%;" holding of securities one year to qualify under the capital gains tax; and payment of capital gains taxes on securities held until the death of the owner.

4. Abolition of tax exemption on any securities.

5. Tightening of provisions on estate and gift taxes—a setup now "so riddled through with loopholes that not even the wealthy need pay taxes unless poorly counseled."

6. Restoration of pre-war excise tax rates.

7. Changes in the corporation tax programs to: reduce rates on corporations having a net income of less than $25,000; restore excess profits taxes, but with the rate reduced from 95% to 75%; levy an "undistributed profits taxes" at the rate of 19% on all profits, except the first $25,000, which are not paid out in dividends.

Such a program, the CIO declared, would give the government $200,000,000 additional revenue. A cut estimated at 5.5 billion in individual income taxes and $1.3 billion in excise taxes would be made up by increased revenue of $7 billion from other sources, the CIO said.

2 Unions Win FM Rights

Two CIO unions have received permission from the Federal Communications Commission to build and operate FM radio stations in the Chicago area.

Licenses for operation were issued to radio corporations set up by the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Auto Workers. The ACW has another license for operations in New York, and the UAW has been given the green light for an FM station in Detroit.

The FCC ruled that the two labor-owned stations will serve "the public interest, necessity and convenience."

CIO Gives $75,000 in Food, Clothing to Poles, Czechs

TRADE unionists in Czechoslovakia and Poland will soon receive some 7,500 CARE food and blanket packages—the gift of CIO.

A check for $75,000 from the CIO Community Services Committee will be placed in the hands of officials of CARE Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe, it was announced by Leo Perlis, committee director. In arranging for the contribution he specified that they must go to union members in the two war-torn countries.

The $75,000 gift will buy 2,500 food packages each for Poland and Czechoslovakia and an additional 2,500 blanket packages for the latter country.

CARE has developed three types of relief packages—food, woolen and blanket. The woolen package contains 3½ yards of herringbone tweed, two yards of cotton cloth for lining, buttons, thread and needles.

The blanket package contains two all-virgin wool blankets, and needles, thread, buttons, safety pins, scissors and patterns. Also in the package are two pair of soles and heels.

Delivery is guaranteed by CARE on all packages.

The new food and blanket packages can be ordered for delivery in Austria, Belgium, Czechoslovakia, Findland, France, Greece, Hungary, Italy, The Netherlands, Norway, Poland, the American, British and French occupied zones of Germany and all of Berlin.

Small fingers in search of sweets pry into a CARE package delivered in Rome. CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe Inc.) provides guaranteed delivery of a 49-pound parcel, including 21.6 pounds of food, for only $10.

Orders for the packages can be sent, with check or money order of $10 for each package, to CARE, 50 Broad St., New York City 4.

WORLD LABOR

A DELEGATION of the World Federation of Trade Unions is now in Japan meeting with Japanese unionists and occupation authorities.

Headed by WFTU Sec. Louis Saillant, the group expects to remain in the Far East islands for the next few weeks. It is the first visit to the former Axis nation by an international labor group.

In Washington, before he headed for the Far East, Saillant branded as ridiculous the statements of a minor AFL official that the purpose of the mission is to support "communism" in Japan.

In Tokio, Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employes—CIO member of the delegation—urged Japanese labor to place labor problems above politics and to guard against "ill-considered" strikes that might hurt the nation's recovery from the ravages of war. He urged Japanese unions to steer a middle course between left and right, and to place national reconstruction as their first goal.

The group is composed of representatives of U. S., British, French, Soviet and Australian unions. It will issue a report after completion of the survey.

REPORTS on labor affairs in the the U. S. occupied areas of Germany, Austria, Japan nad Korea were provided last week at a session of the Labor Dept's. trade union advisory committee on international affairs. Called by Asst. Sec. of Labor David Morse, the group met with officials of the State, War and Labor Departments.

CIO members of the advisory committee are Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum; Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Clinton Golden of the Steelworkers; and Michael Ross, international affairs director of CIO.

UNIONS IN INDIA have more than doubled in size during the past year, and have now passed the million membership mark.

The 25th Congress of the All-India Trade Union Congress, held recently in Bombay, surveyed recent gains and debated at length the problem of strikes in the country.

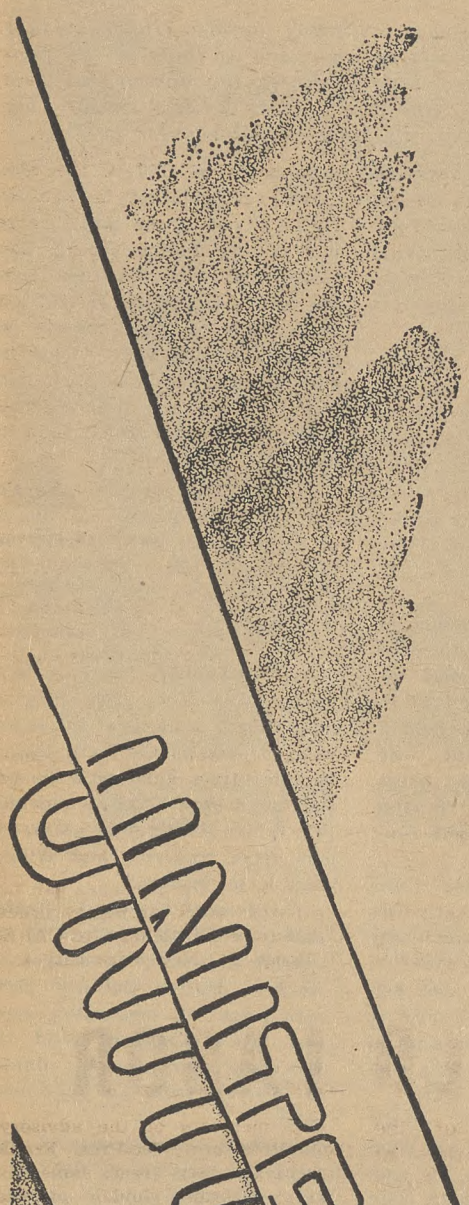
With some delegates urging that walkouts be kept to a minimum because of Indian Congress national and provincial governments, the delegates said strikes are justified so long as there is no "all-around improvement in working and living conditions, including the grant of a minimum living wage, adequate housing arrangements and the introduction of social security measures."

Correction

A list of members of the Bureau of Labor Statistics advisory union research group, which was published in a recent issue of the CIO NEWS, was incomplete.

The committee's CIO membership is as follows: Mrs. Katherine Ellickson, CIO Research Dept.; Otis Brubaker, Steelworkers; James Wishart, Auto Workers; H. H. Bookbinder, Clothing Workers; Solomon Barkin, Textile; Everett M. Kassalow, Rubber; Rosalind Schulman, Shipyard; Nathan Spero, Electrical. Alternate members are Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO Research Dept., and Seth Levine, Maritime Union.

RALLY TO DEFEND LABOR!



CIO mobilized its six million members this week to face the biggest crisis in labor's history.

The crisis lies in Congress. It is loaded to the barrel top with bills that would cut the guts out of labor's strength to bargain for better wages.

It lies in the state legislatures. Nine of them have passed bills to abolish union security.

And—in the background—it lies in the hearts of anti-union employers who have fostered such legislation with the hope of driving working men and women back to the open shop, sweat shop conditions of the last depression.

THIS week the warning—repeated in language no one could misunderstand—went out to every CIO international union and to all CIO regional directors.

The warning came from Allan S. Haywood, a CIO vice-president and director of organization.

Quoting the Call to Action from the CIO Executive Board, he wrote all international union presidents that the task of combatting anti-labor legislation "is of such great magnitude and importance to each and every union and its membership that we cannot afford to relax the slightest bit in the furtherance of CIO's program." Declaring that "we have a common enemy and fight a common cause," Haywood said:

"I request that you again call upon your directors, representatives and all local unions of your international union to activize themselves to the fullest extent in an endeavor to avoid destructive legislation by Congress during the present 80th session."

Haywood wrote CIO regional directors that "we cannot impress too strongly the dire importance that the threat of passage of these anti-labor bills bears to the American labor movement."

He warned that the fight against anti-labor bills must be carried beyond the big cities. It must enlist the support not only of labor but of every liberal force in every community.

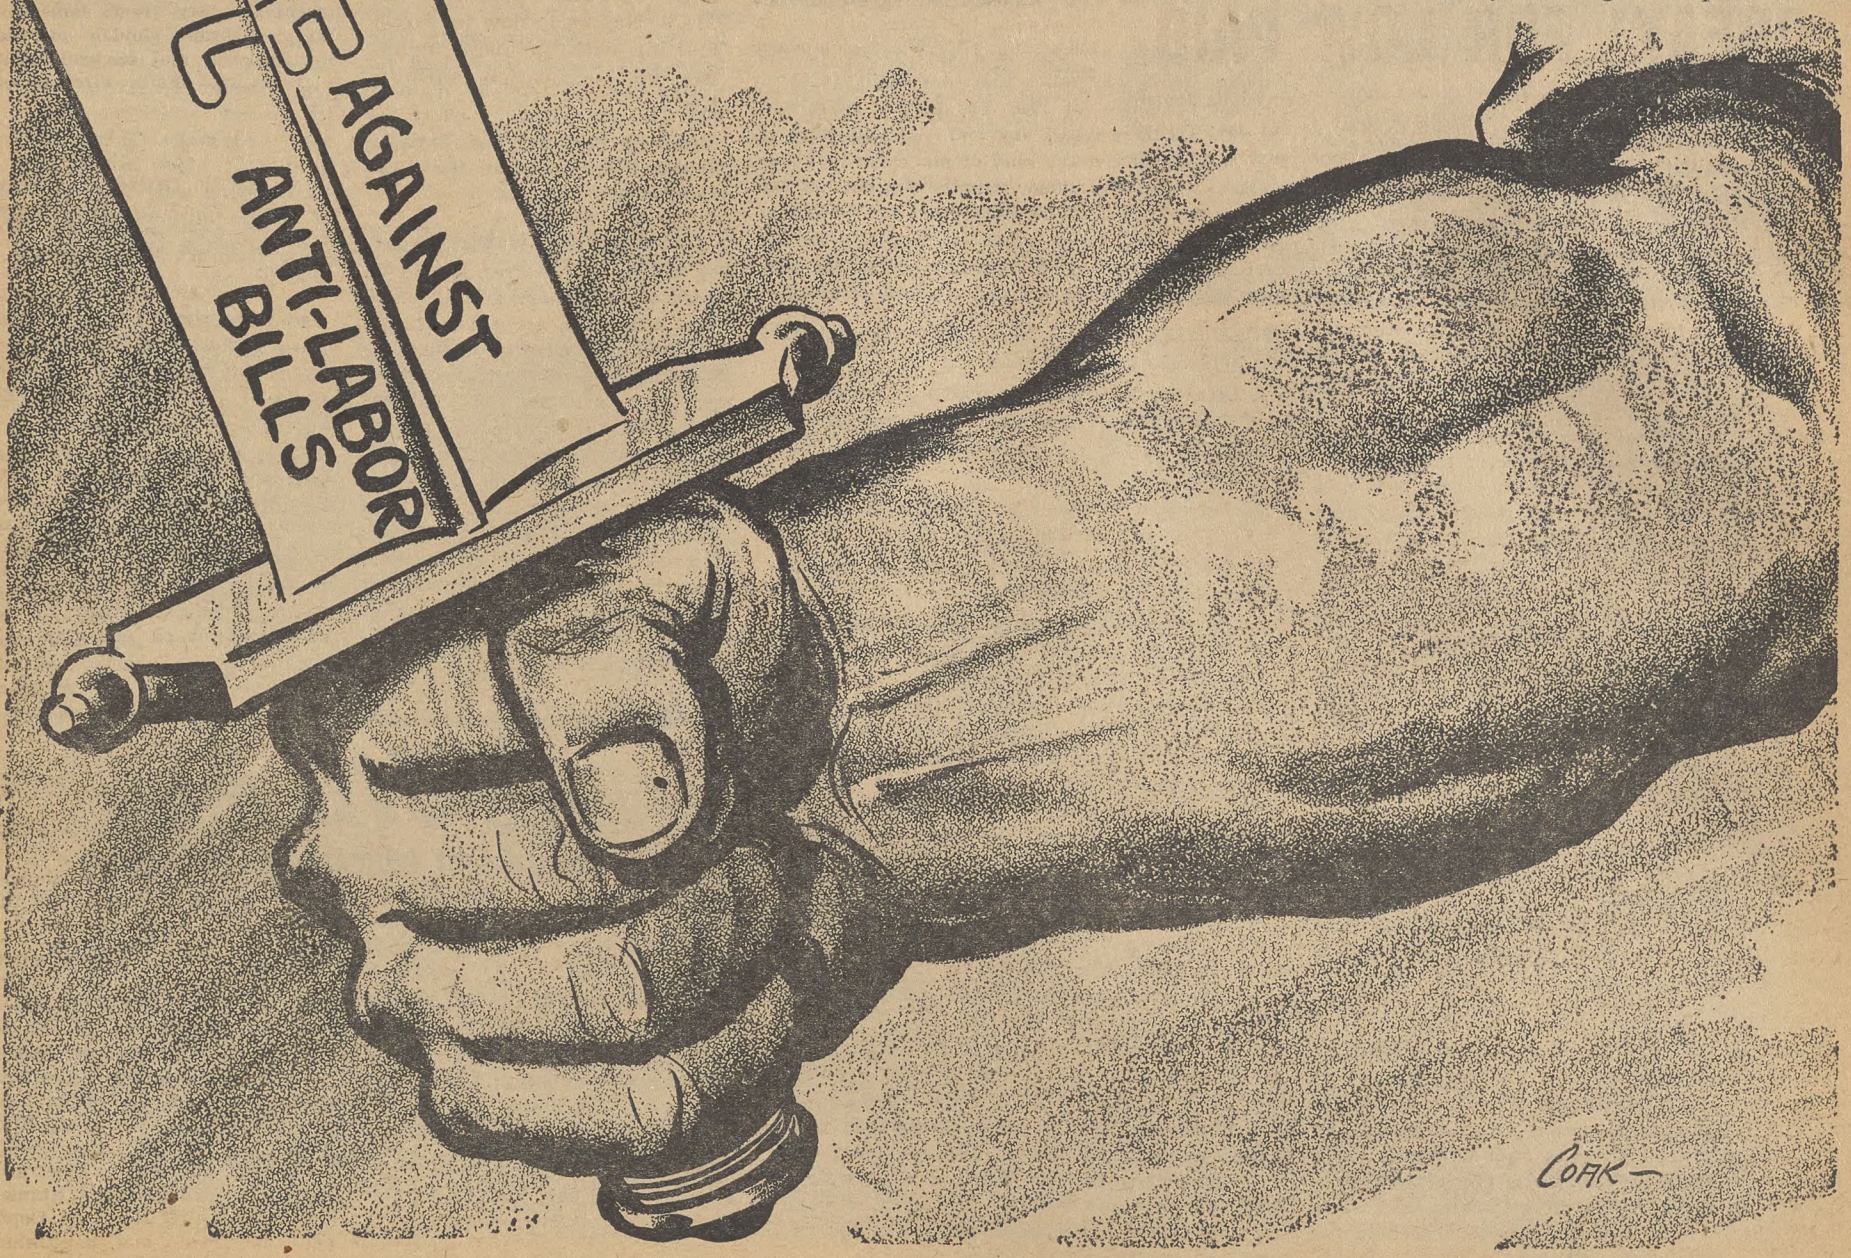
Regional directors, he said, should cooperate with representatives of CIO-PAC who are receiving instructions to coordinate with other official forces of CIO.

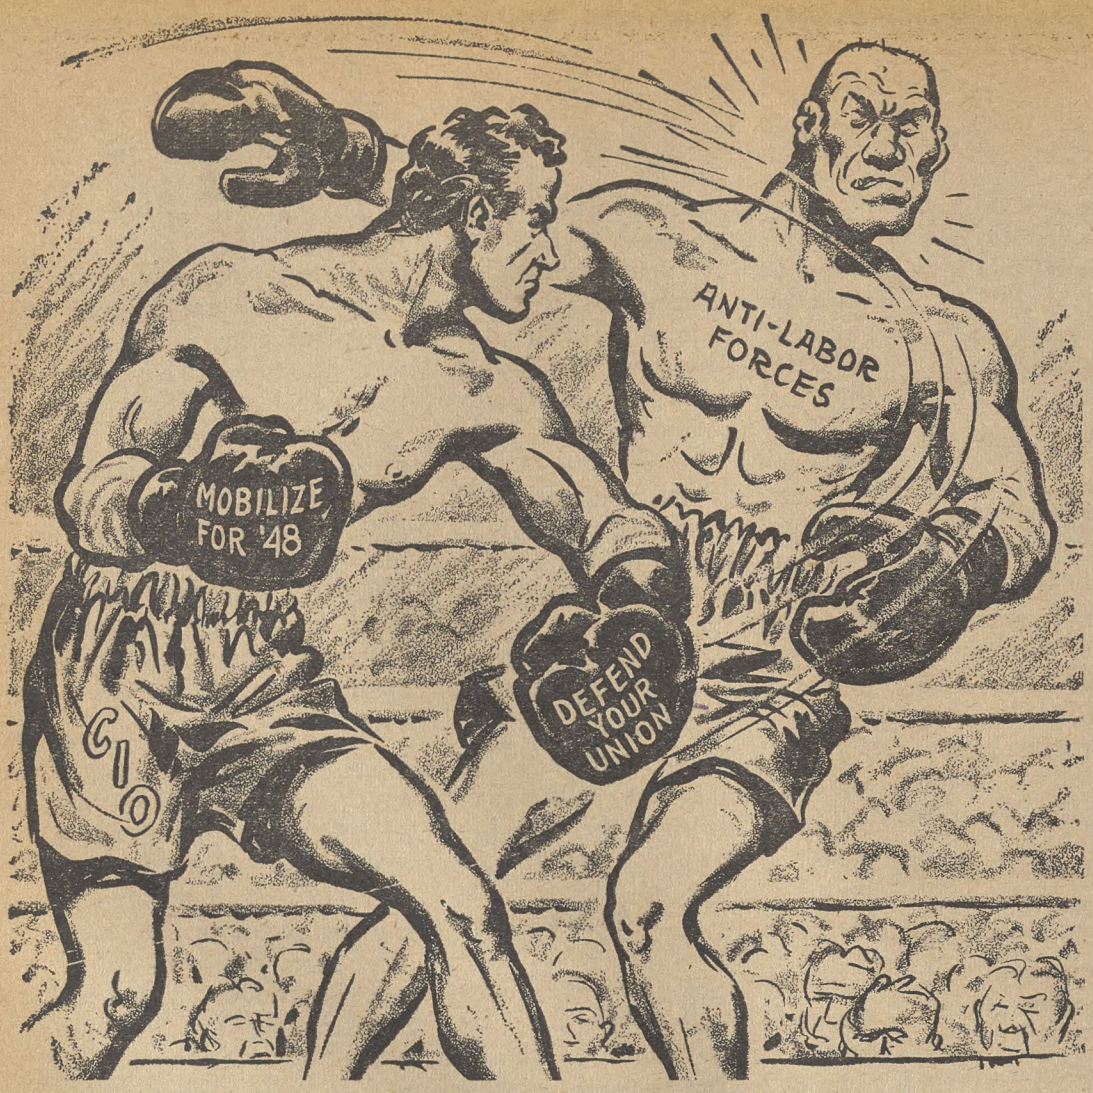
MEANWHILE, in the field, CIO representatives were circulating petitions to Congress. They were planning and holding plant gate rallies and city-wide meetings. They were distributing leaflets. They were organizing delegations to Congress, to local politicians and to friendly non-labor organizations that will help labor fight for its life. They were scheduling radio programs. And they were mobilizing an all-out campaign to let Congress know where the people stand—by letters and telegrams.

Rallying in the spirit of the great 1937 organizational drives, CIO leaders said that "we feel confident that through our united efforts we can show Congress that neither we nor the American people want to take this step down the road to poverty and depression, but insist on moving upward to the obtainable goal of a more abundant life for all."

But making this come true is the job of more than CIO leaders. It's a task for six million CIO members, their families and their friends.

It's your union, brother! What are you doing to help defend it?





ONE FOR '47, ONE FOR '48

The foundation for the 1948 election struggle must be laid today in the fight of the people against legislation which would cripple their unions. That was the statement of the CIO Executive Board in a resolution on Political Action, which follows.

THIS is a time of crisis for the workers and all the common people.

The basic democratic rights, the living standards and the well-being of the great mass of Americans stand in great peril.

In the Congress of the U. S., a majority is riding hell-bent for reaction. Ignoring the manifest will of the men and women who elected them to office, they are doing the bidding of the monopolists who demand even greater power, privilege and profit at the expense of human welfare.

This majority is out to destroy the remains of the price stabilization program by abolishing rent control. It attacks minimum wage and hour standards by emasculating the Fair Labor Standards Act. It presses for a "soak the poor" tax program. It would cripple all the social legislation of the last fourteen years by withholding necessary appropriations.

Finally, because it recognizes that organized labor is the staunchest defender of the economic security and civil liberties of the whole people, it concentrates its attack against the democratic right of workers to organize, bargain collectively and strike.

OUTSIDE of the spotlight of national publicity, the state legislatures are pursuing the same reactionary course. Six times have already enacted laws drastically curtailing the rights of labor, and others threaten to follow suit.

Over the nation, the elected representatives of the people seem to respond only to the voice of special privilege. They are placing the interests of the people and prosperity of the nation in serious jeopardy. They threaten to repeat the history of the twenties that led from Harding normalcy to Hoover collapse.

Only the fullest political mobilization and firmest resistance of the people—and primarily of the working people—can prevent this catastrophe.

THE Political Action Committee, as the political arm of CIO, has a role of key importance to play in this crucial struggle. The vital issues now before the legislative bodies define its immediate task. That task is to arouse the membership of CIO in every community to fight on these issues, to organize them in shop, ward, precinct and community as shock troops in battalions of citizens who will make their mighty voices heard in the legislative halls of the nation.

The time to call our elected lawmakers to account is now. The time is now to serve them with a forcible reminder that their first and only obligation is to serve the interests of the whole people.

The response of labor and the people to the burning legislative issues that now confront them will set the stage for 1948. The kind of fight that we wage on these issues now and in the elections of 1947 will determine the kind of platforms and candidates which the major parties present to the electorate next year. The foundations for the defeat of reaction and for a progressive victory in the coming national elections must be laid in the people's legislative campaigns and elections of today.

THEREFORE BE IT RESOLVED that the CIO Political Committee shall:

1. Intensify its work of mobilizing the members of CIO, their families and their neighbors in every community for an all-out campaign on the following issues:

(a) Defeat all anti-labor legislation in the Federal Congress and the state legislatures;

(b) Maintain existing rent control with adequate funds for enforcement;

(c) Pass legislation to help house the homeless;

(d) Enact tax laws giving tax relief to the needy but not to the greedy;

(e) Assure adequate appropriations for the continuance of all existing social legislation.

2. Promote the rapid development and expansion of the political action committees of the state, county and city industrial union councils and local unions; strengthen existing ward and precinct organizations and establish such organizations in every CIO area where they do not yet exist.

3. Initiate and promote campaigns to qualify all CIO members and their families as voters by urging them to file notices of intention to vote, pay poll-taxes, register, re-register and comply with all other requirements of state law.

4. Promote participation of state and local political action committees in the 1947 party primaries and elections.

5. Encourage the formation of full-time political action departments in each international union.

6. Launch, as soon as feasible, a campaign for 1947 voluntary contributions from the CIO membership to finance the work of political action on the national, state and local levels.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

Anti-labor witnesses testifying before Congressional committees have records as unsavory as some of the proposals they advocate. This week, in the absence of Len De Caux, because of illness, The CIO NEWS carries this Federated Press report in place of his regular column.

THE PINKERTON labor relations formula of shotguns, teargas bombs and labor spies would be restored to the U. S. industrial scene if the leading boosters of anti-labor bills now before Congress had their way.

Corporation spokesmen outnumbered union witnesses 7 to 1 in congressional hearings on anti-union bills. Among them were corporations notorious for practices which have splattered labor history with such bloody episodes as the Harlan county terror against the miners and the 1937 Memorial Day massacre.

One such was the Weirton Steel Co., one of the two major non-union holdouts in the steel industry. Its witness, Atty. Earl F. Reed, complained to the Senate labor committee about the NLRB's action against the latest company union which Weirton continues to sponsor despite contempt proceedings.

To Reed, indorsing antilabor laws is an old story. In the early 30's he was chairman of the reactionary Liberty League's subcommittee on industrial relations and labor legislation. He was also kept busy as the intermediary with the Central Industrial Service Co., which supplied Weirton with labor spies.

Weirton continued its all-out union-busting drive under the Wagner Act and even during the war. In 1944, 87 workers, many with years of seniority, were fired for joining the CIO and 11 more in 1945. The reign of terror which has existed in the company town of Weirton, W. Va., over the years remains unbroken today.

ANOTHER OLD HAND at smashing unions is Vice Pres. Harold W. Story of Allis-Chalmers Co., whose West Allis, Wis., workers are in the 11th month of a strike featured by brutal attacks on their picketlines.

In the early '30s Allis-Chalmers was a major contributor to the Natl. Metal Trades Assn., big strike-breaking organization. It spent $7,317 for labor spies alone from 1933 to 1936. In 1941 West Allis was the scene of a strike during which a special rolling fortress fired round after round of teargas bombs at pickets.

FROM THE BISBEE, Ariz., mass deportation of 1917 to the recent murder of a picket in Elizabeth, N. J., stretches the antilabor record of the Phelps Dodge Corp., which had two witnesses before the Senate committee. In 1917 more than 1000 striking miners and Bisbee residents were loaded into cattle cars at the point of machine-guns and deported to New Mexico, where they were dumped in the desert.

In 1946, 29 years later, the slaying of Mario Russo and the use of thugs from the Murder Inc. underworld gang indicated that Phelps Dodge's views on labor were unchanged.

A SPOKESMAN for the auto industry was Thompson Products, whose Pres. Frederick C. Crawford, when he headed the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, announced his post-war aims as: "Freedom for business to live dangerously again, freedom from freedoms and freedom from labor leaders."

Three times Crawford defeated unions in NLRB elections by appearing personally to address his workers. During the war 10,000 man-hours of production were lost when Crawford shut his Cleveland plant for 45 minutes to deliver such an anti-union spiel.

Crawford was a leader of Associated Industries in its fight to defeat unionism around Cleveland in the early '30s and was an outstanding customer of Corporations Service Bureau, which supplied labor spies and goons. Thompson Products spent $4,604 in one year for labor spying aside from thousands of dollars in unrecorded amounts and purchased large quantities of teargas.

UNMENTIONED in the testimony of Pres. James D. Francis of the Island Creek Coal Co. was the fact that prior to 1934 his company kicked in from 5c to 10c per ton to help pay the Baldwin-Felts detective agency, which at one time had 434 deputies "protecting" miners from organization in McDowell county, W. Va. Francis now objects to paying 10c a ton for the union welfare fund, criticizing the plan as "barnacles on American industry."

MOVING WITH PAC

THE CIO Political Action Committee this week cleared the decks for the toughest fight in its life. Installed in new Washington, D. C., headquarters (at 728 17th St. N. W.), PAC research, publicity and field staffs hammered together a program designed to arouse the people. PAC was armed with a mandate from the CIO Executive Board which pointed to the clear and present danger facing trade union rights, civil liberties and the economic well-being of the American people.

"Over the nation," the Board warned, "the elected representatives of the people seem to respond only to the voice of special privilege. They are placing interests of the people and prosperity of the nation in serious jeopardy. They threaten to repeat the history of the twenties that led from Harding normalcy to Hoover collapse.

"Only the fullest political mobilization and firmest resistance of the people—and primarily of the working people—can prevent this catastrophe."

The Board approved a six-point PAC program to combat anti-labor legislation and to build forces for the '48 elections. The foundations for victory then, said the Board, must be laid in struggles now.

• Movers this week carried the last piece of furniture into new PAC headquarters, within baseball throw of the mid-Victorian State Dept. building and a block from CIO's national office. Labor Board at Work

CARVING UP THE CIO

By FRANK DONNER
Natl. CIO Legal Staff

JUST at the very time when Congress is supposed to be concerned about industrial peace, the Natl. Labor Relations Board is adopting a policy of promoting industrial unrest, raiding and disruption.

The Board's new policy involves the reversal of established doctrines with respect to the severance of craft units from stabilized industrial units.

The Board now proposes, in the face of its own established policies, to permit the carving up of industrial units at the request of small crafts.

In order to understand what is happening we must go back a bit.

Back in 1939 the Board handed down a decision in the so-called American Can Co. case. In that case a number of crafts, including Engineers, Firemen and Electrical workers, tried to carve out their separate jurisdictions from an overall industrial unit which had been represented since 1937 on an industrial basis by the Steelworkers.

Danger Is Foreseen

THE Board seriously considered this problem and heard extensive arguments from all parties. It concluded that it would be exceedingly dangerous to disregard a bargaining history on an industrial basis and to permit separate craft elections. The Board said:

"We are of the opinion that the Board is not authorized by the Act to split the appropriate unit thus established by collective bargaining and embodied in a valid, exclusive bargaining contract. In any appropriate unit it is to be presumed that there will be dissatisfied groups from time to time.

"To permit such small groups to break up an appropriate unit established and maintained by a bona fide collective bargaining contract against the will of the majority of the employes who are bound by the contract would make stability and responsibility in collective bargaining impossible.

"Neither craft, plant, nor industrial units could maintain any unity in bargaining if any subordinate parts of established appropriate units were free to disregard contractual obligations and claim separate representation with separate contracts."

THE decision in this case became known as the American Can doctrine. It was followed by the Board with satisfactory results through the years. From time to time, in 1937 and 1939, efforts were made to amend the Wagner Act to compel the Board to recognize craft units regardless of the bargaining history, but on all of these occasions Congress decided such action would create chaos.

In 1944 the Board made a limited inroad upon the American Can principle in a case called the General Electric case. In that case, the Board, despite a bargaining history on an industrial basis, permitted a small group of highly technical employes to be removed from the industrial unit.

The principal basis for that decision was an alleged history of "craft dissidence." The Board was impressed by the fact that the group involved had not acquiesced in bargaining on a comprehensive industrial basis.

The Board's decision in the General Electric case had serious and dangerous repercussions. Craft union business agents encouraged employes who had been represented by CIO unions to strike for any reason at all, to refuse to participate in elections, and to boycott the grievance machinery.

The purpose of these maneuvers was to manufacture a record of "craft dissidence," to stir up enough trouble to convince the Board that it should expand and enlarge the General Electric principle.

Throughout 1945 the Board was flooded with "craft dissidence" cases.

In addition, other attempts were made to compel the Board's abandonment of the American Can principle. These efforts were sponsored primarily by Gerard Reilly, then a member of the Board, who had been repeatedly denounced both by the AFL and the CIO as anti-labor, and who has recently been named by Senator Taft as consultant to the Senate Education and Labor Committee, now drafting anti-labor bills. (See CIO President Murray's letter to Taft—page 16.)

Reilly Overruled

IN the Philip Morris case, decided on August 23, 1946, the Board applied the American Can doctrine over Board Member Reilly's vigorous opposition.

Board Member Reilly argued that the American Can principle has no application if the particular craft involved did not have an opportunity prior to the commencement of the collective bargaining history to select a bargaining agent on a craft basis in a Labor Board election.

The majority of the Board properly pointed out that this was nonsense. It held that the fact that there had been no previous consideration of the merits of a separate unit is no ground for severing a craft.

The Board pointed out that Reilly's position could not be accepted "without completely overruling the American Can principle, thus effacing the doctrine that a craft can be assimilated to a production unit by a persuasive history of collective bargaining whether or not the bargaining relationship is voluntary in its inception or was initiated under Board auspices without participation by the craft in the proceeding."

In short, the Board held that the application of the American Can principle did not depend upon whether the employes in the craft had previously had an opportunity to vote on whether or not they preferred a craft to an industrial unit.

Reilly Inconsistent

IN rejecting this limitation upon the American Can principle, the Board cited a long list of cases in which it had applied that principle without Reilly's proposed limitation, and in which Reilly himself had concurred.

One of the cases which was relied on by the Board was a case called the International Minerals case, decided in June of 1945.

In this case a CIO union petitioned for an election in a mine covering a unit consisting of the conventional group of production and maintenance employes.

This was the same unit for which an AFL chemical workers union held a contract on an industrial basis and in which a history of bargaining on an industrial basis had been established.

The IBEW and Machinists each urged separate craft units. The Board agreed with the petitioning CIO union and the AFL union holding the contract that only an industrial unit was appropriate on the basis of the American Can doctrine.

The NLRB said in this case:

"There is nothing to indicate that the employes of either craft have retained their identity or attempted to function as craft groups during the period covered by the history of collective bargaining. Under the circumstances, we are of the opinion that the history of collective bargaining on a plant-wide basis is controlling with respect to the type of unit appropriate in the present instance . . ."

The CIO union won the election and bargaining continued as before on an industrial basis with the sole exception that the unit was now represented by a CIO union rather than an AFL union.

In the early part of 1946, the IBEW again petitioned for an election covering a craft unit in the same mine of the same company. The primary basis for seeking the election was that the IBEW had maintained a record of "craft dissidence" in the year following the Board's original decision.

The Board's Regional Office dismissed the petition on the authority of the American Can case and the preceding International Minerals case which had expressly held that only an industrial unit was appropriate in this very mine.

Attacks against labor from anti-union Congressmen have not been unexpected. The shocking fact is that a government agency established to promote and protect collective bargaining has joined the anti-labor forces. It has ignored its own established precedents. It is promoting labor strife and interunion rivalry. It is sponsoring jurisdictional disputes. The agency's name is—The Natl. Labor Relations Board!

But the National Board reversed the Regional Director and authorized a hearing. At the hearing no new facts were introduced. The only really new development was that the bargaining agent for the previous year was a CIO union instead of an AFL union, as it had been in the years preceding.

THE second International Minerals case was decided on November 30, 1946, by a Board which included a new Board member, James J. Reynolds, Jr. In this case the Board reversed itself. Although it had previously decided that only an industrial unit was appropriate, it changed its mind and found that a craft unit was appropriate.

In reversing itself, the Board assigned as a reason for its flip-flop the fact that the employes involved "have never previously had an opportunity to vote on this issue."

In other words, the Board disregarded the American Can doctrine for the very reason which it had held in the Philip Morris case was an invalid reason for disregarding the American Can doctrine.

Reverses History

Since the Board's flip-flop in the second International Minerals case, the Board has issued about a dozen decisions involving the severance of a small craft unit from a large industrial unit after there had been a history of collective bargaining in the industrial unit.

In every one of these cases the severance of the small unit was granted and the American Can principle was rejected. In practically every one of these cases a principal ground for the decision was that the employes had never before had an opportunity to vote for a craft unit.

So this is our picture: In August 1946 the Board decided that to apply the test of whether the employes had voted on the merits of the craft issue would completely overrule the American Can principle. Thereafter as up to the present the Board has in virtually every case involving the American Can principle applied the very test which it rejected in August. Although Gerard O. Reilly is no longer with the Board, his minority views are apparently now the views of the majority.

IN THE recent series of cases referred to above which uniformly grant craft severance, the Board frequently applies an additional novel test, namely, that the particular craft involved is a "true craft."

In the Board's view there are certain specially annointed crafts which it is apparently prepared automatically to sever from an industrial unit regardless of the bargaining history. Just as the test of a prior employe craft election is completely inconsistent with the Philip Morris case and all of the other cases which preceded it, so the "true craft" theory is inconsistent with the past decisions of the Board. In scores of past decisions the Board has properly applied the American Can doctrine without regard to the character of the craft. In fact, the American Can doctrine assumes that the group seeking severance is a skilled traditional craft, where was the situation in the American Can case itself.

Inconsistent Again

A THIRD shell which the Board uses to hide the pea in its shell game on these issues is that of "industrial practice."

The application of this test likewise is inconsistent with and departs from the American Can principle. Under this test, even if there is an impressive history of bargaining on an industrial basis in the plant of one employer, the Board will nevertheless permit a craft to be carved out because in the plant of another employer in the industry there is no history of bargaining on an industrial basis.

The Board seizes upon any scrap of evidence to establish that the industry practice is on a craft basis and that it therefore must overcome the contrary plant practice and history of industrial bargaining.

The Board's eagerness to use the "industry practice" theory in order to overcome a persuasive history of bargaining on an industrial basis in a particular plant contrasts sharply with its refusal to recognize industry practice when a CIO union, such as the UAW, seeks an industrial unit in an automobile plant.

Despite the fact that the bargaining pattern in the automobile industry is overwhelmingly on an industrial basis, the Board recently granted a craft petition because it was not satisfied that the "trend" of industrial bargaining in auto is great enough to overcome a unit on a craft basis.

In short, the Board is impressed with "industry practice" only when it serves to promote craft units but not when it serves to promote industrial units.

The Board is not aware of

Urge Low-Rent Building

HOUSING FOR EVERYONE

THE government must step into the housing field with a long range program of assistance for construction of low-rent homes.

That argument last week was heard from spokesmen of a dozen groups and trends in American life—many of whom disagree violently among themselves on other issues—as the Senate opened four days of hearings on the Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill (S. 866).

"Private enterprise has never provided necessary housing for the lowest income groups," declared Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), a sponsor of the bill and a man who usually sees the brightest side of the private enterprise picture. Taft has been accused by real estate groups of flirting with "socialism" because of his support for the program of government aid.

THE T-E-W bill, with some additional improvements, "will contribute decisively to reducing housing costs and will hasten the fulfillment of the national goal of a decent home for every family in a suitable environment," CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Housing Committee Chairman R. J. Thomas wrote to the Senate Banking & Currency committee, now holding hearings on the bill.

"Decent housing instead of slums means less crime, less juvenile delinquency and lower costs of medical care," said Sen. Allen Ellender (D. La.)

Fiorello LaGuardia, former mayor of New York and head of the Natl. Fair Rent Committee, appeared before the committee as an "unauthorized voice of unorganized Americans" to urge passage of the T-E-W bill. But, he warned, such a bill must be accompanied by definite rent control action if the nation wants to avoid lots of trouble on the housing front.

Rep. Helen Douglas (D. Calif.) appeared at the hearings to support not only the T-E-W bill but a complementary bill sponsored by Sen. Taylor (D. Ida.) and herself to fill in a few gaps in the principal measure. The Taylor-Douglas measure would authorize a billion dollars in loans to local housing authorities for construction of low-rent homes for veterans.

Rep. Douglas warned that the American people cannot side idly by while at least a third of the married vets are lost in "an economic no-man's land—in trailers, tourist cabins, rented rooms, in stores or doubled up with parents in single-unit dwellings."

WILLIAM Nicholas of the UAW-CIO housing department, voicing support of the bills, called for a Congressional investigation of the entire housing industry.

"There's more than just labor involved," he said. "The Producers Council, the Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, the Natl. Assn. of Home Builders—they're all involved," Nicholas told the Senate committee.

"I'd like to see a full dress Congressional investigation of what goes on!"

Sen. McCarthy (R. Wis.), apparently pleased by Nicholas' statement, commented that it was the "first time I've agreed with a top CIO man."

CIO Pres. Murray and Vice-Pres. Thomas, in their letter to Commmittee Chairman Tobey, pointed out that the "housing shortage today is a national disaster."

"The worst sufferers," they noted, "are those who have had to seek new dwellings, notably war workers and veterans. Their plight is even more desperate than a year ago, and the strongest measures are needed to cope with the situation."

The CIO officials offered five suggestions for supporting the T-E-W bill: (1) passage of the Taylor-Douglas measure to aid veterans; (2) 100% insurance on housing loans to private and co-operative housing projects, with advance loans of 1% to aid co-op projects; (3) creation of a strong central administrative office; (4) finances for technical research and experiments on factory-built housing; and (5) development funds to producers of factory-built homes "in order to speed up the modernization of the building industry."

THE T-E-W bill introduced by Senators Taft, Ellender and Wagner (D. N.Y.) is substantially the same as that which they offered to the 79th Congress. That bill was passed by the Senate, but was buried in the House during the final days of the session last July.

It provides a 45-year plan for building low-rent city housing, rural homes, slum clearance and financing of projects by private and cooperative housing groups.

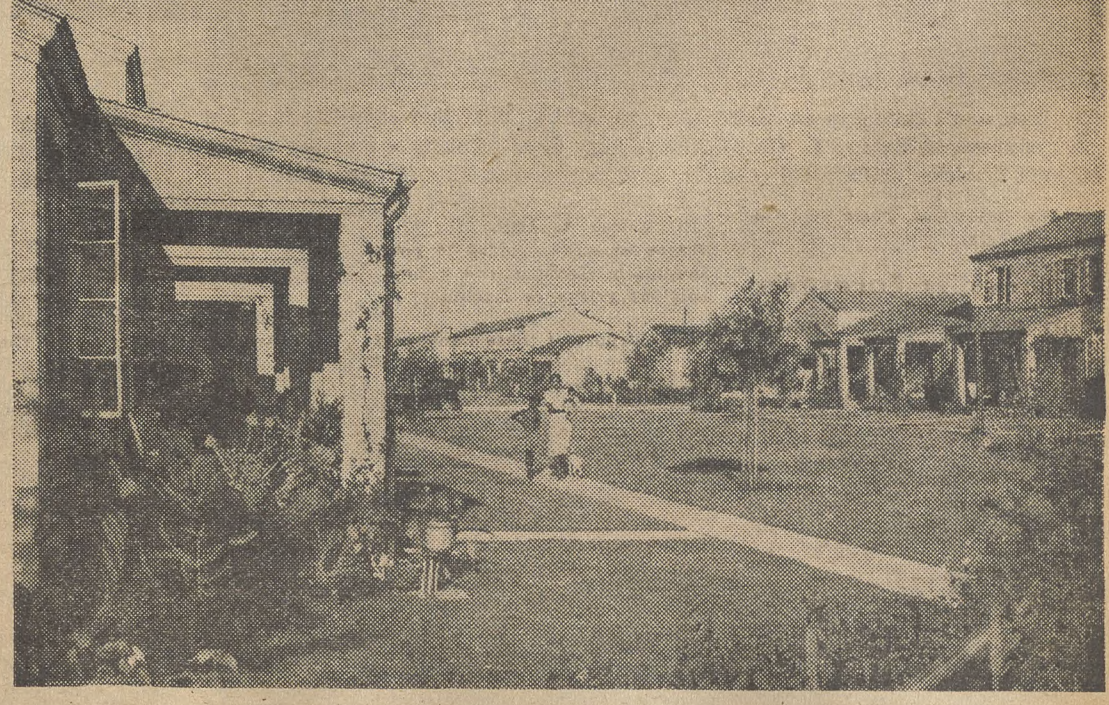
A companion measure (HR 2523) has been introduced in the House by Rep. Javits (D. N.Y.)

The House Banking Committee, meanwhile, is starting hearings on two other bils colnnected with the national homes situation.

Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.) has introduced a trick measure (HR 2549) which combines under one roof a proposal to extend rent control—without OPA—until March 1948, with a proposal to repeal the Patman Veterans Housing Act. The Patman law is still effective as an instrument for stimulating supplies of building materials, allocating finished projects to veterans home projects, etc.

A second measure to be taken under consideration by the House is (HR 2340) sponsored by Rep. Carroll (D. Colo.), to spend an additional 50 million dollars to complete temporary housing for veterans under a program already under way. Even with the additional funds, only 175,000—rather than the contemplated 200,000—dwelling units will be completed.

Before (top) and After (below). This Tampa, Fla. dwelling contrast illustrates what could be done to provide better homes, particularly for low income groups who cannot afford expensively financed private construction. The proposed Taft-Ellender-Wagner Housing Bill provides a 45-year plan for building low-rent city housing and rural homes, for slum clearance, and for financing of projects by private and co-operative housing groups.



Report Warns Low Wages Lead to Crash

IT'S as sure as gun is iron that there'll be a recession this year unless wages are increased. That is the warning of the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics.

The bureau, in its current report on "The Price and Demand Situation," puts it bluntly on the line:

"If industrial activity declines as much as anticipated, income payments to individuals in the second half of 1947 may be 8 to 12% below those of the first half.

"Important economic factors operating through 1946 and in the first quarter of 1947 seem to indicate a downward trend in business activity in the latter part of 1947. Probably the most important force is the steady decline in real income—purchasing power—of salary and wage earners.

"In July 1945, real wages and salaries were about 205% of the 1935-39 average, but were only 168% of the average in December 1946.

"The proportional share of wages and salaries dropped from 70 to 59% of the total income payments. Since real income from salaries and wages is the largest element in total consumer demand, its decline indicates that total effective demand can be maintained only with increasing difficulty.

"Withdrawals from past savings by many individuals, the reduction in current rate of savings, the expansion in consumer credit, and business expenditures of various types were important factors in more than offsetting the decline in real income of salary and wage earners in 1946. These factors cannot be expected to more than offset this decline in purchasing power much beyond the first half of 1947."

The Agricultural Dept. economists conclude that "the time of the downturn indicated here may well be moved up or postponed a few months." These experts say that lower prices "could improve the outlook" but add that "such flexibility in the price structure has rarely been observed."

CIO HAILS TALMADGE OUSTER

CHARLES Gillman, Georgia CIO director, this week hailed the Supreme Court ouster of Herman Talmadge from the governorship of Georgia as a real victory for the forces of democracy.

"The court's ruling," Gillman said, "demonstrates that we have no place in our democratic setup for those who grab political power by force or legal technicality.

"The ruling means that Georgia will no longer have in the governor's office a man who claimed election on the basis of less than 700 votes and the action of a legislature that he controlled.

"Former Governor Ellis Arnall who launched the fight against Talmadge's grab for power deserves a vote of thanks from those who believe in progress and democracy.

"The high court is to be commended for its action."

MEN LIKE BOB ALLEN HELPED DEFEAT DIES

"THE UNION has made life more secure for me and my family. God bless it."

It is that kind of sentiment—expressed by Robert L. (Bob) Allen—that helped defeat ex-Congressman Martin Dies in Texas.

Bob is a member of the CIO Oil Workers Union at Port Neches, right in the heart of the old Dies district which is now represented by Rep. J. M. Combs. One of Rep. Combs first acts was to vote against continuation of the so-called un-American Activities Committee which Dies had headed.

Port Neches is a CIO community. Mayor H. T. Russell is chairman of the Texas Co. office group of the CIO Oil Workers. Most of the City Councilmen are members of the union.

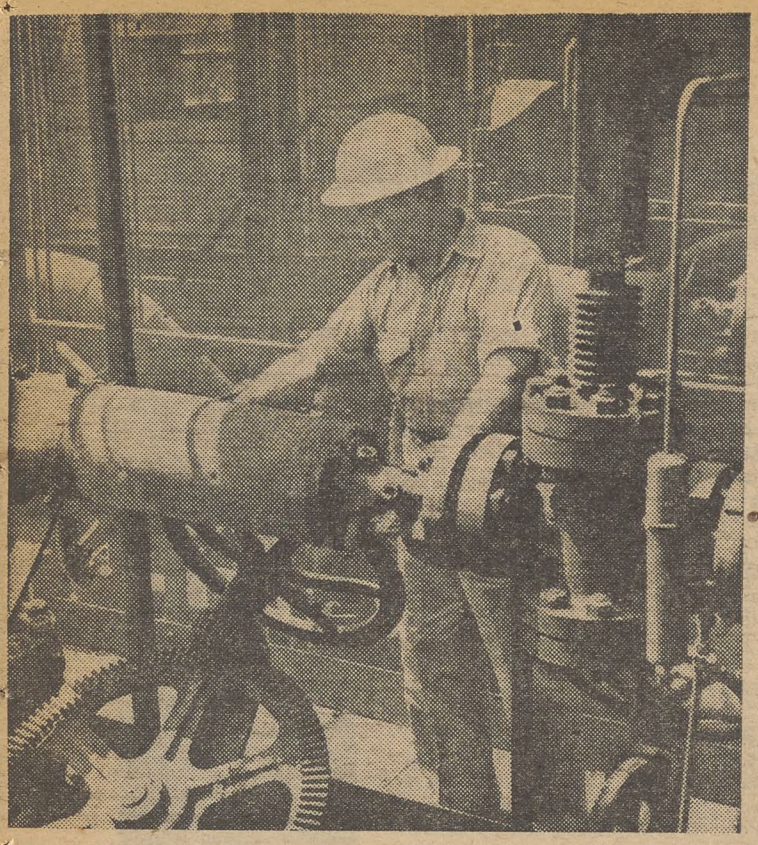
The voters responsible for this lineup were matched in their opinions by most of the electorate in the nearby cities of Port Arthur, Beaumont and Orange. Congressman Dies' anti-labor record became his certificate for political burial.

BOB HAS been employed at the Smiths Bluff refinery of the Pure Oil Co. for 13 years. His job as shiftbreaker takes him all over the refinery. It makes a "natural" for his union job as chairman of the workmen's committee. He also is a vice-president of his local. He's been a member of the union since 1934, when his local was organized.

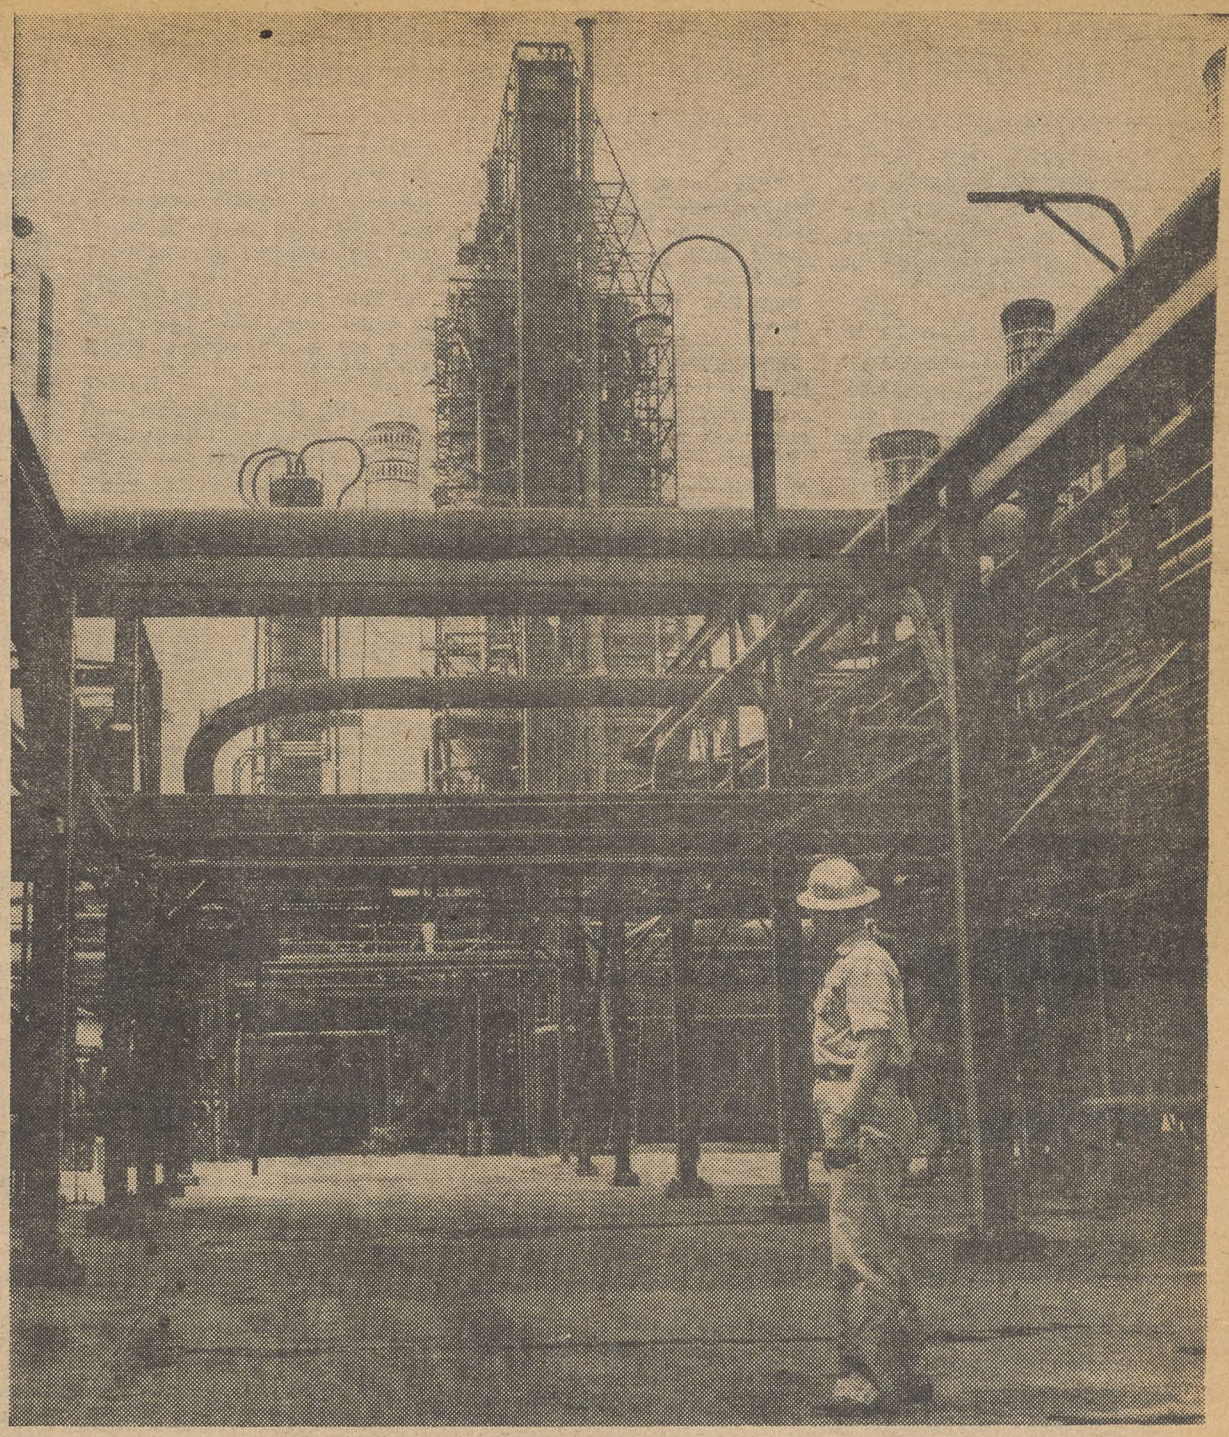
Bob's day starts at 4:45 A.M. He has breakfast with his family—his wife; Barbara Jean, 12; and Gary, 7. A fast look at the sports page, and he's off to work.

Evenings he's often at the union hall. He likes the union's democracy. The secretary of his local, Lloyd L. Crane, is a member of the union's International Executive Council. The Council is composed exclusively of rank and file workers. Crane, who represents the Texas and Louisiana Gulf Coast district, is also a Baptist deacon.

Bob adds up his high wages, his good working conditions, and the union's role in helping to defeat the anti-labor Dies. He says he wants his son "to grow up to be a good union man."



4 Bob makes corrections on a valve. His job is one of the highest paid in the refinery. He gets $1.88 an hour. Thanks to the union, the Texas Gulf coast has rates among the highest.



5 (Top) Bob surveys his production unit. It's a round-the-clock operation, with second and third shifts getting 4 and 6c an hour extra respectively. (Below) Bob relights one of the burners that has gone out. He's careful with fire. A recent Marcus Hook, Pa., explosion killed ten men.

CIO SURE OF RAIL VICTORY

THE CIO Railroad Workers are confident of victory in the Rail Mediation Board election in which 56,000 shop employes of the Pennsylvania Railroad will be eligible to vote.

The election will begin March 24 and will extend to about April 18. The ballot count will not begin until April 28 to allow employes in the armed services, on leave of absence and retired because of physical disabilfty to return their ballots.

A. B. Martin, the union's national director, said this week:

"Those of us who have been at the yards and the shops day after day for the past months know that the PRR workers want the effective representation that the CIO will give them."

The Railroad Workers' program includes a 30c hourly increase, guaranteed annual wage, the 40-hour week, shift differential, paid vacations, sick leave and union participation in settling relief and compensation cases.

Besides the CIO union, other organizations on the ballot are the AFL and the Brotherhood of Railroad Shop Crafts, which now represents five of the eight of the maintenance of equipment crafts involved in the election. The Railroad Workers charge that in many areas BRSC committeemen are secretly urging voting for the AFL.

The CIO union last year won the right to represent three crafts on the Pennsylvania System as the result of a Mediation Board election.

AUTO UNION EXPLODES CHRYSLER 'POVERTY'

"RECORD-BREAKING fourth quarter profits of the Chrysler Corporation contradict the statement of Chrysler President K. T. Keller in the companys annual report that a general wage increase will inevitably be followed by price increases," Pres. Walter P. Reuther of the CIO Auto Workers and Norman Matthews, director of the union's Chrysler Dept., said this week.

"Both operating profits and profits after taxes of Chrysler for the fourth quarter of 1946 are greater than the quarterly averages in the most profitable years in Chrysler history, they said.

The UAW, in briefs already submitted to the company, predicted Chrysler profits would increase rapidly throughout 1946 as output expanded. The Auto Workers also said that recent price increases have established prices that will make 1947 an extremely profitable year for auto manufacturers. Reuther and Matthews said:

"Operating profits, before taxes, were $32 million as compared to the 1941 quarterly average of $17 million and the 1936 quarterly average of $19 million, the latter being the corporation's best year.

"Profits after taxes in the 1946 fourth quarter were $16,600,000 as compared to the 1936 average of $16,200,000 and the 1941 average of only $10,400,000.

"Profit per unit of production in the 1946 fourth quarter was $169, and the total profit after taxes is equal to a 24% return on the net worth of the company."

INSURANCE MEN ASK $10 HIKE

THE CIO Office and Professional Workers this week called upon the three leading industrial insurance companies in the United States to provide a $50 guaranteed weekly minimum salary and a $10 across-the-board increase to some 30,000 agents nationally whom the union represents.

The request was sent to the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company, the Prudential Insurance Company of America and the John Hancock Mutual Life Insurance Company in identical letters from UOPWA Vice-Pres. Leon W. Berney.

Similar proposals are being presented to other companies in the field employing an additional 10,000 agents.

Emphasizing the tremendous growth in wealth, size and influence of these companies, Berney declared that "agents over the years have never really received a full return in compensation for the contribution they make."

He asserted that the diminished purchasing power and enormously high profit levels "combining to precipitate a depression," are already having their effect in increased lapses and cash surrenders and growing difficulty in writing new business.

GOLDEN NAMED LECTURER

Harvard University this week announced the appointment of Clinton S. Golden of the CIO Steelworkers as a lecturer in labor relations at the Graduate School of Business Administration. Golden's appointment is effective at once, and will continue until June 30.

Golden will lecture to students studying labor relations, and will consult with businessmen studying in the advanced management group and with labor union officials who are studying here as trade union fellows.

Golden was formerly assistant to Philip Murray as president of the Steelworkers. During the war he served as a vice-chairman of the War Production Board and as vice-chairman of the War Manpower Commission.

CIO TEACHERS STAGE MARCH

THE CIO Philadelphia Teachers Union led 700 teachers to the Pennsylvania capitol at Harrisburg this week to urge a legislative hearing on their demand for a $500 annual pay increase.

After visiting Gov. Duff (R.), Esther Soler and Ben Anton, legislative representative and president, respectively, of the union, reported to the teachers that the governor's sales tax proposal was unacceptable and recommended higher corporation taxes to boost teachers' salaries.

The teachers also asked establishment of a salary schedule ranging from a minimum of $2,500 a year to a maximum of $5,500 for those holding masters' degrees.

The delegates went to Harrisburg at the close of classes and returned to their schools the next day.

ORDERED TO BARGAIN WITH NEWSBOYS

The U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the Ninth District has ordered the Los Angeles Times to bargain in good faith with the Los Angeles Newsboys Local Industrial Union, CIO, in accordance with an NLRB order.

The Times was ordered to sign within a week an agreement with the union embodying the present practices of the newspaper in the employment of its street sales newsboys in Los Angeles and Glendale, and to bargain with the union on pay, hours and working conditions.

2½ Million Minors in Jobs

Some 2½ million minors between the ages of 14 and 17 were employed full or part time in April, 1946, according to U. S. Dept. of Labor estimates. This is about a million and a quarter less than were working in April, 1945, but over twice as many as in 1940.

GIVE $50,000 TO HILLMAN FUND

A contribution of $50,000 to the Sidney Hillman Memorial Foundation has been voted by the Executive Council of the CIO Textile Workers Union.

The foundation is being created by the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers as a memorial to Hillman, long president of ACW, who died last July 10. The fund will be devoted to educational projects in the field of labor.

CARVING UP THE CIO

the fact that it is sabotaging the American Can principle. It seeks to conceal this fact by words of comfort to the union seeking an industrial unit.

"It is with great reluctance," the Board pronounces with increasing monotony, "that we disregard a bargaining history on a more inclusive basis, but . . ." Similarly, the Board invariably announces reassuringly in cases in which it grants craft severance that "there is no hard and fast rule. We are deciding each case on its facts."

In some mysterious fashion, however, the "facts" of every case turn out in the Board's opinion to favor craft severance. And this is so even though a previous case on the same facts was resolved in favor of the industrial unit.

Record Shows Bias

THE record of the Board cases decided under this new dispensation shows the Board's bias and favoritism. What is even more alarming is the record on undecided cases and the election petitions which are now pending.

The normal practice, where an election petition is filed which is covered by an established principle or case, is for the Regional Director of the Board to dismiss the petition.

This practice is followed in order to prevent the Board from being swamped with thousands of cases involving issues that already have been decided. Only in this way can the Board conserve enough of its funds and manpower to make its machinery work even in the creaking fashion in which it now works.

Today, we find in case after case that when a Regional Director dismisses a petition upon the basis of the American Can principle, the Board itself, on appeal by the craft union to Washington, reverses the Regional Director and orders a hearing.

It sounds unbelievable, but the Board has actually recently reversed its Regional Directors and ordered hearings on craft petitions filed in the basic steel industry where there has been over a decade of industrial bargaining history, and in the can industry, the very industry to which the Board officially applied the American Can doctrine in 1939.

WHAT does all this mean?

- It means that at a time when the Board is faced with what amounts almost to a financial paralysis, it must spend money processing cases involving issues which should be disposed of without hearings and the expenditure of precious time, money and manpower.
- It means that when organized labor is seeking to preserve collective bargaining and to fight off the attacks of reaction, the Board itself is promoting labor strife and interunion rivalry. An agency of the Government has become the sponsor of jurisdictional disputes.
- It means that the Board itself has sacrificed adherence to established principle and consistency in order to court industrial chaos.
- It means that a tremendous brake is being applied to effective and uninterrupted collective bargaining. Every time a rival petition is filed, even where a union has been a bargaining agent for a long period of time, employers seize upon such petitions as a pretext for refusing to bargain.
- It means that the Board, an agency created to promote collective bargaining, has by its own zig-zagging and opportunistic course created profound hazards to the effectuation of the principles and policies of the National Labor Relations Act.

Scab Driver Hurts Picket

FACED by resumption of picketing, police this week arrested four pickets outside the struck Daily News, Springfield, Mass., but ignored requests to summon aid for a fifth picket injured by a scab circulation truck.

The injured picket, knocked to the gutter when the truck left the plant while 27 cops stood nearby, was taken by strikers to a hospital where he was held for treatment of possible fractured ribs and other injuries.

Later the cops, confronted with a complaint against police brutality by the striking CIO Newspaper Guild, said they were "investigating" the accident.

Besides the Guild, the AFL stereotypers, pressmen and printers have been on strike against the four Springfield newspapers of Sherman H. Bowles for almost six months.

Strike Brooklyn YW

BROOKLYN UNITY—The CIO Office & Professional Workers last week end voted not to return to work at the Brooklyn YWCA until the strike of the building service employes—now in its third week—is settled.

The vote was taken in face of a threat by the YWCA that unless the building service employes and seven professional workers—also members of the union—return to work this week their places would be filled by scabs.

RUBBER UNION SET TO STRIKE

THE CIO Rubber Workers were set to strike the Big Four — Goodrich, Goodyear, Firestone and U. S. Rubber— at midnight Sunday, March 23, as the CIO NEWS went to press.

The strike deadline was set this week by the union's policy committee following two weeks of fruitless negotiations on the Rubber Workers' demand for a 26c an hour increase in 42 plants of the companies in 20 states. The union had scaled down the demand to 16c.

Present contracts expired Feb. 28, but were extended by mutual consent. URWA Pres. L. S. Buckmaster pointed out that the Big Four were notified of the wage demand last Oct. 28 and that the union's repeated attempts to reach a settlement have been unsuccessful.

He accused the companies of failing to make "a real effort to meet the problems raised by the rising cost of living—despite the fact that they have made record profits of $102 million in 1946 and expect to do even better this year."

Buckmaster said that at negotiations in Cleveland the companies offered nothing "except a token wage increase proposal of 10c an hour," which "does not even begin to meet the needs of workers affected by the sharp increase in the cost of living since our last wage adjustment a year ago."

He pointed out that in an effort to reach an agreement the union slashed its wage increase demands to 16c an hour, agreed to accept a retroactive award date of Jan. 1 instead of Nov. 1, discarded its demand for a night bonus increase, and either eliminated or modified its demands on "fringe" issues.

WIN $9 MILLION RAISE

WAGE increases averaging 17½c an hour and totaling $9 million a year were awarded to 23,000 Consolidated Edison Co. employes in N. Y. City this week by a three-man arbitration board.

The workers are members of the CIO Utility Workers. The increases are retroactive to Jan. 1, date a new contract was signed between management and the union. The agreement, supplanting one that had expired Dec. 31, included all terms on which both sides agreed and provided for arbitration of unresolved issues.

Dr. George W. Taylor, former head of the Natl. War Labor Board, was impartial chairman of the board. The two other members were Patrick McGrath, chairman of the union's joint council, and company Vice-Pres. A. Augustus Low.

McGrath did not join in the enthusiasm of his co-arbitrators for the award, pointing out a "need to rectify a number of additional inequities."

The award provided a straight 10c increase for clerical workers, a 15c increase for employes doing so-called physical work, established a $1½ million fund for merit increases and additional wage increases in 1947, and set up another $800,000 fund for reclassifications and wage adjustments. Before the award the weekly pay scale range was $24 to $62.

$700,000 CLINIC FOR WORKERS

Plans for a $700,000 health center and preventive medicine clinic for clothing workers was announced this week by the CIO Clothing Workers and the Philadelphia Clothing Manufacturers' Assn.

The costs of the center will be borne jointly by labor and management. Clinical service for some 20,000 ACW members in this vicinity will be provided with special emphasis on preventive medicine and free periodic physical examinations for members.

CIO Drive Just Wouldn't Stop at Border

THE Alabama-Florida district of the CIO Organizing Committee extends all the way down to the Panama Canal Zone—though Committee Director Van A. Bittner didn't plan it that way.

Here's how it happened:

Last fall a group of Pan-American Airways cafeteria workers in Balboa, Canal Zone, said they wanted a union. Fifty-one of the 55 eligible signed membership cards of the CIO Transport Workers—the union to which PAA workers at Miami already belonged.

Then Carey Haigler of Birmingham, director of the Alabama-Florida district, was notified the Balboa unit had been recognized on a card-check and that his territory extended all the way south to the Big Ditch.

Most organizational gains, however, have been closer to Haigler's home.

Two of our outstanding victories to date in the district were at the world's largest citrus packing plant, the Pasco Packing Co., at Dade City, Fla., and at the B. F. Goodrich Co. plant at Tuscaloosa, Ala., Haigler said.

"We won the Pasco election by a vote of 1,066 to 156—and this plant now has about 2,000 employes working under a good Food & Tobacco Workers contract. This contract provided something new for the citrus packing industry—overtime pay for all work done in excess of 40 hours a week.

"This was a big gain because the Wage and Hours Law exempts citrus plants from paying overtime during 14 weeks each year and for another 14 weeks of the year permits work up to 12 hours a day and 56 hours a week before overtime is paid.

"OUR latest and largest victory in Alabama was at the Goodrich plant, in the AFL stronghold of Tuscaloosa. The vote was 430 for the CIO Rubber Workers and 93 for the AFL. This win brought the last remaining tire and tube plant of the 'Big Four' (Goodrich, Goodyear, Firestone and U. S. Rubber) under the Rubber Workers banner."

Haigler said a number of NLRB elections have been won in Florida's lumber and logging industry and that the wood industry is one of the main "targets" of the CIO in Alabama.

"We now have all of the operations of the South's largest lumber producer—the W. T. Smith Lumber Co. of Alabama—under contract," he said. "A number of other independent lumber companies in South Alabama also have organized. Among the larger of these are the Scotch Lumber Co. of Fulton with about 400 employes, and the T. R. Miller Mill Co. at Brewton, with about 600 employes."

Haigler said the 54 new local unions established as a direct result of the Southern drive had added about 15,000 members to the CIO rolls in Alabama and Florida.

He said this figure does not represent the total increase in CIO membership in the district "because it does not take into account the healthy gains made by old, established locals under impetus of the campaign and does not represent membership at plants where we have signed up workers but have not yet been recognized as bargaining agent."

THE Woodworkers lead the district in the number of NLRB election victories won during the campaign—10 in Alabama and four in Florida. Steelworkers are second with 7, Food & Tobacco Workers and the Transport Workers are tied for third with six each.

The Auto Workers have won five elections, Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Employes four, Textile Workers three and the following one or two each: Brewery Workers, Shipyard Workers; Rubber Workers; Mine, Mill and Smelter Workers, Oil Workers and Packinghouse Workers.

"Many state, county and municipal workers in Alabama have joined the CIO's Public Workers," Haigler said. "Because these people are not covered by the National Labor Relations Act they have not yet gained formal recognition for their union in this state."

Haigler said workers in most of Alabama's basic industries have been members of CIO unions for years. "The Steelworkers have about 25,000 members in Alabama and the Textile Workers have about 15,000." he said. "CIO membership in Alabama now totals about 75,000."

"We are now concentrating much of our organizational effort on workers in the wood and textile industries in the smaller towns throughout Alabama and Florida. We believe our campaign will pick up speed soon because workers in unorganized plants are learning about the wage increases and other benefits that the international CIO unions have obtained for workers in the plants that our Committee has organized during the last nine months."

One-World Songs

A NEW songbook which should be put to use in every union in the country, as well as in schools, churches and other community organizations, is Irving Caesar's collection, "Sing a Song of Friendship."

As Fannie Hurst says in the introduction, "Here are facts of life—one-world life—packaged into these songs-and-wisdoms for children-of-any-age. Here are streamlined ballads, not of yesterday, but of today and tomorrow."

Running through all the songs is the musical plea, "Let's Have the World of Tomorrow Today!", the title of one of the songs.

Here is the refrain of another:

A "sky" a "witz" or "off" or "cu"
when added to a name

Just teaches us the family or town from which it came.

A name like Thomas Jefferson in some lands o'er the sea.

Would not be Thomas Jefferson
but Thomas "Jefferski";

Or "Jefferwitz" or Jefferoff" or maybe Jeffercu"—

So do not let a "ski" or "off" or
"witz" seem strange to you.

I feel the same towards ev'ry
name no matter how it ends,

For people with the strangest names can be the best of friends.

The song book has been widely praised. Mrs. Roosevelt said the songs "explain why the nations of the world must be friends and they do it in terms that even a small child will understand."

Sumner Welles said they deserve wide popular distribution as representing "values of the highest importance to the world of today."

"Sing a Song of Friendship" can be bought at book, music and department stores, or direct from Irving Caesar, 1619 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. Price, single copies, $1.95. Discount on quantity orders.

Men Protest Firing Of Women

The entire 65-man crew of the Rock Island Lumber Co., Roseburg, Ore., members of the CIO Woodworkers, walked off the job when eight of the company's employes were fired because they were women, according to Ray Lea, business agent of the IWA local.

Lea said that most of the women had worked in the operation for several years. "Their dismissal was a violation of our contract," he stated. "The men walked out because they felt if the company got away with this there would soon be no protection for anyone."

Food for Thought: To emphasize her remarks about skyrocketing food prices, Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D., Cal.) carried this basket of groceries to the floor of the House of Representatives last week. She warned that rising prices may bring on a catastrophic depression. (FP picture.)

Sprucing Up

MARGIN FOR ERROR

By HANNA SHERMAN

EVER since the lifting of fabric restrictions, fashion writers have been talking about the changing silhouette. The clothes you see in the shops this Spring do have a feeling of greater freedom and you'll notice too, that skirts are growing longer.

My advice is don't splurge on anything that seems very extreme to you. The most bizarre of the new fashions are still too untried to be worth your money. Better—guide yourself with this simple rule. Whatever the fashion picture, the clothes you buy should flatter your figure and fit you well. All the great designers are still using this basic principle. It has brought fortunes to them and good looks to their clients.

Here are some of their workroom secrets, guaranteed to flatter your figure and to stay in fashion for a long time to come. Happily for us, they are available in clothes in every price range. They are easier to find in the more expensive models and take a little more looking at the price you can afford. But they are well worth it.

THE next time you choose something new to wear watch out for these features. And when you've found a dress, suit or coat that checks with them, you'll probably wear it more often than anything you own.

1. Shoulders. Whether they are straight or round, they should appear to be the widest part of your figure. Be sure they are comfortable, not too tight. Look for good shoulder pads, but not exaggerated ones. If they are built up too high, they will make your neck look short. If they are too wide, you will look top-heavy.

2. Neckline. Most women look best in a V neckline. It need not be a low cut V. If your face is not your fortune a collar with narrow lapels will be more flattering than a plain neckline.

3. Detail. All detail such as tucking, draping, embroidery, pockets, should be over the bosom. You can wear colored trimming at the neck and wrists, if you like, but do try to avoid detail below the waist.

4. Midriff and waistline. A smooth fit through the midriff is essential for this type of dress. The waistline should really "fit" without benefit of belt. It should not have a belt of color unless you are slim waisted.

5. Skirt. This should flare gently from smoothly fitting hips. A gored skirt is best and may have added center front or side fullness. Adjust your skirt length so that it is the most becoming number of inches from the ground for you. Remember that skirts are being worn longer.

ANY dress that fits well should have a feeling of ease across the back so that you can move your arms freely. This means that the back of the dress should blouse at the waistline. A trick that movie designers often use to further slim the hips is to dip the waistline slightly in the back.

This dress is capable of many variations. It can be found in sports styles, tailored clothes and in models for the most dressy occasions. You should have at least one in your wardrobe. When you do, I know you'll be wanting more of the same. For the average figure, this type of dress leaves no margin for error.

BIRTHDAY PARTIES

Strange to say, the more birthday parties for children under five are like everyday play, the greater the chances for success. Gifts, souvenirs for guests to play with and take home (pin wheels and other ten-cent gimcracks) birthday caps, small individual candy baskets, ice cream and cake, offer plenty of excitement. Too long parties and too much excitement often cause over-fatigue and upset stomachs. A short familiar story told by someone who loves it will add to party flavor. It is important to plan thoughtfully and keep parties simple. (Photo—Monkmeyer Henle).

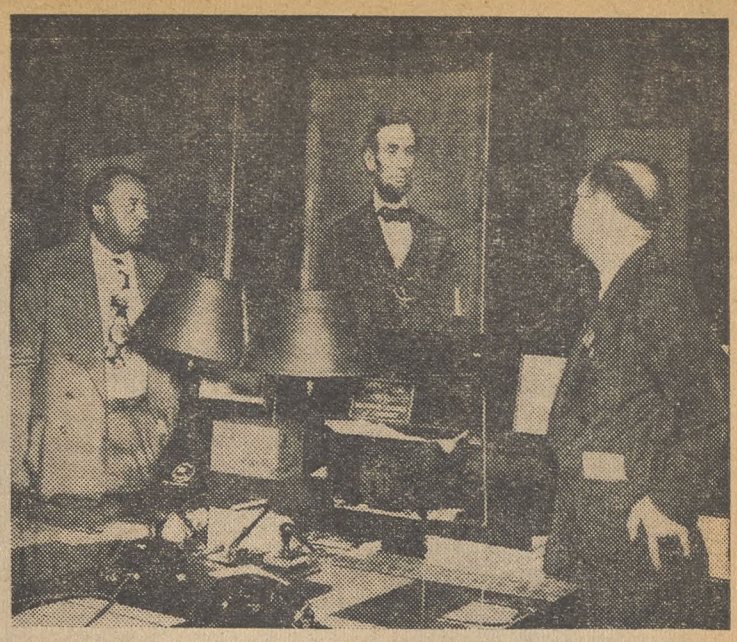
GIVE To The Red Cross

A table at the "sit-in" protest staged by delegates to the National CIO Education Conference. Left to right are Asst. Education Director George Guernsey, Howard Warren, one of the first two Negro delegates who were refused service in the hotel coffeeshop; Director of Research and Education Kermit Eby; Frank Blackwell, Steelworkers, Gary, Ind.; Powers Hapgood, CIO regional director in Indiana, and Jacob Clayman, Ohio CIO legal counsel.



Unmoved by the irony of the situation, a Neil House hotel manager sat under this large picture of Lincoln in his office while refusing to do anything to stop a flagrant violation of Negroes' democratic rights. Philip Weightman, left, and Kermit Eby look sadly at the picture.

CIO EDUCATORS GIVE HOTEL LESSON IN DEMOCRACY

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

SOMETHING quite startling in labor education happened last week in Columbus, Ohio. Ordinarily an education conference is considered dull news and is lucky to get even mentioned in the out-of-town press.

Yet the National CIO Education Conference, meeting at the Neil House, one of Columbus' largest hotels, suddenly found itself in the headlines and had the facilities of the Nation's press and radio at its disposal in calling public attention to an important part of its program—education against race discrimination.

It started when two Negro delegates reported to the conference that they were refused service in one of the hotel's dining rooms. The next day, in a test case, four other Negro delegates also were refused.

Rising to the challenge, the conference organized an all-day "sit-in" of 150 CIO delegates, including about 30 Negroes, who crowded the Flemish Room restaurant to capacity and sat at the tables from 7:30 Sunday morning until four that afternoon. All were refused service because Negroes were present.

Congresswoman Helen Gahagan Douglas, who with Jack Kroll, PAC director, was a featured speaker at the banquet the preceding evening, joined in the anti-discrimination protest and remained in the coffee shop until she was forced to leave to catch a train.

"I wish you all the success in the world in breaking down the barriers of discrimanation," she said as she departed.

BY coincidence, the subject for the Sunday morning session as given on the printed program was "How to Fight Discrimination." CIO Director of Research and Education Kermit Eby and Asst. Director George Guernsey, whose department ran the conference, had not expected to have an actual case to use an an example, but that is the way it worked out.

As George L-P Weaver, director of the National CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination, told the delegates, "the hotel furnished a working laboratory for panel discussion."

Speeches and discussions that otherwise would have been held in the big blue and gold ballroom upstairs took place in the restaurant. Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, who was one of the scheduled speakers, gave the delegates a message from CIO Pres. Philip Murray assuring them that they had the strong backing of the entire CIO and urging them to "keep up the good fight."

Steps leading up to the "sit-in" demonstration were taken at a full session of the conference on Saturday where a report was made on the racial discrimination practiced by the hotel against the four Negro delegates who served as the test case to be used by the CIO as the basis for a suit against the Neil House under the Ohio Civil Rights statutes.

FULL support of the National and the Ohio CIO in pressing the legal suit was pledged by Eugene Cotton, CIO assistant general counsel; Jack Kroll, PAC director and head of the Ohio CIO Council, and Eby and Weaver of the Natl. CIO.

The conference investigating committee reported that the four Negro delegates involved in the test case—Vice-Pres. Philip Weightman, Packinghouse Workers; Dollie Lowther, education director, Laundry Workers' Div., Clothing Workers; and Boyd Wilson and Mary Davis, Steelworkers—went to the Neil House coffee shop and remained for nearly two hours without receiving service. The discrimination against them was witnessed by a group of 17 white delegates, a large part of them from Columbus.

The two Negro delegates involved in the first case of discrimination—George Wilson Mills, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, Birmingham, Ala., and Howard Warren, United Auto Workers, So. Bend, Ind., had no CIO witnesses to the incident.

Conference Director Guernsey stated that the CIO Education Dept. had been given to understand by the hotel management that there would be no discrimination against Negro delegates. The hotel had assigned rooms to Negro delegates, although they were kept all together in one wing as though segregated, one delegate charged.

"We are determined to push for a complete elimination of this completely undemocratic practice," Guernsey said, "and all future conferences will have even more strict agreement that a policy of non-discrimination will prevail."

A resolution passed by the conference at this meeting condemned the hotel for its policy of racial bias and laid down a recommended program of action to be followed in home communities. This urged all CIO members "to take note of this act of discrimination as an indication of the need for intensifying their activities in their own communities."

ALTHOUGH the dramatic protest in behalf of its Negro delegates got the spotlight at the CIO Education Conference, it by no means eclipsed the value of other parts of the program. One of the outstanding things about the conference was the vigorous enthusiasm with which the rank and file delegates launched into the discussions, particularly at the Saturday afternoon sessions which were broken up into subject groups limited to 50 persons.

The one on Anti-Labor Legislation led by Eugene Cotton of the Natl. CIO Legal Dept., and Robert Lamb, Steelworkers legislative representative, was particularly lively. Delegates popped up one after the other to tell vivid stories of local campaigns being waged in their state and community against anti-labor bills and to give suggestions to further the drive.

A group discussing education by press and radio, led by CIO Publicity Director Len DeCaux and PAC Publicity Director Alan Reitman, also brought forth many interesting examples of local programs.

The session on how to improve union meetings and put new members to work, led by Joseph Kowalski of the UAW and Ann Terech, Retail, Wholesale & Department Store Union, got down to brass tacks, as did the group on stewardship training led by Edwin Schonfeld, Farm Equipment Workers, and Larry Rogin, Textile Workers.

Guernsey and William Kemsley, Michigan CIO, led a helpful discussion on the use of movies, film strips, posters and exhibits. Films were also shown and their use explained at other sessions of the conference.

A session on labor programs in universities was attended by representatives from Roosevelt College, University of Chicago, Cornell, Michigan, Wisconsin, and American Labor Education Service.

AT THE Thursday night opening session, Natl. CIO Asst. Research Director Stanley Ruttenberg tangled with Emerson P. Schmidt, research director for the U. S. Chamber of Commerce, in a debate on Wages, Prices and Profits.

Only the fact that he had to catch an early train after his airplane trip was canceled saved the smooth Dr. Schmidt from a heavy barrage of questions. In his speech he defended high profits, condoned high prices and maintained that "if every worker got more dollars in his pay envelope every week, these dollars would bid more fiercely for the scarce supply of goods."

In his answering speech, Ruttenberg gave a simple analysis of the CIO's position on "Why Wages Should Be Raised Now," in which he outlined the essentials for a sound wage, price and profit relationship.

"If the labor movement is to be successful in its approach to this problem, the public and the community must get the facts and hear the story," Ruttenberg said. "This is no longer a labor problem. These matters affect the lives and well-being of every citizen of the United States."

VARIOUS education directors of CIO unions and other speakers at the earlier sessions of the conference included William Rafsky, Hosiery Workers; Joe Glazer, Textile Workers; Frank Fernbach, Steelworkers, and Paul Sifton, both of whom spoke on the Labor Extension Service Bill; Brownie Lee Jones, Southern School for Workers; Katherine Ellickson, Natl. CIO; Evelyn Dubrow, New Jersey CIO; Myrna Siegendorf and Robert Kenney, CIO Services Committee.

Also Orville Jones and William Lavalle, Ohio CIO; Pres. James McEwan, Indiana CIO; Clifford McAvoy, Electrical Workers; Michael Mann, Chicago CIO; Svend Godfredson, Packinghouse Workers, and many others who spoke both from the platform and in discussion from the floor.

Abe Lincoln Wouldn't Eat Here

To explain the purpose of the CIO "sit-in" to other guests of the hotel, a mimeographed leaflet was handed out to Neil House patrons at the door of the coffee shop and elsewhere. The leaflet was headed: "Would Abe Lincoln Eat Here? No, and Neither Should You!" and then went on:

"One hundred fifty members of the National CIO Education Conference are still waiting in the Flemish Room for breakfast. Management of the hotel claims waitresses won't serve them because Negro delegates are present.

"A portrait of Lincoln hangs in the front office. Yet the principles of Lincoln are openly defied in Columbus, a way station for the underground railway system of the Civil War.

"Abe Lincoln wouldn't eat here! Will you?"

SHORT TAKES

"SWELL GUY" is the story of a heel, a no-good so-and-so who gets young gals in trouble, swindles old women and deceives everyone but those who know him. Mark Hellinger has reached into the lower depths of his knowledge of Broadway characters to drag up this famed war correspondent, played by Sonny Tufts.

ANGEL AND THE BADMAN—is a genteel but good story of the open plains. People seem to be normal and everything but the guns are toned down to a nice, enjoyable pace. Producer-star John Wayne changes his way from a badman to a good guy under the Quaker influence of lovely Gail Russell.

EASY COME, EASY GO—gives Barry Fitzgerald top billing as star of the movie version of John McNulty's tales of a New York boarding house. The mushy, corny story of an old Irishman who plays the horses and tries to run the romantic life of his daughter doesn't measure up to his talents.

THE SHOCKING MISS PILGRIM—is the story of the first lady typist in Boston in 1874. Betty Grable uses all the charms of a pleasant voice, a good touch system and an emphasized figure to win woman's place behind an office desk. Dick Haymes chimes in on the melodic Gershwin tunes to make this a pleasant picture.

THE STRANGE WOMAN—offers the tale of a black-hearted wench in 19th century Maine who goes after wealth and gets it—even if it means marrying an old codger while she loves his son. Hedy LaMarr's beauty is the outstanding quality in this moody, costume piece.

THAT WAY WITH WOMEN—Sidney Greenstreet switches from murderer's row to comedy. It's murder. As a retired auto magnate looking for something to do he buys an interest in a gas station, worries about his young daughter and finally marries her off to his gas station partner.

Wisecracks, Kisses Mar A-Bomb Film

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

"THE Beginning or the End," the title of M-G-M's cinematic story of the development of the atom bomb, aptly describes the significance of this new source of energy for the world.

If allowed to be used for military purposes solely, it may mean the total destruction of mankind. If turned over to peaceful pursuits, the energy contained in minute quantities of plutonium and uranium may usher in an era of prosperity unknown to previous generations.

Of course, the picture doesn't deal with these questions. Rather delicately, it skirts around the main issues and concerns itself only with the production and use of the bomb in the war. All the scientists, military men and industrialists concerned with the making of history are shown as benign gentlemen with no other thought than to beat the Axis to production of this type weapon.

A word of sermonizing is allowed to creep in now and then, but the answer to the final question as to whether it shall be the "Beginning or the End" is left to the 25th Century. That may not be a long time to wait as far as Hollywood is concerned, but for the rest of America and the world it is a burning issue.

Avoiding all controversial aspects of the atom question, Metro has gone ahead, nevertheless, to produce a fairly interesting story of how the scientists of many nations pooled their knowledge together with America's industrial power to produce the A-bomb.

One wishes, however, that youthful scientist Tom Drake and Robert Walker, a colonel, were not portrayed as having the major role in the development. But then, M-G-M would have had to leave out a slight romance with two juveniles, which would have improved the picture tremendously. Hollywood's kiss-and-wise-crack doesn't measure up to the importance of the subject.

ANY other picture has to be judged by a different set of standards. People will see and be awed by "The Beginning or the End" because of its historical importance, while probably just as many will see "SEA OF GRASS" because of its quartet of stars and certain, if uneven, dramatic values.

The latter presents the neat question of when does a western become a drama and vice-versa. Just because there are cattle barons, like Spencer Tracy, trying to preserve his free range and Melvyn Douglas, a lawyer fighting in behalf of the homesteaders, does not stigmatize "The Sea of Grass" with the label of a high-class horse opry.

Rough-hewn Tracy has his mind as well as his body planted firmly in the free range where his cattle roam. Katherine Hepburn goes west from St. Louis and marries him. When she realizes he loves his cattle and land more than her, she takes up with Douglas. Eventually, she repents and returns to Tracy, bearing a son whose parentage is more likely Douglas's than Tracy's. The pair have another quarrel and separate for twenty years until the death of their outlaw son reunites them.

WHATEVER classification others fall into, there's no doubt about "JOHNNY O'CLOCK." For here is a slick murder mystery done with finesse, not too much brutality and marked for a change by some excellent performances.

As "pitman" and junior partner in a gambling joint, Dick Powell continues further on his path away from crooning. And frankly he is much better behind a gun than a mike. A crooked cop, who had been shaking down S. Thomas Gomez's roulette palace, disappears at the same time as his ex-girl friend, Nina Foch, apparently a suicide.

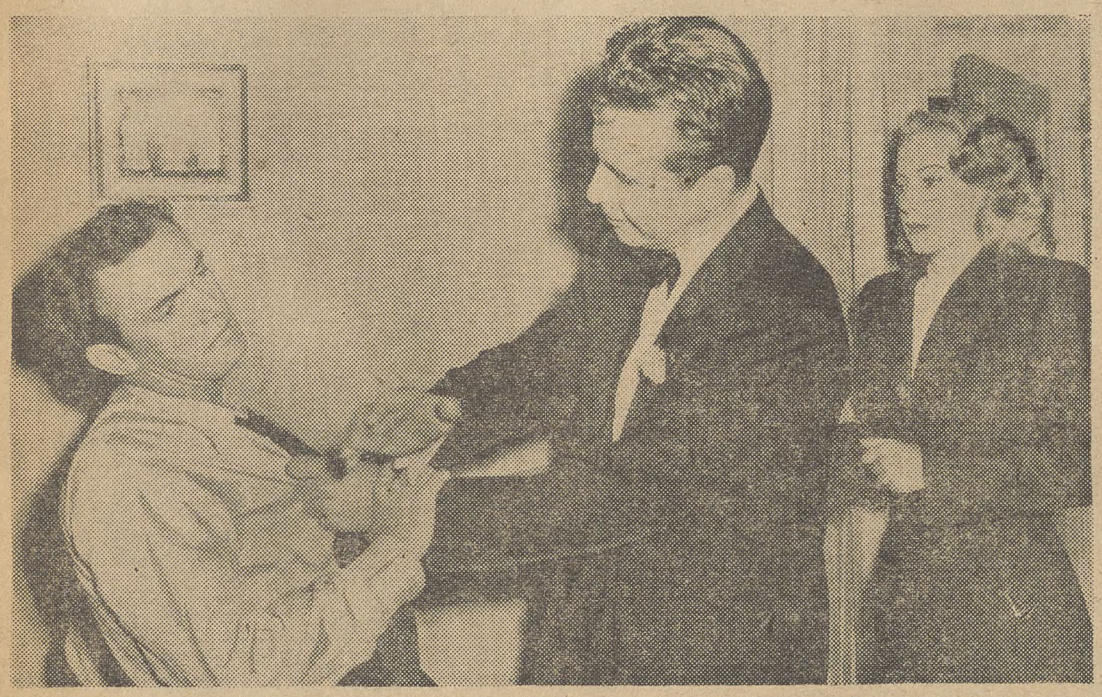
Nina's sister, Evelyn Keyes, flies back from her road show to help solve the mystery and provide an interesting romantic interest. Detective Lee J. Cobb works along parallel paths, but not with Powell and Keyes to insure a happy ending with the murders kept down to three. Cobb's performance is the outstanding feature of the picture while Mabel Paige lightens the gruesome touch with her portrayal of a nosey old gossip. Miss Keyes and Nina Foch do okay by themselves and the audience.

The same can't be said for lispin' Lizabeth Scott, Humphrey Bogart's newest smoke-blowing partner in "DEAD RECKONING." Tall, blonde and interesting in an anemic sort of way, Liz gets herself entangled in a couple of low-grade murders as well as the famous Bogart clutches. One of the former is the death of Boggie's Medal-of-Honor pal Johnny Drake who was under suspicion for knocking off Liz's rich, first husband.

As in the rest of his murder flickers, Bogart slugs, shoots, kicks and snarls his way through this time. But not without introducing the latest in crime—incendiary jelly bombs, straight from the front. And as usual, sadistic Marvin Miller gives Boggie, who naturally can't fight back at this particular moment, a bone-breaking going over.

"LADY IN THE LAKE" will be noted more for its camera technique than anything else. The plot is only ordinary—the wife of a publisher disappears, a gigolo gets pumped full of lead in a shower and private dick Philip Marlowe recovers from two attempts at assassination to solve these heinous crimes.

As star and director, Robert Montgomery allows the camera to do the acting. Theoretically, after a few introductory remarks, you are Philip Marlowe, you take the drink or a set of large knuckles between the eyes. In fact, you, theoretically, do everything but kiss lovely Audrey Trotter. Occasionally, you see Marlowe's (Montgomery) picture in a mirror or his hand on a door knob.



Dick Powell, out to solve two murders, works out John Kellogg who "fingered" him for the mob. Evelyn Keyes, sister of one of the victims, accompanies Powell on his manhunt in "Johnny O'Clock."

Robert Montgomery examines his automatic as he prepares to trail a murderer in "Lady in the Lake." Audrey Trotter is the girl friend.

Anti-Labor Warning!

LULL BEFORE THE STORM

IT was the week of the lull before the storm of anti-labor bills hit the Congress and the American people.

In both the Senate and House Labor Committees, there was lots of activity, little news.

With hearings completed, both committees moved into the decisive period of preparing the bills which they will present to the respective branches of Congress.

On the Senate side, Sen. Ives (R. N. Y.) introduced another bill to curb labor's rights, and Senators Smith (R. N. J.) and Ferguson (R. Mich.) dropped into the hoper a proposal for "labor courts" which smacked strongly of compulsory arbitration.

The Senate Labor Committee, it was understood, was having difficulty reaching agreement on any one proposal, and sources close to the committee indicated that the 13-man committee might come up with 13 different bills.

The House Labor Committee finished up hearings on the bills before it with testimony by Pres. Murray of the American Newspaper Guild and Russ Nixon, representative of the United Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

Armed with subpoena rights and $50,000, the House Labor Committee sent a three-man subcommittee to Milwaukee, Wisc., to nose into the affairs of Local 248 of the UAW-CIO, which has been engaged in a long, bitter strike at the Allis-Chamers Co.

IN WASHINGTON, meanwhile, CIO Pres. Philip Murray sent a blistering leter to Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.) in which he demanded the removal of Gerard Reilly, former NLRB member, as consultant to the Senate Labor Committee.

Murray charged that Reilly had ghost-written S. 360 for Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.). Of all the anti-labor proposals, the CIO President said, "none is more immoderate and punitive than S. 360", a bill which would rewrite the Wagner Act into a bill to deprive unions of many of their basic rights.

Reilly's "vindictive anti-labor views" will undoubtedly influence the Committee, Murray told Taft.

"I urge that the appointment be rescinded," he wrote. "Mr. Reilly has a known and demonstrated animus toward organized labor."

"There are men of stature and integrity in the labor relations field who enjoy wide public confidence," Murray's letter continued. But, he said, the Committe apparently "preferred to by-pass" these persons and select instead a man widely denounced by the "entire labor movement as biased and partisan."

STATE FORCES RALLY TO SAVE UNIONS

CIO members throughout the nation are warming up for an all-out campaign against anti-labor bills in Congress which this week were close to the 250-mark.

They are not waiting until the last minute to begin preparations for the campaign in April, designated by the CIO Executive Board as Defend Labor month.

In Massachusetts, four industrialists joined 300 delegates to a state CIO legislative conference in condemning the get-tough-with labor measures pending in Congress.

Former mayor Roger L. Putnam of Springfield, who employs 750 union machine workers, voiced his approval of the closed shop and industry-wide bargaining, which bills before Congressional committees would ban.

Putnam's sentiments were echoed by William Bixby, industrial relations committee chairman of the Boston Chamber of Commerce; Executive Sec. Fred Steele of the New Bedford Cotton Mfgs. Assn., and Pres. Saul Fecher of the New England Assn. of Men's & Boys' Clothing Mfgs.

Unity with the AFL and the railroad brotherhoods in fighting the threat was voted and the formation of groups throughout the state to carry on the fight was urged.

THREE thousand "missionaries" —CIO members who have attended meetings at Columbus, Marion, Warren, Fostoria, Youngstown, Lorain, Steubenville and Massillon—are taking back to the other Ohio workers the story of what the drive against labor means to them.

The Cleveland CIO Council this week reported that 10,000 signatures have already been received on petitions calling on Congressmen and Senators to oppose anti-labor measures.

Eighteen members of the Cleveland City Council, the mayors of four suburban towns and two councilmen from adjacent communities are among the signers. A committee consisting of the various international CIO unions in Cleveland will bring the petitions to Washington.

WHAT is happening in Ohio is being repeated throughout the nation. CIO headquarters in Washington is receiving scores of letters from other councils and from CIO regional and sub-regional directors telling of meetings, distribution of pamphlets, circulation of petitions to Congressmen and plans to send delegation to the nation's capitol.

Anti-labor Protest Week at San Francisco—sponsored by a committee of CIO, AFL, Railroad and unaffiliated unions—reached its climax at a mass meeting this week. A similar program will be planned in Oakland April 3.

IN New York City damp weather last weekend failed to halt CIO members who distributed a million leaflets urging writing Congressmen to oppose anti-labor bills.

The outlook this week on the state legislative-front was gloomy with the North Carolina legislature being the ninth to pass a bill outlawing the closed shop. It has already been banned in Arkansas, Arizona, Florida, Nebraska, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee and Virginia.

But timely action paid off in Iowa and Missouri where thousands of letters and petitions from CIO members thus far have prevented any anti-labor legislation from being reported to the assemblies.

ASK U.S. HALT FOREIGN FLAG SHIP TRANSFERS

THIRTEEN men and a woman, members of the crew of S. S. America, the largest U. S. passenger ship, last week came from New York City to Washington to ask Congress to halt the use of Panamanian and Hondurian flags on U. S. ships.

The delegation—all members of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union—told the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee and the Senate Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee that this practice deprives U. S. seamen of jobs.

The ship owners use these flags, the comittees were told, to increase their profits "through the evasion of American taxes, safety and labor standards."

The seamen called for passage of legislation easing citizenship requirements for alien seamen who served on American ships during the war and permitting then to continue to work on U. S. merchant vessels. CIO Pres. Philip Murray is on record in favor of these measures.

The seamen urged enactment of the Seamen's War Service Act (HR 476), providing hospitalization, death, disability and educational benefits for merchant seamen, and opposed 241 anti-labor bills so-far introduced.

The older men among the delegation charged that the bills would help restore the long hours, bad conditions and low pay that prevailed before unions were built and strengthened with the aid of the Wagner Labor Act.

CIO to Congress:

SAVE RENT CONTROL

CONTINUED tight control of rents and immediate provisions for a long-range housing program government auspices were demanded this week by CIO to meet the national homes shortage crisis.

With a batch of bills on both subjects up for study by committees of the Senate and House, CIO Sec.-Treas, James B. Carey called for "as is" rent control for at least 12 months in order to prevent "real suffering and deprivation."

At the same time, a statement filed with the committee by R. J. Thomas, chairman of the CIO Housing Committee, called for continued controls and sharply attacked proposals to repeal the Patman Veterans Housing Act.

A batch of bills covering both rents and housing are in the Congressional hopper.

● The Senate Banking subcommittee, which held rent control hearings more than a month ago, is expected to bring out a bill in the next few days.

Apparently confused by the wide public hostility to rent increases, the Judiciary Committee retreated from previous plans to suggest across-the-board increases. The bill to come out of the sub-committee will probably hold rent ceilings, but the question of enforcement is still up in the air.

● The House Banking Committee is considering the Wolcott bill (HR 2549), which the Thomas statement said would provide only for "zombie rent control." It would open the way for more evictions and for large numbers of court suits.

● Also included in the Wolcott bill is a provision for dumping the Patman Veterans Housing Act, which has served—to some degree at least—to give government controls over supplies of needed building materials and to divert them in the general direction of lower-priced homes for veterans.

● The Taft-Ellender-Wagner bill, which provides for long-range housing, is up for study by the Senate Banking Committee, along with a number of other proposals for giving governmental assistance to low-rent and veterans housing projects. The House Committee last year refused to act on the T-E-W bill. It has not yet scheduled hearings at this session.

The T-E-W bill was endorsed recently in a joint letter to the Senate Banking committee by Pres. Murray and Thomas. Spokesmen for the CIO at the hearing were William Nicholas of the UAW and John Edelman of the Textile Workers Union, both of whom pointed to the bill as a major answer to meeting the country's permanent shortage of decent homes for lower income groups.

CAREY, in his testimony before the House group, bitterly attacked the record of the real estate lobby on the rent control issue.

"It is seldom that any special interest group has resorted to such bold, deliberate and calculated mendacity as the people who say that all we need to get more rental housing is to charge higher rents so everyone will have to crowd up more. With literally millions of families now living doubled up in inadequate space, it is unbelievable that such arguments are not laughed out of the forum of serious public discussion."

In the name of CIO, he expressed opposition to the Wolcott bill (HR 2549) for its mere lip service to rent control without proper enforcement provisions.

"In our judgment," Carey told the committee, "HR 2549 simply takes away from the federal government the power and the machinery to control rents." Such a bill, he added, is an invitation from Congress to real estate owners to evade the law.

The needs require a "simple bill be written and passed to enact real ceilings that can be kept on by fair and honest methods of administration, and where necessary, enforcement," Carey pointed out. "It is not too much to say that disturbances which would gravely impair public morale will be precipitated if evictions should increase and rentals get out of hand."

THOMAS'S statement, presented to the committee by Miss Anna Berenson of the UAW, charged that the present housing crisis is "nothing less than a national disaster."

The Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards, he said, recently made a survey showing a need for 1½ million new homes "just to take the edge off the housing shortage."

Sees Liberty Threat In Purge Order

A warning that Pres. Truman's proposed purge of government liberals would intimidate people in all walks of life was sounded this week by Pres. Abram Flaxer of the CIO Public Workers.

Speaking over a nationwide CBS hookup, Flaxer urged Truman to rescind a recent Executive Order defining "disloyal" persons and authorizing their dismissal from government jobs.

The order authorizes the Attorney General to name a list of proscribed organizations. "Membership, affiliation or sympathetic association" with these would be cause for questioning a government employe's loyalty.

Flaxer said the union will conduct a nation-wide campaign to expose the dangers to civil liberties contained in Truman's program.

GOP HACKING AWAY VITAL U.S. SERVICES

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

SERVICES of vital importance to workers—both organized and unorganized—were slashed with an "economy" meat-axe by the House GOP majority last week.

Unless the House action can be overturned in the Senate, the Dept. of Labor and the Natl. Labor Relations Board will find themselves in a position of inability to get on with their jobs.

Some $12,000,000 was cut from the Labor Dept. funds for 1947, while the NLRB sustained a slash of 10% over its present reduced operating funds and of some 40% from what the Bureau of the Budget had recommended for the coming year.

CIO sought unsuccessfully to convince the Congress that it should turn aside demands for the appropriations cuts.

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, wired to leaders of the House just a few hours before the appropriations bill was passed, that labor cannot understand "the superficial pinch-penny philosophy" which guided sponsors of the Labor Dept. and NLRB fund cuts.

He called upon GOP leader Martin and Democratic leader Rayburn "to use all influence to counter the short-visioned proposals of those who, motivated by vindictiveness or lack of knowledge, would cripple essential services of proven value to all the people."

Cowan predicted that the cut in NLRB funds would "cause confusion, unrest, and discontent among unions and employers seeking to conform their activities to the existing law." The Labor Dept. cut will work similar hardships, he said in the wire.

EFFECTS of the cuts, if upheld in the Senate, will be felt soon.

The Labor Board estimates it will be forced to drop some 50 employes. The NLRB now has a backlog of 5,300 cases—the highest number in history—and the present staff of the agency has been too small to handle them with dispatch.

Currently, the Board averages about 20 months to process an unfair practice case—a jump of eight months over a year ago. Contested elections require an average of 6 months to handle, a rise of about two months in the average time. Cases will drag even longer if the Board's operating funds are reduced in line with the House bill.

THE Department of Labor picture shapes up like this:

1. The U. S. Employment Service suffered an 80% cut in the 6½ million dollar appropriation asked by Pres. Truman. Heaviest burden of the slash came in those funds which permit USES to supervise observance by the states of federal standards for public employment offices.

2. The Bureau of Labor Statistics was cut back 40% from its present operating funds, and to only 33% of the amount asked by Pres. Truman. Work on wage, cost of living and family budget statistics will be trimmed way down, along with projects on industrial hazards, industrial relations, employment, productivity etc. The BLS figures have been widely used by labor and industry, as well as by government fact-finding bodies and arbitrators.

3. Division of Labor Standards, which prompted safety activities, improved compensation laws and training of government factory inspectors, is wiped out completely.

4. Only $36,000 was appropriated to carry out child-labor law enforcement.

5. U. S. Conciliation Service was crippled by a 25% cut in funds, together with specific legislation to abolish the jobs of Director Edgar Warren and about 100 key Conciliation officials.

6. Wage-Hour Division was handed a 25% cut in funds available for hiring law-compliance officers—this at the very time when Congress is reducing the amount of time in which workers can sue for damages resulting from law violations.

In addition, the Children's Bureau of Federal Security Agency was cut about 20% in its program for maternal and child health.

THE proposals were soundly criticized in the House. Rep. Kelly (D. Pa.) charged that adequate funds are being denied agencies handling labor disputes, while "this Congress has failed to reduce the cost of living and to enable labor to achieve a proper living wage."

Rep. North (D. N.J.) assailed reduction of the child-labor enforcement funds. She remarked bitterly that Congress is "playing politics with future generations."

Defend Warren

Strong defense of the U. S. Dept. of Labor Conciliation Service, and of Conciliation Directive Edgar Warren, was voiced in Washington by a seven-man, labor-industry advisory committee to the service.

The statement was an answer to action of the House of Representatives in proposing a half-million dollar slash in the Conciliation Service budget, and in eliminating the jobs of Warren and some 100 of his key assistants.

"We have no doubt that the service, under Warren's leadership, has sought to represent the public interest in the peaceful settlement of labor disputes, and we are of the opinion that all who have been associated with him regard him as a loyal and patriotic American," the the committee said.

It added that disorganization of the service would be unfortunate at this "critical time."

Signers of the statement included Clinton Golden and Allan Strachen of the CIO; Frank Fenton and Boris Shishkin of the AFL; and three industrial association spokesmen.

SCORES OF RALLIES TO DEFEND LABOR!

CONCRETE and heartening evidence that CIO forces in every state are rallying against legislation designed to put labor on ice was presented this week to The CIO NEWS. A pile of telegrams nearly a foot high came from CIO Regional Directors in answer to a query about what they and other representatives of CIO are doing. From New England to California and from Georgia to the State of Washington, CIO representatives informed CIO Vice-President and Organization Director Allan S. Haywood that CIO affiliates were planning and holding rallies, scheduling radio programs, circulating petitions, getting letters written to Congress, and organizing other liberal forces in their communities, to take similar action against anti-labor legislation.

Only a partial report on their activities can be printed because of space limitations, but the following excerpts from telegrams give a graphic picture of what an aroused labor movement can do.

PHILADELPHIA, PENN.—Legislative conferences held by local CIO councils in Easton, Allentown, Chester, Montgomery, Delaware, Bucks counties, neighborhood forum meetings with liberal groups, fraternal, business organizations, letters, visits to congressmen, door to door visitations planned, labor committees to meet with congressional representatives. Hand bill distributions. Many councils and locals plan to hold legislative conferences early in April.—George Craig, CIO Regional Director, Eastern Distrfict Penna.

New Injunction Bill Proposed in House

NEW anti-labor bills are rolling off a fast-moving production line in Congress. It's going to take equally rapid action throughout the country to bring about their defeat.

Timed to coincide with each day's headlines, the proposals are hitting at every single aspect of industrial relations and union practice. Only bill not yet introduced is one to make unions illegal.

In the current crop, most important is an injunction bill announced by Rep. Fred Hartley (R., N. J.) who heads the House Labor Committee. Designed to meet the possibility of a national telephone strike in early April, the bill would allow the federal government to obtain an anti-union injunction against striking phone workers, as it did in the coal miners' walkout last year.

Hartley said his committee would bring out the bill on March 31 and call for immediate action. It would be a "temporary" measure, the House committee leader said, in effect only until long-range legislation is passed.

MEANWHILE, the House Labor Committee was studying a new proposal to bar all Wagner Act rights to unions which have "communists" or persons associated with "communists" holding any office.

Since many reactionary Congressmen regard the late Pres. Roosevelt or David Lilienthal of TVA as "communists" there are few unions which would be judged "pure" by these standards.

CHARGE GOP BLOCKS FACTS ON FASCISM

REPUBLICAN leaders in Congress are blocking publication of the first full-length report on fasicsm ever prepared by a U. S. government agency, In Fact disclosed in its March 17 issue.

The 325-page manuscript, Fascism In Action, was prepared by the Library of Congress at the request of Rep. Wright Patman (D., Tex.), who has introduced a resolution, HR 83, authorizing publication of the document.

Although Rep. Carl M. LeCompt (R., Ia.) and Rep. Robert J. Corbett (R., Pa.) are keeping the resolution bottled up in a congressional subcommittee on printing, Patman said he would force publication of the document "even if it means reading it into the Congressional Record, page by page."

Idea for the manuscript occurred to Patman after Rep. Everett M. Dirksen (R., Ill.) had the same agency prepare a book, Communism In Action, a half million copies of which were printed at government expense. Congress took only four days to approve Dirksen's request that his document be made public and Patman said he saw no reason for greater delay on the fascist expose.

Republican objection to the book is said to stem partly from its branding Franco Spain and Salazar Portugal as fascist countries, along with Nazi Germany, Mussolini's Italy, Japan "and other countries with more or less totalitarian forms of government modeled after those of Germany and Italy." Spain is included as "the most important survivor of the fascist era."

Patman said the manuscript is the first exhaustive study of fascism ever written by an official government agency. The only previous official work on the subject, according to the congressman, is a fact sheet issued by the War Dept. and former Asst. Atty. Gen O. John Rogge's report on native fascism and Nazi penetration in the U. S.

Including the Scandinavian!

CONGRESS heard from the 48 states—and Sweden—this week.

Among protests against anti-labor legislation were six petitions from ice-bound American ships tied up at Karlskrona, Sweden.

The crews of the ships are affiliated with various unions—four of them CIO, three AFL, and one independent. But with anti-labor legislation on deck, all hands mustered for a united meeting aboard the S. S. South Bend Victory.

In a letter to the CIO Maritime Committee in Washington, chairman of the meeting Montrey S. Maxwell of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union wrote:

"I ploughed through snow waist high in places to get to the other ships. It took me from noon until eight o'clock but I went to all of them.

"None of them had any news from their unions as of today and you can bet your boots that me and my little bundle (composed of NMU Pilots, CIO NEWS' and MCS Voices) were more than welcome."

Upshot of the distribution and the joint meeting that followed were petitions from all ships signed by nearly 300 men from almost every state in the union. They told Congress: "We didn't want anti-labor legislation!"

DEFEND LABOR MONTH

THE CIO has designated April as Defend Labor Month—a month of mobilization against some of the greatest dangers that ever confronted labor and the American people.

Everyone knows that labor unions are under bitter attack by a reactionary Congress.

But not everyone realizes how imminent is the danger, nor how disastrous may be its results to our wages, living standards and liberties.

There is even a certain apathy in some quarters, based on the idea that similar attacks have been beaten off in the past, that counsels of "moderation" may prevail in Congress, and that anyhow we're in for a period of continuing prosperity.

The purpose of Defend Labor Month is to combat such apathy, by bringing the true facts home to every CIO member; and to make every union, council and member a rallying point for a people's counter-attack against reaction.

IT IS true many past attacks on labor have been beaten back—but with the aid of many more friends in Congress than labor has at present.

It is also true that one very similar drive against labor—after the first world war—succeeded in its main design of crippling the unions and entrenching the open shop.

The results, in wage-cutting, speed-up, intolerable working conditions, and the unemployment and misery that followed in the great depression, will never be forgotten by those who lived through that period.

The CIO is determined this must not happen again.

THE PRESENT drive against labor is the most intensive and extensive yet launched.

The whole big business press has been mobilized for an hysterical pressure campaign. More than 200 bills have been introduced, not only against every conceivable union right and activity but also against many of the American people's most cherished civil liberties.

As to the carefully cultivated idea that "moderation" may prevail, that is one of the reactionaries' phoniest tricks.

The so-called "moderate" anti-union bills are actually the most dangerous, representing the most carefully thought out plans for effectively crippling the unions. The wild "extremist" talk is a deliberate smokescreen to make the most vicious union-busting measures appear "moderate" by comparison.

LEAST of all should anyone imagine there can be any "continuing prosperity" regardless of what is done to labor.

The present disparity between record profits, sky-high prices and lowered real wages is surely heading the country into an early depression.

The U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics is one of the latest authorities to predict a business downturn in the second part of 1947. "Probably the most important force" in bringing this about, it says, is "the steady decline in real income—purchasing power of salary and wage earners.

"In July 1945, real wages and salaries were about 205% of the 1935-39 average, but were only 168% of this average in December 1946. The proportional share of wages and salaries dropped from 70 to 59% of total income payments."

THE ONLY way to head off depression is to increase the people's purchasing power. The anti-union drive, frankly designed to weaken the workers' bargaining power, would make this impossible.

The union-busters would not only bring on depression by wrecking the unions, but they look forward to using this depression to cut deeply into wages and living standards and to "whip labor into line."

These are some of the real and imminent dangers against which the CIO is seeking to mobilize the workers and all other progressive Americans in Defend Labor Month.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

A RECENT New York newspaper ad accuses labor of "coercion, conspiracy, extortion, bribery, blackmail, mayhem, arson and murder."

And labor asks for higher wages too!

EVERY other outrage known to the annals of crime will be found charged against labor in the Congressional Record and the press these days.

Yet the politicians who make these charges all say they "love labor."

THEY'RE all "in favor of unions."

All they want to do is to prevent unions from organizing, striking and putting any pressure on the boss, and to deprive them of dues and membership.

As the duck-hunter protested, "Why nobody loves duck better than I do."

THE TECHNICS of union-hunting haven't changed much over the years, any more than have those of duck-hunting.

The hunters get started early in the dark. They get leg-deep in muck. They use stealth, camouflage and decoy-ducks. They make the strangest noises to lure their victims, including even a mating-call. They employ bird-dogs.

And there are special seasons for both kinds of hunting.

THE PRESENT open season against unions is closely similar to that which followed the first world war. It bears many resemblances to the big anti-CIO campaign of 1937.

Every one of the lies and epithets now hurled against labor can be found in the daily papers and magazines of those years.

HYSTERICAL press campaigns were conducted with exactly the same slogans as now, charging the unions with being too powerful, arrogant, radical, violent, irresponsible, dictatorial and demanding.

A common feature of every past anti-union campaign has been a big red-scare smokescreen, with gaudy charges of subversive and foreign influences in labor's ranks.

Each time, the demand for the open shop and union-crippling legislation has been accompanied by assaults on civil liberties and democratic rights of all kinds.

PAST anti-union campaigns have usually reached their peak at times when the unions were strong, but when there was a depression just around the corner.

The unions emerged from the first world war with swollen membership. Wages were relatively high, but prices still higher.

The post-war open-shop drive was undertaken to prevent union resistance to the depression wage-cutting of the early twenties.

It was accompanied by an all-out red scare. Socialist members of the New York legislature were unseated. "Criminal syndicalism" charges and injunctions were used against every strike. Five thousand persons were arrested in the Mitchell Palmer "red raids," and the FBI investigated as many as 2,000 individuals in the 1922 railroad shopmen's strike.

Union strength was so badly broken by this open-shop drive that in the 1929 depression the corporations were able to cut wages and whip labor into line with comparative ease.

BUT IN 1937 there was a different story to tell.

In this year the CIO was going great guns. It had organized millions of workers. All the union-busters ganged up with Little Steel to stop it, again at a time when the storm signals of another coming depression were clearly apparent.

Again there was an hysterical crescendo of anti-union and red-scare propaganda.

But this time, the CIO was too strong for the union-busters. It refused to be cowed by their violence or split by their propaganda and continued to gain in strength.

As a result, wage rates and union rights were maintained better than in any previous depression.

THIS YEAR the unions are once more at peak strength. Wages are relatively high, but lagging far behind increased living costs. All the signs point to an oncoming depression.

Once more, the union-busters have trotted out their press and politicians for an hysterical anti-union campaign, with all the usual trimmings, so they may use the coming depression to trample labor's wages and conditions into the mire.

But labor is stronger and more experienced today than it was after the first world war. If it is also clear-sighted, d e t e r m i n e d and united, the union-busters can be stopped, as they were in 1937.

FATTEST PROFIT YEAR IN HISTORY!

1946 was the best profit year in American history for most companies and corporations, the CIO Economic Outlook points out in its March issue just off the press.

Not only did profits run to record figures, but returns on investments soared to tremendous heights, the Research & Education Dept. said.

"Had prices increased in 1946 only enough to offset wage increase, profits would not have been increased nearly as much as they were over 1945 levels," the Outlook said. "But prices were raised higher and higher with no relation to wage costs or production costs. They were pushed to fantastic heights. Results were obvious. Profits climbed to their all-time high."

In a series of charts, the Outlook examined the profit return on capital investments of a score of companies in the meat, textile, food, and iron and steel industries. The results are startling.

Survey of the meat industry showed Armour making 15.7% profit in 1946 on its investment; Cudahy cleared 16%; Wilson made 14.1%. Swift, trailing the other companies, cleared only 6.1% in 1946. By way of comparison, profit returns on investments in the industry during the 1939-39 period ranged between 3.4% and 6.6%, and in the 1942-45 wartime years between 6.2% and 11%.

Profit returns in the textile industry are even more impressive. The ranged from an 8.8% return on investment for the American Viscose Corp. to a 38.4% profit in one year for Pacific Mills. American Woolen cleared 28.5%, Industrial Rayon made 28.3% and Celanese Corp 18.2% in the year.

During the '36-'39 and '42-'45 periods, profit returns fluctuated on the average for the baking industry between a low of 3.3% and a high of 11%.

IRON and steel industry figures showed substantial profit returns to the corporations.

U. S. Steel made 12.3% during '46, compared to 4.1% in the 1936-39 years and to 4.5% for the wartime period. Inland netted 17.4%, compared to 13.6% and 8.9% for the two earlier periods. Natl. Steel showed 15.2% profit returns, compared to 11.9% and 7% in the pre-war and mid-war years.

CIO ASKS CRACKDOWN ON BREAD TRUST

THE CIO this week asked the Dept. of Justice to crack down on the bread trust.

CIO cited sharp rises in profits and declared that recent price increases of from 1 to 3c a loaf are unjustified.

Four big companies dominate the baking field, said a statement of the CIO Cost of Living Committee — Continental, General, Ward and Purity. Their 1946 business totalled a third of a billion dollars.

"The chain stores sell the products of these companies, follow their lead on prices, and acquiesce in their domination of the industry," said a Commitee statement by Chairman Jack Thornton.

"THEIR operating profits (before taxes) in 1946 amounted to $31 million and were 55% greater than their wartime profits of $20 million; and 100% greater than their average profits in the six years of 1940 to 1945.

"Net income after taxes in 1946 amounted to $18.7 million and was 137% greater than average net income during the six years 1940 to 1945."

CIO said the firms' profit margins were proportionally higher in January than they were in 1946.

"They are taking advantage of increased wheat prices as an excuse to raise their profit margins to still higher levels." CIO declared.

"MONOPOLY industries make it a general practice to use wage increases as an excuse for the high prices with which they are soaking the public, but the food monopolies seek to make the farmer the scapegoat for their profiteering.

"At January prices, the farmer received only 2½c for the wheat in a pound loaf of white bread. Consumers were paying 12c for a pound loaf in that month. The baking and marketing margin was 9½c, an increase of nearly 20% over the margin received under control in January, 1946.

"If the present wages in the baking industry are 10% higher than the average wage paid in 1946, which is unlikely, the increased labor cost could account for an increase of no more than a fifth of a cent per loaf, even though profits were ample to absorb the higher wages without increasing prices.

"The rise in the price of wheat between January and the peak level reached on March 17 amounted to 1c per pound of bread. The wheat price broke immediately, however, and fell 30c in three days. Increased prices paid for wheat cannot possibly account for more than ½ to ¾c per pound loaf in the cost of flour to the bakers, and probably account for less than that."

NEW BILL WOULD BAR JOB BIAS

A new attack on job discrimination against minority groups has been launched by a two-party group of eight Senators.

The bill, modeled after a New York state statute, is a successor to last year's permanent FEPC proposal, which was pigeonholed last year by a group of southern polltax Democrats.

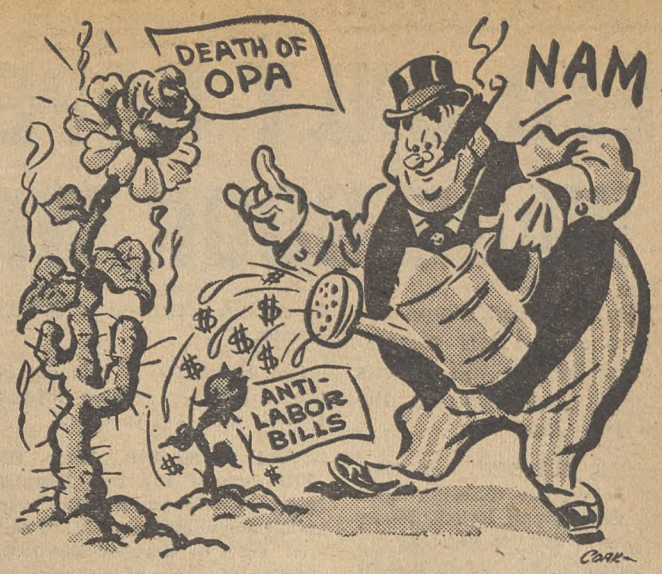
Sen. Irving Ives (R., N. Y.), who introduced the bill and who is author of the New York state law, said the measure would try to avoid legal compulsions to the greatest possible degree.

The bill declares that employment without bias as to race, religion, color, national origin or ancestry is a "civil right of all the people of the U.S."

It sets up a number of categories of illegal employment practices. These include refusal to hire because of race or religion, the use by an employer of a hiring service which practices such discrimination, discrimination practices in labor unions, and discharge of a worker by an employer for filing charges under the bill's provisions.

THE proposed law would authorize a seven-member anti-discrimination commission to be set up by the President. This group could probe accusations of discrimination and seek to use methods of "conference and persuasion" to remedy illegal activities.

Sponsoring the bill, in addition to Ives, are three Republican Senators and four Democrats: Saltonstall (Mass.), Smith (N. J.), Morse (Oreg.), Chavez (N. M.), Murray (Mont.), Myers (Penn.) and Downey (Calif.).



Hooray For Me, To Hell With You

YOU can write off price cut talk as so much malarky. At least that's what the Wall Street Journal admitted this week in a page one story.

Following up Pres. Truman's warning that we'll have inflation if prices aren't cut, the Journal made a nationwide survey of what business intends to do. Substance of it was:

"Washington is primed for immediate price slashing; most of industry is not."

The Journal said that most industrialists agree that lower prices would be desirable—but can't see the possibility of cutting their own.

The Journal realistically reported that Ford and International Harvester price cuts, "paying off in publicity on the front pages of newspapers, are classed as carefully planned strategic moves. They are aimed at capturing not an immediate market but a future market for nationally advertised, nationally sold products."

Noting a Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers press conference on reduction of prices, the Journal added that "none of the corporate executives planning the session had indicated his own firm plans to reduce prices."

300,000 JOBLESS IN N.Y. CITY

THREE hundred thousand N. Y. City residents are receiving unemployment insurance, the Greater N. Y. CIO Council reported this week.

The Council, quoting government and union statistics, said unemployment is at the same level as last year's peak when thousands of veterans were being discharged from the Army.

"Layoffs have been increasing since Dec. 31 and are reflected mostly in shops and plants engaged in the production of consumers goods, and in the retail stores and department stores which distribute this type of merchandise," the Council reported.

"Hardest hit by the lay-offs are those veterans who started new jobs last year. Veterans on unemployment insurance increased from 81,000 last December to 114,000 in February in New York City (an increase of 40%) and increased nationally from 934,000 in December to about 1,500,000 this month (an increase of 60%). Both locally and nationally, these figures fail to include the thousands who have received their full 52 weeks of payment and are still unemployed."

CIO and AFL officials polled by the Council staff give the following reasons for the indicated trend:

1. Unusually long first post-war seasonal lay-offs in industries which normally faced seasonal unemployment in pre-war years.

2. Consumers resistance to purchase of shoddy, low quality merchandise at the highly-inflated prices at which they are offered.

3. Determination of retail and wholesale outlets to empty warehouses full of this type of merchandise without taking a cut in profit. Department stores, for example, are refusing to carry large inventories of new merchandise.

4. A variety of other reasons including material shortages, reconversion, etc.

ANTI-STRIKE BILL OK'D BY DEWEY

A bill providing drastic penalties for public employes in N. Y. State who go on strike was signed this week by Gov. Dewey.

The measure, popularly known as the Condon-Wadlin bill, provides that a public employe who goes on strike will lose his job.

It's Up to Truman

VETO ONLY HOPE TO HALT WAGE-HOUR WRECKING

VETO by Pres. Truman appears as the last remaining possibility to kill serious weakening amendments to the Wage-Hour Act.

The bill, HR 2157, has been passed in slightly differing form by the Senate and House. Minor variations in the two versions are now being worked over by a joint conference committee.

Labeled as a bill to outlaw collection of portal-to-portal damage suits, the measure goes far beyond that objective to hit the ability of workers to collect all sorts of claims under the wage-hour law. It has been branded by CIO as a green-light measure for sweatshoppers and chiseling employers.

That argument was stressed by a number of Senators just before the bill was passed by a 64-24 vote.

Sen. Johnston (D., S. C.), who described his own experience as a youthful textile worker, told the Senate:

"As I see it, this measure only opens the door to taking away from labor everything that it has gained during the past 14 years."

He predicted that other bills, also under misleading names, would be introduced to take away workers' rights, and called for their defeat.

Sen. Lucas (D., Ill.) predicted a Presidential veto. He said that he would have supported a bill against portal suits, but he was unable to understand why the Senate Judiciary Committee had reported a bill covering "so much territory."

Sen. Hatch (D., N. M.) charged the bill "does greater injustice than it attempts to cure."

And liberal Sen. Aiken (R., Vt.)—one of the two Republicans to vote against the crippling amendments—said: "I cannot vote to deprive the little fellow of the only chance he has in the world of collecting the few dollars which may be due him and which mean such a tremendous amount to him."

Aiken and Sen. Langer (N. D.) cast the only GOP votes against the bill. Other members of the Republican liberal bloc — Tobey (N. H.), Morse (Oreg.) and Ives (N. Y.)—voted with the majority.

Before voting on the principal bill, the Senate had also rejected a rather unsatisfactory substitute measure presented by Senators McCarran and McGrath. By a 53-35 margin, that proposal — which endeavored to limit the bill's force generally to past actions—was thrown in the discard heap.

Other liberalizing amendments were also rejected, including one by Sen. Myers (D., Pa.) to increase the wage-hour basic minimum rate from 40 to 60c per hour.

The 35 votes cast in favor of the McCarran-McGrath amendment indicated possibility of success in upholding a veto, if President Truman decides on such a course. A two-thirds vote is necessary to override the President when he refuses to sign a bill passed by Congress.

GOP in Action

CUT TAXES FOR GREEDY, NOT THE NEEDY

A tax bill which gives tremendous benefits to the wealthy, and a small bone to those in middle and low income groups, breezed through the House of Representatives last week on a 273-137 vote.

In terms of percentages, the bill looks like a "break" for low-income families, since it gives a 30% reduction at the bottom of the tax scale, a 20% cut in the next brackets, up to $302,000 a year, and a 10% cut at the top of the economic pyramid. But in dollars, the low-income earners receive very little, and persons earning $200,000 or $300,000 a year get enormous reductions in their tax bill.

The bill, which had originally been introduced by Rep. Knutson (R. Minn.), called for a straight 20% cut up and down the line, but mounting public protest against the kid-gloves treatment of the very rich forced a last-minute GOP concession to nibble a little more off the tax bill of persons receiving $1,395 or less a year.

Even with this window dressing, the bill was seriously criticized. Nine Democrats, forming a minority dissent on the House Ways and Means Committee, described the bill as "economically unsound, inequitable, reckless and untimely."

THE Knutson measure, which will reduce government income by an estimated $5.7 billion, faces heavy going in the Senate and at the White House.

Sec. of the Treasury John Snyder said he would recommend a veto by Pres. Truman, who had urged that there be no reduction in government income for the current year.

CIO's position, forwarded last week to the House Committee, called for increasing exemptions for individual taxpayers and their dependents.

CIO urged heavier corporation taxes, imposition of a 75% excess profits tax, and a tightening of loopholes used by the wealthy to evade tax payments.

Such a shift of the burden from low-income earners to those most able to pay would have involved not a reduction in revenue, CIO declared, but a net increase of 200 million dollars in government receipts.

BACK KENNELLY FOR CHICAGO MAYOR

Endorsement of Martin H. Kennelly, Democratic candidate for mayor of Chicago, was announced this week by a CIO Committee representing unions with a membership of some 200,000.

The decision to support Kennelly, who will run to succeed incumbent Mayor Edward Kelly, was based on four points: Kennelly's fair attitude as an employer, the fact that he recognizes "labor as a responsible and essential segment of our community," a promise to improve the school system, and his endorsement of an FEPC program for minorities.

The committee, recognizing "the right of each member to vote his preference," called on unionists to give serious consideration to Kennelly's progressive position.

Coordinators of the committee are Frank Annunzio of the steelworkers and Maurice McElligott of the Illinois State CIO Council.

THE following table shows the spendable income after tax payments for various groups under House-passed HR. 1 and the present tax law, with the percentage of increase between them.

Net Income	SPENDABLE INCOME Present Law	HR. 1 As Passed	Increase in HR. 1
1,200	1,162	1,173	1.0%

Wage-Hour Vote In Senate

Here is how the Senate voted March 21 on crippling amendments to the Wage-Hour Law (HR 2157). The Senate bill differed slightly from the version passed earlier by the House, and a conference committee is now working out a "compromise" measure. The bill was passed by a vote of 64-24. 46 Republicans and 18 Democrats voted for the measure, 2 Republicans and 22 Democrats against. Sen. Pepper (D. Fla.) and Wagner (D. N.Y.), while not voting, were paired against the bill; Sen. Tydings (D. Md.) and Capehart (R. Ind.) were paired for the bill. Sen. Cordon (R. Ore.), who was absent, indicated he would vote for the bill. Votes cast for the bill to amend the Wage-Hour Act are indicated by a dash; votes against the bill by a plus sign; not voting by a circle.

PRESS HIT -- 'FAILS TO DO JOB'

By FRED d'AVILA

HENRY R. LUCE (Time, Life, Fortune magazines) has poured $200,000 down the drain to get a report from 13 outstanding citizens which says that newspapers, magazines, radio networks, motion picture producers and book publishers have failed miserably in meeting the needs of our society.

The report concludes that freedom of the press is in danger. The word "press" is used in referring to all major agencies of mass communication.

The report says the press is to blame for its own situation and advocates, among other proposals, that government establish its own system of informing the people about its policies when the press fails to do the job.

A study on which the report was based was undertaken by a commission headed by Pres. Robert M. Hutchins of the University of Chicago. Luce's Time Inc. gave $200,000 to finance it and Encyclopedia Britannica Inc. added $15,000.

Serving with Hutchins were: Zechariah Chafee, Jr., John M. Clark, John Dickinson, William E. Hocking, Harold D. Lasswell, Archibald MacLeish, Charles E. Marriam, Reinhold Neibuhr, Robert Redfield, Beardsley Ruml, Arthur M. Schlesinger and George N. Shuster.

Their report — uncontrolled by the people who footed the bill — drew sharp criticism this week from Luce's Fortune magazine.

Luce's pain was caused by frankness like the following on the San Francisco conference of foreign ministers which gave birth to the all-important United Nations charter:

"On many days during the weeks the Conference was in session there was nothing to report. But the reporters had to send in their stories . . .

"The result on the lower levels was a series of personal items modeled after the Hollywood fan magazines and on the higher levels a distorted account of what took place.

"Because drama and tension were demanded by the editorial desks back home, drama and tension were manufactured at San Francisco . . .

"So completely was the task of manufacturing suspense performed that, when after some weeks an acceptable charter was signed, the effect on newspaper readers was one of incredulous surprise."

THE report points out that monopoly control of means of mass communication has shut out the views of the greatest proportion of the people, and that those in control of the press "have engaged from time to time in practices which the society condemns and which, if continued, it will inevitably undertake to regulate or control."

Sharply criticizing the press for twisting news, the report says that "too often the result is meaningless, flatness, distortion, and the perpetuation of misunderstanding among widely scattered groups whose only contact is through these media."

The report declares that freedom of the press is not unlimited—it is accountable to the people.

"The complexity of modern industrial society, the critical world situation, and the new menaces to freedom which these imply mean that the time has come for the press to assume a new public responsibility," the report points out.

"Through concentration of ownership the variety of sources of news and opinion is limited.

"At the same time the insistence of the citizen's need has increased. He is dependent on the quality, proportion and extent of news supply, not only for his personal access to the world of event, thought, and feeling, but also for the materials of his duties as a citizen and judge of public affairs.

"The soundness of his judgment affects the working of the state as a free community.

"Under these circumstances it becomes an imperative question whether the performance of the press can any longer be left to the unregulated initiative of the few who manage it."

Loaded Against Labor

By Federated Press

PUBLIC opinion polls are heavily loaded with an antilabor bias, a study by a Columbia University professor revealed this week. The Gallup poll was found most guilty but in the six other leading polls surveyed it was also concluded that "the odds run strongly against labor."

The study, which appeared in the winter issue of Princeton University's Public Opinion Quarterly, was made by Dr. Arthur Kornhauser, a member of Columbia's Bureau of Applied Research.

Under scrutiny, besides the Gallup poll, were the Elmo Roper Fortune Survey, Opinion Research Corp., Psychological Corp., Natl. Opinion Research Center, the Minnesota Poll and the Iowa Poll.

Examining all labor questions asked by the seven opinion samplers from 1940 to 1945, Kornhauser found that of 155 questions, only eight dealt with positive or favorable aspects of unions, 66 were neutral or doubtful and 81 were concerned with union faults, activities the public condemns or proposed restrictions on unions.

Three-fourths of the Gallup questions and one-third of the other polls' questions, Kornhauser said, were guilty of "directing public attention persistently to the negative side of organized labor."

IN addition to the choice of subject the Columbia expert discovered "four disturbing types of bias" in the wording of questions.

The first type is one which offers a choice between a recognized evil and one particular proposed remedy, "nearly always one opposed by labor." For example, during the war the Gallup poll asked: "Should Congress pass a law forbidding strikes in war industries until the war is over, or should the workers in war industries continue to have the right to go on strike?"

A large majority voted for a law, when actually they were voting against wartime strikes and probably would have been equally favorable to another alternative such as War Labor Board action, Kornhauser pointed out.

HIDDEN assumptions and over-simplifications in questions also create traps. This question asked by the Psychological Corp. was cited: "Do you think that workers should be forced to stay in a union if they want to resign or get out?"

"Naturally the vote is resoundingly against 'forcing' workers to remain in a union against their will," Kornhauser said. "But the question leaves out everything that is important and distinctive about maintenance agreements and

Last is the question with slanted wording becomes a mere caricature of those plans." which makes it especially easy for the respondent to accept the idea asked about. Typical is this lulu asked by the Iowa Poll: "How do you feel about the strikes that are taking place all over the U. S.? Do you think these strikes are right or wrong?"

The question assumes that the nation is crippled by strikes and also ignores the issues that are involved in strikes. The answers were a foregone conclusion.

'Freedom' of the Press

"LET 'EM LEARN it from their butchers," is the motto of the advertising manager of a prominent Boston daily paper.

The poor guy last Fall almost had apoplexy when page one headlines screamed: "Price of Shoes to Double." Some of his best customers are leather manufacturers.

Recently, the wires reported that pork might hit $1 a pound. Taking no chances, the advertising manager shot a quick note to the editorial department:

"Take it easy on any release from John P. Squire's that pork is hitting $1 a pound. No scare heads, please!"

If Bostonians want bad news, they'll have to consult their butchers!

IN A DITHER over CIO statistics this week was the staid Saturday Evening Post, which has been competing with Life magazine for the title of "best weekly red-baiter of the CIO."

The Post headlined a piece by J. A. Livingston with mild chastisement — "The CIO's Prestige Hurt By Dubious Statistics."

Livingston engaged in a statistical tilt with the CIO Dept. of Research & Education over the relation of labor costs to the value of manufactured products. In a detailed reply upholding CIO's position, Research & Education Director Kermit Eby added:

"If the Saturday Evening Post and Mr. Livingston are interested in getting at the whole truth, we ask that they join with us in requesting Congress to appropriate the necessary funds to: (1) conduct up-to-date census of manufacturing, and (2) develop studies on labor costs, material costs and production costs, plant by plant, industry by industry, and for the whole economy. But until such time as additional statistical information is available from government sources, the CIO—or any other organization—has no choice but to continue to rely on existing official government statistics in this field."

Health Fund Appeal

Dedicated to improving mental health and achieving higher standards of treatment in the county's mental hospitals, the Natl. Mental Health Foundation is appealing for funds to carry out its work during the coming year.

"Public apathy is responsible for tragic conditions existing in many of our state mental institutions," the Foundation points out. The Foundation is a non-profit group of citizens seeking to use education and influence to improve the situation in these hospitals.

The Foundation plans a campaign to "mobilize public support to help institutions give better care and treatment to their patients, encourage better legislation, and develop a more sympathetic attitude among the American people to problems of mental illness.

The Foundation has a wide range of low-priced educational material, analyses of state laws and radio scripts available. Membership in the organization costs $1 a year. Headquarters are at 1520 Race Street, Philadelphia 2, Pa.

ASK SHIRER PROBE

THE Federal Communications Commission this week removal of William L. Shirer, was asked to investigate the Columbia Broadcasting System news commentator, from his Sunday afternoon program.

The request came from Jack Kroll, director of the CIO Political Action Committee, who said that CBS admissions indicate that "the broadcasting system itself is responsible for the change."

CBS had denied this, and a spokesman for the J. Walter Thompson ad agency, controlling the account of Shirer's sponsors, said the J. B. Williams Co. wanted to replace the 10-year CBS veteran with a "young voice."

Kroll, however, pointed to Shirer's five-million-strong audience and described him as "a brilliant commentator . . . who does a good job in promoting the advertisements of the paying company."

"In view of the recent firings of so-called liberal commentators," Kroll wrote the FCC, "it appears to me that CBS is part of a conspiracy to shut off the nation's air-waves the commentators desired by the people."

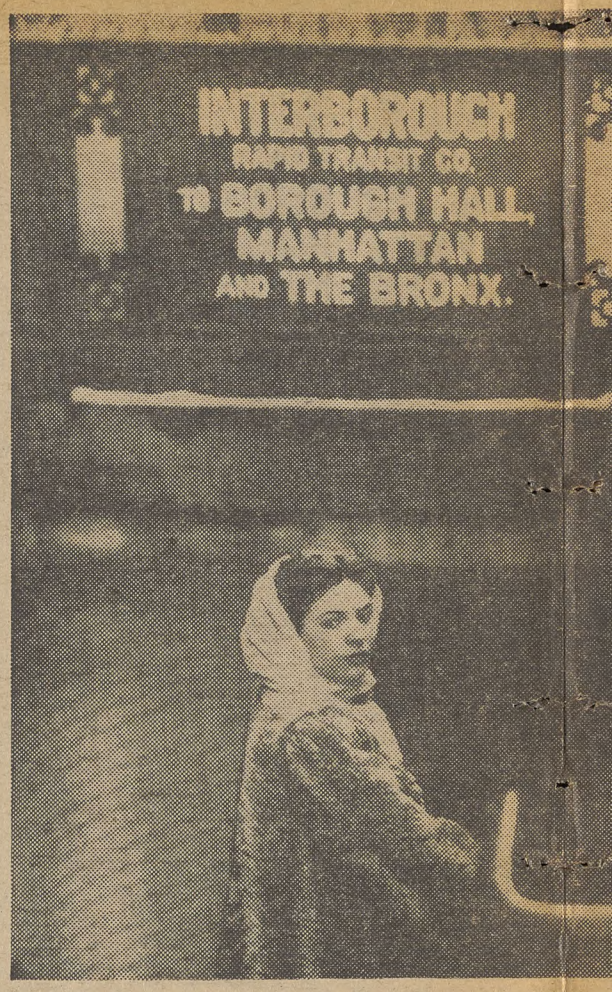
1 Louise Andello works at Namm's, in Brooklyn, N. Y. She is a member of CIO Dept. Store Employes Local 1250. Brooklyn, as everyone knows, is an immense territory. Louise must rise early. She makes $33 a week. Before the union, the job paid $18. "Everyone who needs a union should have it," Louise says flatly, "and we need one."



3 It's a 35-minute subway ride to work, in the second la Brooklyn. Louise's fellow workers used to be "above" Organization was for people who got their hands dirty.

2 Leaving home for a union job is a pleasure, says Louise. One of the first things she liked about the union was that you could be a person. You don't have to worry about the manager. Elevator girls don't have to buy their own uniforms. Asking for a raise used to be "awful". Now, you don't have to ask. It's in the union contract.

4 Louise signs in. She feels lucky that her fellow workers have learned the score—about 12,000 of them in N. Y. City belong to CIO. They've discovered that higher pay, paid holidays, shorter hours, seniority rights and a progressive wage scale are good.

5 Even with the union, some of the customers are still a pain in the neck. The counter is piled a foot deep with blouses that the customer may not buy—and she's still at it. Louise is about to lose her sweet, patient nature. Besides, her feet are tired.

6 Checking in at union headquarters, Louise and friends line up to pay their dues. The union is just two blocks from the store. Besides winning better conditions, and pay, the union provides a counsellor service where workers may take their work problems.

7 Election of union officers is a democratic procedure. Voting is by secret ballot. Louise's friends want her to be a shop steward. "They know I'm not afraid to talk up when I know I'm right. There are so many complaints—maybe I'll do it."

9 After dinner friends drop in. Serious discussion—how independent should a girl be with a fellow? And what would you think of a girl who held your boy friend's hand? L. to r.: Louise Bove, Angela Vertolomo, Louise, and her brother, Tommy.

10 A girl can relax when she's creamed and curled and has her nylons washed. Louise doesn't like the rash of anti-labor legislation or the comment on the radio. "But nothing discourages me. We've got the union well established; our job is to keep it."

RAISE AVERTS RUBBER WALKOUT

LAST - MINUTE agreement at Cleveland on an 11½c hourly wage boost for 110,000 members of the Rubber Workers averted the threat of a nation-wide strike against the Big Four in the rubber industry last weekend.

Settlement came one day before a walkout scheduled to begin at midnight, March 23, in 42 plants of the Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and the U. S. Rubber in 20 states from coast to coast.

The wage increase, retroactive to Feb. 2, represents a compromise on the union's original demand for 26c which it pared down to 16c during negotiations. Refusal of the companies to go above a 10c offer led to the breakdown in talks and announcement of the strike call.

URW Pres. L. S. Buckmaster and other union officials remained in Cleveland, however, declaring they would keep the door open for a settlement right up to the strike deadline. Resumption of talks came late March 22.

Terms of the settlement, which provides an average hourly wage of $1.45½, are expected to apply to thousands of other unionists in smaller rubber plants throughout the country, according to Buckmaster. "Actually, I'm not entirely satisfied with the final settlement," he said. "I had hoped it would be better, but still it probably should be acceptable to most of our people."

Provisions for wage reopening after 120 days from the date of the contract was made in the agreement.

END 328-DAY CHALMERS STRIKE

RATHER than accept what they termed a "sweatshop contract," the members of Local 248, CIO Auto Workers, voted 3 to 1 last weekend to call off their 328-day strike at Allis-Chalmers Co. plant at West Allis, Wis., and to return to work without a settlement.

The company continued its attempts to destroy the union this week, sending telegrams to more than 100 union officers, stewards and active strikers telling them not to return to work until their conduct had been examined and their status determined.

End of the strike was recommended by the local's bargaining committee following a meeting of top union officers with the UAW executive board in Louisville, Ky., last week.

"In going back to work," Local Pres. Robert Buse told a tense union meeting, "we are not surrendering to the Allis-Chalmers Co. We are simply changing the scene of our struggle from the outside to the inside of the plant. We will continue our fight no matter how long it takes until we win the contract we are entitled to and we completely eliminate the danger of sweatshop conditions and company unionism. Then and only then will this strike really be over."

Local 248 retained bargaining rights for the A-C workers Jan. 26 in an election called by the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board on the petition of a company-organized independent union composed of scabs in the plant. Because the race was so close the company refused to resume negotiations with Local 248 and another election will probably be called for before long.

Featured by violent police attacks on picketlines and mass arrests, the strike got underway April 30, 1946, when the company refused to renew 1943 contracts incorporating War Labor Board recommendations and wage increases in line with the national pattern.

The West Allis workers are returning with an 18½c wage hike, which the company has been paying to non-strikers since Aug. 28. Left unsettled are the local's demands for an additional 6½c hourly, a union shop and control of grievance procedure.

Faced with terrific obstacles since the strike began, including arrest of 26 union officers and stewards, police assaults, two anti-picketing injunctions, a bargaining election in the midst of a long strike and one of the nation's worst smear campaigns conducted in the daily press, the union's ranks remained as solid as ever at the strike's end.

CANADIAN UNIONS WARN OF DEPRESSION

FEAR of a depression in Canada unless wages are raised and prices are lowered were stressed recently before the Federal Cabinet for the Dominion by the leaders of the Canadian Congress of Labor consisting mostly of CIO unions.

CCL leaders called for re-establishment of price control, and publicly-subsidized low-rental housing and reduction of home-building costs. The proposed Labor Code was described as "being far from what labor had been led to believe would be proposed as a basis for post-war labor relationships."

Present trends were called a severe threat to the civil right of Canadian citizens.

Labor Minister Mitchell casually brushed off suggestions that the government's policy was headed toward an economic upset, and dragged out the usual declarations about individual freedom. CLC Pres. A. R. Mosher answered:

"You can throw a man off a ship in the middle of the ocean and tell him he has the freedom of the seas, but it doesn't do him any good. If we are to have real democracy, we cannot have absolute freedom."

CLC Sec.-Treas Pat Conroy said the theory that if wages went up prices had to go up just didn't hold water. He pointed out that the most notable price-increases had been in products where there had been no major wage increases, and profits in those industries were high.

He said the country was faced with a condition of expanding production, reduced purchasing power and increasing profits. There had to be a change.

"Otherwise we are heading for the most inglorious days this country has even seen," he added.

If the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and reactionary Congressmen have their way, armed vigilantes such as these will attempt to beat union members into submission. This picture taken in June, 1937, shows Monroe, Mich., vigilantes blocking a road to prevent striking CIO pickets from reaching Newton Steel Co., where an organizing drive was in progress.

CIO BREWERY WORKERS LICKING TEAMSTERS

THE CIO Brewery Workers are successfully fighting off the attacks of the AFL Teamsters on their jurisdiction.

As part of their campaign to add several thousand distributor drivers and inside workers to their ranks in the N. Y. City area, the Brewery Workers this week won an NLRB election in 12 Brooklyn breweries by a vote of 91 to 1 for the Teamsters. Four workers voted no union.

The NLRB this week certified the Brewery Workers as collective bargaining agent for employes in Pittsburgh area breweries over the objection of the Teamsters. TheBrewery Workers last month won an election by a plurality of more than 1,400 over no union. The Teamsters would not even consent to appear on the ballot, despite the fact that the AFL union picketed the breweries.

The Brewery Workers were also confident of winning a series of elections in California, where the Teamsters have convinced the NLRB that they should appear on the ballot as Brewery Workers, AFL.

CLEVELAND COUNCIL OUTWITS 'FREE PRESS' CENSORSHIP

Refused advertising space in Cleveland daily newspapers to tell why the public should protest to Congressmen against anti-labor laws, the Cleveland CIO Council printed leaflets to "get across" its rejected ad copy.

The leaflet used the Heller Committee figures to show how people faced with falling purchasing power were buying less milk and fewer butter, eggs, and stressed that the health and welfare of the American are more important than higher profits.

The Council added that anti-labor laws would not cure these economic ills.

The pamphlet took a crack at the newspapers, stating that the Plain Dealer, the Press and the News during January and February printed a total of 1,375 inches of institutional and opinion ads directed against organized labor but refused the Council's ad.

Bittner Declares

WAR ON NLRB VIOLATORS

DIRECTOR Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee this week instructed his field representatives to "step up the fight" against those who "interfere with the legal and moral right" of workers to form labor unions.

Bittner sent staff members in a dozen Southern states a letter telling them to "use every ounce of your energy to combat those who violate the Natl. Labor Relations Act."

"We're going to step up our fight against those who fire and blacklist textile workers because they join the CIO," the letter said. "We're going to fight hard because there is honor in fighting those who illegally deprive men, women and children of their livelihood.

"We're going to step up our fight against those responsible for physical assaults on 18 of our organizers and local union leaders. If necessary, we'll fight according to rules made by those who oppose us."

Bittner's letter said those who oppose organized labor were responsible for the NLRB having a staff too small to handle union elections and speedily prosecute unfair labor practices charges at the same time.

A LARGE number of Southern manufacturers — particularly those in the textile industry—are "flagrantly violating the National Labor Relations Act," the letter said. "We can expect little redress from the NLRB because those who oppose unions have seen to it that the NLRB staff falls far short of minimum requirements.

"We have been saddled with a lot of anti-labor legislation that is aimed at weakening or destroying unions. We are being fought by a group of men who sometimes preach hate and frequently play on race and religious prejudice. We are being financially squeezed by those who greedily seek larger and larger profits—who push prices higher and higher.

"All of this means that we're back just about where we were before we started leaning so heavily on the government—on our own two feet. And, standing on our own two feet, we're going to fight—and fight hard—in the field for which we're best equipped to do battle—in the field of organizing.

"WE HAVE no time for sitting around and crying about legislation that already has been passed or about false charges made against us. We have time only for the job cut out for us—the job of organizing the unorganized into unions affiliated with the CIO."

Bittner's letter told about 1,000 employes of the Safie Manufacturing Co., Rockingham, N. C., who recently went on strike for three days because management refused to meet with a union committee to discuss the holding of an NLRB election.

"They went back to work only after management agreed to an election, which the CIO won," the letter said.

"That's the kind of spirit that builds unions. And what happened at Rockingham provides a good answer to the question of how to deal with employers who try to abrogate the legal right of their workers to form unions."

Raises and security are the aims of the members of the Book & Magazine Guild of the CIO Office and Professional Workers on strike against Parents' Magazine and its 11 subsidiary publications in N. Y. City. Assistant editors are paid as little as $40 a week. The editorial staff and several other key departments of the publications are on strike.

10,000 PAPERWORKERS WIN 30c PLUS AN HOUR

WAGE boosts amounting to between 30 to 40c since V-J Day have been gained by 10,000 members of the CIO Paperworkers as a result of collective bargaining agreements negotiated in recent weeks.

Twenty-five hundred employes in northern New Jersey paperboard mills won a 10-cent increase, bringing total wage hikes of 38½ cents to 40½ cents an hour since the war's end. Minimum hourly rates now established in these mills are $1.13½ to $1.16½.

A 10-cent increase for the 2,000 employes of the Consolidated Paper Co. at its mills and converting plants at Monroe, Mich., and Aurora, Ill., brings total hourly wage gains to 34c since V-J Day. The newly established minimum is $1.09 for men, in addition to an incentive bonus for most classifications.

The 4,000 employes of the West Virginia Pulp and Paper Co. mills at Covington, Va., Luke, Md., and Williamsburg, Pa., gained 8c hike, bringing total wage increases since the war's end to 30c an hour.

UPA-CIO locals at the Michigan Paper Co., Plainwell, Rex Paper Co., Kalamazoo and Ostego Falls Paper Mills, Ostego, all of Michigan, gained 10c boost, making a total of 31c an hour since V-J Day.

The employes of the Inland Container Corp. plants at Indianapolis, Ind., Evansville, Ind., Middletown, O., and Detroit, Mich., gained a 14c wage boost, bringing the total to 28-30c an hour since the end of the war for those who were UPA-CIO members at that time.

BISHOP FLAYS YWCA IN BROOKLYN STRIKE

A PROTESTANT Episcopal bishop and the treasurer of the World Federation of Democratic Youth this week flayed the Brooklyn YWCA for failure to resume negotiations with the CIO Office and Professional Workers for settlement of the month-old strike of maintenance workers.

Bishop James P. DeWolfe of the Protestant Epicopal Diocese of Long Island said that the firing of seven professional workers, members of the union, because they refused to cross the picket line "cannot help but place the community in a difficult position regarding YWCA."

Miss Frances Damon, treasurer of the World Federation of Democratic Youth, wrote the National YWCA Round-the World Construction Fund, that she was dividing her contribution to the fund with the strikers. She said that the actions of the Brooklyn YWCA directors "run counter to the principles of the YWCA as whole and may endanger support to the Round-the-World YWCA Construction Fund."

CIO the Winnah!

NLRB January figures, issued this week, show the continued ascendancy of the CIO over the AFL in elections.

The total vote for the CIO was 15,160 and for the AFL 10,320. In the 47 elections where both organizations were on the ballot, the CIO wins were 30 with 5,222 votes and the AFL wins were 12 with 4,192 votes.

The CIO won 68% of all elections in which it participated compared to 61% for the AFL.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

NEWS FROM CANADA: It took the CIO Steelworkers just four days to sign up a majority of Steel Company of Canada employees at Hamilton, Ont.; on check-off authorization cards. Prompt responses of the workers to the check-off poll indicates the continued strength of the union in the company where strikebreaking tactics were rampant during the 1946 steel strike.

The CIO Packinghouse has completed a new contract with James Cridland and Sons, Toronto, Ont., meat processors, providing for starting rates of 77½c—an increase of 16c, and a reduction in hours from 48 to 45. Check-off and maintenance of membership clauses are also included.

GUILD VICTORY: By a vote of 48 to 14, editorial employes of the Bureau of Natl. Affairs, Washington, chose the CIO Newspaper Guild as their bargaining agent in an NLRB election. BNA publishes Labor Relations Reporter, Law Week, Daily Labor Report, and Daily Report For Executives.

BETTER SICK LEAVE: Sick leaves with an improved angle were won by members of the CIO Auto Workers in a contract signed by the Carley Trailer & Equipment Co., Atlantic, Ga.

Under the sick leave clause all employes known to be ill or injured will be granted sick leave automatically for the duration of the illness with no interruption of seniority accumulation.

While on such leave the employe will be paid on the basis of one day for each month of service to the company, not exceeding six days. If an employe is not absent during the 12-month period due to injury or illness, such sick leave days as are not used will be paid in the form of a bonus at the end of the year. Six paid holidays were also gained in the new contract.

BOOST AIRLINES PAY

THE CIO Transport Workers this week won a 16c hourly increase for 850 ground workers of the American Overseas Airlines and other improved working conditions through an arbitration award.

The workers also were granted shift premium payments, 12 days annual sick leave, two weeks' notice of layoff, improved upgarding procedures, double time for test hops, and improved vacation, holiday, travel pass and overtime provisions.

Wage increases are retrocative to Jan. 1.

The board which was appointed following breakdown of negotiations last January consisted of Sidney L. Cahn, impartial chairman; union Vice-Pres. Maurice H. Forge, and Emil Jarz, AOA personnel director.

NMU TO STRIKE 19 CAR FERRIES

A strike against four railroad companies operating 19 car ferries on the Great Lakes and the Detroit River was set this week for March 31 by the national council of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union.

The strike threat involves 900 employes of the Wabash railroad, Ann Arbor, Pere Marquette and Grand Trunk & Western railroads. An immediate allocation of funds for pre-strike preparations in the Great Lakes ports was approved by the council.

Negotiations for a new contract have been going on since Sept. 1946. No wage increases are involved. Principal issues include a shorter workweek, improved work rules and liberty time ashore with pay. Carferry seamen are the only Great Lakes maritime workers who are still compelled to work 56 hours a week, while on all other vessels seamen work 48 hours.

Voting an ACA in New York City

On the eve of a NLRB election for Western Union employes in the N. Y. City area, Pres. Joseph Selly of the CIO American Communications Assn. charged this week that the AFL "was playing into the company's hands" by seeking an election at this time.

The CIO union and the AFL were on the ballot for the election which was being held as the CIO News went to press. The ACA's contract expires March 31 and the company has refused to discuss a new agreement pending the election outcome. ACA is asking a 21c hourly wage increase.

PROTEST INDICTMENT OF STRIKERS

A sub-committee of the Citizens Committee to Aid the Phelps Dodge Workers last week called on New Jersey Atty. Gen. Van Riper to protest indictment of 15 members of the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers arrested during the strike at the Elizabeth, N. J., Phelps-Dodge plant last year.

The group also protested the failure of city and state authorities to apprehend the murderer of Mario Russo, a Phelps-Dodge striker. The Rev. Benedetto Pascale of Belleville, N. J., headed the six-man sub-committee, which included two other clergymen.

'Hardly Any Wages, Dam Few Mimbers'

Advocates of the open shop want unions with "hardly any wages and dam few mimbers." This famous old definition makes good reading today.

By FINLEY PETER DUNNE

"What is the open shop? Sure, 'tis where they kape the doors open to accommodate th' c[illegible]nt stream av' min comin' in t' take jobs cheaper than th[illegible] what has th' jobs.

"'Tis like this, Hinnessey. Suppose one av' these free-born citizens is workin' in an open shop for the princely wage av' wan' large iron dollar a day av' tin hours.

"Along comes anither son av' a gun an' he sez t' th' boss, 'Oi could handle th' job nicely f'r ninety cints.' 'Sure,' sez th' boss, and th' wan dollar man gets out into th' crool wuruld t' exercise his inallanable roights as a free-born American citizen an' scab on some other poor divil.

"An' so it goes on, Hinnessey. An' who gits th' binifit? True, it save th' boss money, but he don't care anny more f'r money than he does f'r his roight eye.

"It's all principle wid him. He hates t' see min robbed av' their indipindince, regardless av' anything else."

"But," said Mr. Hinnessey, "these open shop min ye menshun say they are f'r unions iv properly conducted."

"Sure," said Mr. Dooley, "iv properly conducted. An' there ye are. An' how would they have thim conducted? No strikes, no rules, no controls, no scales, hardly any wages, an' dam few mimbers."

Mrs. Lillian Hatcher, above, is a staff member of the CIO Auto Workers' Fair Practices and Anti-Discrimination Dept. which carries on active fights against all forms of race prejudices. At union headquarters in Detroit, Mich., the Department handles cases of discrimination within UAW locals, aids in setting up Fair Practices Committees and works with other community groups on anti-discrimination programs. Mrs. Hatcher is the wife of John Hatcher, chief steward at Chrysler Local 7, and is the mother of three children. She got a job in the automotive industry during the war at the Briggs Connor plant where with the help of the union she was taken on in December, 1942, with a group of Negro women, all of whom were assigned to the same work. She quickly became active in union affairs and took a special interest in problems of Negro workers.

FROM THE DARK AGES

AN outstanding example of the kind of attempts being made by chiseling employers and their spokesmen to beat down state laws for the protection of working women and children was revealed recently at hearings held before the House Industrial Relations Committee of the Ohio State Legislature.

"It was a field day for the plunder-bund," reports the Ohio CIO Council. Witnesses representing the Ohio Chamber of Commerce, Retail Merchants Assn., Restuarant Assn., Telephone and Telegraph companies, etc., professed to find no harm in a 12-hour stretch of work for women and children.

A longer work day, they felt, would keep kids off the streets, prevent juvenile delinquency.

They held that modern times called for modern laws (that is, longer work days for women and children). Organizations which argued for Ohio's women and children were laughingly labeled "do-gooders."

As one woman remarked, it all sounded "like something out of the Dark Ages."

YOUR CHILD'S HOBBY

You seldom hear children who have hobbies say "Gee, there's nothing to do." They're too busy learning more about their special interests, perhaps acquiring new skills, and probably learning to know other youngsters with similar interests. Whether the hobby is model boats, stamps or taking photographs makes little difference—it's having the interest that counts. You can help by alloting necessary space, by giving chances to earn needed money, perhaps by helping to plan a hobby show, but most of all by feeling and showing honest interest.

Sprucing Up

Your Easter Bonnet

By HANNA SHERMAN

WITH Easter almost here a girl's fancy lightly turns to thoughts of her new Spring bonnet. Of all the feminine pepper uppers I know, a new Spring hat will do the most to lift a woman's spirit.

This year the display of hats is more lavish than any we have seen for some time. You'll find hats available in imported and domestic straws, fabrics, felts. You can have them elaborately trimmed, with flowers, bows and feathers, or as simple as grandfather's bowler.

How much you spend for a hat is up to your own strict conscience and your budget. But it should give you delight and it should make you pretty and provocative.

I am of the school that believes your hat should please the man in your life. He may feel called upon to tease you about any new hat you buy, but he should agree that it is becoming and pretty before you decide it's yours. After all, you and I both know whom we dress to please.

YOU should not expect too much from every hat you buy. If it is right with at least one suit or dress and harmonizes with at least one or two others, you're getting your money's worth. If it flatters you outrageously besides, you're getting a real bargain.

Remember that sometimes a hat "makes" a costume and at other times plays an important but definitely supporting role. You should have both kinds in your wardrobe, because your hat can change your whole costume.

You might, for example, wear your simple wool suit with a tailored hat to match and you're somebody's idea of how to dress for business. Or you can wear it with one of those natural colored rough straws with feathers and bows and be the prettiest gal at a party.

In fact, if you'll allow hats their rightful place among your everyday clothes and finery, you'll save money—by giving your basic costumes a different character with the different hats you wear.

ALWAYS make a final decision about a new hat by how it looks when you're standing up. After all, the most important thing about a hat is that it be in proportion to your face and figure. Whatever type hat you choose must be in harmony with the lines of your head and body.

If you're short and plump avoid stodgy broad looking hats. Select one that subtly adds to your height and also slims your face. If you have a long nose by all means shun a downward tilting brim that makes a line parallel with the line of your nose. You will be accentuating a poor feature. I'm always surprized to see how many women do this.

The more your face approaches the perfect oval, the wider your choice of millinery styles. But for the rest of us, remember that no matter what is fashionable, it's not your hat unless it flatters you. You'll want to be the prettiest girl in the Easter Parade. Your new Spring hat should help you do it.

CIO Urges

U. S. PROBE OF TRUSTS

CONGRESS should take immediate steps towards a full-scale probe of mergers of big corporations, a House Judiciary sub-committee was told last week by a CIO union spokesman.

Testifying for the Natl. Maritime Union, Seth Levine, NMU representative in Washington, urged speedy passage of HR 515, which would plug existing loopholes in anti-monopoly laws. The bill was introduced by liberal Rep. Estes Kefauver (D. Tenn.).

"Mergers are the classic means of eliminating competition," Levine said. "We are now in the midst of one of the largest merger movements in our history. Large corporations emerged from the war with enormous liquid funds which they promptly used to acquire their smaller competitors.

"Since 1940 over 1,800 independent competing firms have disappeared as a result of mergers and acquisitions. The value of these concerns is about 5% of the total value of all manufacturing corporations."

The temper of Congress was shown by Rep. Gwynne (R. Iowa) who asked whether labor is a monopoly.

Levine replied that the Clayton Act and the 13th Amendment established the principle that labor is not a commodity to be bought and sold and to consider it as such would be openly to invite wage cutting and a return to the day of the sweat-shop.

"Thus the brave start, under the Clayton Act, toward preventing monopoly in its incipiency has ended in complete frustration," Freer said. "At the same time the Sherman Act has been so construed that it seldom has served to unscramble corporate mergers, no matter how great the size and power of the acquiring or of the consolidated corporation.

"In the International Harvester case, the U. S. Supreme Court did not think such a corporation, constituting from 64 to 85% of an industry, was un unlawful monopoly."

Arguing for his bill, Rep. Kefauver said the control of American business "is steadily being transferred from local communities to a few large cities in which central managers decide the policies and the fate of the far-flung empires they control. Millions of people depend helplessly on their judgment.

"Through monopolistic mergers the people are losing power to direct their own economic welfare. When they lose the power to direct their economic welfare they also lose the means to direct their political future.

THE committee earlier had heard Federal Trade Commissioner R. E. Freer admit that government hands are frequently tied when it seeks to halt the growth of monopoly practices.

Freer told of Consolidated Grocers Corp., which became the largest in its field when it bought out the stock of several smaller firms. FTC, he said, had no power to force the company to get rid of the stock, and the case was dropped by the government.

U. S. HEALTH DEPARTMENT

CIO threw its weight this week behind proposals to create a new Dept. of Health, Education and Security in the federal government, and to put the head of the agency in the President's Cabinet.

At the same time the organization voiced strong disapproval of the Taft-Fulbright bill, a pale shadow of last year's proposal for a national health program.

Stanley Ruttenberg, assistant CIO research director, told a Senate committee that the bill (S. 140) will "invite efforts to dominate Federal programs by those private agencies whose activities we have judged to be anti-social and inimical to the best interests of American wage earners."

He pointed out that American workers have much to gain from any moves to strengthen the government's health program or to increase the power and prestige of its health administrative departments.

ONE phase of the Taft-Fulbright measure which came in for CIO criticism was its provision to limit the posts of the three under-secretaries in such a tri-partite government agency to professional specialists in the particular fields.

"These officials should be representatives of the general public and should hold office to represent the policies of the administration elected by the American people," Ruttenberg said.

THE LINEUP IN CONGRESS

WHERE do important bills stand, three months after opening of the 80th Congress? Here's a brief schedule of the situation on bills of prime importance to labor, as of March 27.

• ANTI-LABOR BILLS. Both Senate and House Labor Committees are preparing reports, due to be filed around mid-April. With hearings completed, work is now going on behind closed doors.

Washington rumors indicate a three-way split in the Senate Labor Committee, among Democrat New Dealers, the Taft-Smith-Ball Republicans, and the Aiken-Morse-Ives Republicans who reputedly favor somewhat "milder" anti-labor proposals. The House Labor Committee will probably "throw the book" at unions.

• RENT CONTROL: Unexpectedly strong support of existing rent controls has caused prolonged delay in anticipated blitzkrieg fomented by the rich real estate lobby and friends in Congress. Senate sub-committee is working over a variety of compromise measures. House Banking Committee is holding hearings on Wolcott "mouse-trap" bill, which goes through motions of continuing rent ceilings but would make enforcement difficult. Action in either branch of Congress unlikely for next couple of weeks.

• HOUSING: -Taft-Ellender-Wagner Bill, introduced in practically same form as a year ago, has been subject of short hearings before Senate Committee. The bill provides for government assistance in long-range program of building low-price homes and slum clearance projects. There's a good chance for passage of bill in Senate during next few weeks, but going may be a lot stiffer in the House. Wolcott bill, now being studied by House Banking Committee, would repeal Patman vet housing program, through which U. S. has kept certain controls and allocations in effect to spur building of low-priced homes.

• TAXES: Rep. Knutson's across-the-board tax-cutting program, which will provide a tremendous windfall for holders of big income, has been passed by House. With Republicans split on some of the less important features of the bill, it may find slow going, and possible major amendments, in the Senate.

• GOVERNMENT FUNDS: House Appropriations Committee has been wielding a sharp axe on funds for government agencies—particularly those of direct benefit to wage-earners. The House has already approved severe cuts in operating funds of Dept. of Labor and NLRB for next fiscal year, which starts July 1. Other agencies may be on receiving end of similar reductions in near future.

• HEALTH PROGRAM: A national health program, as set up in last year's Wagner-Murray-Dingell bill, is out of the picture. CIO is fighting Taft-Fulbright, a limited "charity" measure. CIO is supporting Aiken bill (S. 712) for creation of a U. S. department—with cabinet status—of health, education and security. Little chance is seen of immediate action on these measures.

• ANTI-POLLTAX: Bills are still bottled in House and Senate committees, with no hearings yet ordered.

HIT GREEK SHIP TRANSFERS

Charges that Greek shipowners are buying American ships and registering them under the flag of Panama—in an effort to skip taxes in their own country—were brought to the House Foreign Affairs Committee last week.

Hoyt Haddock, secretary of the CIO Maritime Committee, wrote the committee that the American public has a right to know all the facts before "one cent" of U. S. aid is given the Greek government.

Purpose of the transfers, he said, "is to evade the payment of taxes to the Greek government, and to depress safety at sea and maritime labor standards. The eventual effect is a chaotic shipping industry with disastrous effects on the American merchant marine."

Wall Street Happy

IT'S '29 ALL OVER AGAIN

By Federated Press

THE astronomical profits piled up by American industry in 1946 were revealed in two separate surveys by Wall Street sources this week.

Barron's, national business and financial weekly, reported that earnings on the Dow-Jones industrial average last year rose to the highest level since the figures were first computed in 1929. Helping industry to achieve the 18-year high were tax kickbacks from the government, Barron's said.

The Dow-Jones industrial average for 1946 was $13.60 compared with $10.56 in 1945, $10.07 in 1944 and the record high figure of $19.94 in 1929. Dividends on the industrial average last year were $750 compared with $6.69 in 1945 and $6.57 in 1944.

FROM the Wall Street Journal came a report that earnings of American industry as a whole in 1946 far exceeded those of the previous year. The findings were based on the Journal's compilation of 1946 earnings reported by 340 companies in 21 different industries.

Total earnings of the 340 companies surveyed were $2,430,286,232 in 1946 compared to $1,812,905,953 the year before, an increase of 34%.

End of price controls and elimination of war time excess profits taxes were responsible for the high industry earnings, the Journal said. Here is a partial table showing the earnings trend of the major industrial groups:

MONOPOLY CALLED MAJOR ENEMY OF FREEDOM

THE major enemy of American freedom is the growth of industrial monopoly.

The charge was made last week before a Senate Judiciary subcommittee by Sen. Joseph O'Mahoney (D. Wyo.), author of a bill (S. 104) to block corporation mergers through the purchase of assets of one company by another.

The bill, together with a companion measure (HR 515) introduced in the House by Rep. Kefauver (D. Tenn.), seeks to plug loopholes in the Clayton anti-trust act of 1914. That law prohibits purchase of a competitor's stock, but not his assets.

The O'Mahoney-Kefauver proposals would prohibit such deals when they "substantially lessen competition, restrain commerce . . . or tend to create a monopoly in any line of commerce"

THE Federal Trade Commission, set up to enforce federal anti-monopoly laws, has been powerless to check monopoly growth because of this loophole. It has asked Congress annually since 1927 to do something about it.

"If the Senate judiciary committee and Congress don't plug this loophole," O'Mahoney said, "we can't hope to preserve local self-government and small business." He said there was "no sense in making loans to foreign governments to save democracy, if we permit democracy to be lost here."

Those who cry about big labor unions and centralized government, he said, had better recognize they are twins born of Big Business which grew through mergers. We permit monopoly to advertise itself in the papers as free enterprise. "What's so free about it?" he demanded, banging the committee table.

Sen. Ferguson (R. Mich.) joined with Langer (R. N. D.) to complain that "criminal statutes under the anti-trust laws . . . have never been enforced."

"You can't call it effective if you let a monopoly operate for 10 years and then fine them $5,000," the Michigan senator declared. He added that "I've seen very little evidence of really using the trust-busting laws we have."

Correction

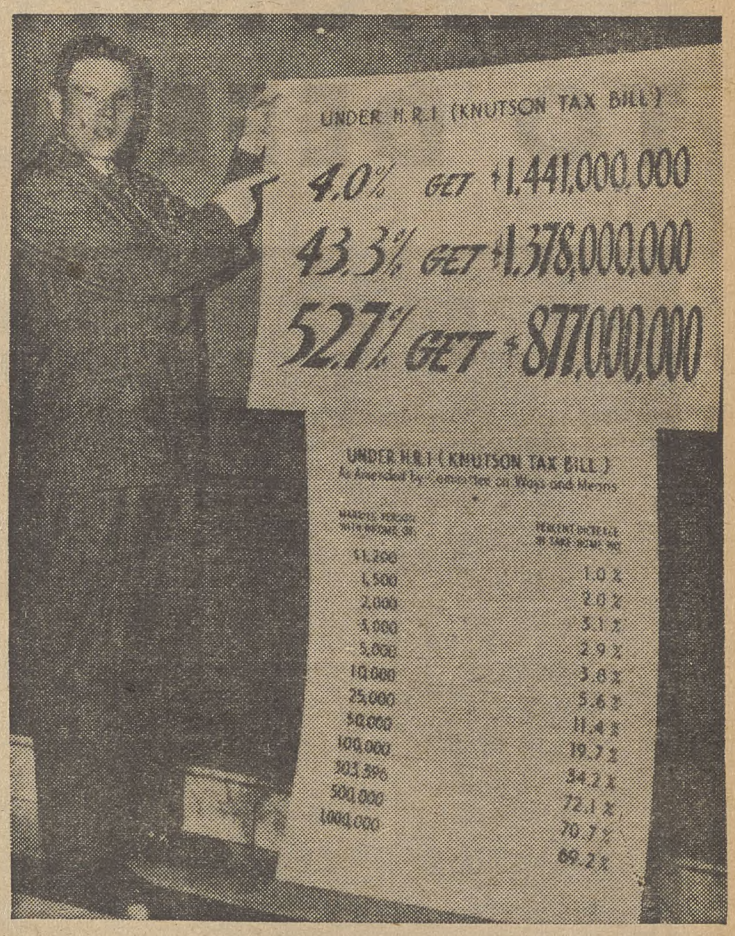
The CIO NEWS last week said that a member of the Natl. Maritime Union was responsible for six petitions against anti-labor laws from American ships icebound in Sweden.

The man who started the petition drive, Montrey S. Maxwell, is a member of the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards. We regret the error.

'Nuts' to the People . . .

Mighty pleased over the Republican Party's tax bill is Rep. Harold Knutson (R. Minn.). As chairman of the House Ways & Means Committee, he refused to let CIO testify against the bill. Just what GOP tax "reduction" means is shown below.

. . . Says GOP Tax Plan



Unfair to low-income groups—that's what Rep. Albert Gore (D. Tenn.) says of the GOP tax bill. Under the bill, which now goes to the Senate, a man with $2,000 a year income has his spendable portion increased by 3% while a man with $500,000 a year has his spendable portion increased by 70%.

PRICES OUTSTRIP WAGES

PRICES have risen a third higher than average factory wages in the last year, the Bureau of Labor Statistics reported this week. Wages increased 14% on a weekly basis and prices paid by moderate income families in large cities jumped 18%.

A preliminary BLS report on average earnings for last February showed all factory workers getting $46.79 a week. Breaking this down, BLS reported that the average durable goods worker get $49.17 a week and the non-durable goods worker $44.30.

While food prices dropped slightly between January and February, clothing prices advanced for the 44th consecutive month, rising 1.1%. Clothing prices have risen nearly 80% since August, 1939.

Higher February prices were reported for cotton house dresses, rayon dresses, hosiery and women's undergarments, reflecting early manufacturers' price rises. Price of men's suits, topcoats and work clothes also rose in most cities.

NATIONAL RALLY AGAINST ANTI-LABOR BILLS

A NATIONWIDE rally of CIO leadership forces will be held in Washington April 13 to help stem the tide of anti-labor legislation.

The rally was called by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, who warned that "the anti-labor legislation now pending in Congress represents a most serious threat to the future of the American labor movement."

"The conference," he said, "will hear a review of the current legislative situation with regard to the anti-labor bills, give reports on CIO activities throughout the country, and discuss ways and means of further implementing the CIO legislative program against anti-labor legislation and for legislation to meet the basic needs of our people."

The meeting will convene in the Congressional Room of the Hotel Willard at 10:30 A. M., April 13, with an estimated 250 CIO officials in attendance.

National unions will send delegates in proportion to the number of delegates permitted at CIO conventions, with the maximum nine from any union. State and major city CIO councils will be represented by one delegate apiece. Regional CIO directors will attend.

"I am hopeful," Murray said, "that the delegates who attend this conference will plan to stay in Washington through Monday, April 14, in order to participate in appointments with Congressmen arranged by the CIO Legislative Dept."

SUPPLEMENTING the meeting, CIO Legislative Director Cowan announced that he and Director Brophy of the CIO Council Dept. have planned a series of delegations to Congress starting April 17.

In a letter to international union presidents, regional directors and state CIO councils, Cowan asked officials to plan representation of delegates "on as wide a geographic basis as possible in addition to including representation from unions according to numerical strength in the state."

Cowan said these meetings should undertake the following program:

- Letters should be sent to Representatives and Senators requesting appointments. Senators should be asked to obtain a meeting room in the Senate Office Bldg. where they can meet with delegations for at least an hour.
- Names and addresses of delegates should be sent to Cowan at national CIO headquarters as soon as possible so that he will know which Congressional districts will be represented.
- Each state should designate a chairman for its delegation, to act as liaison to Cowan.
- Groups should arrange for advance publicity in their local papers.
- Delegates should bring with them petitions signed in the shops and other evidence of community-wide support against the anti-labor bills.

CIO HITS INJUNCTION BILL AIMED AT PHONE UNION

THE latest product to come off the House Labor Committee's anti-union assembly line brought some bristling criticism from CIO.

"Blatant and open interference in a labor dispute on the side of employers," was the comment of Allan S. Haywood, vice-president and director of organization, as the House group gave its okay to a proposal of Rep. Fred Hartley (R. N. J.) to encourage federal injunctions in case of a threatened telephone strike.

The bill, aimed squarely at the independent Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers, was rushed out of the Labor Committee with a 16-3 vote. Reps. Lesinski (D. Mich.), Madden (D. Ind,) and Kennedy (D. Mass.) cast the dissenting votes.

Action on the bill, described as a temporary measure, now rests with the House Rules Committee. With a telephone deadline slated for April 7, it seemed unlikely that the bill could pass in time to give the government special power unless a strike of long duration were to develop.

HAYWOOD charged that the bill "mocks the traditions which have made this a free country"; "junks the bitterly won and sorely needed protections" of the Norris-LaGuardia anti-injunction law; and "disregards constitutional bulwarks set up to safeguard the freedom of all."

He charged that the bill would compel phone company employes to "work under unfair conditions without any redress whatsoever. Every clause, every phrase of the bill is directed toward compulsion of the employes."

Noting that no similar action is directed against the employer, Haywood said:

"Here is a bill which under the hypocritical pretense of resolving industrial disputes sanctions exploitation and glorifies industrial autocracy."

The measure violates a fundamental belief that "our government must never become an instrument for oppressing or enslaving a particular group for the advantage and profit of another," Haywood declared.

While rushing through the phone injunction bill, the Labor Committee was still at work on its long-range anti-labor proposals.

Both House and Senate committees are expected to report out their brain children sometime during the second half of April. Many rumors but few facts surround the two committees' deliberations.

Democracy—GOP Brand

GOP members of the House Labor Committee put on a great show of concern about democracy in labor unions—but they don't seem to be practicing what they preach.

Democratic minority members of the committee complained last week that they are frequently not consulted about committee activities.

Rep. John Lesinski (D. Mich.), ranking Democrat on the group, said none of the committee's Democrats "attended any meeting or knew of the press release" in which Chairman Hartley (R. N. J.) announced the committee would press for laws to grant injunctions in case of a phone strike.

He noted that Hartley's press statement said the move "already had approval from the majority of the members of the committee."

Lesinski charged that the committee's "Republicans have inaugurated a new policy by eliminating the two-party stystem and are holding meetings of the Republican members only . . .

"We take this opportunity to disassociate ourselves from these views (on phone strike laws) and to express our regret that the House Labor Committee should have been injected in the manner in which it was by Chairman Hartley for the exceedingly dubious purpose of forcing a labor organization to yield on the employer's terms."

Union Shop Called Adult Bargaining

THE country is going to be spared a lot of headaches in coming weeks if the Senate Labor Committee pays any attention to the words of a scholarly priest from the State of Washington.

REV. J. L. TONER

He is Rev. Jerome L. Toner, professor of labor relations at St. Martin's College in Lacey, Wash., and author of "The Closed Shop"—one of the few books on the complex subject.

He told the Senate Committee: the closed shop is no devil with horns but a logical development of traditional labor practices in the English-speaking world.

"Much confusion and harm has come to collective bargaining and industrial relations because the public does not understand fully the meaning and significance of the definition and operation of the closed shop," Rev. Toner told the committee.

"Fundamentally, the closed shop is nothing more or less than the policy adopted by one group of employes who, having formed themselves into a union, refuse to work with any other employe or group of employes who refuse to join and remain members of their union."

Collective bargaining, like humans, progresses from babyhood to boyhood to maturity—and in the final stage, the Committee was told, the closed shop is accepted as normal.

But "some of our collective bargaining is still babyish, and the rest is in the boyhood stage, where we fight over the closed shop issue," he pointed out.

IN OTHER nations with traditions similar to those of the United States, the closed shop is nothing to cause big businessmen to lose a night's sleep. In New Zealand, said the Rev. Toner, "it is strongly encouraged and sometimes enforced by law; in Australia . . . it is enforced by law." Canadian statutes and courts "permit and uphold the closed shop", while Great Britain has accepted the closed shop "for nearly 1200 years"—since the days of medieval craftsmen's guilds.

When the British Trade Disputes Act was passed in 1926, with many restrictions on union activity, "Parliament knew that thousands of years of labor time had been lost in attempting to enforce closed shop prohibition."

The U. S. Congress, Rev. Toner told the committee, "should have more substantial evidence before it outlaws an institution which has served so mutually well in nearly every collective bargaining nation in the world. Naturally, all the sins of unionism will be charged against the closed shop, when most should be charged against individuals and abuses of the closed shop."

Schwellenbach to Truman

VETO 'DEATH SENTENCE' OF WAGE-HOUR LAW

WHETHER the wage-hour law should be buried six or eight feet under was a matter of serious debate last week in the Senate-House joint conference committee.

Both branches of Congress have already passed versions of the bill, publicly proclaimed as directed at portal-portal suits but actually containing dynamite to cripple enforcement of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

On the basis of the votes in Senate and House, it appears likely that the product of the conference committee meetings will quickly be passed, and that hope of preserving the wage-hour law lies in a Presidential veto.

Meanwhile, Sec. of Labor Schwellenbach reviewed the difficulties of enforcing the wage-hour law which the bill would produce, and told a press conference he is asking Pres. Truman to veto the measure.

The Natl. Lawyers Guild has called for a veto. Robert Kenny, Guild president and former attorney-general of California, wrote to Pres. Truman that "in our opinion it is one of the most atrocious acts of Congress that we have examined."

On the surface, Kenny declared, it seems to be a "bungling, wordy, complicated statute"; actually, however, it contains "clear language" that will create havoc and confusion in enforcement of wage-hour provisions and cause a break-down of the enforcement machinery.

TOOT YOUR HORN, FOLKS!

CONGRESS has been hearing a lot from the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, the Chamber of Commerce, the publishers and big business interests generally on the subject of anti-union legislation. It's time it heard from the people.

A campaign has long been under way in the press to convince Congress that the American people are demanding laws to undermine unions and weaken the workers' bargaining power.

This campaign has not been confined to editorials demanding action against labor and to playing up the vast output of anti-union propaganda from reactionary sources. It has also found one of its most effective expressions in so-called public opinion polls.

A recent study by Dr. Arthur Kornhauser of Columbia University's Bureau of Applied Research, appearing in Princeton's Public Opinion Quarterly, confirms labor's long-felt impression that most public opinion polls are heavily loaded with anti-labor bias.

DR. KORNHAUSER examined all labor questions asked by seven leading opinion polls from 1940 to 1945. He found that of 155 questions, only eight dealt with positive or favorable aspects of unions, 66 were neutral or doubtful, and 81 were concerned with union faults, activities the public condemns or proposed restrictions on unions.

Three-fourths of the Gallup poll questions and one-third of those of the other opinion samplers were found to be guilty of "directing public attention persistently to the negative side of organized labor."

The study reveals many different ways in which questions are "loaded" to produce the results desired by the publishers and other big business interests—results which are still further turned against labor by faulty interpretation.

"Search as one will, he can scarcely discover any instance of pro-labor loading," Kornhauser says, or of corresponding questions aimed at bringing out the faults of big business.

EVEN MORE than the obvious and flamboyant anti-labor propaganda that fills the press and radio, such biased opinion polls help to create a false impression that the public is out for labor's scalp.

Any politician who wishes to get re-elected will want some evidence that legislation he is asked to back has the support of a substantial proportion of the voters.

Big business therefore has concentrated on every possible trick and pressure to convince members of the Congress that there is a big popular demand for anti-union legislation.

IT IS more than time that Congress heard more from the people themselves—from the ordinary Americans who work for a living, and who certainly don't want their living standards reduced by the union-busting and wage-cutting legislation that is being so vigorously pushed in Congress.

We, the people, don't have the multi-million slush and propaganda funds of big business. We don't have chains of papers and million-circulation magazines. We don't have opinion polls for the manufacture of false impressions of public opinion.

But we do have our voices and our votes; and we do represent the majority of Americans who want labor and democratic rights preserved and rising living standards—not a putsch against the people for the greater profits of big business.

So, in this Defend Labor Month, the CIO calls on all Americans to make their voices heard, to toot their horn, to flood Congress with wires and letters against the anti-labor drive, and to leave it in no doubt as to what the real people really think.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

A LONG DRAWN, piercing woman's shriek awoke me. I tumbled out of bed to hear a grim voice hissing, "You shall die!"

Then the very same shriek sounded through the house again.

I was at the banisters by now, looking down on little golden-haired Shirley standing by the phonograph in her pajamas.

She smiled up at me, the light of purest innocence shining from her blue eyes. "That's my favorite record," she said.

THE DAY before had been Shirley's seventh birthday. Among her gifts was a record of songs and music from the opera, "Carmen."

To our alarm, we found it included the episode of Carmen's murder by her jealous lover. We tried to distract Shirley's attention from it, but without success.

The shriek fascinated her, without alarming her in the least. Each chance she got thereafter she would put the record on just for the shriek, playing that part over and over again, despite all our objections.

Not wanting to take away her birthday record, we consoled ourselves with the thought she would soon break it—until we discovered the record was made of unbreakable plastic!

SO OUR house has since resounded with Carmen's dying shriek, repeated so often that it has lost all terror and become just an irritation to the ear-drums.

It has become like a Hearst press red-scare headline, like another un-American committee "exposure," like another blast against unions from the House labor committee, like another column by Pegler, like another labor-baiting magazine article.

Some of the boys on the Hill and in the press never tire of playing the same record over and over again, and the same part of the same record always makes exactly the same headlines each time it is played.

AMERICAN "free enterprise," the profit-system, "all we hold dear," have been threatened again and again over the years by the same "villain" under various aliases—the "socialistic New Deal," "that man in the White House," the CIO, "subversive labor elements," "union excesses," etc.

Each time comes the same phony shriek from the same hyperthyroid prima donna.

The record must certainly be of unbreakable plastic, it has been played so often without cracking.

Particularly at election times, during wage movements or strikes and when anti-union legislation is pending, the same part of the same record is played over and over again with hardly a pause.

THE PURPOSE of this, as of other dramatic performances, is to stimulate the emotions of fear and hate and to furnish release from the humdrum realities of daily life.

The record-players hope to create an emotional frenzy in the American people, during which they will think only of the fictitious villain and forget their practical interests.

The deafening of the audience's ears by the soprano's shrieks is designed to distract attention from the real dirty work going on behind the scenes.

DURING the last elections, this melodramatic record was played over and over again to create a false emotional association between the imaginary villain and the real-life progressive candidates whom the record-players wished to defeat.

So pleased were the tories with their success that they are now putting on repeat performances, to eliminate such public servants as David Lilienthal, Edgar Warren and anyone else whom they may accuse of having a New Dealish tint.

But, above all, the record is now being repeated again and again to deaden the people's perceptions to the plot under way against their wages, their unions and their basic liberties.

THE PRESENT shrieking propaganda should be a warning signal to every intelligent American—to be on guard, to be clear-headed, to keep emotions in check, and to defend his bread-and-butter interests and his democratic rights.

One of the purposes of the CIO's Defend Labor Month is to cut through the fog of phony propaganda, and to arouse the American people to the real dangers involved in the present legislative drive against labor.

UAW Warning

RED HUNT HITS ALL LABOR

CHARGES made before the House un-American Committee by Gov. Kim Sigler of Michigan that three leaders of the CIO auto union "are captives of the Communist Party" last week brought strong denials and countercharges from the UAW-CIO.

Appearing as a witness before the committee, Sigler used his forum to attack Vice-Presidents R. J. Thomas and Richard Leonard, and Sec.-Treas. George Addes, as well as to accuse a score or more of Michigan organizations—some of them long defunct—as Communist-dominated.

Walter Reuther, UAW president, immediately charged that Sigler's testimony concerning the union officials was "an attack upon the entire UAW-CIO and the American labor movement."

Speaking before the union's national Ford Conference, Reuther said that "it is a part of the current all-out drive which organized reaction has launched against labor and liberal forces in this country."

Reuther noted that profits are up, purchasing power down. Rather than meet these problems, reactionaries "have launched a red hunt whose ultimate victims are intended to be, not Communists, but all effective labor leaders and labor unions."

ADDES, in a radio address, said that Sigler's statements were "consciously designed as a blow against the workers whom we are privileged to represent, the UAW-CIO and against all organized labor."

He charged that Sigler is seeking to repay political debts to the anti-labor employers who placed him in office—"by weakening the union on the eve of its most critical wage negotiations.

"The thousands of dollars spent by the anti-labor employers of Michigan to elect Sigler will return to them with compound interest if Sigler's tactics succeed in their purpose of defeating the workers in their attempt to gain justified wage increases."

In Washington, meanwhile, the un-American Committee received an additional $50,000 to carry out its activities. The money was granted without a single dissenting vote in Congress.

Earlier, Rep. Rankin (D. Miss.), leading Democratic member of the un-American group, had tangled vigorously with Rep. Sabbath (D. Ill.), 81-year-old leading liberal member of the House.

In the course of a typical speech, Rankin urged the nation "to make peace with the German people and line them upon our side" for a world-wide war on communism.

Sabath commented that Rankin had "let the cat out of the bag. I always suspected that he followed the teachings of Hitler," Sabath said of the union-hating, red-baiting Mississippian, "and that his views and his red scares were identical with those Nazis who cost the world 20 million lives and such suffering and agony and destruction as many generations shall not erase. Today's statement confirms my suspicion."

Angered, Rankin steam-rollered the House into removing Rep. Sabath's remarks from the record!

CHICAGO VICTOR BACKED BY CIO

COL. ROBERT R. McCORMICK and his labor hating sheet, The Chicago Tribune, received a sound spanking from Chicago voters when his candidate for mayor, Russell Root, was overwhelmingly defeated by Democratic nominee Martin H. Kennelly.

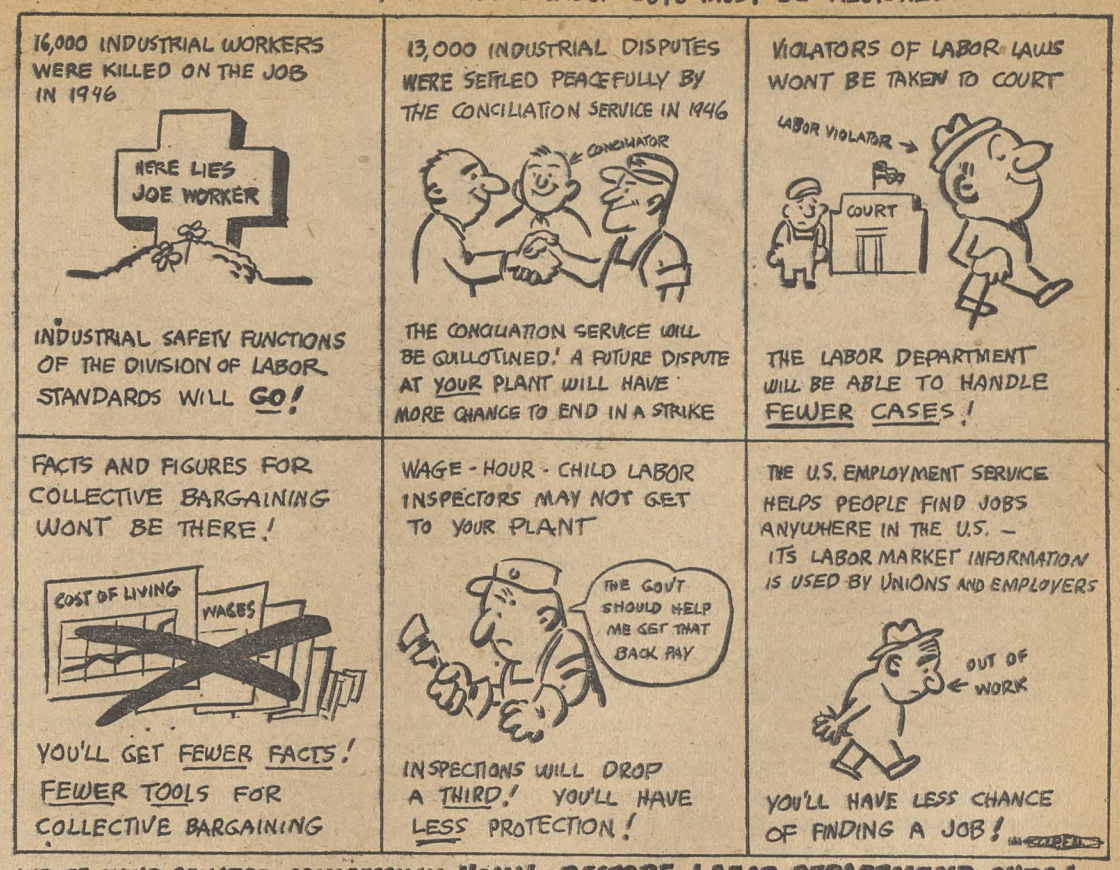
Backed by a strongly united CIO, Kennelly swamped his opponent by a more than 273,000 plurality.

The tragic Centralia mine disaster contributed to Root's defeat by exposing the graft and incompetence of the Republican administration in downstate Illinois.

Strongly backed by the Tribune, Root's campaign was distinguished for its mud-slinging and noncommittal position on labor.

Just what a weary world needs on page five of any newspaper. Co-winners of a N. Y. City contest for "Miss Trade Union Pin-up of 1947" were: Connie Carter (second from right) from UE-CIO Local 430, and Pat Randall (left) from UOPWA-CIO Local 20. The judges were from the Artists League of America.

IF TABER WINS — WHY THE HOUSE LABOR CUTS MUST BE RESTORED



WRITE YOUR SENATOR-CONGRESSMAN NOW! RESTORE LABOR DEPARTMENT CUTS!

CRIPPLED BUDGET BILL WEAKENS LABOR DEPT.

IS it "economy" to run the government on a budget far below the needs of the people?

That question was being asked of the Senate from a dozen sources this week, as the Labor Dept.-Federal Security appropriation bill moved into the Senate Appropriations Committee. The House has already has voted deep slashes in the funds of the Labor Dept. and the Natl. Labor Relations Board for the next fiscal year.

Under the House bill, the NLRB suffered a 10% cut from its funds for 1946-47 and a 40% cut in the Budget Bureau's recommendation for next year.

The Labor Dept. was denied funds for some 100 top persons in the Conciliation Service; the Bureau of Labor Statistics was deprived of a substantial portion of its appropriation; the Wage-Hour Division and Division of Labor Standards were badly hacked; and the department's program for supervising and keeping uniform the policies and practices of the state-operated U. S. Employment Service was eliminated.

RESTORATION of full appropriations sought by the Dept. of Labor and the NLRB was "earnestly requested" of the Senate by CIO Pres. Philip Murray.

In a letter to five Senators, he expressed bitter criticism of cuts in the funds of the two agencies which were voted last week by the House.

The CIO president said that if the reduced appropriations were accepted by the Senate, the Bureau of Labor Statistics would become practically "extinct" and that the NLRB would be "reduced to complete and utter impotence."

He asserted that in whittling funds of the Conciliation Service on the basis of "flimsy claims" against Edgar Warren, Conciliation Service Director, the House "abandoned all pretense of democratic procedure."

In a second letter, addressed to Reps. Joseph W. Martin, Jr. (R. Mass.), Charles Halleck (R. Indiana) and Samuel Rayburn (D. Texas), Murray urged granting of sufficient funds to the NLRB through a deficiency appropriation to permit that agency to carry on its work without undue delay in the processing of cases.

A warning that the Republicans in the Senate should reverse the action of their party brothers in the House was sounded by Sen. Wayne Morse (R. Ore.).

"We Republicans will be hard put in the 1948 to justify that type of Republican program," Morse, a member of the GOP's liberal wing, declared in a reference to the so-called economy cuts.

Referring to the cut in the USES appropriation, Morse said:

"This is not true economy, of the sort the Republican party is pledged to achieve. It is economy on a binge, false economy, dictated not by prudent expenditure of taxpayers' money but by a penny wise and pound foolish policy once more being proposed by Republican leadership.

"As a Republican, I want no part of the responsibility for economy at any price, such as is displayed in the 77% cut in the budget of the U. S. Employment Service."

If the GOP makes many mistakes such as this, Morse continued, "I will have a hard time trying to convince a labor audience why it should vote for the Republican party."

SEC. of Labor Schwellenbach has already filed an appeal from the House action with the Senate Appropriations Committee. Hearings before a sub-committee headed by Sen. Knowland (R. Calif.) open April 7.

"The reductions proposed by the House will curtail and in many instances eliminate established functions and services of proved usefulness to the public, to labor and to business managements," Schwellenbach declared.

The $13,714,500 cut voted by the House represents a 43% slash in the Department's operating funds, which the Budget Bureau recommended should be set at $31,850,700. The much larger sum of $71 million which the House left intact is used entirely for grants to the various states for operation of state and local employment services and other similar functions.

The Bureau of Labor Statistics will be badly crippled by the cuts, Schwellenbach pointed out. The national consumer price index—widely used in collective bargaining—would be issued quarterly, rather than monthly. Retail food price indexes, now compiled for 56 cities each month, would be limited to 34 cities on a quarterly basis.

FIGHT LABOR DEPT. CUTS

THREATENED with lay-offs running into the thousands, the CIO Public Workers Union has launched a large-scale drive to stop cuts in the Dept. of Labor budget, as approved by the House.

An estimated 2,700 staff employes of the Labor Dept. face unemployment if the Senate upholds the House action.

Both regional and local offices of the UPW set the campaign into motion. A mass meeting of Labor Dept. employes proposed a wide-scale leaflet campaign and presentation to Congressmen and Senators of the effect of the budget cuts.

CIO MAINTAINS:

U. S. SHOULD SET EXAMPLE BY BAN ON JOB BIAS

THE fight to place the strength of the law against racial discrimination in jobs took on added speed last week.

In Congress, new anti-bias bills were introduced in both Senate and House under bi-partisan sponsorship.

Meanwhile the President's Civil Rights Committee heard testimony from two CIO officials urging the government to set a good example by establishing a fair employment practices committee to cover all government agencies.

The new anti-discrimination bill introduced by eight Senators (S. 984) and by Reps. Fulton (R. Pa.) and Norton (D. N. J.) drew immediate support from the Nat. Council for a Permanent FEPC.

"Enactment during the first session of the 80th Congress of this bill . . . is urgent as a major item of both domestic and foreign policy," the committee said.

Members of the Committee's board include CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Sec-Treas. James B. Carey and Pres. Willard Townsend of the Transport Service Employes.

The foreign affairs angle to anti-discrimination bills was noted by the committee. It quoted from a recent statement by Under-Secretary of State Dean Acheson that bias against minority groups in the U. S. "is a handicap in our relations with other countries."

APPEARING before Pres. Truman's civil rights group to urge the government to take the first step against bias were George Weaver, director of the CIO Committee to Abolish Discrimination; and Vice-Pres. Thomas Richardson of the CIO Public Workers.

The statement cited the final report of the now-extinct wartime Fair Employment Practices Commission to show that job bias has been increasing rapidly.

Such a development, the statement said, "is a bitter mockery to hundreds of thousands of veterans throughout the country, including Negroes, Jews, Catholics, Protestants, Spanish-speaking Americans, and others".

The committee said that action already taken in New York, New Jersey and Massachusetts "is all to the good," but that federal legislation is necessary to make anti-discrimination programs effective on a national basis.

Weaver said that Pres. Truman should set up by executive order an FEPC jurisdiction over the executive agencies of government, which in many instances "set an unhealthy example for American industry to follow."

Richardson told the Presidential commitee that discrimination in government service against minority groups—and especially Negroes — "has reached serious and alarming levels."

Employment of Negroes in government service rose from 40,000 to 300,000 during the war, with 50% of these being engaged in professional or clerical services by 1944, he said. Such gains, he charged, are now being wiped out, since Negroes laid off in contracting war agencies find that old-line government branches "are continuing to practice vicious discrimination against hiring of Negroes."

Have You Met This Fellow?

He's the Prudential man — the family security representative who calls regularly to service the life insurance and life insurance needs of many families in your neighborhood.

He's a friendly chap, and he's proud of his work. You see, he knows what life insurance means in human terms. He's seen it keep homes together, educate children and bring enjoyment in retirement years.

So when he calls on you, listen to what he has to say. And should he appear just a little bit persistent, remember, won't you, that there may come a day when your wife and children will be glad he was — and thankful that you listened and acted on his advice.

Job Training Wins OK

SO FAR the way is clear for continuation of unemployment allotments and for on-the-job training and education subsistence payments for veterans.

This has been possible by the restoration of the $350 million cut from the appropriation for the administration of the GI Bill of Rights. The House this week passed the general appropriations bill—with the $350 millions included—and sent it to the Senate.

Chairman Taber (R. N. Y.) of the House Appropriations committee said that cutting of the $350 million before the bill was reported out was a "mistake" due to misconstruing Veterans Administration figures. Rep. Clarence Cannon (D. Mo.), ranking minority member of the committee, retored that Taber had indulged in "self deception."

The New York City CIO Veterans Bureau this week reported that the Veterans Administration there — anticipating a reduced budget—had already curtailed evening service by the local VA, had eliminated authorization for private medical and dental care, and had frozen the VA staff in the face of a rapidly increasing case load.

Filed For Your Leave Pay?

Meyer Bernstein of the CIO Veterans Committee this week urged ex-servicemen to apply for their terminal leave payments, pointing out that more than five million veterans who have failed to file are entitled to about $215 each.

Bernstein said that "misunderstanding of the terms of the law is the chief explanation for former servicemen's failure to act." Odd amounts of less than $50 are paid in cash, and the rest is paid in bonds not maturing for five years. Claims must be filed not later than Sept. 1, this year.

Application forms, which may be obtained at any post office, are easy to fill out. They must be accompanied by photostats of both sides of the veteran's discharge when mailed to the designated office. Bernstein said that if a bill now being delayed by the Republicans in Congress is passed, bonds will be redeemable in currency.

CARE Extends Service To England

Americans may now send CARE food packages to persons or organizations in Great Britain.

Expansion of the service to include Britain brings to 14 the number of European countries served by CARE—the Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe.

CARE "sells" the packages to Americans at $10, and guarantees distribution to named recipients in the countries.

INDONESIAN WORKERS, numbering about three million, have formed a "Central Trade Union Organization", with headquarters at Jocjacarta. Seti Adjid, head of the Popular Party, has been elected president.

LABOR'S WORLD

A WORLD Federation of Trade Unions delegation, now on an inspection tour of occupied Japan, will leave that country around April 7, according to reports reaching Washington.

Louis Saillant, WFTU secretary-general, together with two members of the group, is expected to arrive in the U. S. by plane around April 10. Willard Townsend, president of the Transport Service Employes, and the CIO member of the commission, is expected to sail from Yokohama about April 15.

AUSTRIAN UNIONS will get a voice in the management of industry, under provisions of the Workers Council Law. The Workers Council Law, which had the strong support of the Socialist Party—second largest in the country—has been passed by the Austrian Parliament.

The new law gives elected representatives of workers a voice not only on questions of labor relations but on other management problems, including marketing, financing, etc. In plants with more than 500 workers, a two-thirds vote of protest on any management policy can result in an appeal to the Natl. Economic Commission through the Austrian Confederation of Labor.

Protests can be based on arguments that management policy threatens the country's economic stability or the workers' stake in their jobs.

Wide powers are given the work councils, which can protest any demotion of a non-executive employe or dismissal if social hardship results. In stock companies, elected representatives of the workers are assured two non-voting places on the board of directors.

BRITISH LABOR is offering assistance to the workers of Greece in re-establishing free trade unions. General Secretary Vincent Tewson of the British Trades Union Congress is going to Athens April 10 in behalf of the TUC general council, according to an Allied Labor News report.

The council acted after pledging full support to the oft-stated demand of the World Federation of Trade Unions that the Greek unions be permitted to re-establish themselves on a democratic basis.

Greek unions are now in the hands of government-appointed officials, who were named after the elected leaders of the unions had been removed or arrested. A government law has withdrawn legal recognition from any union which insists on electing its own officers.

CANADIAN UNION membership now totals 711,117, a 100% rise since 1939.

Dominion Ministry of Labor figures, the Allied Labor News reports, show that the Canadian Congress of Labor—to which branches of CIO unions are attached—has 350,000 members, while the Trade & Labor Congress has 330,000. The remaining 20,000 are scattered among a number of independent unions.

Georgia Record

THEY DID IT IN DALTON

TWO thousand of the 18,000 residents of Dalton, Ga., belong to CIO.

"And that," declared retiring Mayor Don MacArthur, "is not a bad record. When you leave out the unorganized chenille workers, almost every industrial worker in the city is a CIO member."

The chenille industry is at present operating on a greatly curtailed basis because of a heavy inventory and a slack market.

CIO unions in Dalton are almost as old as the CIO is nationally. American Thread Mill employes had a union as early as 1933, but they were unable to negotiate a contract with management. In 1937 they came into the CIO Textile Workers and obtained the second textile contract in the state.

Of 816 American Thread workers eligible for membership, 808 are now TWUA members in good standing.

Almost the same story is true for the employes of the Crown Cotton Mills and the Realsilk Hosiery Mills. The Crown workers got their contract just a few months after the American Thread pact was signed, and a contract with Realsilk was signed shortly thereafter.

EMPLOYER-employe relations in Dalton are as good as they are anywhere in the South. There has not been a strike in Dalton since 1939.

These good relations did not prevail before the coming of the union.

"I have a neighbor," said Jack Gregg, financial secretary of the Crown local, "who was fired just because one of the mill officials saw two chickens in his front yard. We were not allowed to keep chickens—and those that caused the firing did not even belong to the man who was fired."

Asked if this sort of thing is what made the Dalton workers organize, Gregg said emphatically, "Absolutely! Women were badly mistreated and the bosses were generally running over the people.

"Many a time I have had a supervisor tell me, 'Do you see that hole in the wall (door)? Well, if you don't want to do as I say, get through that hole. There are men outside the front door waiting for this job.'

"The mill management ran our private lives. If we did anything—and I mean anything—on a weekend or any other time we were off that they didn't like, they would call us down to the office when we got back and give us our time."

LAST summer Dalton city employes, aided by a volunteer organizing committee directed by Homer Craig, president of the Crown local, formed two locals of the CIO Public Workers. One is composed of firemen and policemen, the other of street and sanitation workers.

These groups met with city officials and secured two pay increases. The basic wage for policemen was raised from $150 per month to $175; firemen from $130 to $175. Wage increases were likewise negotiated for the other organized city workers.

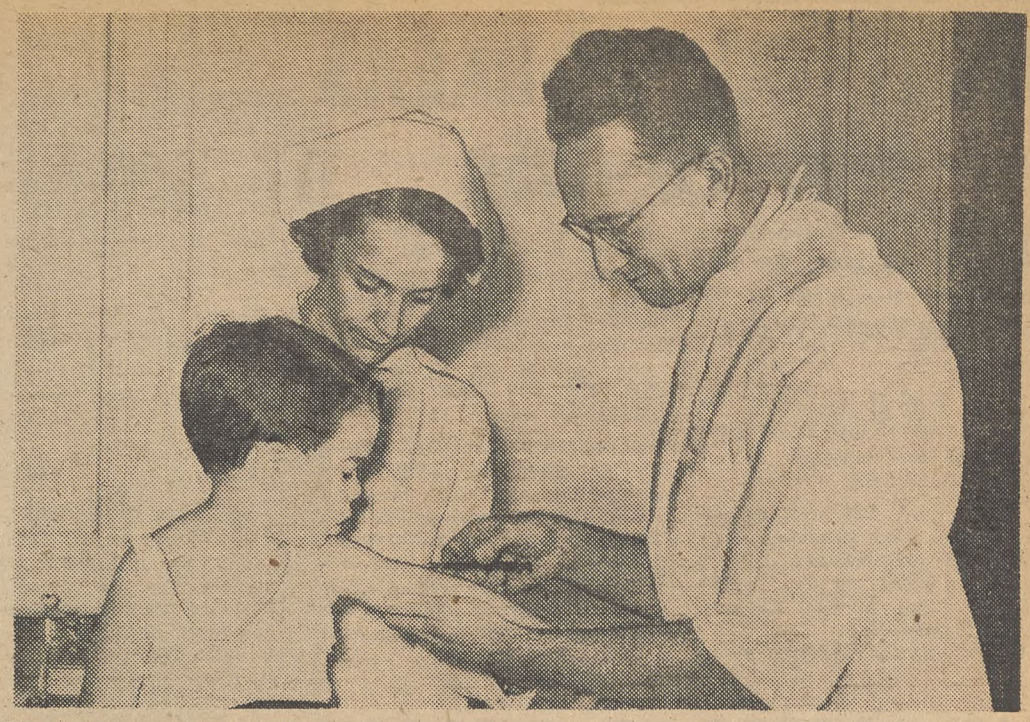
But wage increases and improved working conditions are not where the Dalton CIO members' interest in the city stops.

Thompson, Gregg, and Carlos Dyer, financial secretary of the Realsilk Hosiery local, are members of the Citizens' Advisory Planning Commission, advisory body to the City Council on civic improvements.

Otis Weaver, former president of the Crown local, is a member of the city Civil Service Commission.

Lt. W. A. Britton of the Dalton Police Department, an active member of the Public Workers local, is one of Whitfield County's two representatives in the State Legislature.

"The CIO was the only organized group to support a recent tax raise to expand city services—schools, streets, sewers, etc.," said Mayor MacArthur. "That is when I realized organized labor stood for more than settling their own personal problems."



The CIO Textile Workers Union has a free group insurance plan, paid for by employers, which provides even maternity benefits. A typical worker would get $50 for her obstetrician and $84 for hospital care (12 days at $7 a day). A worker sick for a year would receive half pay for a maximum of 26 weeks and payment for 50 doctor's calls (three in any one week).

Health and Welfare

How One Plan Works

By E. M. SCHOFFSTALL

High on the collective bargaining agenda for many CIO unions are health and welfare funds. About 1,250,000 workers are protected by various types of plans. Some are administered by unions, some jointly by unions and employers, and some by private insurance companies with employers paying the costs. How the last plan works is told in this special article by the Publicity Director of the CIO Textile Workers.

YEARS before health and welfare funds became fair game for Congressmen, radio forums and newspaper columnists, the CIO Textile Workers Union was negotiating benefits that filled in for its members many of the gaps in the present Social Security Act.

At present more than 200,000 men and women working under TWUA agreements are protected by group insurance paid for entirely by their employers. Month by month new contracts giving such protection to additional members are being negotiated by the union, whose aim is to make free group insurance a standard clause in all its agreements.

However, the difference between the so-called "health and welfare funds" and the free group insurance of TWUA is substantial, both as to philosophy and as to administration.

TWUA has no "fund," as such. It has agreements with textile manufacturers that the mills will buy group insurance for their workers, at no cost to the employes.

The union does not administer, or control in any way, the cash set aside by employers for group insurance. All it does is specify the minimum benefits it wants for its members.

The policy is administered neither by the union nor by the employer but by the insurance carrier. There are checks and balances, of course, to be sure that the worker gets the full benefits he is entitled to.

ALTHOUGH group insurance policies vary somewhat from mill to mill, most of them now in effect provide life insurance, benefits for accidental death and dismemberment, accident and sickness benefits, medical and hospital care, and surgical and maternity benefits. Here's how it works:

Mrs. Jessie Lawson (she's a typical, not a real, worker) is a ring-spinner in the Wood Mill in Lawrence, Mass. Her wages average $42 a week.

Mrs. Lawson becomes ill and is forced to stay away from her job. She calls in her family doctor, who makes three visits to her home during the first week of her illness. He diagnoses her illness as chronic appendicitis and orders her to a hospital for an operation.

She is in the hospital two weeks and spends another week at her home, recuperating, when the family doctor makes three more calls. Thus Mrs. Lawson is away from her job four weeks, had an operation, and is visited by her physician six times.

Under her TWUA protection, Mrs. Lawson receives benefits totaling $279. This includes half-pay for three weeks (the first week is not included), or $63; six visits by her family doctor to her home ($18, at $3 a visit); $100 for the surgeon who performed the operation; and $98 for hospital care ($7 a day for 14 days' care in a semi-private room).

The plan for hospitalization provides a maximum of 31 days' hospital care in a semi-private room, at whatever cost the local hospital charges for such care.

If Mrs. Lawson had had an illness that would have kept her away from work a whole year, she would have received half-pay for a maximum of 26 weeks, or $546. She would have had her doctor's bills paid, up to a maximum of 50 calls (three in any one week) at the rate of $2 for treatment in the doctor's office and $3 for treatment at a hospital or at Mrs. Lawson's home.

If, next week, Mrs. Lawson should be killed in an automobile accident, her beneficiary would receive $1,260, or 60 times her weekly $21 benefit under the accident and sickness provisions of the policy.

Other Gains To Come

MOST OIL WORKERS WIN 20-25c

THE CIO Oil Workers this week had hiked the pay for nearly two-thirds of the nation's oil workers 20 to 25c an hour.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight this week announced that this was the result of the contracts so far signed by the union.

Most recent contracts, providing 22c an hour increases, were won by Socony-Vacuum and Cities Service refinery workers in the big oil centers of East Chicago, and Hammond, Ind.

Cities Service members along the Atlantic seaboard won a 20c increase after a four-day strike. The agreement calls for a permanent 12c an hour increase with another increase of 8c effective for the rest of the year. Retroactive pay at 18c an hour for Nov. and Dec., 1946, was also gained.

Sinclair, Texas Co., Cities Service groups of OWIU have now settled the wage campaign initiated when OWIU called for a 25c an hour increase last October. California oil workers have settled for 20.2c an hour. Sinclair workers, under a sliding scale based on the cost of living, won a 25c an hour raise.

CIO SCORES 3D VICTORY AT WESTERN UNION

THE CIO American Communications Assn. was chosen collective bargaining agent for the third time by the Western Union employes in the N. Y. City area in an NLB election last weekend, defeating the AFL Commercial Telegraphers by a vote of 3,974 to 1,089.

ACA and Western Union early this week signed an agreement to extend for 90 days an agreement due to expire April 1. The extension provided for termination 30 days' notice, and both parties agreed to meet late this week.

ACA Pres. Joseph P. Selly said that the "overwhelming vote cast for ACA should convince the company that our membership is determined to procure fair and equitable treatment."

ACA has represented the Western Union employes in the N. Y. City area for the past six years.

UAW OPENS GENERAL MOTORS PACT TALKS APRIL 10

THE CIO Auto - Workers will begin negotiations April 10 with General Motors for a 23½-cent hourly wage increase and for a guaranteed 40-hour week.

GM is the first of the auto companies to be asked for a guaranteed work week, which the UAW considers the first step to a guaranteed annual wage.

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther, who is also director of the union's GM dept., will represent the union, assisted by John W. Livingston, GM dept. co-director, and a negotiating committee.

UAW will also seek employer-financed pension and social security plans, equalization of wages and improved vacation pay.

Wage increases of 10c an hour for 15,000 Nash-Kelvinator Corp. plants are the first big wage boosts won in the auto industry since the 18½c pattern was set almost a year ago, Reg. Dir. Joseph Mattson of the Auto Workers said at Chicago, Ill.

Nash-Kelvinator has agreed to enter negotiations for further increases within 20 days after a national pattern is set. The agreement was signed last weekend.

DEMAND OUSTER OF FLORIDA OFFICIAL

The Florida CIO Council at its convention last weekend at Miami called on the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods to join with it in seeking the impeachment of Tom Watson, the state's labor-hating attorney general, and in defeating the Matthew white primary bill.

The Matthew white primary bill would remove the primary election from state control to individual party supervision.

The council charged that Watson "was running around the country and bringing in anti-closed-shop groups from out of the state to disrupt organized labor in Florida."

The convention unanimously endorsed the leadership of CIO Pres. Philip Murray and elected John G. Lackner president; Richard Greenleaf, vice-president; Edward E. Miller, secretary-treasurer, and Charles N. Smolikoff, council director.

Speakers included Mayor Perrine Palmer, Jr., of Miami, and John Riffe, representing Van A. Bittner, CIO Organizing Committee director.

CAR FERRY STRIKE IS POSTPONED

A strike to tie up 19 Great Lake car ferries, scheduled for March 31 by the CIO Natl. Maritime Union, was automatically postponed at least 30 days when Pres. Truman appointed a fact-finding board.

The ferries are operated by the Wabash, Ann Arbor (Pennsylvania), Pere Marquette (Chesapeake & Ohio), and Grand Trunk Western (Canadian Natl.) railroads.

3 New Steel Directors

PRES. PHILIP MURRAY, three other international officers of the CIO Steelworkers and 33 incumbent directors were re-elected and three new directors were chosen in the union's election Dec. 10.

Results of the election—in which more than a quarter million votes were cast—were announced this week after the international tellers completed their work. The three new directors are:

James Dickerson, District 37, which covers Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas; James P. Griffin, District 26, the Youngstown-Warren-Niles area of Ohio; and James C. Nicholson, District 5, which includes the maritime provinces of Canada.

In addition to Murray, other international officers re-elected are Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald, Vice-Presidents Van A. Bittner and James G. Thimmes.

John J. Pastin, Ellwood City, Pa.; Charles Evansin, Fontana, Calif., and Alfonso Murray, Trenton, Nova Scotia, were re-elected international tellers, and Charles H. Millard was re-named as national director of Canada.

BAITERS' REAL AIM IS UNIONS—UE

A warning was issued last weekend by the CIO Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers that a "war against organized labor" is being "carried on under cover of a smoke-screen of red-baiting."

The union declared that "Wall Street's servants in Congress are fomenting a red scare, as in 1919, to conceal from American working men and women the Wall Street assault upon the living and working conditions of the people."

The statement, approved by the UE General Executive Board, points out that "Wall Street is seeking anti-communist laws as a club over the head of labor, to be used not against communists alone, but against every working man and woman who dares to stand up against the employer drive against wages, conditions and job security.

"Just as the inner enemies of our own Union's democracy seek to wrest control away from thet membership by proposals limiting the rights of the membership, so the agents of Wall Street are attempting to extend their domination over the nation by taking away from he American people their traditional liberty to think as they please, speak as they please and vote as they please, rights that are as old as the Republic."

CHART LABOR DEFENSE PLANS

The CIO Public Workers last weekend at a conference of 150 officials and organizers in Washington, D. C., mapped a program to mobilize the entire membership in the CIO drive to fight anti-labor legislation and in a campaign to ward off attacks on the union.

Plans were made for calling membership meetings of the 470 UPW locals, for newspaper advertising and radio time.

FINAL ROUND IN PITTSBURGH BREWERY FIGHT GOES TO CIO

THE CIO Brewery Workers this week won the final round in the fight with the AFL Teamsters for jurisdiction over employes of the Western Pennsylvania Brewers Assn.

The agreement was reached in the midst of proceedings brought by the Duquesque, Pittsburgh and Fort Pitt breweries against the Teamsters to restrain secondary boycotts and picketing.

The struggle began six months ago when 140 bottlers bolted from the Brewery Workers to form an AFL local. The Teamsters pressured a number of taverns into refusing to sell the product of the brewers association.

The Western Pennsylvania brewery workers several weeks ago re-affirmed their faith in the Brewery Workers when they voted in an NLRB election for the CIO union 1734 to 259 for no union.

The Brewery Workers in a national referendum last year voted to affiliate with the CIO.

Under the agreement signed for the CIO by Anthony J. Federoff, CIO regional director, and Thomas Rush, Brewery Workers representative, the 140 bottlers will be given an opportunity to return to their jobs with a few exceptions.

MILLIONS of American kids like these who have been receiving nourishing noon meals at school under the Natl. School Lunch Act passed by Congress last spring have been in serious danger of having their lunches snatched away from them. Rep. John Taber (R. N. Y.), chairman of the House Appropriations committee, and other reactionary politicians in Congress, want to cut the entire appropriation for school lunches out of the Federal budget, sacrificing the health and welfare of the Nation's children in the name of "economy."

THE scheme hit a snag April 1 when the House, by a vote of 128 to 110, overruled the House Appropriation Committee and passed and sent to the Senate a deficiency appropriation for $6,000,000 to assist the School Lunch program for the next three months. Although the sum is inadequate—$23,000,000 is needed, due to the large increase in the number of children in the school lunch program—it is a step forward in the fight to save the program which offers hope of future progress. More than 4,656,000 children in 1946 participated in the school lunch projects. It is estimated that in 1947, some 7,477,000 will be covered if funds permit.

Tips for the Tall Girl

By HANNA SHERMAN

THE tall slim girl is glamorized in the fashion magazines, on the stage and even in films — Ingrid Bergman, Dorothy Maguire, Alexis Smith to mention just a few. In spite of this, in real life, she very often does not play a glamorous role.

Perhaps it's because tall girls are definitely in the minority. Only 12 per cent of American women are 5′ 6″ or taller. And being among the few rather than the many may make them feel conspicuous. When I look around me, I'm sorry to see how many shorter girls are wearing poorly the dramatic and beautiful clothes you tall girls can wear so well.

Remember that your height is an asset that other women envy, men admire and the world pays homage to. Play it up. Don't imagine that slouching or wearing drab looking clothes will make you look any shorter or any less conspicuous. So why do it? Don't be afraid to be really expressive and graceful in your clothes. And by all means avoid the bean pole look that is so unflattering.

THERE is one sad fact we have to face. There are not many real bargains in clothes for the tall girl. If you're tall, you'll find it hard to find skirts that are long enough, waist lines that fit where they should and clothes cut generously enough—in the low price range. Even your hats and other accessories, to be large enough to do you justice, often cost you more.

For this reason, the clothes you choose should be clothes that you love. They not only take a large slice out of your budget, they are also hard to find.

Your clothes philosophy should be to have a small but very good wardrobe. In the interests of economy, make an effort to coordinate your costumes so that you can ring many changes from a few well chosen items.

Keeping this in mind: you can wear suits with the new longer jackets, full belted coats, shirtwaists and skirts to your heart's content. In fact any clothes which are not figure slim and have a sense of movement about them are for you. Steer clear of a too straight up and down look. Seek fullness in the sleeves, blouse or skirt of your costume.

When you do this, show off your slender waist by clinching it tight with a belt or by drawing attention to it by smooth fitting. Then see what the skirts with hip fullness do for you.

TRY to find fabrics with texture interest. Nobby tweeds, for instance, starched cottons, rough linens, rayon taffetas, corduroy, shantungs. Dresses in two colors are very good along with contrasting jacket and skirt costumes. Your clothes can have that much desired look of being casual enough for sports and—with a few accessory changes—dressy enough to go anywhere.

Fashionable and very right for the tall girl are flat heeled shoes, dirndl skirts, bright or light colors, large size, interesting costume jewelry (bangle bracelets, lots of them, wide cuff bracelets), over the shoulder bags, big straw cartwheels.

Be glad you're tall. Dress up to your height and be as colorful and dramatic as you dare. (Copyright 1947, The CIO NEWS.)

PRIVILEGED CHILDREN

Are you giving your children all the advantages of growing up in America? Many parents are now looking for summer camps where children of all races, creeds and colors are enrolled. As these children live with one another, they learn to appreciate our country's greatest resources—our people with backgrounds as varied as the places they come from. Each brings the richness of his inheritance. In the interwoven fabric of all lies our great strength and wealth. At Camps Willowemac and Woodles, both in New York State, children are learning to live understandingly with others who may be different from themselves. What we need is more such camps. FINAL JUDGMENT ON NAZI GANG

THE top Nazi gang has been wiped out; the Nazi system of government in Germany has been destroyed; the International Military Tribunal has brought in its verdicts after the months-long Nuremberg trial.

But the alibi artists are still at work. Little Nazis still maintain "they didn't know" about concentration camps. German industrialists, looking toward rehabilitation, cluck their tongues about Hitler's policies, and are trying to convince allied occupation authorities that they are pure as the driven snow.

Victor Bernstein, reporter for the newspaper PM, has used documents and quotations to kill the alibis once and for all. His book, "Final Judgment," presents in simple and highly readable form the principal details of the terrible conspiracy against humanity that brought together German industrialists, politicians, military leaders, scientists and propagandists.

WITH words from their mouths or directives from their pens, the Nazis convicted themselves. Further, their words cut through the injured air of innocence with which Nazis and hangers-on attempted to purge themselves of complicity in the master plot.

Take the industrialists, for instance, who have claimed that they really worked against Hitler. On August 8, 1937—two years before the war—one Herr Poensgen, leader of the Iron Industry Group, wrote: "We endorse the military needs . . . We suggest the storage of semi-finished products, pig iron, armor plates, etc., in safe places."

"Even earlier—in 1937—a Farben agent reported how his company was distributing Nazi propaganda news through its confidential agents in South America, and recommended that this propaganda should be directed mainly against the U.S.A.," Bernstein writes.

And the Krupps, Hitler's prime steel producers, were equally involved. Sonnenberg, a Krupp official, conferred in October, 1937, with Captain Menzel of German intelligence. He wrote, in a memo on the confab:

"Menzel asked for intelligence on foreign armaments received by Krupp from their agents abroad. . . . On our part, we undertook to supply information as required."

This is a book well worth a place on your bookshelf. Events move quickly, and there is a tendency to forget, or excuse, or diminish both the crimes and the criminals. "Final Judgment" will help keep fresh in your mind the plans the Nazis had in mind for all of us.—H.C.F.

Fighting Hate

WHAT can the plain people of America do to prevent the same evil seeds which produced the horrible World War II from bringing on another world war?

"The Challenge of Hate," a timely book by A. R. Lerner and Herbert Poster dealing with the struggle of democracy against the forces of disruption and disunity seeks to answer this all-important question.

Through the medium of text and some 300 illuminating photographs, "Challenge of Hate" endeavors to present a picture of the world as it exists today, and to expose the sources of the poisonous hates hidden under racial and economic conflicts which still threaten the world with catastrophe.

EDUCATION NOTES

LOCAL groups, including the Ohio CIO Council, have been following up on the refusal of the Neil House Hotel, Columbus, Ohio, to serve delegates to the National CIO Education Conference March 13-16.

A representative committee in this community has been formed, including representatives from the Council for Democracy, Ohio Federation of Church Women, NAACP, Urban League and others. The Rev. Francis Ricker is chairman of the committee.

A second test case was arranged by local citizens March 18, when a mixed group was again refused service in the hotel's Flemish Room. The committee granted the request of Mayor Rhodes of Columbus, for time to meet with the manager of Neil House and a report is expected shortly on the Mayor's attempts to settle the matter. If these conferences with the management are not successful, a suit will be instituted against the hotel immediately.

Bias in Want Ads

A week's survey of the help wanted ads in five metropolitan dailies in the Chicago area conducted in March by the CIO United Transport Service Employes and its Women's Auxiliary, furnished concrete proof of existing discrimination against the employment of Negroes and other minority groups, reports the union.

The want ads studied showed many asking for white only, even in service fields where minority groups have considerable experience, such as janitors, cooks, bakers, dishwashers, elevator operators, hotel maids and laundry workers.

Antioch Drive

A drive to raise money for a six-year-old Race Relations Scholarship Fund at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio, is now under way. So far money raised by the students for the experiment in undergraduate race relations has financed seven Negro students at the College.

"Only when different racial groups can live and work together in a normal way can there be a real exchange of ideas and cultural patterns," says Peggy Holmes, present chairman of the Committee.

"And what would the laboring classes do if they got more wages? Just waste them!"

SIDNEY HILLMAN FOUNDATION

CONTRIBUTIONS to the million-dollar Sidney Hillman Foundation being established in memory of the late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers now total $400,000. Latest subscription is for $50,000 from the CIO Textile Workers. The Amalgamated and its affiliates have already raised $300,000 toward the fund, the ACW announces.

ACW Pres. Jacob S. Potofsky, who succeeded Hillman, said the purpose of the fund is to continue to give a hearing to the social philosophy summed up in Hillman's career of 36 years. The union's former president died July 10, 1946.

Projects to be set up under the fund include a number of university scholarships for trade unionists; a series of "Sidney Hillman Lectures" at leading institutions; exchange scholarships for foreign students; Hillman prizes for the best books published on social and economic subjects; grants to certain universities for special studies, and annual awards for the best labor story and for the greatest contribution to public service.

UNION SOCIAL WORK

A COUNSELLOR in every CIO shop and an adequate number in all larger shops and plants is the aim of the Cleveland CIO's Community Services Committee. Under the thriving program now under way, key CIO members in the various plants are given training to enable them to assist their fellow workers in their off-the-job problems.

These union counsellors are taught how to aid members who are having such difficulties as sickness in the family, housing problems, need for legal aid or other troubles by helping them contact the social service agency where they can get the needed assistance. As there are 150 agencies in the Cleveland Welfare Federation alone, workers rarely know where or how to contact the one which could aid them.

The Cleveland CSC program includes classes limited to 25 students each; plans for an all-day Institute on Workmen's Compensation; a counselling service for strike welfare committees and other activities.

HALT RENT HIKE PLOT

IT WAS a bad week for the powerful real estate lobby, which has crusaded ardently for higher rents.

Aware of public sentiment, both Senate and House Committees appeared to be in retreat from earlier positions in support of increased rent ceilings. The real estate lobby, which had originally spurned a 10% rent jump in favor of the extra profits of a 15% rise, may find that its campaign to knock out controls, or raise ceilings, has led up a blind alley.

The Senate Banking & Currency Committee, after studying the facts and the public's reaction, removed a projected 10% rise from its bill. Due to be reported soon to the Senate, the bill would transfer administration of rent controls from the ill-fated OPA to the Office of the Housing Expediter.

The Senate bill would allow regional advisory boards, however, to recommend area decontrols or lifting of ceilings. The CIO-supported Wagner-Murray bill (S 528) would merely continue rent controls on their present basis for another year.

Members of the House Banking Committee, after leaning strongly towards a 10% rise, put their own bill (HR 2549) on ice until April 16. The bill, bearing the name of Committee Chairman Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.), would have lifted the ceiling, weakened enforcement, and repealed the Patman Veterans Housing Act.

MEANWHILE, Pres. Truman sent a message to both House and Senate, in which he went down the line for continuation of the rent control program.

"Proper protection of millions of our American families requires that effective rent and eviction control be extended beyond June 30, 1947, for a further period of one year, and I so recommend," the President wrote to Congress.

"Despite the rapid upswing in residential construction during 1946, the nation is still faced with a critical housing shortage," he reminded the legislators.

"Dwelling accommodations, particularly rental units, are still radically out of balance with demand. In 88 cities surveyed by the Bureau of Labor Statistics and the Bureau of the Census during 1946, vacancies in rental units were virtually non-existent."

2 TO 1 ON STATE LABOR FRONT

TWO BRIGHT spots and one dark one appeared this week on the state legislative front.

In Massachusetts, the House killed a bill which would have required unions to use secret ballots in election of officers after Rep. Sullivan (D. Lowell) asserted: "We don't force fraternal societies or banks to hold secret balloting."

In Oklahoma the State CIO Council reported that there is no rash of anti-labor bills because—to quote Council Pres. A. W. Mitchell—"CIO unions are a recognized part of our civic life."

But in Iowa the Senate passed a bill banning closed and union shops.

People Support United Nations

Two-thirds of the American people want to see the United Nations strong enough to control atom manufacture in all countries of the world.

The National Opinion Research Center at the University of Denver found 67% preference for such a policy of strengtheniing UN to give it effective control of atomic manufacture. Only 35%, however, felt that the U. S. has been following such a policy.

PAPER SHORTAGE YIELDS NO ACTION

DISTRIBUTION is the key to the newsprint problems of small papers and publications. This has been made abundantly clear during recent Senate Small Business Committee hearings conducted by Sen. Capehart (R. Ind.).

Still lacking is an effective program to meet the problem. Representatives of labor and other small papers, which have been badly hit by newspaper shortages, told the committee that only a return to rationing and inventory controls could assure just distribution of present supplies.

The committee, however, appears to be leaning towards some form of voluntary sharing.

Newsprint production jumped 23.4% in 1946 over 1945, but most of the newsprint found its way into the hands of the small group of big publishers. Some 525 members of the American Newspaper Publishers Assn. jumped their consumption about 27%, through increased circulation and advertising.

Small consumers, however, have been held down to their 1945 paper allowance—and in some cases, even less.

LILIENTHAL SURE BET

DAVID Lilienthal, top director of the TVA for the past several years, will be confirmed as chairman of the Atomic Energy Commission this week in an almost routine manner.

The fight to bar him from the post, or to stall his taking office, failed of achievement last week as the Senate voted 52-38 against "recommitting" his nomination.

Sen. Kenneth McKellar (D. Tenn.), who spearheaded the fight against Lilienthal and the other members named to the commission by Pres. Truman, was joined in his campaign by Sen. Taft (R. O.).

McKellar's grudge, stemming out of Lilienthal's refusal to turn TVA jobs into political plums under McKellar's control, had filled the record of the Senate and the Senate Atomic Energy Commission with thousands of pages of wild charges.

But the vote found the Republicans badly split, with Sen. Vandenberg (R. Mich.) turning lustily on Taft in the final hours of debate. Only seven Democrats—all southern polltax cronies of McKellar—voted for recommitting the appointments for additional study. On the other hand, 18 GOP Senators broke with Taft to favor Lilienthal.

TWO days before the vote, CIO Pres. Murray wrote to leading members of the Senate in a plea for speedy confirmation.

Declaring that CIO members, "like the overwhelming majority of the American people," favored Lilienthal for the government's top atomic job, Murray wrote:

"We have been dismayed at the obviously unfair propaganda campaign that has been developed against this fine public servant . . . The CIO and the American public as a whole are convinced that on any basis of justice, decency or ability to handle the job, Mr. Lilienthal should be confirmed speedily for his new assignment."

Murray noted that the nation cannot afford to delay endlessly its moves to control and develop atomic energy, and that a policy of delay will lead to "confusion and possible disaster."

Much of Taft's opposition was based on Lilienthal's work, in cooperation with Under Secretary of State Dean Acheson, on a program of international atomic regulation, which was later presented to the United Nations by Bernard Baruch.

Taft complained that any plan for international atomic control "is impossible at present" in view of Russia's position.

Sen. McMahon (D. Conn.), an author of the bill under which the atomic commission was created, charged that Taft "would withdraw our plan, and he has no plan to suggest as an alternative at this time." He went on to point out that in keeping with American traditions, our atomic policy should be in the hands of civilians, rather than of the military.

To Defend Labor

250 CIO HEADS AT D. C. RALLY

TWO hundred fifty union officials from every section of the country converged on Washington, as The CIO NEWS went to press, for a Jefferson Day National CIO Legislative Conference, called to Defend Labor.

The meeting was called by CIO Pres. Philip Murray to rally national union forces against anti-labor legislation now being considered in the Senate and House. In attendance were representatives from CIO's 40 national unions, regional directors, representatives of state CIO councils and of 30 key city CIO bodies.

Delegates met in the Hotel Willard April 13 for the conference. On April 14, the CIO officials were to meet with Congressmen and Senators from their home areas.

"IN this meeting on Jefferson's birthday, the CIO hopes to call attention once again to the ideals represented by a great president," declared Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director.

"And it is entirely fitting that this meeting, which is aimed at preserving the spirit and structure of the New Deal, should fall just a day after the second anniversary of the death of the greatest American leader of modern times, Franklin Delano Roosevelt.

"American democracy, for which Franklin Roosevelt worked in war and peace, will be seriously weakened if Congress accepts the proposed hob-nailed restrictions upon labor.

"These bills have been inspired by profit-seeking industrialists, propagandists of special interests and some Congressmen whose knowledge of industrial relations is limited to what they read in the papers," Cowan asserted.

"The CIO hopes to mobilize every democratic-minded citizen in behalf of the rights of labor. For if labor is restricted and his rights curtailed, profiteers and monopolists will turn their attention to every other type of organization which opposes their selfish policies," Cowan said.

ATTENDING the Sunday meeting were CIO council delegates from each of the following cities: Los Angeles, San Francisco, Denver, Birmingham, Atlanta, New Orleans, Memphis, Chattanooga, Chicago, Indianapolis, Detroit, Baltimore, Hartford, Boston, Springfield and Worcester (Mass.), Duluth, Minneapolis and St. Paul, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Buffalo, Philadelphia, Camden, Newark and New York City.

Purpose of the meeting was to spur "Defend Labor Month" activities throughout the country. CIO unions have conducted large numbers of mass meetings, distributed several hundred thousand leaflets, and urged the sending of letters and telegrams to Congressmen and Senators as part of the campaign to defeat anti-labor bills in both houses of Congress.

During the last half of April, delegations of union members from six key regions of the country will come to Washington to talk to their Congressional representatives.

The schedule:

April 17-18 Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware.

April 21-22 New England.

April 23-24 New York and New Jersey.

April 24-26 Ohio, Illinois, Missouri, West Virginia.

April 28-29 Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota.

April 30-May 1 Virginia, North & South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, and Kentucky.

Carey Says:

LABOR WANTS VOICE IN FOREIGN POLICY, BACKS UNITED NATIONS

AMERICAN labor, which pays the bills for our foreign economic policy, "demands a voice" in the formulation of that policy.

Further, American workers want no foreign economic activity by the U. S. government "that will destroy or delay the improvement of the United Nations charter."

Appearing at a forum of the United Nations Council of Philadelphia, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey last week spelled out some of the nation's industrial workers' demands for a truly democratic foreign policy.

"We do not believe the question of foreign economic policy can be resolved solely on the basis of money profits," Carey said. "We believe it can be realized at the level of human profit, and we are prepared to insist that our point of view be given a fair hearing. That is democracy."

Carey charged that American diplomatic or industrial representatives abroad fail to think in terms "of security, of food, of clothing, of shelter, of education, of medical care, of freedom from fear" with which ordinary citizens are concerned.

"WE resent being told that the overwhelming majority of Americans who work for wages or salaries have no rightful voice in determining foreign economic policy," Carey told the Philadelphia group.

He noted that the recent government mission to Greece, headed by former OPA chief Paul Porter, had an advisory group consisting of experts in engineering, law, finances, agriculture and economics.

"We believe we are justified in asking why there was not one or more labor advisors attached to the Porter commission," Carey said.

There is constant reference to the Greek and Turkish peoples, he added, "but the overwhelming majority of the Greek people and the Turkish people to whom references are made, are working folks just like the majority in this country."

CAREY asserted that the "quick answer" of defenders of present policies is that there are aspects of the Greek and Turkish situations which "common, ordinary workers" cannot comprehend.

As a matter of fact, the "stated issue in the case—communism—brought about through the alleged encroachment of the Soviet Union on the sovereignty of Greece and Turkey" is one which workers as a group can understand as well or better than any other section of the public, he said.

"What the workers of the United States would like to know is whether they are expected in the case of Greece and Turkey to shore up reaction," the CIO officer asked. "We would like to know whether we are expected to proceed solely on a philosophy based on fear of the Soviet Union.

"In other words, do the American people have more than two choices in the matter: communism on the one hand and the divine rights of a reactionary government on the other?"

American workers, Carey said, have had experience in opposing both schools of thought and in being criticized for remaining true to "only one objective . . . the attainment of democracy and the extension of the democratic process throughout our domestic scene."

"We are now of the firm opinion that we must similarly democratize the foreign economic policy of the U. S."

FIRST IN LABOR

UE Starts Nationwide Newscast April 23

THE Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers announced this week that it is sponsoring a 52-week series of weekly news commentary broadcasts by Leland Stowe, American newspaper foreign correspondent, author and lecturer.

The first broadcast will be April 23, 7:30 p.m., Eastern Standard Time, over a national hookup of the Mutual Broadcasting System, and every Wednesday night thereafter.

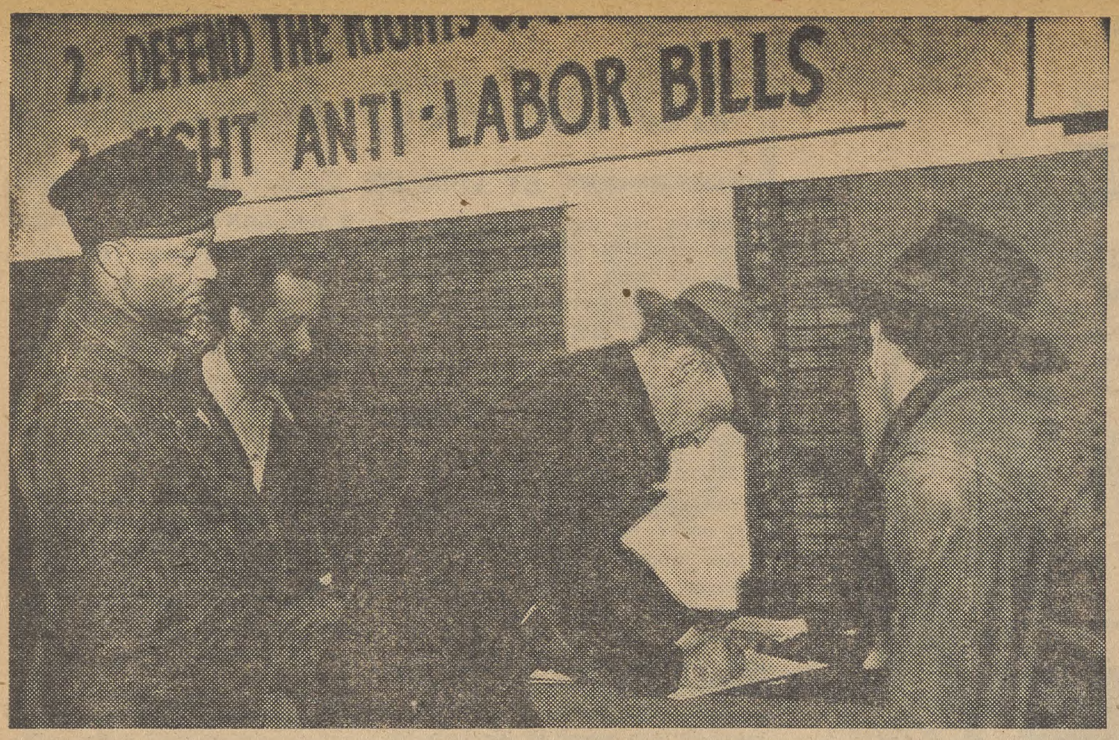
Commenting on the decision by the UE-CIO to sponsor the series of broadcasts, Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald said, "We believe that by sponsoring this distinguished journalist and news analyst, the UE is performing a service to the cause of democracy."

The union pointed out that the occasion is the first in the history of American radio in which a labor union has undertaken to present to the American people a regular, weekly analysis of the news on a nation-wide basis.

"The sponsoring of Mr. Stowe by our union is an important step in radio because of the great need for unbiased reporting of the news on the air," Fitzgerald said.

"There have been numerous instances in which commentators who have tried to bring their listeners an unbiased, truthful picture of the news have been censored or have lost their contracts.

"Meanwhile commentators who reflect the propaganda of big business, who smear the labor movement and who oppose progressive legislation find no difficulty in finding sponsors among big industries."



1 "They called us heroes then—now they forget who 'kept 'em sailing'!" It's a bitter feeling an Able Seaman has about bills to weaken unions. 15 years an AB, Elmer Reese signs a petition to Congress at the CIO Natl. Maritime Union Hdq. in N. Y. City. "Congress won't succeed if labor wakes up. If we don't, God help us!"

2 Ernest Lopez, a N. Y. subway car maintenance man, really didn't need a "Call to Action." He's a member of the CIO Transport Workers. He can remember, before the union, when pay was 35c an hour, and men worked 10 to 12 hours a day. "I don't believe in letting those conditions come back," he says.

Just Fed Up With Being Pushed Around

THIS is Ernest Lopez talking. Maybe his opinions don't carry much national weight—but they are typical of a lot of people who will cast their votes in the 1948 elections.

Ernest Lopez is a car maintenance man for the IRT subway in New York. He's a member of the CIO Transport Workers Union—been a union man since '37. And he's just fed up with being pushed around by Congress.

"They're trying to destroy the unions," he says. "But people got to be smart today. You got to be organized. If you don't, they treat people like animals—like a horse. I don't believe in letting those conditions come back. People would have to be pretty dumb to let them."

LOPEZ' opinions match those of a score of others The CIO NEWS interviewed. Right where it counts—among the rank and file—the people are plenty worried.

Take Catherine Zenka, a member of the CIO Dept. Store Employes Union. Works at Bloomingdales. "They've done plenty for us—the unions. You should have seen how things were before then. If they said, 'You're going to work tonight,' you'd have to work, and no overtime. If they break the unions, there'll be a lot of people having a tough time."

AND Harry Laffer, a CIO Shipbuilding Worker at Bethlehem Steel's Brooklyn yard, adds: "We know what it was in the yards years ago—about 88c an hour for a first class mechanic. It's about $1.38 now. To get a two weeks' vacation you had to work about 15 years. The worker has his self-respect, he's lost his sense of fear. If these anti-labor bills are passed—and they're aimed to weaken and then destroy the unions—the fear will be back, and the standard of living will be cut."

Opinions like these—and there are millions of them—will be marching to the polls in 1948, with the program of the labor-haters up for judgment.

3 Another petition to Congress (top) from CIO Auto Workers Joseph Petrishwatz and Peter Burawa. (Below) Brooklyn CIO Shipbuilding Workers hear Henry Laffer (with leaflet) warn that the bosses "call the Roosevelt program communistic. They call an active union man a communist and try to intimidate the rest."

4 Part of the drive against labor is in government. A CIO Public Workers meeting in N. Y. City hears a report from Washington delegates who warn that proposals for arbitrary dismissals on a vague "disloyalty" basis amount to government by decree. "Dismissal would mean a lifetime stigma—with a trial."

CAPTAIN KID(D)

OUT OF the hundreds of union-breaking proposals offered to Congress, the Republican high command is concocting a poisonous witches brew, guaranteed to knock out labor—and, incidentally, smelling to high heaven.

Two samples of this unsavory mess were called to public attention last week—the Senate bill sponsored by Sen. Robt. Taft of Ohio, chief of the Senate Labor and GOP policy committees; and the House bill sponsored by Chairman Fred A. Hartley, Jr., and the Republican steering committee.

Both bills are designed to deprive American working people of most of their collective bargaining rights, to weaken or destroy their unions, and to increase the power of employers to impose low wages and worsened working conditions.

PROFESSORIAL Senator Taft has brought out a bill that is a masterpiece of legalistic skullduggery.

Its 62 pages of intricate phraseology contain nearly every possible device for hamstringing unions and weakening the workers' bargaining power.

The Taft bill has five major titles, the first of which, dealing with amendments to the Wagner Labor Relations Act, is in itself a veritable encyclopedia of the union-breaking arts.

It would transform the "Magna Carta" of American workers' rights into an instrument for destroying most of these rights.

THIS FIRST section of the Taft bill would outlaw the closed shop and severely limit all other forms of union security, declaring among other things that an employer may refuse even to bargain or negotiate or discuss any union security demand.

Under the guise of preventing industry-wide bargaining, it would break up national unions into powerless company-wide groups, and make it virtually impossible to enforce uniform standards of wages and conditions.

It would strike at the roots of industrial unionism, breaking up voting units by crafts, plants and localities, and separating "professional employes" from manual workers.

It would promote employer interference, narrowing company obligations to bargain, encouraging individual grievance adjustment, permitting interference with the workers' free choice of a bargaining agent, and protecting company-dominated unions.

ALL THIS is but part of the first title of the Taft bill. The other titles include other union-breaking proposals too numerous to list.

They include many limitations on the right to strike, compulsory cooling-off periods, strike-breaking anti-union injunctions, outlawing of strikes for union recognition, compulsion to work on non-union goods.

They would place union funds and rights in jeopardy through endless harassing court suits, would strike at the the check-off and welfare funds, and cripple union activities in many other ways.

THE HARTLEY bill is cruder and seemingly more violent in its assault on labor's rights, though most of its purposes would be equally well achieved by Taft's more subtle approach.

It includes additional provisions against picketing and the right of union members to elect officers of their own choice, and would bar union political contributions.

This bill is part of the GOP tactics to make the Taft bill appear more "moderate" by comparison—if being made to walk the plank by that pious pirate, Senator Taft, is more "moderate" than having your head cut off by Freebooter Fred Hartley.

But labor is in no mood to be kidded by any Captain Kidd. It will fight with all its might to defend its liberties, its unions and its living standards against any and all such murderous assaults.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

CLANCY was just walking along minding his own business, when up came a stranger and threw his arms around him.

"My friend," said he.

"Pzzatso?" said Clancy, scratching his back, where he seemed to have been pricked by something sharp.

"You're not working?"

"Not every hour of the blessed day, praise be," said Clancy.

"Ah, work!" exclaimed the stranger, sitting down on a park bench, with Clancy impatient to be on his way, but too polite to leave him talking. "Work is our salvation—honest labor. I take off my hat to the man who earns his bread by the sweat of his brow."

The stranger took off his hat. "And good day to you," said Clancy, tipping his and seeing his chance to be off.

BUT THE stranger stopped him. "I'm in a position to bring you great benefits," he said.

"If it's insurance you're selling . . .," said Clancy.

The stranger was not to be interrupted. "You want to be free, don't you?", he continued. "Free to work when you will, as long as you will and with whom you will. I will win you the right to work."

"No more No-Help-Wanted signs, come the next depression," said Clancy, thinking to humor him.

"AH, FREEDOM! Ah, work!" the stranger exclaimed. "Work turns the wheels of industry, making them pour forth a golden stream of profit—the reward of honest enterprise, the chance for every man to become a millionaire. Work brings the prices down."

"Not in my neighborhood," murmured Clancy.

"I have a mandate from the people", the stranger continued.

"And what people might you be referring to?" inquired Clancy politely.

"I have a mandate to outlaw strikes. I believe in the right to strike, but there must be no strikes that affect the public welfare—and no strikes of any kind, until there has been plenty of cooling off and . . . er, other procedures . . ."

"Until the boss is good and ready to break them?" said Clancy, helping him out.

"I WOULDN'T put it that way," the stranger answered. "But freedom must be restored to the employer, God bless him, freedom of speech, freedom to hire and fire, freedom to run his business his own way—and, yes, freedom to break strikes in the good old American Plan way.

"And if you ba . . ., I mean, brothers still insist on quitting work, we'll have injunctions, fines and jail sentences to keep you on the job. And any picketing will be illegal that might deter loyal workers from working.

"Ah, work! Ah, freedom! The employer must be freed from union tyranny. The Wagner Act must be amended to make any union activity an unfair labor practice."

"Now I place you," said Clancy. "You must represent that National Association of Manufacturers."

"YOU MISUNDERSTAND," the stranger corrected. "I'm a friend of labor. I believe in unions—of the right kind. I believe in collective bargaining, provided there's no combination between the workers in different shops, no industry-wide bargaining, no monopolistic labor conspiracy to raise wages at the expense of profits.

"My purpose is to free the workingman, free him from the closed shop; free him to work for less than union wages and under non-union conditions, if he prefers; free him from paying union dues; free him from radical leaders—we'll say whom he may or may not elect."

"AND AS to wages and working conditions," said Clancy, "since you mention such sordid matters?"

"Ah, my friend," said the stranger, "such details may safely be left to the law of supply and demand and the generosity of fair-minded employers.

"But I must mention one final freedom, that is close to my heart, freeing the worker from politics, by outlawing union contributions to the PAC."

"I get it," said Clancy. "I might have known. You must be that Congressman got elected when I and the boys from my shop went fishing last election day. This is Defend Labor Month. Now you listen to me—."

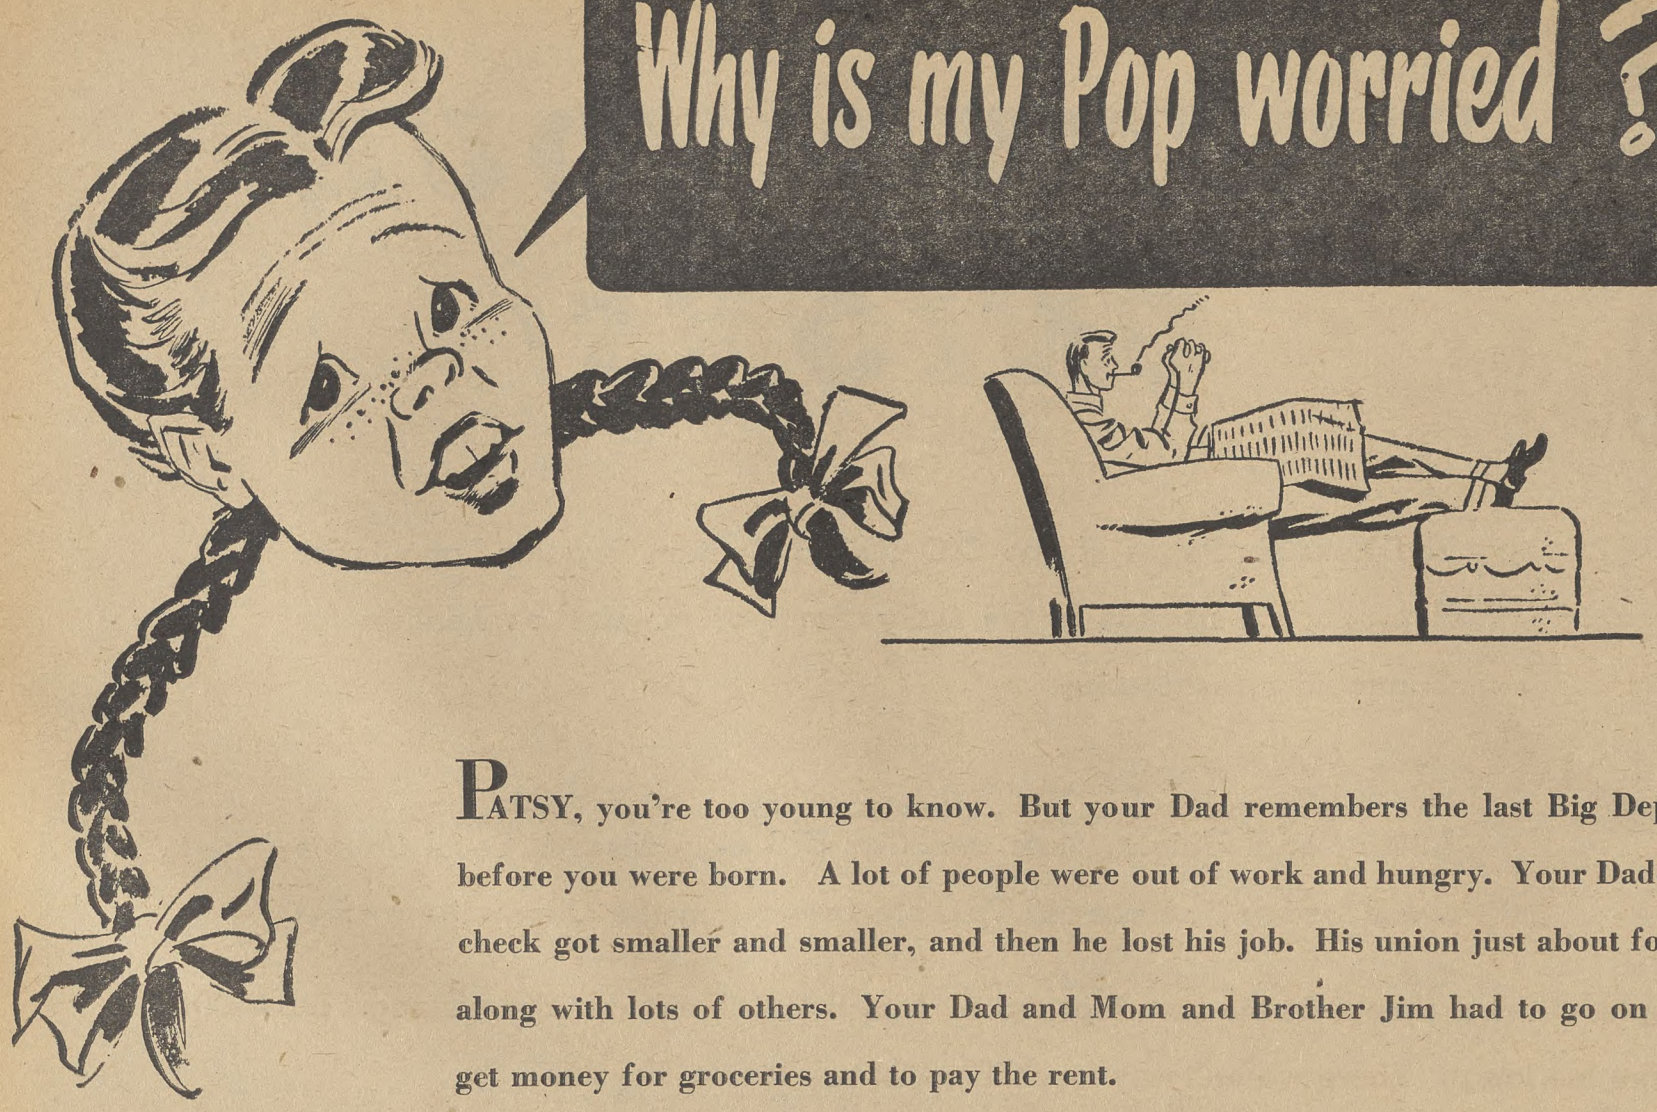
Why is my Pop worried?



PATSY, you're too young to know. But your Dad remembers the last Big Depression, before you were born. A lot of people were out of work and hungry. Your Daddy's paycheck got smaller and smaller, and then he lost his job. His union just about folded up, along with lots of others. Your Dad and Mom and Brother Jim had to go on relief to get money for groceries and to pay the rent.

Your Dad is worried because the same thing is starting to happen all over again. And Congress is helping it happen. Those labor laws that Congress is talking about are making your Daddy upset. They have more new words than your fourth-grade reader. Words like "injunction" and "industry-wide bargaining" and "equality" between employers and workers. There are all sorts of ideas about what these words mean, but your Dad knows what those words will do to his union. He's worried about you and your mother and the whole country. Seems like a big order, but it's so. Because these three are all tied together—families, unions and the United States of America.

It looks as though what happened in the last Big Depression may happen again. Because if Congress passes those labor laws, they would tie up your Daddy's union so tight it could hardly move. It would take as long to get a wage increase as it does for your family to get a bigger apartment. Pretty soon the manufacturers would find out that your Dad and a lot of other workers couldn't buy new radios and ice boxes and autos. And then there would be a lot of people thrown out of work. If that happens, you'll be lucky to have beans on the table for dinner. That, Pasty, is why your Dad is worried—and why he hopes Congress won't pass those labor bills.

What can you do about it? Plenty! You can write your Congressmen and Senators. You can ask your friends to write them. Tell Congress you don't want anti-labor laws. Post cards will do. Send them to your Senators and Congressman in Washington, D. C. Do it today. Tomorrow may be too late!

The Congress of Industrial Organizations

Remember This, Buddy?

Apples—nickel apiece in the last depression. I used to sell 'em to make a living. Jobs? Don't make me laugh. There weren't any for millions of us. It was like this . . .

1929 Wages weren't so bad. But prices and profits were way up. The corporations raked in seven billion dollars profit in 1929—three billion more than in '24. People like me just didn't make enough to buy the stuff we'd helped produce. Unions were weak—couldn't do much more than squawk. You know what happened—the Big Depression!

1947 So what's cooking today? Prices so high your wages will hardly put meat on the table. Profits last year, twelve billion dollars—highest on record! A lot of business men worried sick about another Big Depression. And Congress fighting unions to keep the country safe for the corportions. It looks to me like . . .

BILLS TO WEAKEN UNIONS don't make sense. A lot of the laws Congress is talking about sound innocent enough until you take them apart. Injunctions, industry-wide bargaining, union security, secondary this and secondary that—one Congressman had the right word for it: "Gobbldygook"! The two dollar words in all the cure-alls add up just to this—weaker unions. Weak unions mean lower wages. And lower wages with today's high prices mean another big depression.

IT HAPPENED BEFORE . . .

IT CAN HAPPEN AGAIN

What can you and I do about it? Plenty! We can write our Congressman and Senators. We can ask our friends to write them. Tell Congress we don't want anti-labor laws. Post cards will do. Send them to your Senators and Congressman in Washington, D. C. Do it today. Tomorrow may be too late!

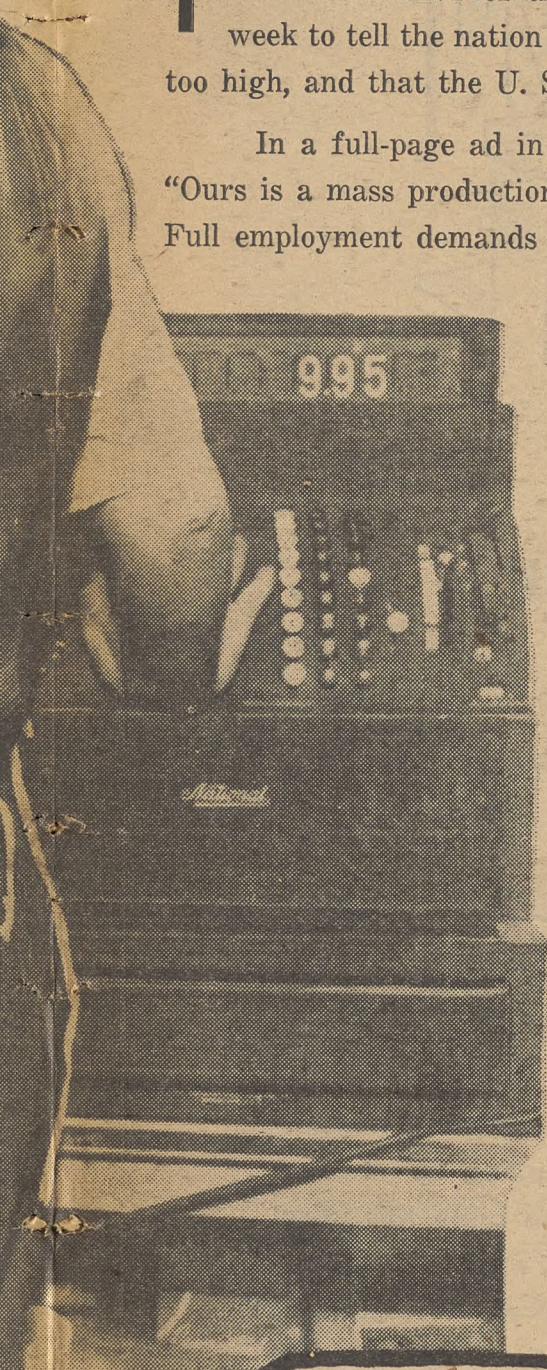
What's happened to prices?

THE PRESIDENT of the world's largest department store spent $3,000 last week to tell the nation what everyone knows—that prices and profits are far too high, and that the U. S. faces a depression unless prices are lowered.

In a full-page ad in the N. Y. Times, Pres. Jack I. Straus of Macy's said: "Ours is a mass production economy. Prosperity depends upon full employment. Full employment demands that more and more units be made and sold. There is overwhelming evidence that this cannot be accomplished at the present price levels. We believe that the present high national income and the resultant prosperity can be maintained indefinitely at somewhat lower price levels. Unless prices are lowered, we believe that a business recession is probable.



"The rising increase in efficiency should be translated into lower prices rather than additional profits . . . Profit margins in many cases are higher than normal."

Mr. Straus might have quoted some figures. They're from government statistics. They show that in the last NINE MONTHS prices have risen almost as fast as they did in the previous SEVEN YEARS! Reporting on prices of wholesale commodities (reflected in retail stores), the Bureau of Labor Statistics pointed out (1) that from August, 1939, to June, 1946, non-farm commodities rose 36% and farm products and food rose 64%; (2) that from June, 1946, to March, 1947, non-farm commodities rose 44% and farm products and food rose 48%! The percentages are based on 1926 prices.

THIS WEEK President Truman placed the responsibility for lower prices squarely on business. He said the only weapon the government had had to fight rising prices was the OPA. Last year most OPA controls were eliminated. Chief agitators for a let-the-prices-rise policy were the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce.

The CIO at that time warned against the policy. It called for retention of price controls. It said: "The crisis is not merely an individual problem of the wage earner, the salaried worker, the veteran pension holder, the pensioned widow, the aged worker dependent on social payments . . . The threat of starvation and under-nourishment for them is the threat which inflation holds for the entire country."

Today the purchasing power of the dollar is worth just two-thirds of what it was before the war. A worker who makes $46 a week can buy less than $30 worth of goods by 1939 standards. In other words, if he was making $30 in 1939 and is making $46 now, he is not so well off as he was before the war.

BIGGEST problem for every American family is the rising cost of food. It has shot up higher than any other basic commodity—almost double what it was in August 1939. In two years, 1945 and 1946, the wholesale cost of food rose 58%. Wholesale prices were reflected in every grocery store.

Why did this happen? The answer, according to the CIO Research Dept., is PROFITS. Analyzing 16 food firms, the CIO researchers reported that "food profits were what they were because of the short range view of industry that the public should pay as high a price as the market would bear." For instance, Ward Baking profits for 1946 increased 255% over 1945 —$3,642,738 as compared with $1,122,650. "1946 profits represented a return on investment or net worth of 20.4%. This is more than six times the 3.3% return on net worth in 1936-39 and three times their return of 6.9% in the war years 1942-45."

Noting the 58% price in wholesale food prices during 1945 and 1946, the researchers reported that hourly wage rates rose only 21% in that period. "According to the 1939 census of manufacturing, wages represented less than 9% of the value of the product in food industries. This means that food companies could maintain their same profit level by increasing prices only 2%. With increased productivity and efficiency of operations, most industries could absorb this increased wage cost without passing any of it on to the public. But passed on as it was, the food industry increased prices more than 30 times what was needed to take care of the wage increase."

"Maybe I'm not a Union Member . . .

BUT I'm a businessman—a small businessman—and I know what's good for my business. Customers! You know, most of my customers are working people—buying things to feed their families. And it's kinda like I depend on them to make my living. When they've got jobs and good wages, I make out all right. I guess that goes for most small business people, too. But let me tell you something—it wasn't like that all the time. No sir! I remember back in the 20's when the unions were practically knocked cold. Not much protection for the working people. Low wages, no security. It hit me right in the cash register. Unemployment and then the Big Depression. Boy, how I hate to think about those days! Lost my store—same as a lot of other guys.

NOW it seems like the whole thing's getting ready to start all over again. Congress is itchin' to bust the unions. Seems to think the working people—my customers—got too much money. Yet somehow it just doesn't fit. Congress isn't squawking a bit about the tremendous profits the corporations are piling up—twelve billion dollars in 1946 and more to come this year! And how about those monopolies? I read in the newspaper the other day where 250 corporations control two thirds of the manufacturing in the whole country! They're growing bigger and bigger—yet not a peep out of Congress. The way I see it, it doesn't make sense. Bust the unions and you bust me. It's just not good business. . . ."

HERE'S WHAT TO DO ABOUT IT. Sit down and write to your Congressman and Senators in Washington, D. C. Tell them to fight against anti-labor legislation. Get your friends and neighbors to do it too. Work with labor and small business to defend all America's standard of living. Do it Today!

THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS.

Who, me?

Yes, you! You're headed straight for trouble.

Doctors and dentists, lawyers and school teachers, salesmen and clerks. Farmers, grocers, butchers and bakers.

Your income depends on a prosperous America. A prosperous America depends on good wages, regularly paid. When wages drop, you know what happens. Everyone gets hit. It happened in '29. It may happen again!

Right now wages are in danger. This is why:

FACT: Good wages depend on strong labor unions. Individual workers cannot bargain with employers on an equal basis without a strong union behind them.

FACT: Congress is discussing legislation that will drastically weaken the strength of unions to bargain collectively for adequate wages.

FACT: The unions were weakened once before. And prices and profits in the late 1920's soared to record heights.

FACT: During those years workers' wages lagged behind prices. Buying fell off. Men lost their jobs. The Big Depression began.

Today the same thing is happening. President Truman has warned that prices are too high. So far business has done almost nothing to lower them.

And if Congress passes laws which weaken labor, everyone's buying power will drop. The 1929-33 depression will start all over again.

PROTECT YOURSELF BY PROTECTING AMERICAN LABOR
SAVE AMERICA FROM ANOTHER '29!

What can you do? Plenty! You can write your Congressman and Senators. You can ask your friends to write them. Tell Congress that you can't afford laws that weaken unions. Send letters or post cards to your Senators and Congressman in Washington, D. C. Do it today—your interests are at stake!

1/4 MILLION VETERANS USE UP JOBLESS PAY

Convention Schedule

CIO International Unions and State Councils are scheduled to hold conventions as follows:

Pennsylvania Council, Chestnut Street Auditorium, Harrisburg, opening Apr. 23.

Packinghouse Workers, Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio, May 5-8.

Utah Council, Newhouse Hotel, Salt Lake City, May 5-7.

Montana Council, Eagles Hall, Butte, May 5-6.

Marine Cooks and Stewards, San Francisco, Calif., opening May 5.

Virginia Council, Municipal Auditorium, Norfolk, May 7-10.

Oil Workers, Kansas City, Mo., beginning Aug. 11.

West Virginia Council, Clarksburg, Sept. 22-24.

Auto Workers, City Auditorium, Atlantic City, opening Nov. 10.

THE number of ex-servicemen exhausting their jobless pay is rising by leaps and bounds.

Close to a quarter million veterans have used up their unemployment compensation of $20 a week for 52 weeks.

The monthly figure jumped from 26,496 in November to 33,304 in December and 58,582 in January. That is the last month on which the Veterans Administration has a complete record. The grand total of those who could get no more jobless pay as of the end of January was 217,809.

These figures include those who depend on jobs for a livelihood and the self-employed.

Weekly continued claims for unemployment allowances in February averaged more than 1,100,000 for the second consecutive month.

The continued claims for the week ending Feb. 22 rose to 1,145,544. There has been a decline in recent weeks, but for the latest week available, that ending March 29, the figure was still over the million mark, indicating that a large number of veterans are reaching the end of the rope on jobless pay.

Nor do these more recent figures include the number of self-employed forced to seek Federal assistance.

Calls Policy Meet In Steel Talks

Pres. Philip Murray of the CIO Steelworkers this week announced that the executive board of the union will meet in Pittsburgh April 19 and 20 and the general wage policy committee of 160 members will meet there April 21. Murray is calling the meeting in connection with the present negotiations in the steel industry.

NEGRO VETS' PROBLEMS

NEGRO veterans of World War II are faced with all of the problems of other veterans on an intensified scale, declare Charles G. Bolte, Chairman of the American Veterans Committee, and Louis Harris in Our Negro Veterans, 32-page pamphlet issued this week by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., of New York.

The pamphlet is based on a series of surveys made by the Bureau of the Census, the Natl. Urban League, the Southern Regional Council, and the American Veterans Committee.

"Veterans generally want jobs that pay more; Negro veterans desperately need jobs of any kind," the authors point out. "Veterans need housing; the Negro is always in dire need of housing.

"One out of three white veterans cannot find adequate educational and training facilities; four out of five Negro veterans are faced with most unsatisfactory educational and training opportunities. The Negro veteran meets greater obstacles than the non-Negro veteran at every turn for one reason: his skin is darker."

In 41 out of 67 towns and cities surveyed, the desire for better jobs ranked first among all needs. In most places Negro veterans found only menial old-line Negro jobs offered.

Our Negro Veterans is No. 128 in the series of popular, factual pamphlets issued by the Public Affairs Committee, Inc., non-profit educational organization at 22 E. 38th St., New York 16, N. Y. The pamphlet costs 20c.

Court Decision Should

BAN STATE MEDDLING IN CHALMERS PLANT

By ESTHER HANDLER

THE U. S. Supreme Court ruling in the Bethlehem and Allegheny-Ludlum cases may change the course of the dispute at the Allis-Chalmers plant at West Allis, Wis. The court forbade state agencies to act where the NLRB has established a federal policy.

CIO attorneys in Milwaukee are of the opinion that this decision establishes that the Wisconsin Employment Relations Board has no jurisdiction certifying the bargaining agency at the Allis-Chalmers plant since the original certification was made by the NLRB. Therefore, the WERB representation election of Jan. 26 was illegal.

This has been the contention of Local 248, CIO Auto Workers, which returned to work last month following a 11-month strike. Early in January the union challenged WERB's authority by appealing to the Federal court for a temporary injunction to prevent the board from holding the election.

The union's attorney at that time gave Federal Judge Duffy a copy of NLRB's brief prepared for the U. S. Supreme Court in the Bethlehem and Allegheny-Ludlum cases. Duffy, a brother-in-law of Allis-Chalmer's vice-Pres. Harold Story, apparently did not even examine the brief, but denied the injunction.

Meanwhile, WERB conducted a hearing this week on the company's petition for a new bargaining election. The company contends that labor turnover since Jan. 26 election has substantially changed the composition of employes in the bargaining unit, but its real objective is to by-pass final determination of the Jan. 26 election.

It now appears that the election will establish Local 248 as the bargaining agent.

Final results now hinge on two impounded votes cast by the local's president and vice-president. WERB ruled that these two votes could not be counted until the NLRB rules on the employment status of these two officers. They were discharged by the company during the strike and the union filed unfair labor practices against the company with NLRB.

CIO RAILROAD WORKERS SEEK $100 MINIMUM PENSIONS

THE CIO Railroad Workers are seeking amendment of the Railroad Retirement Act to provide minimum pensions of $100 monthly with benefits graduated upward to $150 monthly for workers in the higher classifications. These sums would be paid to those eligible for full retirement.

The CIO union also calls for a maximum levy of 3 per cent on railroad workers income and the payment of the balance of all taxes to the retirement fund by the carriers. The workers and the railroads now pay 5¾ per cent each and will go to 6 per cent in 1949. Other union proposals would:

Make the widow eligible immediately to collect pension benefits, irrespective of her age, with benefits to her based on the employe's period of service up to the time of his decease.

Provide compulsory retirement of railroad employes after 30 years' service, regardless of sex, with full and complete benefits. The present law provides retirement for women at 60 and for men at the age of 65, except in the case of certain disabilities, when the worker may be retired earlier at reduced benefits. Pres. A. B. Martin of the CIO union this week said:

"The CIO Railroad Workers are opposed to the present system by which loyal over-aged workers are forced to hang on to their jobs because of the failure on the part of our law makers to enact into law a Railroad Retirement Act that would enable the railroad employes to retire without being forced into the poor house."

Texas Oil Worker Featured In CIO News Hits The Bricks

ROBERT L. ALLEN, featured on the front page of the March 24 issue of The CIO News as a typical CIO Oil Worker, was pounding the picket line this week at the Pure Oil refinery at Port Neches, Tex.

Pure Oil operations were down also at Toledo, Ohio, and at Cabin Creek and Dawes, W. Va., because of the company's failure to sign a nation-wide agreement for a 22c hourly wage increase and uniform clauses, Allen said:

"Pure Oil here tried to split us off from the other groups by offering 22c at Port Neches and less elsewhere. I believe CIO unionism means unity and concerted action by all workers. So I am proud to be on the picket line today fighting for decent standards of living for all Pure Oil workers."

The Shell Oil refinery at Pasadena, Tex., this week was still down as a result of a strike by the Oil Workers which began March 15. Shell refused to renew an agreement with standard clauses accepted by other refineries of the area.

CIO LONGSHOREMEN WARN 'THE DANGER IS REACTION'

By MORRIS WATSON

PRES. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union opened the union's seventh biennial convention in San Francisco this week with the warning that with high profits and depressed real wages, the country is headed for a bust "that will make 1932 look like a pink tea!"

The largest membership in ILWU's history was represented by approximately 200 delegates. At least 50 of them were sent by some 30,000 members in Hawaii where striking sugar workers have won an overwhelming victory under the ILWU banner.

The convention approved a report of the union's officers which said:

"The President and the 80th Congress have adhered to a program of reaction which includes a wild red-baiting campaign, interference in Greece, betrayal of China and Palestine, use of atomic diplomacy, double crossing of American veterans, decapitation of the housing program, wholesale tax grabs, and pilfering of the U. S. Treasury by big business handouts of public lands and natural resources."

The report, which was adopted in full as a statement of policy, concluded:

"We know that there can be and will be no question of communism, socialism or anarchy in this country, or any other country for that matter, just as long as the prevailing economic order brings security and well-being to its people."

A sharp resolution condemning red-baiting and proposals to outlaw the Communist Party or "any other minority party" was also adopted. The resolution said:

"Communism is not an issue in the U.S. nor are economic, political, democratic or civil liberties threatened by agents of the Soviet Union.

"The real threat stems directly from the greed and the desire for imperialist control by American trusts and monopolies. They are determined to depress American living standards, to smash all forms of workers' organizations and curtail the liberties of the people so that no effective voice can be raised against them."

Resolutions also were adopted in memory of President Roosevelt and Sidney Hillman, late president of the CIO Clothing Workers.

In Telephone Walkout

THREE STATES TURN STRIKE-BREAKERS

TELEPHONE workers this week got a taste of government strike-breaking in three states.

While members of the independent National Federation of Telephone Workers in other states enjoyed the privilege of striking in support of their demands, their fellow workers in Virginia and Indiana stayed on the job as they were required to do under the states' laws. Both states require waiting periods in utility strikes.

New Jersey also acted as strike-breaker for the world's monopoly—the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., and its subsidiaries.

Ten minutes after the strike started April 7, New Jersey took over the N. J. Bell Telephone Co., but discovered that there was no way of enforcing the law.

Two days later on the recommendation of Gov. Driscoll, the Republican-controlled legislature put "teeth" into the law.

The union would be liable to a fine of $10,000 for each day the strike continues and the individual strikers to fines of $250 to $500 and 30 days in jail for each violation. The bill would also send the dispute to compulsory arbitration.

Elsewhere on the state-legislative front organized labor scored two victories and suffered one defeat.

The Republican-dominated legislature in Delaware passed a bill prohibiting the closed shop, banning mass picketing and outlawing jurisdictional strikes. Gov. Bacon signed the measure within minutes after it was approved by both houses.

The Texas house rejected by an 11-vote margin a proposed constitutional ban on the closed shop, and the Colorado senate defeated a proposed closed shop ban by a single vote.

The unions this week mobilizing for a finish fight in Iowa on measures banning the closed and union shops and maintenance of membership, passed by the senate and up for consideration in the house.

Cutest trick of the week is a proviso that would require a worker's wife or husband to sign a notarized permit before allowing check-off of union dues.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

LOCAL 600 ELECTION: Thomas Thompson was re-elected president of CIO Auto Workers Local 600, largest local in the nation, by a vote of 20,075 against 6,916 for his opponent, Mike Magee. James Tamoor, incumbent vice-president, won by more than 10,000 votes over his nearest opponent, and William Johnson was re-elected recording secretary by a margin approaching that of Thompson.

There will be a run-off for the post of financial secretary. James Couser, incumbent, received 12,226 votes, and Paul Taylor, 11,093.

BANKERS VIOLATE 40-CENT WAGE LAW: Thomas D. O'Malley of the Wage and Hour and Public Contracts Divisions laid it on the line when he spoke to a conference of 16 bankers' associations at Chicago. He told the bankers that 20 per cent of the banking and trust companies inspected by the divisions in the fiscal year 1946 had violated the 40c an hour minimum wage law. The banking violations were about twice as high as the national average for all industries covered by the law.

REWARD FOR FAITHFUL SERVICE: Because he refused to cross the picket lines of the workers who had served under him, A. E. Dunham, chief engineer of the Brooklyn YWCA, has been dismissed by the "Y's" directors. Dunham had been employed by the "Y" 15 years. Building service workers—members of the CIO Office & Professional Workers—are now in the sixth week of their strike.

Dunham returned the check for one month's salary which was sent him "in recognition of many years of faithful service" and requested that this "credit" be kept permanently on his books rather than "sell out" his record of service "at such prohibitive discount." He asked that two weeks of vacation pay due him be remitted, and stated that "nothing further is required."

Up South Carolina Textile Pay $20 Million

THE CIO Textile Workers have won wage increases during the past year that will add more than $20 million annually to the pay checks of the employes in the South Carolina textile industry.

This announcement was made this week by South Carolina Director Franz Daniel of the CIO Organizing Committee when he issued a resume' of the activities of the committee in the state since its organizing campaign opened late in May, last year.

Most of the $20 million wage increase, he noted, will go directly to the merchants, professional men, realtors, and other business people of the state—"spent right here at home," Daniel said.

"The raise," he said, "was 8c per hour, and was negotiated in August between the union and Northern textile mills, employes of which are practically all organized in the CIO.

"AT that time our campaign in the South was swinging into high gear and the South Carolina operators of unorganized mills voluntarily gave the wage increase in an effort to defeat us. (The raise was negotiated for the organized plants.)

"The union in the North has now won another ten-cent increase which so far has not been put into effect here."

Daniel said the CIO has won 17 NLRB elections in South Carolina since the drive started and has lost only 2.

"Established CIO local unions have also enjoyed a marked increase in membership," Daniel said. "South Carolina CIO locals now represent more than 50,000 workers.

"And our present membership and every one on our staff, including myself, are certain our future prospects are for a steady growth."

OTHER notable points in the report:

"The Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers increased their membership by more than 1,000 . . .

"The Clothing Workers, after a long battle in South Carolina, finally established their first local in the state—at the Manhattan Shirt Co., Charleston—and their outlook is extremely bright . . .

"The Food & Tobacco Workers won an election at the Charleston plant of the American Tobacco Co., employing 1565 workers . . .

"The Furniture Workers formed several locals in the state . . .

Employes of seven of the ten cotton mills in the city of Rock Hill are organized into CIO unions, for the best TWUA percentage of any major textile city in the South."

South Carolina CIO victories are divided, according to unions, as follows:

Food & Tobacco Workers, 4; Textile Workers, 1; Auto Workers, 1; Stone & Allied Products Workers, 1; Furniture Workers, 1; Mine, Mill & Smelter Workers, 8 and Hosiery Workers, 1.

Sprucing Up

WANT TO LOOK TALLER?

By HANNA SHERMAN

A problem that frequently comes to my attention is the plaint of the girl between 4 feet 11 and 5 feet 2. She feels that she is not tall enough to wear clothes well, that most of the clothes she tries on (or even buys) do not "do enough" for her. This is especially true of short girls who are inclined to be overweight.

One of the things I try to impress on women who come to me for advice is that they must accept the fact of their physical height. Even the most strenuous stretching exercises won't help much to make us taller than we really are. How tall we appear is another matter.

The really smart short woman is aware of the problem of correct proportion and the right clothes to wear. So she can often look more attractive and appealing than her taller sister who feels she "can wear anything."

One thing is sadly true. If you are on the petite side, you have to be more careful in your choice of clothes than any other type. You have more do's and don'ts to follow. But keep to the rules and you can look younger, daintier and more feminine than even the most long legged fashion model.

This long leggedness, incidentally, is what creates the illusion of gracefulness and height. It's one of the most important tricks of optical illusion for you short gals to learn.

HOW to achieve it? First, keep waistlines high. This will give you a longer look from waist to knee. To further the illusion, wear your skirts a little longer than you think you should. Then, too, keep any trimming or detail in your dress, suits and coats above the waist.

Or you can use color and trimming in a long line from neck to hem—a row of buttons down the front or side, for instance. Or a line that runs in a diagonal across the waist and down the side of the skirt.

Avoid breaking your height with two color costumes (one color above the waist and another color below.) Shun blousy effects. They tend to give the short girl a square, straight up and down look.

Instead, look for a smooth fitted line through the midriff to accentuate the waistline and bosom. This smooth midriff look is the most potent slim making line we know.

Perhaps you enjoy the comfort of a blouse and skirt. You can have it by wearing the fashionable jumper with a contrasting blouse instead. It's clean-looking, fresh—much more becoming.

IN choosing a suit remember that the bolero type, fitted or loose hanging is best. It, too, gives you that very important long line from waist to hem. The longest jacket for you should be just below waist length, ending right above the hips.

The new monotone costumes are made to order for the short girl. But large prints, plaids and checks are off your list. Don't overlook the height giving advantage of matching your hat to your costume.

Or at least repeating the color of your costume in the hat trimming. Anything that makes the eye of the observer look upward is your dish.

The look of being well organized in your clothes and meticulously neat will make you look slimmer. Avoid dangling accessories, large flowing scarfs, droopy veils, heavy charm bracelets, fancy shoes. In general, be sure that your accessories are in proportion to your size. Always make your choice of these by standing several feet away from a full length mirror to judge their effect.

Accessories for the girl who wants to look taller should range in size from the smallest for those who are short and slender to medium large for those on the definitely heavy side.

These are lots of do's and don'ts, but each is a must if you really want to look taller.

SUGGESTIONS FOR HOME CARPENTERS

Scissors, knives, saws and chisels should be carefully kept beyond the reach of the very young. But by the time they are four or five, controls are sufficiently developed so that children can safely learn to handle tools. The desire to tinker and work creatively is strong in children and should be encouraged. If given simple skills, they can acquire a long time resource and have fun while they're doing it. You can help by providing sturdy tools (not too large) and working with your children. If you need suggestions, Edna Plimpton's "Your Workshop" (MacMillan) specifies materials and simple patterns to start young carpenters and willing parents on their way. (Photo: Monkmeyer—Carew)

The Woman's Angle

NOT YOUR BRAND, GENTLEMEN

BIG Business had beter watch out or unions, women's auxiliaries, consumers organizations and other "special interest" groups will capture the minds of American women, warns an interesting little pamphlet, "The Woman's Angle," being circulated by Flanley & Woodward, public relations firm in New York.

Indirectly the points made in this pamphlet, which is a reprint of a speech made by Sally Woodward at a recent Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers' conference of public relations executives, are quite flattering to the so-called "special interest" groups.

The pamphlet starts out by calling attention to two important facts: Women hold the "balance of power", as there are 1,380,000 more women than men over 14 years of age in the U.S. They also have the power to swing elections —at the time of the last national election, there were 1,171,900 more women potential voters than men.

"The answer to whether women can be moved by the economic story so important to business today is written for all to read who will, in women's current activities," says the pamphlet.

"Women are moved on the subject of economics — remember their primary interests: health, welfare and security. But business is not supplying the stimulus —and as a result business will not be pleased with the direction of the present move towards women's economic literacy, unless some quick steps are taken."

A review of the situation so far shows that these groups "have the edge on industry," it declares, and are busy preaching economic literacy . . . to avidly interested women all over this country. But what brand of economics? Well, gentlemen, it's not your brand . . . ."

"Women hold the balance of power today," concludes the pamphlet. "Women's opinion — the way it is molded—will decide whether we stem the tide with an appreciation and understanding of our capitalistic democracy or whether we join the trend towards a socialized economy."

858% Profit

An 858% increase in profits after taxes in a year for one oil company was reported this week by the Research Dept. of the CIO Oil Workers.

The firm that showed this remarkable gain per share in 1946 as compared with 1945 was the Atlantic Refining Co., the union said.

Reporting on 20 other companies, the union declared that profit increases per firm in the 1945-46 period ranged from 17 to 211%.

Bills to Wreck Labor Clear Committees

AMERICAN unions face the most critical weeks in their entire history.

This week the House of Representatives is scheduled to vote on the most devastating anti-labor bill ever proposed in the United States.

Next week the Senate is due to start debate on a bill of almost equal severity.

Passage of either of the measures will have a devastating effect on every union in the nation.

President Truman as yet has given no indication what action he will take when the proposals reach the White House.

In the House, the top Republican policy committee has already given a general okay to the Hartley (R. N. J.) omnibus bill, which contains almost every severe anti-labor proposal brought to the attention of the House Labor Committee. Hartley expects the bill to move through the "traffic cop" House Rules Committee on April 14, and to be voted upon by April 17 or 18.

Senate Republicans have called a policy meeting for this week to consider the labor bills. The Senate Labor Committee will probably report out its findings within a week.

With a nod of approval from top GOP members of Congress, the House Labor Committee was moving quickly to approve various sections of the bill brought before them by Rep. Hartley. The New Deal Democrats on the committee comprise a small, ineffectual minority in opposition to the GOP "kill labor" proposals.

PRINCIPAL provisions of the Hartley Bills as they were sent to the Labor Committee for approval included these:

● INDUSTRYWIDE BARGAINING OUTLAWED. No collective bargaining unit would be permitted to represent employes of competing enterprises, except in a few small plants in a 50-mile radius.

● CLOSED SHOP ILLEGAL. No union contract would be permitted which called for hiring of union members only.

● UNION SECURITY ON ICE. Contracts calling for all employes to join a union would be permitted only when the employer agreed to bargain on the subject. No strike with a goal of union security would be permitted.

● INJUNCTIONS GRANTED. Would allow Dept. of Justice to get an anti-strike injunction against unions when Attorney General decides that a "threatened or actual" strike imperils public health, welfare or safety.

● LABOR BOARD ABOLISHED. Present Natl. Labor Relations Board would be wiped out, with a new "Labor Management Board" in its place to act against unions as well as employers. New independent conciliation service would be created, and an administrator to enforce new act.

● STRIKE ACTION LIMITED. Thirty-day cooling-off period would be compulsory. No strike would be legal unless majority of all affected employes have voted wish to strike and to reject management's "final offer."

● SYMPATHETIC ACTION BANNED. Sympathy strikes, together with jurisdictional walkouts and any form of sitdown strikes, would be made illegal.

● COURT ACTION ENCOURAGED. Unions would be suable in federal courts for breach of contract by members. Unions would be brought under jurisdiction of anti-trust laws which were framed to curb corporation monopolies.

● HEALTH AND WELFARE FUNDS LIMITED. Royalty payments based on production and intended for union health and welfare funds would be made illegal.

● UNION ACTIVITIES ENDANGERED. Mass picketing or "unlawful concerted activities" would be banned by law. Unions would be subject to injunctions against these and other normal workers' strike activities.

● WAGNER ACT REPEALED. Substantial sections of Wagner Act upholding unions' rights to free collective bargaining would be repealed.

● UNION DEMOCRACY LIMITED. "Communists," persons favoring change of government by illegal means, and persons believed to have supported Communist doctrines or policies, would be liable to expulsion from union organizations.

THE Senate Committee proposals were slower to take shape, since there are areas of disagreement among the Taft group, the "liberal Republicans" and the New Deal Democrats on the committee.

The Taft proposals called for granting 60-day injunctions against striking unions; banning the closed shop and limiting the union shop; curtailing industry-wide bargaining; making unions suable in federal courts for alleged contract violations; forcing unions to register and file financial statements; banning secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes; preventing unionization of foremen; regulating welfare funds; and forcing cooling off periods during which a new federal mediation service could intervene.

Sen. Taft, a man never known for his high good humor, described his proposals as intended "to restore justice in relations between employers and employes."

BUDGET CUTS HIT PEOPLE

SEVERE slashes voted by the House in the appropriations of the Labor Dept., Natl. Labor Relations Board and Federal Security Agency are a "backward step contrary to the will of the people," the CIO told a Senate committee last week.

Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, appearing before a Senate Appropriations sub-committee, demanded that the cuts—which will cripple many activities of the three government agencies—be restored by the Senate. The fund allotments cover the fiscal year starting July 1.

"Pres. Truman submitted a modest budget request" for the three agencies, Carey testified, and in the interest of economy "his request was considerably lower than what the agencies wanted. The total he asked for was too little rather than too much."

Nevertheless the House, spurred on by the GOP leadership, knocked 40% out of the NLRB request, and voted an approximately similar cut in the Labor Dept.'s operating funds.

"THE murderous cuts made by the House mean waste, not economy," Carey told the committee. "The nation will lose far more in dollars as a result of the services that are slashed than will be saved on paper, and under the tax bill of the House Republicans, even those alleged savings will benefit huge taxpayers, not the man in the street."

"This is a reckless program aimed at bringing back the situation in the 1920's, when business ran amuck," Carey said, "when vast private fortunes were built up without regard for the welfare of the masses, when investors and consumers as well as labor and farmers were milked, and when the nation was led headlong into a depression which spread throughout the world and resulted in nazism and war."

THROUGH THE WRINGER

SOME hold-up men have been known to be considerate enough to leave their victims with a little pocket-change, for car-fare or other immediate needs.

But the big-business lawyers and lobbyists who drafted the Hartley bill are more thorough and less merciful.

Their bill, just passed by the House, is designed not only for a brutal blackjacking of labor but also for a scientific picking of the workers' pockets and for robbing them of every last union protection. It would steal everything, right down to labor's shirt.

IT IS impossible to enumerate all the vicious provisions of the House-passed bill without going into hundreds of pages of detailed explanation.

It is doubtful if even the bill's Congressional sponsors know everything that is in it. They took it on faith from the lawyers of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and Chamber of Commerce, and from lobbyists of such anti-union corporations as Allis-Chalmers and J. I. Case.

All they wanted to know apparently was that the bill should include the maximum program of big business for rubbing the workers' nose in the dirt.

TO SAY that the House bill turns back the clock 50 years, destroying all the hard-won union rights of that period, is an understatement.

It would certainly destroy the protections of the Wagner Act, revive the anti-union injunction, and restore the open-shop era of all-powerful employers tyrannizing over unorganized or weakly organized workers.

But it would do more than that. It would create new kinds of restrictions and oppressions that did not even exist 50 years ago.

It would not only free employers to attack unions and prevent organization as they used to do, but would place new union-breaking and wage-cutting weapons in their hands.

It would actually make the government an employers' instrument for regimenting, crippling and hog-tieing the entire labor movement.

THE HOUSE bill and its Senate counterpart, the Taft bill, would commit the following among many other crimes:

They would destroy national unions, breaking them up into weak and isolated groups, prohibiting common bargaining with more than one employer and the operation of any common national policy.

They would destroy industrial unionism, requiring separate balloting for representation along craft and every other-which lines.

They would destroy union security, outlawing the closed shop and placing so many restrictions on any other form of union security as practically to enforce open-shop conditions.

They would prevent collective bargaining, by weighting Labor Board election procedure against the unions, by restricting subjects on which bargaining may take place, and by providing countless excuses for the employer to refuse to bargain with the workers' elected representatives.

They would destroy the right to strike and picket, by illegalizing many different kinds of strikes, by reviving and strengthening the strike-breaking injunction, and by many other restrictions.

THE mask is off the anti-labor politicians. They have shown their muderous intent.

Only a great wave of labor and public indignation and protest can save American living standards and liberties from this brutal assault, which is now moving through its final stages.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

"THERE YOU go exaggerating!" said a sceptical friend. "Congress wants to pass a law restricting unions and Phil Murray starts talking of fascism."

"What he said was that enactment of this legislation would be 'the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States'," I corrected. "And he said it very deliberately."

MY MIND went back to an evening in the winter of 1925.

I was working in Berlin at the time and had been invited to a party in the apartment of an American correspondent there.

The guests were mostly Germans, several of them Jewish. They were liberal and well-informed people, and the conversation turned at times to the possibility of fascism in Germany.

Mussolini was in power in Italy. Trade unionists there were being dosed with castor oil and beaten up. The fascists were hard at work suppressing the labor movement.

In Germany, a crazy demagogue called Hitler was attracting minor attention as he organized his gangs. But the group at the party were more interested in certain reactionary trends developing in the normal political life of the country.

A LAWYER expressed what seemed to be the general attitude.

"What you don't understand," he told me, "is that fascism is alien to the character and traditions of the German people. It might succeed in a country like Italy, but never in Germany.

"Naturally our industrialists try to curb the unions when they get too much power and, naturally, they get scared of the reds. But they operate chiefly through the conservative parties, within our democratic framework, even though some may put a little money into Hitler on the side.

"The German people are much too civilized to fall for the anti-Semitism and other crude demagogy of a Hitler.

"Anyhow, you'll find Hitler's bark is worse than his bite. He'll have to compromise and make concessions, if he ever hopes to win any political following. The talk of fascism is just alarmist exaggeration."

HITLER'S bite was many times worse than his most rabid barking, as the German people later discovered.

And many Americans are discovering that the bite of our labor-baiting politicians is even worse than their bark.

The Hartley and Taft bills have torn the mask off their pretense of wishing simply to remedy certain "labor abuses," without destroying unions or harming the workers.

These bills are blatantly devised to take away most of the workers' democratic union rights, and to make them powerless to bargain effectively with wage-cutting employers.

BUT WHAT has this to do with a "trend to fascism"? Isn't it natural that American industrialists should try to curb the power of the unions? And aren't they operating through our democratic political machinery?

Look beneath the surface forms which fascism has taken in different countries, and you will find, from the earliest stages, certain basic similarities.

The big industrialists and monopolists take alarms at the rising tide of democracy. Having an economic interest in fighting the unions, they are quick to recognize the labor movement as the basic force for democratic progress.

Their chief aim therefore is to weaken the unions and to check labor political activity. Operating through reactionary politicians and parties, they try to use the powers of government as an instrument for suppressing labor and destroying democratic rights.

This is a fascist aim, even though it may be first attempted through the existing democratic machinery. Its complete fulfillment leads to outright fascism.

THE HARTLEY and Taft bills, and other anti-democratic measures now before Congress, are designed to destroy the labor movement for the greater profit of big business; to filch from the people many of their democratic rights; and to use the government itself as an instrument of repression.

They have created a crisis not only for labor but for American democracy. It is no rhetorical exaggeration but a sober statement of fact to say, as Murray did, that they "point the way to the development of fascism in the United States."

IT'S UP TO THE PEOPLE

Anti-Labor Bills Can Be Stopped

Other Stories — Pages 4, 5, 6 and 7. Analysis of Anti-Labor Bills — Pages 9-12. Resolutions — Page 17

By FRED d'AVILA

"THE anti-labor drive in Congress can and must be halted!" That was the do-or-die message taken back to six million CIO members and their families this week from the nation's capital.

The bearers of the message were more than 200 delegates to CIO's Natl. Legislative Conference, held last weekend.

The Conference heard from CIO Pres. Philip Murray, Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey, Vice-Pres. and Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood, General Counsel Lee Pressman, Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, Councils Director John Brophy, PAC Director Jack Kroll and other prominent CIO leaders.

MURRAY'S warning was sharply to the point. He declared that industrialists are stalling collective bargaining while Congress is sharpening its knife for labor.

He told of high prices, exorbitant profits and lowered real wages. He warned that collapse of consumer purchasing power would lead to another '29 depression.

He declared the Hartley and the Ball and Taft bills (see pages 6 and 7) are designed to destroy the Wagner Act.

And he said the provision to ban industry-wide bargaining "will create more confusion and cause more industrial disturbance in the U. S. than any other type of bill that has been presented at least in my lifetime."

"The enactment of these pending bills," Murray continued, "comprehends the complete destruction of all forms of union security. They seek abandonment of the closed shop, maintenance of membership and other forms of union security that have prevailed in the U. S. since the beginning of trade unionism."

He said that the proposed legislation will give employers the chance to interfere with rights of workers to select their own unions, and will allow employers to meddle in unions' internal affairs.

The proposed bills are so severe (see pages 7, 10 and 11) that they caused Murray to declare:

"The enactment of this contemplated legislation is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America. There can be no dispute about that."

Turning to prices and the threat of depression, Murray pointed out that in the last nine months since the wrecking of price control the cost of living has shot up 20%.

"Who is getting this money?" Murray asked. "It certainly has not gone into the pay envelopes of American workers, because their economic conditions have been degraded to a point some 7 or 8% lower than it was after they received their increases one year ago—and it continues to get worse."

Lashing out at the "organized robbery" of big business monopolies, the CIO President pointed out that profits for 1946 were $15 billion and that they are expected to soar to $17 billion in 1947.

THE delegates heard CIO Legislative Director Cowan urge them to take the story back home.

"Get it into the local union halls," he pleaded, "so the rank and file will understand it. And let them convey to Congress what they would like to have in this nation—a program that will establish a sound economic basis for progress and for welfare and that will assure all the people in this country of their free democratic rights for which the war was fought and won."

Resolutions passed by the Conference (see page 17) declared that wage increases are easily possible out of huge profits, and warned that business' "rule or ruin" policy is leading the nation to depression.

Besides calling for defeat of anti-labor legislation, the resolutions urged enactment of: a minimum 75c-an-hour wage law; housing legislation; abolition of the poll tax, establishment of a permanent FEPC, the outlawing of lynching and the protection of civil rights; and an expanded social security program with provision for health and medical care.

The Conference was followed by delegations late this week from Maryland, Pennsylvania and Delaware, with other delegations due this month from New England; New York and New Jersey; Ohio, Indiana, Illinois and Missouri; Wisconsin, Michigan and Minnesota; and Virginia, North and South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, Tennessee, Kentucky and probably other southern states.

As Cowan put it, "The working people of this country are the best possible lobbyists against such legislative monstrosities as the Hartley and Taft anti-labor bills."

And it is up to the working people to get busy!

'CRISIS'

This is a call to action! It is imperative that all CIO affiliates give the widest possible circulation to President Murray's warning that anti-labor bills before Congress are so drastic that they constitute "the first real step toward fascism" in the U.S.A.

What these bills will do to your union is told in a special supplement of this week's CIO NEWS (see center pages). Publication No. 147. Prices: 1,000 for $12; 500 for $7.50; 100 for $2. Order from CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N.W., Washington 6, D. C.

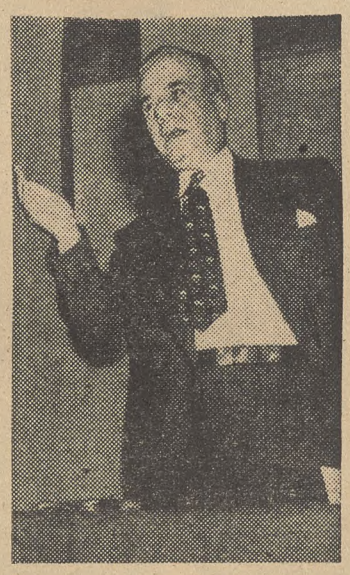
A silent tribute to FDR opened the CIO Natl. Legislative Conference in Washington, D. C. More than 200 delegates heard CIO Pres. Murray warn that not only the labor movement, but the entire democratic structure of the U. S. is endangered by proposed laws to crush unions. "It is the business of CIO," he said, "to lend its energies toward the perpetuity of the traditions of a great people and a great country, the United States of America."

Allan S. Haywood, CIO vice-president and director of organization, urged delegates to "activize our people, our shops, our local officers, our membership and every thinking person in this country under this banner to protect America's freedom."

Nathan Cowan, CIO legislative director, declared that some Congressmen have admitted that they have one aim: "To wipe out all of the New Deal legislation and destroy all of the gains labor has made during the past 12 to 14 years under FDR."

James B. Carey, CIO secretary-treasurer, warned that the Taft bill is "just one-thousandth of 1% milder than the Hartley bill" and that the Hartley bill incorporates "all the vicious elements of the many hundreds of bills in the House of Representatives."

Lee Pressman, CIO general counsel, said that unions are face to face with more than anti-labor bills. "Under these bills government itself will be the agent dedicated under the law to smash organized labor. That is the vital difference."



Jack Kroll, CIO Political Action Committee director, pointed out that Congressmen are politicians, that they want to know what the people are doing. He urged formation of ward and precinct organizations as the argument Congressmen will understand.

John Brophy, CIO Councils director, said that we are not only fighting anti-labor legislation but conducting a great national debate to determine whether our country can operate democratically "and in the service of all the people."

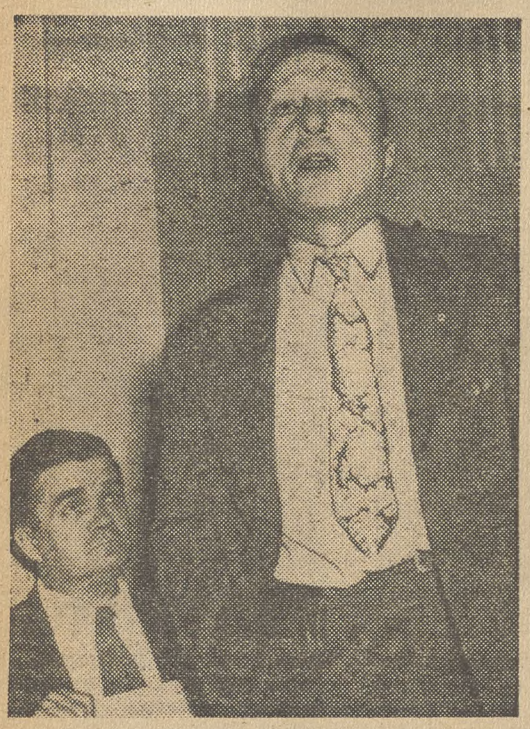
THEIR CONGRESSMEN

1 Unity—with some differences—but UNITY FIRST AGAINST ANTI-LABOR LEGISLATION was the theme of the Natl. CIO Legislative Conference last week in Washington, D. C. Said Russ Nixon, UE Washington representative: "We must have unity now as we had when we built this organization and we must go back now, as we did when CIO was born, back to the people in the shops."

2 Robert Lamb, legislative representative, United Steelworkers: "The value of this meeting lies principally in its representative character and the fact that you are in a position when you go home to influence large numbers of CIO members throughout the country."

3 James McEwan, president, Indiana CIO Council: "We have found mayors and city councils that have been ready and willing to make statements to state legislatures condemning all anti-labor legislation. I think as Brother Jack Kroll pointed out, we have been neglecting the local level too much."

4 Donald Henderson, president, Food & Tobacco Workers: "The CIO resolution correctly points to big business monopoly interests as the groups that are selling America short and smashing not only the labor movement but destroying American prosperity and American democracy."



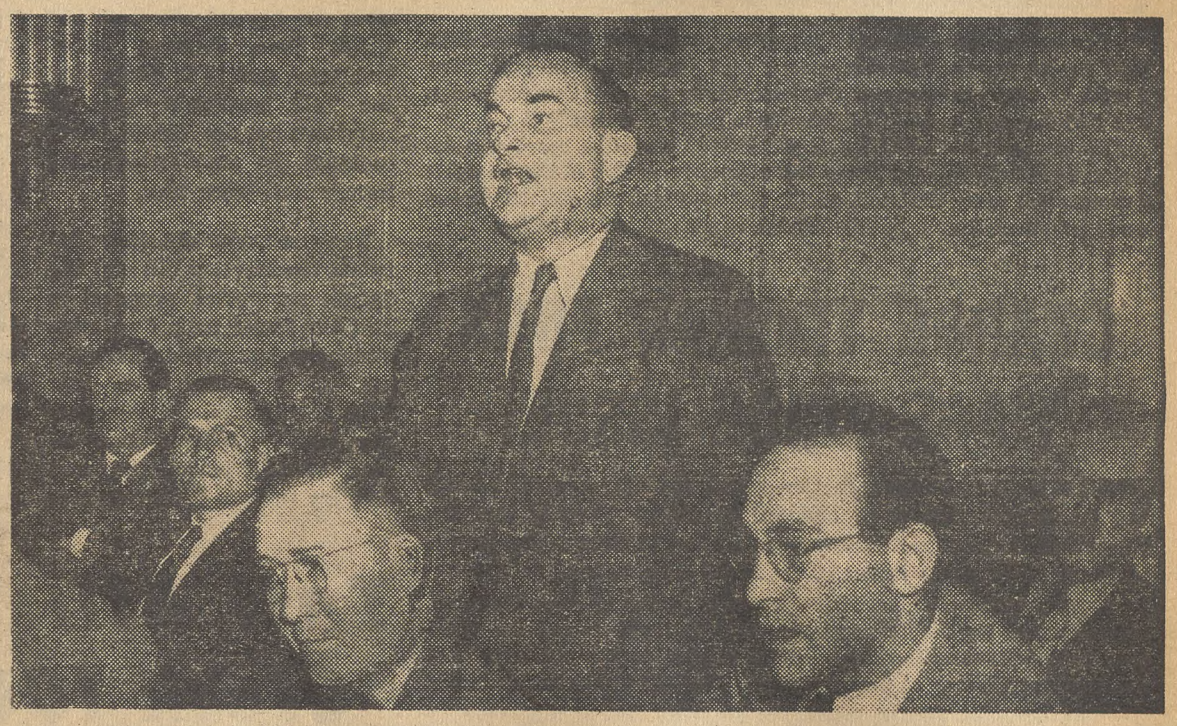
5 (L. to r.) Anthony Probe, Dodge Local 3, UAW; A. R. Hardesty, CIO regional director, Dallas, Tex.; John Stanley, secretary-treasurer, UOPWA. "President Murray," Stanley said, "correctly pointed out that the legislation introduced in the 80th Congress is legislation of a fascist nature. It is designed to destroy the labor movement and to prevent it from rising again . . . For every delegate who comes to Washington and gets a rebuff from his Congressman, we have one additional person back in the community who is going out to raise money for PAC."

HEARD FROM THEM!

6 Richard Leonard, vice-president, CIO Auto Workers: "I think it might be well to know who the people are who have written the anti-labor bills. Gerard Reilly, former member of the NLRB for several years, is the author of the Senate bill. And Mr. Hartley 'authored' the bill written by a Mr. Eisenman, a lawyer for the Chrysler corporation, assisted by a Mr. Morgan, another corporation attorney."

7 Charles Smolikoff, director, Florida CIO Council: "We in the South have pointed out that hysteria and witch hunting are designed solely to take the heat off the exposure by CIO of the monopolies in their drive to keep down the standard of living."

8 Irving Potash, vice president, Fur & Leather Workers: "I propose that we push forward the excellent proposal of Pres. Murray for united action between AFL and CIO, that we present one front to Congress to stop these reactionary forces."



9 Michael Quill, president, Transport Workers: "I think everything will depend on what we do back home. If we have the community rallies and if we keep it down to the ward level, as pointed out by Jack Kroll, and if we have these mass meetings, and if we live up to the CIO program as it will be adopted, I think that we can be felt all the way to Capitol Hill."

10 Michael Mann, Secretary, Chicago CIO Council: "I can promise you in Chicago you will find an outpouring of workers, all kinds of workers . . . and they will be there for one purpose only—to listen to the voice of CIO, to give vent to their desires, to do a job for their own people, and help the people of America maintain the kind of constitution they want."

11 Alexander Barkan, executive secretary, N. J. CIO Council: "We should not lose sight of the fact that there are, especially in the small businessmen, a potential source of strength that we should tap during Defend the Union Month."

Political Action, More Of It!

YOU don't want anti-labor legislation? Then the answer is political action and more political action.

That was the solid, sober advice given to 250 delegates attending the Natl. CIO Legislative Conference April 13 in Washington by both CIO Pres. Philip Murray and PAC Director Jack Kroll.

Said Murray: "You must give greater emphasis to the immediate need of building up a stronger CIO-PAC throughout every community in this country. It is fundamental. It is absolutely and positively essential. You can't escape it. It is a definite responsibility.

"It is not a third party. It is a group of people brought together for the purpose of rendering a distinct human service to all of the people, regardless of party affiliation."

Said Kroll: "Congressmen are sensitive to what is happening back home. They want to know what the voters are saying, what they are thinking about, and above all, they want to know are they organizing.

"Are they organizing in the wards, in the neighborhoods, are they organizing for registration, are they organizing to get voters to the ballot boxes on Election Day? That is what these politicans will look at, and it is better than all the arguments we can give them under the present circumstances."

PRES. Murray used the meeting to emphasize that CIO is planning major activities for PAC in the months ahead.

"There has been a feeling throughout the country . . . that CIO-PAC for all practical purposes was a dead institution," he said. "Now I want to take advantage of this opportunity to deny that statement. The CIO has not lessened its interest in political action."

To strengthen the PAC set-up, the PAC executive board was enlarged to include the presidents and secretaries of five of CIO's largest unions: steel, auto, electrical, textile and clothing. The secretary-treasurers will meet May 5 in Washington to plan future activities.

CHARGE TRUMAN FOGS WAGE-PRICE ISSUE

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and the CIO Cost of Living Committee this week charged President Truman and his Council of Economic Advisers with failing to inform the people of the need of wage increases to avoid a recession.

Carey and the CIO committee, which is headed by John Thornton, pointed out to the federal committee that its members and the President have been stressing the need for a price decline but have been silent on the urgency of higher wages. The CIO delegation declared:

"The need for getting prices started down has been given as a reason, in these statements, for not allowing wages to go up. The same point, in effect, was made by the President at his press conference on April 10 when he said that if prices did not come down, wages would have to go up.

"Undoubtedly the public has been powerfully persuaded by these statements that wage increases will cause another round of inflation, or that a general wage increase would prevent a general lowering of prices.

"Exactly the same argument has been made to the public by Earl Bunting, president of the Natl. Assn. of Mfgs., Benjamin Fairless, president of U. S. Steel, editorials in the N. Y. Times and the Washington Post, and by numerous other spokesmen for free enterprise . . ."

SUPER-SENIORITY LAID TO REST

THE U. S. Supreme Court this week in the Trailmobile decision laid low the ghost of super-seniority.

A veteran had been restored to his employment with the Highland Body Mfg. Co., and worked for more than a year. Highland was taken over by Trailmobile, which owned it.

Trailmobile negotiated a new contract with the CIO Auto Workers. The veteran claimed that the contract did not affect his seniority rights even though non-veterans in the same category were adversely affected.

The ex-GI said that the Selective Service Act protected him beyond the first year. The Supreme Court held that the act gives veterans special rights for only one year.

The court held that otherwise the veteran "would acquire indefinite statutory priority over non-veteran employes, a preferred status which we think not only inharmonious with the basic Fishgold rationalization, but beyond the protection contemplated by Congress."

SENATE UNION BUSTERS WIN COMMITTEE OK

WITH only two dissenting votes, the Senate Labor Committee last week reported out its own anti-labor bill, an hour before the House had passed the union-busting Hartley proposals.

Sen. Claude Pepper (D. Fla) and James Murray (D. Mont.) cast the negative votes against the Taft measure. The bill is due for debate in the Senate about April 23.

About all that can be said for the Senate committee proposals, according to Washington observers, is that in some respects they are somewhat milder than the wild-eyed bill which the House approved.

But the Senate committee went far beyond the Case Bill which Pres. Truman vetoed last year, and it is likely that the Taft proposals "may be rewritten on the Senate floor" to meet the standards of the Senate anti-labor bloc.

The one major difference between the Hartley bill and the Senate committee proposal is that the latter makes no mention of industry-wide bargaining. Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.), a committee member, has been seeking a ban on such over-all bargaining, and may try to have it written into the bill while it is under consideration of the Senate.

On the other hand, the bill bans all form of jurisdictional or sympathetic disputes, makes the check-off illegal, bans the closed shop—in which an employer can hire only a union worker, permits the government wide power to seek injunctions against strikers, forces long "cooling off periods," limits health and welfare funds, and permits unions to be sued in federal courts for the actions of any member violating a contract.

Do It Today!

Write or wire your Senators to defeat all anti-labor proposals.

Write or wire Pres. Truman to veto any anti-labor bills passed by Congress. Do it today, Tomorrow may be too late!

THE somewhat more moderate tone of the Senate bill was largely the work of a New Deal—anti-Taft GOP coalition in the committee. On a number of issues Taft was defeated by a 7-6 vote, but the "victories" were on proposals which would injure rather than kill effective union action.

Taft announced immediately that efforts would be made to get further restrictions into the bill on the Senate floor. Since the GOP will probably get the support of at least some of the poll tax southern Democrats, it may prove difficult to prevent serious amendments to the committee bill.

The Ohio senator said that two of his prime goals would be the banning of industry-wide bargaining, and providing employers—rather than the Labor Board—with the power to get injunctions in certain types of strikes.

Taft's support in the committee came from one Democrat—Ellender (D. La.)—and four Republicans: Ball (Minn.), Smith (N. J.), Donnell (Mo.) and Jenner (Ind.). Lined up against them as a majority on most of the issues were a trio of GOP Senators: Ives (R., N. Y.), Aiken (Vt.) and Morse (Ore.). They were joined by four New Dealers: Thomas (Utah), Hill (Ala.), Murray and Pepper.

But in the final showdown, only Pepper and Murray voted against the bill.

Taft Bill Would Turn Back Clock 100 Years—Wagner

SEN. ROBERT F. WAGNER (D. N.Y.) doesn't think much of the sweeping anti-labor proposals of his colleague from Ohio, the thin-lipped Republican Sen. Robert A. Taft.

The New Yorker, who wrote and sponsored the Natl. Labor Relations Act—which served as a workers' Magna Charta for the past decade—spoke out sharply against the GOP proposals to rob labor of its hard-won rights.

Sen. Taft's bill serves only one useful purpose, Wagner commented last week: "It has cleared the air of all the sham, pretense and demagoguery of the last few months that the Republican leadership seeks to modify the labor laws only to promote equality in collective bargaining and industrial peace."

Taft's bill, he said, would "turn the clock back" not to conditions that existed in 1935 but "more than a hundred years ago when labor had to fight for its right to organize."

SENATOR WAGNER

THUS warmed up, Wagner pitched into the heart of the Taft bill.

"It contains a confused hodge-podge of wholesale rewriting of our labor law, in language so ambiguous and complex that it would require at least another decade of extensive, costly and exasperating court litigation to determine the full meaning and impact of the legislation. It would be a Roman holiday for high-priced lawyers."

Point by point, he analyzed provisions of the Taft bill and argued that they would lead to chaos rather than industrial peace.

"The prize exhibit," Sen. Wagner asserted, "is the attempt of the bill to break up national unions by preventing them from acting as a unit in collective bargaining.

"It is unthinkable that in our economy, where businesses are operated on a national scale, a serious proposal shall be made to break up labor unions and put collective bargaining back on the company union basis so dear to the heart of that colossus of industrial might, the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers."

Hartley Knife-Labor Bill Passes House

"WE WILL oppose the Hartley Bill at every step of the legislative process and in the courts."

With this note of determination, expressed by Legislative Director Nathan Cowan, CIO members throughout the country moved to round two in the year's big campaign to protect free, democratic labor unionism.

The bill moved through the House of Representatives April 17 on a 308-107 vote, with many polltax Democrats joining the GOP majority for the final knifing of labor.

The balloting found 93 Democrats—almost all of them from the southern states—joining 215 Republicans in the vote to pass the Hartley bill.

Eighty-four Democrats were joined by 22 Republicans and one American Labor Party member—Rep. Vito Marcantonio (N. Y.)—in unsuccessful opposition to the vicious proposals.

Union delegates from Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware who lobbied on Capitol Hill April 17 against the anti-labor proposals reported that in some cases a few GOP Congressmen with long anti-labor records were voting against the bill in order to "build up their voting record." This was apparently done with the approval of GOP leaders, who recognized they had an overwhelming majority of votes on the issue.

Meanwhile Sen. Robert A. Taft (R. O.), GOP boss in the Senate, said the Senate Labor Committee—which he heads—will report out its own version of an anti-labor bill over the weekend. Debate on the measure is scheduled to open April 23.

Rep. E. E. Celler (D. N. Y.), who visited the White House last week, said he guessed that Pres. Truman would veto any measure comparable to the Hartley Bill. The Senate version, while somewhat lighter than the House bill, itself contains a wide variety of sweeping and disastrous restrictions on labor.

After the Senate has completed action on its own bill, a joint conference committee of House and Senate will have to work out a compromise measure. That will be the bill which goes to the White House for Presidential signature or veto.

There Oughta Be A Law!

There's nothing like getting Congress to do your dirty work.

Attorneys representing the Inland Steel Co., argued in the course of a recent NLRB case that it's not an unfair practice for a company to refuse to bargain with a union over pension plans.

The Labor Board didn't appear very impressed.

Then William Ingles, an Inland Steel lobbyist, showed up in Washington as an "advisor" to the House Labor Committee and helped draft the Hartley bill.

You guessed it—corporations are given specific wording in the bill to protect their refusal to bargain on pension plans!

COWAN, in a statement issued shortly after passage of the Hartley bill in the House, described it as "ill-conceived, badly-constructed and probably unconstitutional."

"The House of Representatives," he said, "has unfortunately been led to believe that it can solve social problems by a stroke of a vindictive pen. The people of this country know better."

The bill seeks to curb the people's efforts to meet "pressing national problems" such as better living standards, housing, health and regulation of corporate monopolies, the CIO official charged.

"The public and perhaps many of the Representatives who voted for this bill will soon see that hysterical legislation based upon myths, prejudices and downright misinformation has no place in the American scene.

"When the jerry-built hysteria collapses of its own weight, we expect that this bill and others like it will be consigned to the legislative rubbish heap where belong."

THE mood of a House majority to make the bill "tough" was indicated when the House adopted an amendment 153-10 to bar any member, past or present, of the Communist party from holding union office.

Labor's "victories" in the House were small, indeed.

The House struck down a suggested amendment by Rep. Clare Hoffman (R. Mich.), a loud-voiced labor-baiter from way back, to place an absolute ban on union security conditions. But the bill contains so many restrictions as to make the union shop a dead letter under its terms.

Rep. Gerald Landis (R. Ind.), himself the author of many severe anti-labor proposals, sought unsuccessfully to wipe out two sections of the Hartley Bill.

His proposal to knock out a prohibition of union health and welfare funds was defeated 117-136. Landis' second effort, to preserve industry-wide bargaining, was likewise beaten down, 71-161.

'Industrial Peace Cannot Be Bought By Oppression'

HERE'S what some Congressmen and Senators have to say about the proposed anti-labor laws:

SEN. HARLEY KILGORE (D. W. Va.): "This wrecking crew may have the votes to wipe out labor's gains. But, if it does achieve this undemocratic goal, it will awaken one day in the not too distant future to learn that industrial peace cannot be assured by the passage of laws that create new barriers between labor and management, or by laws that place labor in an unfair bargaining position."

REP. CHARLES PRICE (D. Ill.): "Make no mistake. American workmen are neither serfs nor clods. If sufficiently irked, they will strike regardless of the prohibitions of this bill."

REP. JOHN BLATNIK (D. Minn.): "The Hartley Bill is not aimed to correct abuses in the field of labor relations, but is designed to cripple and destroy the organizations of the working men and women of America . . . It is impossible to discuss this bill on its merits, because it has no merits."

REP. FRANK KARSTEN (D. Mo.): "It is a voluminous document consisting of 68 pages . . . A bill accomplishing the same objectives could have been written on one page with these words: A bill to kill labor."

REP. EMMANUEL CELLER (D. N. Y.): "With this bill . . . we deny the right of the unions to bargain collectively over the national area, but we do not do that for management . . . There is something rather hypocritical about this."

REP. ADOLPH SABATH (D. Ill.): "Notwithstanding that you will, by passing this bill, wreak your long-nourished vengeance against the American workingman and his family . . . I now prophesy that you will not break the spirit of American labor."

REP. VITO MARCANTONIO (ALP. N. Y.): "Send to the Library for the Fascist syndicate laws enacted by Mussolini after he came into power; compare those laws with what you are enacting here, and the similarity is striking . . . it is sufficient to frighten anyone in America who believes in American democracy."

REP. DONALD O'TOOLE (D. N. Y.): "This bill . . . was written sentence by sentence, paragraph by paragraph, and page by page, by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers. It is but a reprint of all of the propaganda and anti-labor ideas with which that organization has flooded Congress"

REP. JOHN E. FOGARTY (D. R. I.): "This is not legislation for the common good—this is punishment because labor unions have grown so powerful."

20 Ways to Wreck Trade Unions!

HERE'S how the Hartley Bill, passed by the House of Representatives on April 17, would hamstring your union. Read the facts—and then get to work to make sure this bill doesn't become law.

1. Employer is granted new rights and powers to destroy labor and to substitute individual bargaining for collective bargaining.

2. Employer is given the right to bring anti-trust actions against his employes, to institute criminal prosecutions against them, to sue them for treble damages and to obtain injunctions without a hearing against them. But the employer's violation of the law is subject merely to a cease and desist order issued after drawn-out administrative hearing and court review.

3. Employer is granted the right to compel employes to accept a wage cut through forced labor for indefinite periods of time.

4. The employer receives the right to break strikes caused by his own illegal conduct.

5. Employer is granted the right to obtain injunctions against strikes which have been legal for the past 50 years.

6. Employer retains the right to bargain through an employers' association, but bargaining through national unions is outlawed.

7. Employer is granted the right to disregard the bargaining agent and to play off employes against each other.

8. Employer is granted the right to sit at both sides of the bargaining table, by establishing company unions.

9. Employer is granted the right to disregard the bargaining agent and to refuse to bargain about such matters as health and welfare plans, apprentice training programs and speed-up.

10. Employer is given the right to break a strike for recognition even though the union represents an overwhelming majority of the employes.

11. Employer is given the right to outlaw and crush any strike by hiring strikebreakers even though the strike is caused by his own misconduct.

12. Employer is given the right to cooperate with anti-labor employers in order to destroy unions.

13. Employer is given the right to lockout and blacklist office clerks if they join a union.

14. Employer is given the right to invoke injunctions, treble damage suits and criminal penalties against the employes in one department if they strike against a wage cut in another department.

15. Employer is given the right to instigate criminal prosecutions against individuals who exercise the right to picket.

16. Employer is given the right to prevent the designation of a bargaining agent for a period of years.

17. Spies may be planted in the union ranks by the employer and the union is powerless to expel them.

18. Employer is given the right to grant or deny union security as he wishes; he is not required even to discuss it with the union and he may crush a strike or a threat of strike to obtain it.

19. Employer is given the right to crush any strike when a collective bargaining contract exists even if the strike is caused by an issue not covered by the contract.

20. Employer is given the power to obtain from the government a death warrant for the union of his employes.

'The enactment of this contemplated anti-labor legislation is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America' — Philip Murray.

LABOR THREATENED WITH DESTRUCTION

By CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

THE enemies of organized labor are bent upon the ultimate destruction of the labor movement in the United States of America.

The Hartley, Ball, Taft bills are designed to completely cripple labor.

One must not regard either the Hartley or the Ball or Taft bills as bills to slightly amend the Wagner Act. They must be looked upon as bills brought into being for the purpose of absolutely crucifying American labor.

FOR the first time in the history of the U.S.A. a bill has been presented in Congress to ban industry-wide bargaining.

The enactment of that provision will create more confusion and cause more industrial disturbance than any other type of bill that has been presented during my lifetime.

THE enactment of these pending bills comprehends the complete destruction of all forms of union security. They seek abandonment of the closed shop, maintenance of membership and other forms of union security that have prevailed in the U.S.A. since the beginning of trade unionism.

And the bills go further. They suggest that the employer shall exercise the right to interfere with the rights of individuals to join unions of their own choosing. And they give the employer the right to interfere in the internal affairs of unions.

The enactment of this contemplated legislation is the first real step toward the development of fascism in the United States of America. There can be no dispute about that.

THREAT TO ALL TH

It's an atom bomb war—unions are the target. And they'll be wiped out or paralyzed if Congress finally passes the crippling Taft-Hartley bills. There'll be no union shops . . . no right to strike against the speedup . . . against unfair working conditions . . . or to win union recognition . . . in fact, forced labor. And the ripper laws to gut unions will be the first push in legislative warfare to wipe out all democratic institutions. Fantastic? Read the details in this analysis of pending legislation by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, presented to the CIO Legislative Conference.

WE HAVE confronting us today something completely different from anything that we have ever seen.

Let that point sink in. We have not today merely another anti-labor bill. You simply cannot go on the assumption that, if this bill is passed, somehow we will be able by virtue of our very numbers in the CIO to combat the efforts of anti-labor employers, that we will still be able to make all the gains that the membership desires, that we will still be able to preserve our unions as we have in the past.

These bills are not like the former proposed anti-labor measures. There is a vital difference. That difference is summed up in the comments that were made to you by President Murray.

THERE IS A VITAL DIFFERENCE BETWEEN A CONSERVATIVE WHO IS JUST ANTI-LABOR, WHO DOESN'T WANT TO GIVE LABOR THE WAGE INCREASE OR THE IMPROVEMENT IN WORKING CONDITIONS THAT A STRONG UNION CAN EXTRACT, AS AGAINST FASCISTS WHO ARE DETERMINED TO DESTROY NOT MERELY ORGANIZED LABOR BUT EVERY FORM OF DEMOCRATIC INSTITUTION IN THE COUNTRY TODAY. AND THE LATTER IS PRECISELY WHAT IS FACING THE NATION.

This time they are proposing legislation that not merely takes away your rights under existing laws. It doesn't merely emasculate the Wagner Act. It goes much further. It makes it plain that the Government itself will be the agent dedicated under the very law to smash organized labor.

FOR example, let me bring to you about four or five items out of these bills.

There has been a great deal of public discussion that there must be legislation to prevent industry-wide collective bargaining.

Now, as a practical matter I think there are about three or four industries—and if I am not mistaken only one basic industry—where you actually have today industry-wide collective bargaining.

It is true heads of industry meet and they decide in concert what they will do. And not only do the corporate industries meet among themselves to decide what their policy will be in that industry but by and large corporate executives of all basic industries meet and decide what they will offer and what they will deny to the workers in the industries of America.

So, when they say they are urging or proposing legislation to eliminate industry-wide collective bargaining, that is a complete hoax.

WHAT THE BILL DOES DO IS THIS: YOU WILL NOT, IF THIS BILL IS PASSED, BE ABLE TO HAVE A NATIONAL UNION.

In other words, no two local unions that represent the employes of two employers in the same industry can meet together to discuss a current program. They can't get advice or counsel from the national union on how they shall settle differences and what they shall say to their employers if they meet them.

And if by chance two local unions in the same industry were to strike at the same time and their demands on their two employers happened to be about the same, that would be an illegal strike from which the employers could get injunctions to drive the men back to work, and could sue and get damages. And if that were not sufficient, they could go to the new Natl. Labor Relations Board and get an order that the strikes are unfair labor practices, and could drive the men back to work under conditions the employers seek to impose.

THERE is another phase of the bill which allegedly addresses itself to the kind of strikes that may be held. And they have a long list of activities or strikes which are declared to be unlawful. What are those?

First of all, as I said, it is unlawful for two local unions to strike in the same industry. If the two local unions represent unions of two competing employers, it is a monopolistic strike.

WHAT IS A MONOPOLISTIC STRIKE? IT IS ANY TWO LOCAL UNIONS THAT MEET AND STRIKE AT THE SAME TIME WHERE THEIR MEMBERSHIPS HAPPEN TO BE IN THE PLANTS OF TWO COMPETING EMPLOYERS. IT IS AN UNLAWFUL STRIKE, MIND YOU, EVEN THOUGH THERE IS NO VIOLATION OF CONTRACT. IT IS AN UNLAWFUL STRIKE IF YOU SUBMIT A DEMAND AGAINST A SPEEDUP. IT IS AN UNLAWFUL STRIKE IF YOU SUBMIT A DEMAND THAT YOU HAVE UNSATISFACTORY CONDITIONS IN THE PLANT. IT IS AN UNLAWFUL STRIKE IF YOU STRIKE IN ORDER TO GET THE EMPLOYER TO RECOGNIZE YOU WHERE YOU HAVE A MAJORITY. BECAUSE THE BILL SAYS, WHEREVER YOU HAVE A REMEDY UNDER THE LAW TO GET RELIEF FROM AN ADMINISTRATIVE AGENCY, THEN YOU HAVE GOT TO GO THROUGH THAT COURSE OF EVENTS RATHER THAN STRIKE.

Well, when they get through with that long list of strikes, I assure you that you would have a terrific job exercising your imagination to find out under what condition you ever can strike in this country again.

NOW, as if that wasn't enough, they have another section that does this: It says that wherever there is a threatened strike or stoppage in any industry which in the opinion of the Attorney General would threaten the national interests or national health or safety—in the opinion of the Attorney General—then he can get an injunction from the Federal Courts to prevent such a strike.

Now mind you, before you get to that point, the bill establishes a cooling off period for any kind of a threatened strike, of 60 days. So you have been cooled off for 60 days first. Then if you intend to proceed further the Attorney General looks into the matter and decides in his opinion that there is a threat to national interests, national health or safety.

He then gets an injunction, and under the injunction anyone who violates it is in contempt of court—the individual strikers or the union.

That injunction, under both the Hartley and Taft Bills, lasts for 60 days. During that period where the employer has been sitting back and saying "no, no, no," under the bill there is a provision that the parties should continue negotiations, and if at the end of the 60 days there is no agreement the Natl. Labor Relations Board is directed to hold an election.

And that vote, is to ask whether the men are prepared to accept the last offer given by the employers during that period of 120 days.

Under the Hartley Bill, in addition to that vote, there is also in the vote the question, do you wish to change your bargaining representative? In other words, are you prepared to go to a company union or some rival organization? And if the vote is in opposition to both, then the President is supposed to communicate with Congress and say, "Will you please do something about this situation?"

By that time, though it is under the guise of a so-called cooling off period, unquestionably what they have done is frozen the workers to death.

NOW, there is another provision that addresses itself to union security. To many of the newspaper columnists, to people in Congress, union security today is in the form of opposition to union security—to protect the "inalienable right" of the individual worker not to join a union if he so desires or join if he so chooses.

But as a matter of bitter experience what has been the history in this country on that issue? Back in 1919 during the famous steel strike, Judge Gary at that time preached the doctrine of open shop. He was protecting that "inalienable right" of the American worker not to join a union if he so chose. But, he was also frank enough to say that in his opinion the open shop really meant no recognition of any union under any circumstances. And that is the real fight in connection with the union security or open shop.

hat does this bill do on union ? Now get the diabolical de- this provision. In the first he closed shop is made com- unlawful. RE is another provision which ay has been offered to the an public under a terrific bar- hypocrisy. This is the provi- at goes to say that in order to h equality of responsibility unions and employers, we permit employers to sue un- r breach of contract in the Court.

he present time with possibly eption, unions can be sued for of contract in every state in on in the state courts. There roblem about employers suing in the state courts.

this bill authorizes that the ay be initiated in the Federal So you ask yourself the ques- hat difference does it make? can be sued in the state courts arm is done by being sued in courts?

back in 1932 there were Con- nal hearings which led to the ent of the Norris-LaGuardia Act. Also under the LaFollette Senate Civil Liberties Committee we had extensive hearings which also brought out that employers had not been too reluctant in the past to hire spies and agents and send them into the unions for the purpose of provoking strife, and to destroy the unions themselves.

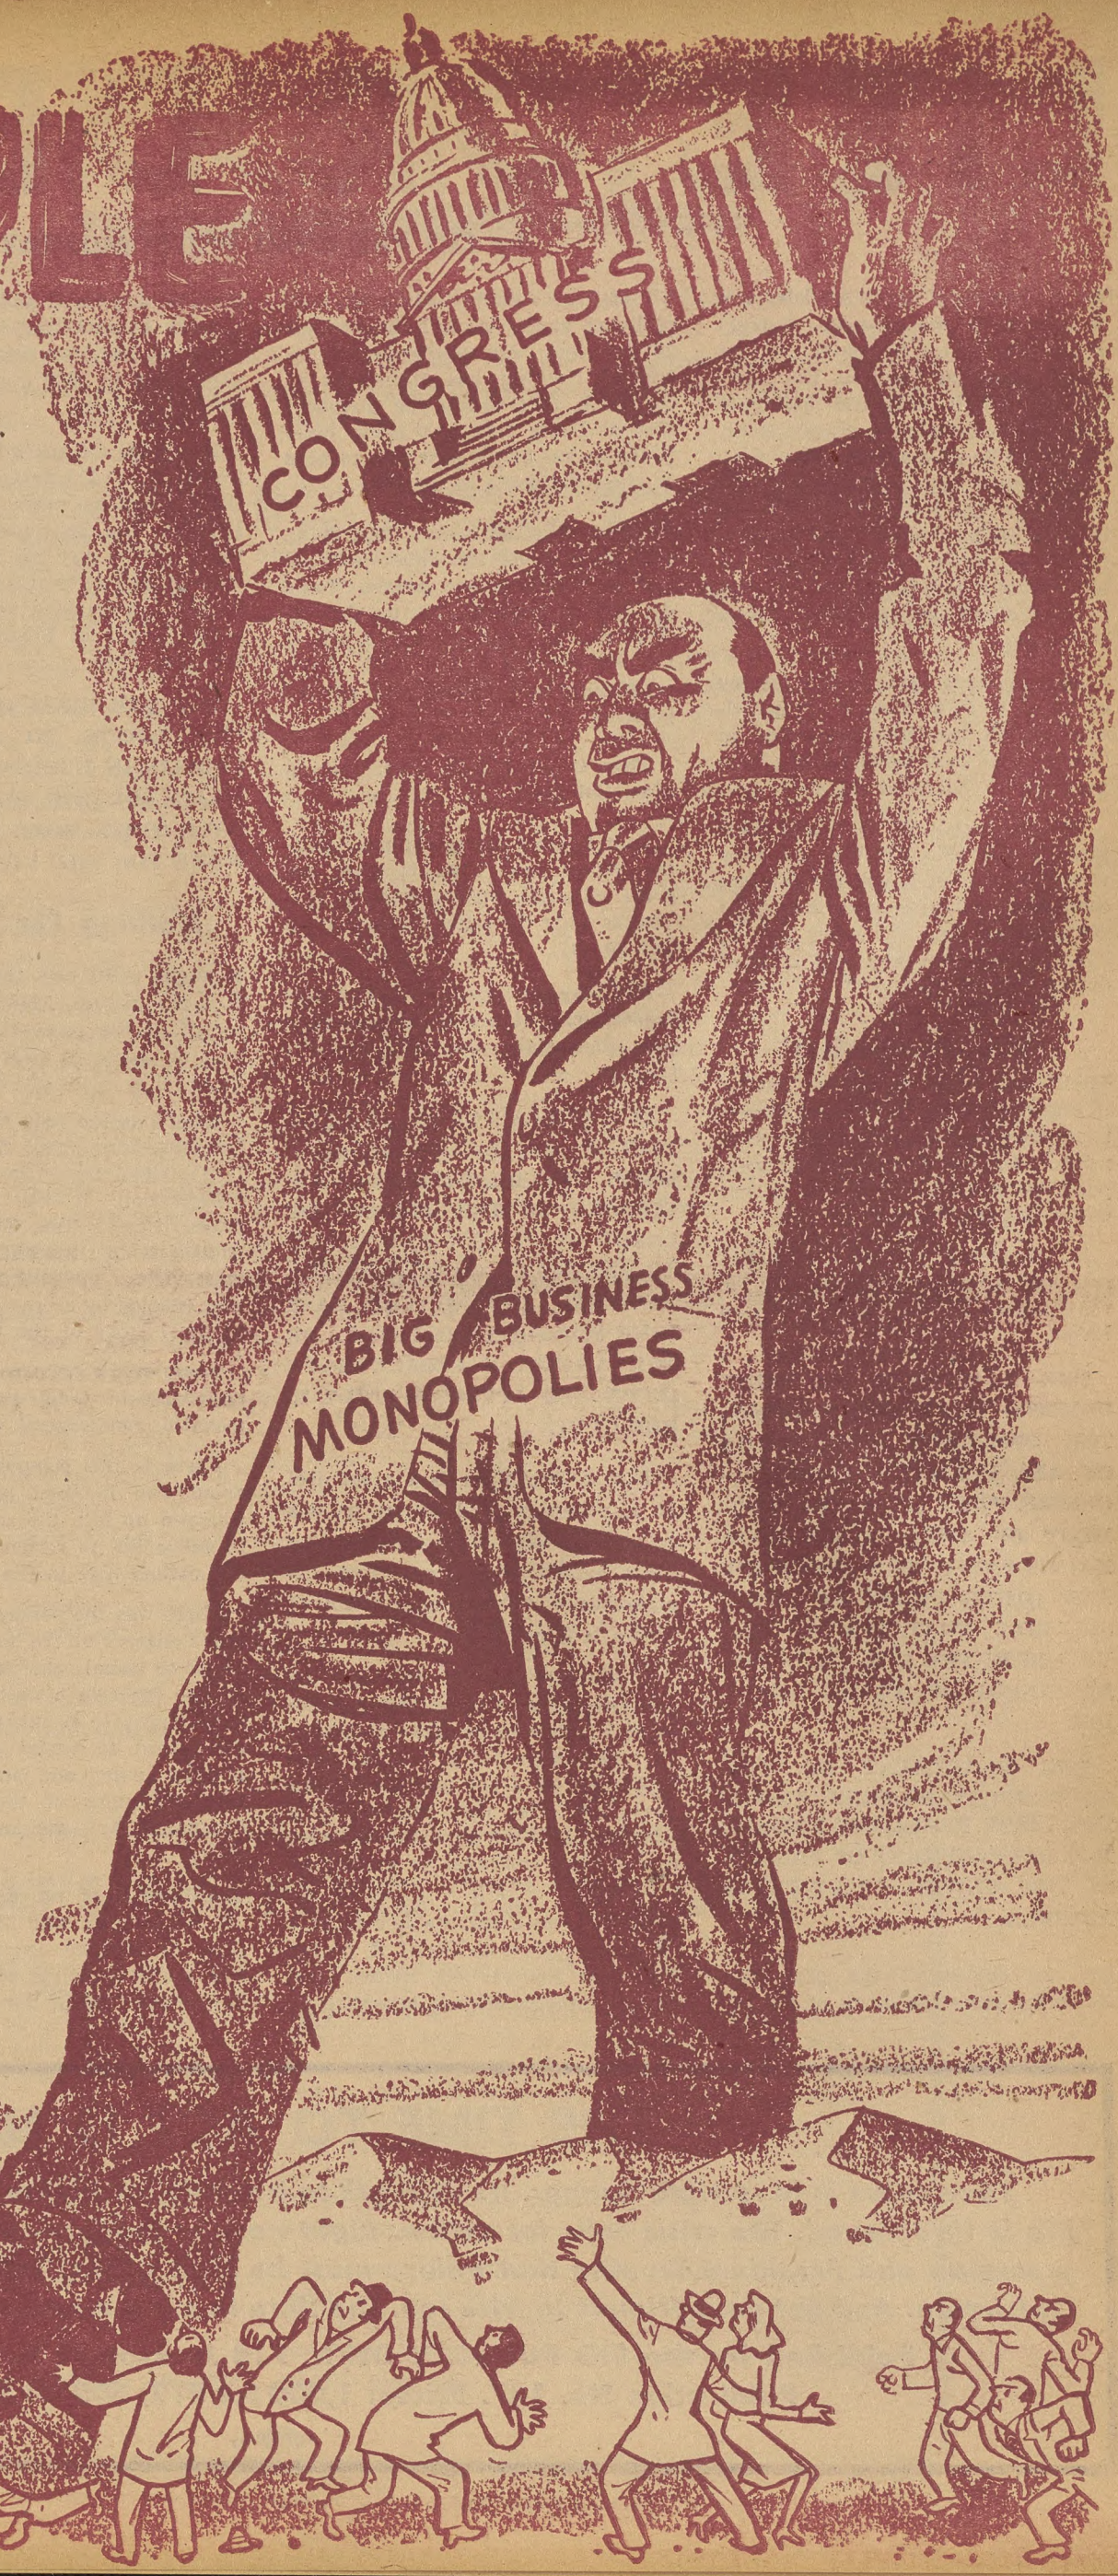
So the Norris-LaGuardia Act, which controls lawsuits in the Federal courts, has this provision: That no union can be sued for damages unless you can prove clearly that the union has specifically authorized the act of that agent which caused that damage or that breach of contract.

NOW, THIS NEW BILL SAYS NOTHING ABOUT THAT PROVISION. IT DOES GO ON TO SAY THAT WHEN YOU SUE A UNION IN THE FEDERAL COURT HEREAFTER ALL YOU HAVE TO DO IS SHOW THAT THE ACT WAS PERFORMED BY AN AGENT OF THE UNION . . . REGARDLESS OF WHETHER IT HAD BEEN AUTHORIZED OR RATIFIED BY THE UNION ITSELF.

Now, is there any union in the country that has a treasury large enough to be safe from the attacks from employers who will begin to hire Pinkerton detectives and other agents to furnish spies to be put into the union? There is no union that would be safe under a provision of that kind.

Now, in considering this legislation, it isn't sufficient to merely talk about so-called anti-labor legislation. That is not the issue that is confronting the American people today.

AS PRESIDENT MURRAY HAS INDICATED, THERE IS A DRIVE ON IN THIS COUNTRY BY THE FASCIST FORCES . . . AS EXHIBITED BY THE EXTORTIONATE MONOPOLISTIC PROFITS AND THEIR DEMANDS THAT WAGES BE CONSTANTLY REPRESSED. THOSE ARE THE GROUPS AND THE FORCES THAT ARE DETERMINED TO GET THIS LEGISLATION TO DESTROY THE ONLY GROUP, THE ONLY ORGANIZED VOICE, THAT IS IN OPPOSITION TO THAT PROGRAM.



LIFE OR DEATH!

By CIO PRESIDENT PHILIP MURRAY

THE enemies of organized labor are bent upon the ultimate destruction of the labor movement in the United States of America. The Hartley, Ball, Taft bills are definitely designed to completely cripple labor. There can be no question about that.

One must not regard either the Hartley or the Ball or Taft bills as bills to slightly amend the Wagner Act. They must be looked upon as bills brought into being for the purpose of absolutely crucifying American Labor.

For the first time in the history of the U. S. A. at least to my knowledge, a bill has been presented in Congress to ban industry-wide bargaining.

The enactment of that particular provision of this bill will not only weaken labor but it will create more confusion and cause more industrial disturbances than any other type of bill that has been presented, at least during my lifetime.

'Step To Fascism'

THE bills seek to restore use of injunctions by the Federal Courts to deprive Labor of its God-given right to the use of its econimic weapon to secure redress for wrongs that might be perpetrated against it.

So, the power of the Courts has now again to be brought into play for the purpose of shackling American Labor.

THE ENACTMENT OF THESE PENDING BILLS COMPREHENDS THE COMPLETE DESTRUCTION OF ALL FORMS OF UNION SECURITY. THEY SEEK ABANDONMENT OF THE CLOSED SHOP, MAINTENANCE OF MEMBERSHIP AND OTHER FORMS OF UNION SECURITY THAT HAVE PREVAILED IN THE U. S. SINCE THE BEGINNING OF TRADE UNIONISM.

THE ENACTMENT OF THIS CONTEMPLATED LEGISLATION IS THE FIRST REAL STEP TOWARD THE DEVELOPMENT OF FASCISM IN THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA.

IN the course of the past nine months, since the death of the Office of Price Administration, the cost of living in the U. S. had increased 20 per cent. An unprecedented increase! Nothing has transpired in the U. S. that equals the increased cost of living that has taken place in the course of the past nine months or since the death of the OPA.

Those who advocated destroying OPA prior to the November elections said to the American people, "Let's get rid of controls, let us destroy OPA. Let us return to our system of free competition in the U. S. High production will depress and control profits."

That is what Taft said, that is what Ball said.

That is what the great metropolitan dailies said. That is what the great editorial writers had to say. That is what the radio commentators had to say.

And they convinced the overwhelming majority of the American people they were right, and OPA was destroyed.

IT WAS DESTROYED, AND THE PEOPLE SUFFERED. BECAUSE SINCE ITS DESTRUCTION, ACCORDING TO THE BUREAU OF LABOR STATISTICS AND OTHER RESPONSIBLE GOVERNMENTAL AGENCIES, DURING THE PAST NINE MONTHS LIVING COSTS OF THE AMERICAN PEOPLE HAVE INCREASED APPROXIMATELY 20 PER CENT.

That is why there is a great deal of apprehension and unrest in this country of ours. Who is extracting these extortionate prices from the pocketbooks of American consumers? Where is it going to?

It certainly has not gone into the pay envelopes of American workers because their economic conditions have been degraded to a point some 7 per cent or 8 per cent lower than they were after they received their increase of 18½c an hour one year ago—and it continues to get worse.

THERE was a reasonable corporate profit picture in the U. S. during the years 1936 to 1939. Return upon capital investment, net, according to the Treasury Dept. and other official sources showed that the corporate profit of American enterprise for the years 1936 to 1939 averaged $3,900,000,000 annually.

For 1945, the net corporate profit return was $11,800,000,000 almost three times as much as it was in 1936-39. The last quarter of 1946, which by the way has been improved upon in the course of the first quarter of 1947, indicated a net annual corporate profit of $15,000,000,000 for the year 1947.

BUT THE FIRST QUARTER OF 1947 POINTS TO CORPORATE PROFITS IN EXCESS OF $17,000,000,000 FOR THE YEAR 1947, OR FOUR TIMES MORE THAN THEY WERE FOR THE YEARS 1936-39.

Nothing For People

I might point now the reverse side of the picture. Find out what the record of the present Congress has been on questions affecting President Roosevelt's Economic Bill of Rights.

What has the 1946-1947 session of Congress done about these matters? It has killed the Office of Price Administration. It has repealed the Excess Profits Tax. The House has passed its new tax bill, which is the most vicious piece of tax legislation ever enacted by a branch of Congress in the history of the U. S.

There still continues to be a drive underway in Congress for the removal of rent control.

There is this composite picture of about two hundred anti-labor bills wrapped up into the so-called House Omnibus Bill to render American labor extinct here in the U. S.

There was the passage by the Federal Congress of the so-called bill on portal to portal pay. That bill did not confine itself to a deprivation of labor's rights to secure protection under portal to portal arrangements. It went further and emasculated certain provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act—vicious to say the least.

THE price of peace, the price of cooperation and the underlying price of national economic stability and world economic stability lie today in the laps of our American industrialists. And if they are sufficiently far seeing, they will recognize the need of giving prompt, reasonable, satisfactory treatment to the workers employed by them in these industries now involved in collective bargaining contracts.

What do we find today? The Wall Street Journal, Chicago Journal of Commerce, trade magazines everywhere, all kinds of economists agreeing that corporate profits on the basis of present day production here in the U. S. might well exceed 17 billion dollars, a figure approximately four and one half times higher than it was for the years 1936-1939.

THE COLUMNS OF THE NEWS ORGANS OF TODAY ARE NOT BERATING BIG BUSINESS FOR THIS ORGANIZED THIEVERY THAT IS GOING ON. THEY ARE SETTING FORTH IN BIG LETTERS WHAT CONGRESS IS GOING TO DO TO LABOR. HOW IT IS GOING TO EMASCULATE, IF NOT ACTUALLY DESTROY THE WAGNER ACT, HOW IT IS GOING TO RESTORE THE USE OF THE WRIT OF INJUNCTION TO MAKE EVERY PLANT IN THE U. S. SOME SORT OF SECOND RATE CONCENTRATION CAMP.

IT is freely predicted in the columns of the newspapers that there is a recession in the offing and that sometime during the early fall or perhaps next winter their may be a great deal of unemployment in America.

And that is reflected in what they allege to be the tremendous inventories that are being built up of certain types of goods that evidently can't be disposed of, so they say today.

It is reported in the newspapers that there is a certain amount of buyers' pressure. You know the only buyers' pressure that is making itself evident today. Not that the people have the money and they are keeping the money. The fact is, they don't have the money to buy them, and that is the pressure!

Those are the issues involved. There just aren't any other issues.

THE TIME TO ACT IS NOW!

Your union is in terrible danger. Its strength to bargain for higher wages is being sapped . . . its very life is threatened. The crisis calls for action. Right now — today — wire both your Senators, your Congressman and President Truman that unions must be kept strong. Tell them what you think of anti-labor legislation. And get your friends to wire too. The time to act is now—tomorrow may be too late!

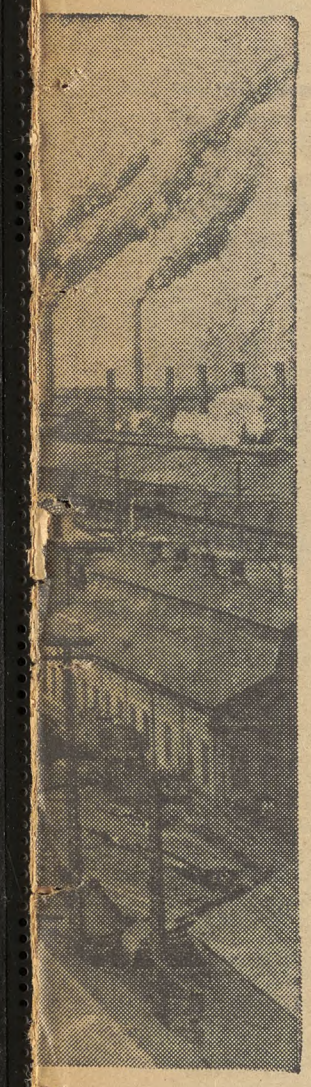
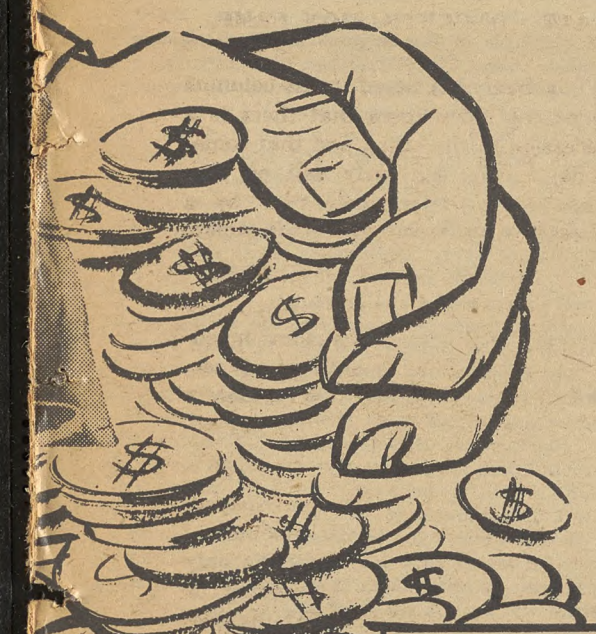
PENED TO PROFITS?





BIG business is embarrassed. The members of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce are making too much money! The story is told in one of big business' own house organs, The U. S. News, master-minded by anti-labor editor David Lawrence, who also doubles as a newspaper columnist.

"Corporation profits: a new high," says a headline in U. S. News, and the publication adds: "Profits at present levels are turning out to be a source of embarrassment to many industries. Profit reports for the first quarter of 1947 will show a rate of earnings, after taxes, that is well above 1946, a record year."

HOW high are profits? Another big business organ, the Wall Street Journal, gave the answer. It made a survey of 340 companies in 21 different industries and reported that 1946 profits far exceeded those of 1945. Increases by industries included a 53.7% rise for iron and steel companies, a 78.9% increase for food products firms and packing houses, a 103.9% hike for rubber and rubber goods companies, a 162.9% rise for pulp and paper products firms, and a 219.9% boost for textile companies.

Total earnings of the 340 companies surveyed were $2,430,286,232 compared to $1,812,905,953 the year before—an increase of 34%.

WHAT has caused this tremendous rise? A government report said that reduced taxes on profits, volume production and increased prices were primarily responsible. And another government analysis, made for the Congressional Committee on the Economic Report, declared: "Undoubtedly many companies are in a position to re-price their products in the light of current earnings and prospective business."

The report said that such business included: food, cotton goods, other textile products, shoes, leather, rubber products, paints and varnishes, chemicals, drugs and pharmaceuticals, grains, meat, lumber and office equipment.

"Undoubtedly," said the government researchers, "many companies in these groups, as well as some in other groups, could lower their prices considerably and still retain good profits."

The report said that "in general, price advances more than compensated for increases in wage rates and other costs."

DESPITE President Truman's plea to business to lower prices, one of the nation's biggest corporation heads this week predicted that they would rise even higher! Alfred P. Sloan, chairman of the General Motors Corp., told 2,000 business leaders that "it is impossible to assume that business generally can accept a sufficient reduction in profits to justify the reduction in prices so badly needed, and at the same time substantially increase wages except to an extremely limited degree."

Reports of Sloan's talk omitted mention of any reference to the fact that big business has fed on profits from exorbitant price rises. He "forgot" conveniently that in the nine months following last June, prices of farm products and food soared 48%. In seven previous years, they had increased just 64%. Or that in the nine months following last June, prices of non-farm commodities had risen 44%—in contrast to only a 36% rise in seven previous years.

Sloan shied away from an OPA report on 15 industries, proving that price increases in some cases were 20 times more than were necessary to offset wage increases! For four sample industries, these were the price increases, stacked up against the price rises need to offset wage increases: Food, 24% price rise, 1.3% needed; iron and steel, 14.5% price rise, 2.3% needed; farm implements, 11.4% price rise, 2.2% needed; lumber, 15% price rise; 3.9% needed.

THIS—in the words of Philip Murray—is the "organized robbery" committed by big business. And it carries a grim warning—for the present in terms of hungry families, for the future in terms of a depression, and for the very existence of democracy in terms of the entrenched financial position of the giant corporations that dominate our economy.

Prophetically, Wendell Berge, assistant attorney general of the U. S. in charge of anti-trust prosecutions, warned that "if monopoly power follows its traditional course, we can expect higher prices, limitations on production, and a lowering in the level of employment."

And addressing himself by indirection to the Congressional campaign to paralyze unions, Berge declared: "The twin demands, 'hands off business' and 'curb labor', have long been the heart of the anti-democratic program of those who favor the corporate state. To say that labor unions shall be restrained while the march of monopoly is allowed to continue will result in the abandonment of industrial democracy. If industrial democracy is permitted to perish, our proud heritage of political freedom cannot survive."

AND WHAT'S HAPPENED TO WAGES?

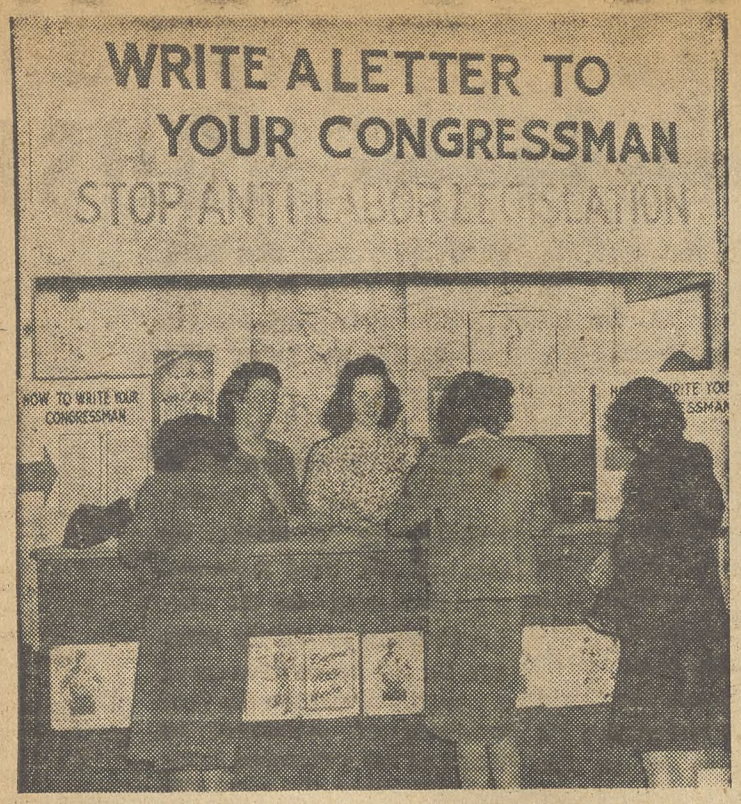
STUCK in the mud—that's where wages are. Government reports show that a $46 pay check now is worth a little less than $30 in terms of 1939 purchasing power. If you were making $30 a week in '39 and make $46 a week now, you've taken a wage cut!

And wages like this—the average for manufacturing workers—are $25 less per week than necessary to maintain a family of four at a "minimum health and decency standard". The authority for this is a University of California group called the Heller Committee, which studies workers' budgets to determine how much is needed for a reasonably acceptable standard of living.

The last Heller budget for a family of four was $70.52 a week—and it isn't luxury!

WHAT effect this condition has on individual families is best told by the mothers of the kids. What effect it has on the national economy is well told by the U. S. Bureau of Agricultural Economics, which reported that its officials are worried about another depression, in the last half of 1947. "Probably the most important force" in bringing this about, says the Bureau, is "the steady decline in real income—purchasing power of salary and wage earners.

"In July 1945, real wages and salaries were about 205% of the 1935-39 average, but were only 168% of this average in December 1946. The proportional share of wages and salaries dropped from 70 to 59% of total payments."



Delegates to the Alabama CIO Council convention at Birmingham last weekend heard John Brophy, director of the CIO Councils, warn of the danger of anti-labor bills now speeding through Congress. And they did something about it! Here some of them are writing letters to their Congressmen at a booth set up for that purpose.

Truth will Out!

'46 STRIKES OVER PAY

DURING 1946 almost five million United States workers went on strike, and contrary to newspaper and radio accounts the walkouts were not over jurisdictional rivalries or the closed shop or a lust for power among union leaders.

The calm, tabulating voice of the Labor Dept. bureau of labor statistics reported this week that about half of the five million workers hit the picket lines over the basic problem of getting enough money to meet rising living costs.

BLS said the problems of maintaining or increasing take home pay affected three out of every four workers involved in all stoppages and that wages were also an important part of many other disputes.

William Mayo, CIO Reg. Dir., South Bend, Ind., reports: National Standard Steel Co., Niles, Mich., USA-CIO 323; no union 23; AFL 22. The AFL Automobile Workers attempted to raid Local 3056, USA-CIO of Niles, Mich.

The CIO Steelworkers agreed to a consent election so that they would not prolong their contract negotiations. Local 3056, USA-CIO, holds one of the best contracts in Niles, providing the highest wage rates in that city. The campaign was conducted by Tony Rinehart, Field Rep., USA-CIO, assisted by the officers and bargaining committee of Local 3056.

Thomas E. Andert, Chairman, Optical & Instrument Workers Orgn. Comm., reports: Clement Co., Boston, Mass., OIWOC-CIO 65; no union 10. Joseph Duggan was the representative who handled this election.

Paul E. Miley, UAW-CIO Regional Director, reports: Local 402 UAW-CIO won the bargaining election for the cafeteria workers at the Springfield Works of the International Harvester Co., 50 employes voted by a score of 5 to 1 in favor of UAW-CIO. Intl. Rep. Austin Patton was in charge.

A. F. Hartung, CIO Reg. Dir., Portland, Oreg., reports: Beyers Sawmill, Clackamas, Oreg., CIO 21; AFL 13; neither 0.

Irwin L. DeShelter, CIO Reg. Dir., for Southern California reports: Sawyer Electrical Mfg. Co., Los Angeles, Calif., UER&WA-CIO 262; IAM 180. Reps. Elconin, Dunks, Marty, Doherty, Henry, and President Rusha of Local 1066, handled the campaign. Pacific Cotton Mills, Orange, Calif., CIO Textile Workers 22; Teamsters-AFL 19. TWUA Rep. Harry Stillman handled the campaign, assisted by CIO Reps. Rizer and Douglas. Election victory for Brewery Workers at the Malt Houses, CIO 16; AFL 0; no union 4. Reported by Eugene McCann.

Sam Sponseller, CIO Reg. Dir., Cleveland, Ohio, reports: Douglas McLeod Boat Co., Grand River, Ohio, CIO 9; no union 8. Reps. Deutsch and Smith handled this matter. They had all employes signed up 100%. The company called in AFL Painters, who voted they did not want the AFL to represent them. Consequently the AFL stepped out. The company gave a raise at the last minute. Thus the nine to eight vote.

Robert C. Edwards, Orgn. Dir., CIO-Chemical Workers, reports: UCWA won elections at the following plants: Portland Huron Cement Co., Detroit, Mich.; National Gas Co., Sikeston, Mo.; Pepsi-Cola Co., Chicago, Illinois.

Arthur L. Garfield, Intl. Rep., UERMWA-CIO, reports the UERMWA defeated the IBEW-AFL in an important labor board election covering 1,984 employes of the Robbins & Myers electric motor plant in Springfield, Ohio. The IBEW had held bargaining rights in the plant for a year, having taken over a company union through a back-door agreement with management.

In the election 1,698 cast ballots, with the UE securing 879, the IBEW 765; and 54 workers voting for neither. The organizing campaign was under the direction of Intl. Rep. Arthur L. Garfield, together with Field Organizers Alice Rose and John Stamper.

The CIO National Legislative Conference held in Washington, D. C., on April 13, was a great success. Every organization, every state council, many of the large city industrial union councils, and all the Regional Directors of CIO, were represented and present.

President Murray made a masterful analysis of the vicious un-American legislation contained in Hartley and the Taft-Ball Bills now before Congress. The decision was unanimous to activize our forces and all liberty-loving people throughout the nation to oppose this unwarranted, un-American attack upon free men and women.

On Monday, April 14, the Regional Directors of the CIO and heads of Industrial Union Councils laid plans to put this program into effect immediately. Mass meetings are being held throughout the nation and protests are being sent to Congressmen and Senators.

Now is the time to unite and fight to preserve our precious freedoms. Fight now or be driven back more than 50 years! The very existence of every International Union is in danger. This is the No. 1 task. Out motto will be: It shall not pass!

CIO BUILDING FIRE UNDER CONGRESS

THE CIO is building a backfire throughout the nation to halt the labor-consuming conflagration being spread by anti-union Congressmen.

Four thousand persons this week jammed the CIO rally in a Chicago auditorium to hear Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee lambast labor's Congressional foes. The Chicago CIO Council joined with the Illinois CIO Council and the CIO regional office in sponsoring the rally.

The Alabama CIO Council last weekend turned its Birmingham convention into a Defend Labor Rally. When the word was received that the House Labor Committee had reported out the Hartley Bill, the convention wired the state's representatives reminding them that the convention represented 80,000 workers and urging them to vote against the bill "in the interest of the state and the nation."

THE Greater New York CIO Council was setting the stage for a mammoth outdoor rally at Madison Square Park the evening of April 22 with CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood as the principal speaker.

At Dayton, Mayor Edward Breen proclaimed April as Defend Labor Month and a CIO rally heard Sen. Glen Taylor (D. Ida.) urge the audience to make the Defend Labor movement "the greatest fight you ever put up" and to enlist farmers, small business men, the AFL and the Railroad Brotherhoods in the struggle to maintain labor's rights.

In Minneapolis at the suggestion of the Hennepin County CIO Council, the city council passed a resolution taking a firm stand against Federal and state anti-labor bills. The resolution was sent —as the city council directed—to Sens. Ball and Thye and Reps. Judd and MacKinnon.

The action of Texas' Gov. Jester in signing an anti-closed shop bill was bitterly assailed by Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers as violating the U. S. constitution and hamstringing collective bargaining. Texas was the twelfth state to restore the rule of the open shop by legislative action.

Undeterred by the state's belligerency, the CIO held ten rallies throughout Texas this weekend in an attempt to ward off federal legislation against unions. A Defend Labor Month rally was set for April 28 in Akron, Ohio—home-state of labor's arch foe, Sen. Taft.

How Memphis Became A CIO Stronghold

THE Memphis CIO movement, one of the largest and strongest in the South, grew to calm stability out of an era of violence and strong political opposition.

Today there is a strong CIO union at the Ford plant, where organizers and union sympathizers were brutally beaten 10 years ago.

Largest union in this region is at the Memphis Firestone plant, where several men who spoke openly for the CIO seven years ago felt the sting of the blackjack and the club.

CIO headquarters is now in the business section—across an intersection from the city's leading hotel. A few years ago CIO meetings were held in an old shack near the river front.

Leaders of the CIO here now take an active part in civic and patriotic organizations. A few years ago CIO members were afraid to wear CIO lapel buttons in public.

A small group of newspaper editorial workers made up the first CIO union in Memphis. They came into the CIO in 1937 when the Newspaper Guild switched its affiliation from the AFL.

FORD employes started their drive for a CIO union in 1937 and it was in connection with their campaign that the first anti-CIO violence flared. During this period the mayor of Memphis and his police commissioner issued a statement that "CIO agitators" would be chased out of Memphis.

There were no arrests in connection with the beating of two Auto Workers organizers and several Ford workers who led the fight for a union.

There were only about 375 members in established Memphis CIO unions in June, 1940, when the Newspaper Guild held its annual convention here. The Guild met here although it had been told by city officials it would not be welcome because of its affiliation with the CIO.

Ford workers finally established their union, several other groups organized and the Memphis CIO movement grew steadily but slowly until 1942. The turning point for the organization came during that year, when workers at Firestone and Memphis Fisher Aircraft joined the CIO.

THE CIO grew rapidly in Memphis during the war. Its members took leading parts in directing war bond, Red Cross, War and Welfare Fund and metal salvage campaigns. They served as volunteer workers with such wartime agencies as the Manpower Commission and the OPA. They operated a canteen for service men and women. They set up Management-Labor Committees that speeded war production.

Today there are approximately 30,000 CIO members in Memphis— a city of about 300,000. They belong to unions which have contracts with 218 Memphis plants.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

INSURANCE AGENTS WIN: Refusal of CIO and AFL members to pay their insurance premiums to scabs helped the CIO Office & Professional Workers win $6 weekly increases and a union shop for 325 industrial insurance agents of the Monumental Life Insurance Co. this week.

The agreement signed this week ended a strike which began March 17 when the agents in 13 cities walked off their jobs after the company offered only a $2.50 weekly increase and refused union security during three months of negotiations.

BOSTON CIO COUNCIL: The Greater Boston CIO Council this week elected Jack Hurvich director of its newly-created public relations dept., after Hurvich declined re-election as council president. He said that the strain of serving on Gov. Bradford's Labor Committee and his other work on behalf of labor precluded his acceptance of the presidency.

KNOCK RACE BIAS: The CIO Office Professional Workers this week proposed that the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co. end discriminatory practices in the sale of insurance to Negro applicants. The union represents 11,000 of the company's agents.

The union uncovered alleged abuses through a survey. It recommended that insurance be provided Negro applicants on the basis of their insurability without regard to their color and that agents be compensated for the sale of Negro applicants on the same basis as insurance to white applicants.

Auto Profits $164 a Car

THE CIO Auto Workers will continue to press for a 23½c hourly wage increase in the auto industry.

The UAW executive board meeting in N. Y. City this week declared the 15c hourly wage increase made this week by the CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers "in no way sets the wage increase pattern in the automobile industry."

The statement added that the UE agreement no more set the pattern in auto than did the CIO Rubber Workers settlement for 11½c an hour increase.

GM later this week offered an hourly increase of about 15c to the UAW, but the exact terms were not revealed, newspapers reported. Both UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther and Louis G. Seaton, GM labor relations director, refused to comment at Detroit where negotiations were resumed.

In addition to 23½c an hour, UAW is seeking a wage equalization fund to guarantee the same pay for the same work no matter where performed, a social security and old age pension fund, and a guaranteed 40-hour week.

The union is also making these demands on Chrysler and Ford. A strike notice has been filed against Chrysler where the UAW has been seeking wage adjustment since last Oct. 30. Talks are expected to start soon with Ford. The board declared:

"The exceptionally high profit rate of the automobile industry, paralleling that of other major industries, is a major threat to the nation's economy."

The board said that if a "substantial portion of these excess profits" are not paid out in wages and in lower prices to consumers, "sharply declining purchasing power will in a few short months choke off production and produce mass unemployment and economic chaos."

The operating profits per unit of six car manufacturers in the fourth quarter of 1946 averaged $164, the board said. This was 14% greater than their average unit profit of $68 in 1941, the best pre-war year in the industry, the board declared.

The UAW leaders pointed out that the first quarter figures for 1947 will show still greater increases "because they will reflect a higher volume of production and the full impact of the price increases instituted during and since November, 1946."

ATTACK NLRB FOR CRAFT BIAS

A committee of CIO representatives this week lodged a vigorous protest with the NLRB concerning recent shifts in Board policy.

The delegation particularly protested the NLRB's recent practice of holding elections among small craft groups in industry, despite records of successful bargaining history on a plant-wide or company-wide basis with industrial unions.

Instead of bargaining with one union which represents all of the employes in the plant, an employer under the new doctrine will be compelled to bargain with as many unions as there are crafts in the particular industrial process, the CIO group said.

This policy will create jurisdictional disputes in mass production industries the CIO officials told the NLRB, and sets the stage for a widescale repetition of jurisdictional difficulties of the building industry.

UE WINS 15c AT GM AND WESTINGHOUSE

THE CIO Electrical Radio & Machine Workers this week won a 15c hourly increase for more than 100,000 General Motors electrical and Westinghouse employes.

The GM agreement announced early in the week was apparently similar to the Westinghouse pact announced as the CIO News went to press.

Both agreements provide 11½c an hour in straight pay boosts, with the remainder of the 15c to be used to cover the cost of six paid halidays and other economic gains.

The Westinghouse contract covers 75,000 workers in Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Maryland, West Virginia, Ohio, Illinois, Missouri and California.

The GM pact was negotiated for 30,000 workers in Delco Products and Frigidaire, both at Dayton, Ohio; Packard Electric, Warren, Ohio, and Delco Appliance, Rochester, N. Y.

The Westinghouse pact is retroactive to April 1, while the GM pact went into effect April 14. Both are subject to ratification by the membership of the locals involved. The UE conference board of the Westinghouse locals must also approve that agreement.

All salaried workers at Westinghouse won a $5 weekly increase, and employes who have been with that firm 20 years will receive three weeks' vacation.

In both cases the holidays granted were New Year's Day, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving Day and Christmas.

A joint union-management announcement said that the Westinghouse pact "settles all economic issues until April 1, 1948." The earliest reopening or termination date on the GM agreement is April 28, 1948.

In both cases negotiations will continue on the union's demands for health, welfare and insurance programs.

The joint UE-Westinghouse statement said that the negotiations "were carried on in an amicable manner and the agreement was arrived at through direct and free collective bargaining."

WORLD LABOR UNITY AT WORK

THE CIO Longshoremen's and Warehousemen's Union at the concluding sessions of its San Francisco convention last week demonstrated by words and actions unity with organized labor in other countries.

The convention voted unqualified support to the World Federation of Trade Unions and the same day welcomed Cuban and Mexican labor delegates who arrived to attend a sugar conference being held this week.

The ILWU has organized the Hawaiian sugar workers, who are meeting with the delegates representing the Natl. Federation of Sugar Workers of Cuba and the Natl. Syndicate of Sugar Workers of Mexico.

Secretary of Economics Pelix D. Perez Gil of the Cuban Sugar Workers said that "we are all fighting the forces of reaction whose efforts are now concentrated on splitting the labor movement all over the world.

"We must unite all workers irrespective of nationality, parties and religious beliefs. There are forces in Cuba which are trying to divide the General Confederation of Workers and we have proof that the AFL is back of this move."

The convention laid plans to seek substantial wage increases for the various crafts within the union. A resolution pointed out that the cost of living has risen almost 20% since last year's.

"Nationalization of the basic industries and true enforcement of the Sherman anti-trust act to make it apply to big business," were called for in another resolution.

Harry Bridges was unanimously nominated for president without opposition. Other International officials nominated without opposition are J. R. Robertson, first vice-president, and Louis Goldblatt, secretary-treasurer. There will be a referendum contest for second vice-president between Cole Jackman and Germain Bulcke.

CIO Calls For Support Of Phone Strike

THE CIO is backing the striking telephone workers to the hilt.

CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood this week sent letters to all national and international unions and to CIO regional and sub-regional directors urging them to support the strike.

Means of supporting the strike were discussed at a meeting of CIO Regional Directors in Washington this week when J. A. Beirne, president of the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers, was a speaker. The meeting was called by Haywood. The regional directors had come to Washington to attend the special CIO legislative conference to protest anti-labor bills now pending in Congress.

Quick to spring to action was the New Jersey CIO Council where demonstrations will be held from 4 p.m. to 6 p.m., April 22, in 10 cities—Newark, Passaic, Edgewater, Jersey City, Hoboken, Elizabeth, Perth Amboy, New Brunswick, Trenton and Camden.

The New Jersey demonstrations have a triple purpose—to support the telephone workers, to protest the state legislation providing heavy fines for the telephone union and fines and imprisonment for the strikers, and to arouse the public against the Taft and the Hartley anti-labor bills.

Pres. Carl Holderman of the New Jersey CIO Council, CIO Regional Director Ewald Sander and Director John Montgomery of the New Jersey Telephone Workers Central Strike Committee warned that these demonstrations are not work stoppages.

Beirne's suggestions for helping the telephone strikers accompanied Haywood's letter to the regional directors and the affiliated unions.

Despite the downpour spirits of these striking telephone workers was high at Washington, D. C., as they walked the picket line this week.

BILLIONS NEEDED FOR CHILD VICTIMS OF WAR

AT LEAST 30 million children in Europe and an equal or greater number in China and the Philippines are in desperate need of food, clothes, medical supplies and other items necessary for their health and well-being.

Undernourishment and disease are rampant among these child victims of the war. Infant mortality has doubled or trebled in many areas.

Millions of orphans are in the most deplorable condition; crippled children in untold thousands are left with the scantiest care or no care at all.

To bring the standard for children of war-affected countries to a pre-war level would cost a staggering amount, perhaps several billion dollars, according to a report on the International Children's Emergency Fund established last December by the United Nations General Assembly.

"The children of Europe and China were not only deprived of food for several cruel years, but lived in a constant state of terror, witnesses of the massacre of civilians and of the horrors of scientific warfare, and exposed to progress the progressive lowering of standards of social conduct," stated the UN committee report recommending establishment of the fund.

The steps leading to the setting up of this fund which originated at the Geneva session of the UNRRA Council last August in Geneva and the policies, slow-moving machinery and officialdom under which it will function are told in an article by John J. Charnow of the State Department's Div. of Intl. Labor, Social & Health Affairs. The article is reprinted in the Dept. of State's publication 2787, and may be obtained from the Sup. of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., price 5c.

25 RENT CONTROL AREAS AFFECTED?

Lay-off of some 700 OPA employes for lack of sufficient operating funds may force the lifting of rent control in some 25 defense rent areas, it was learned this week.

A deficiency appropriation far below OPA's needs for effective enforcement of the rent control law has caused the new crisis. OPA officials are considering a 15-day notice to the government employes.

UNION WOMEN TO CONVENE

THE Natl. Women's Trade Union League will hold its 13th convention in Washington, D. C., May 19-22. "Never before has there been a greater need for teamwork in building a dynamic labor program," states the convention call.

"Women proved their value in winning the war and they must hold fast to their place on the team. They must not allow their hard-won gains to disappear as was the case after the first world war. They must act to establish for themselves the four freedoms they worked for so valiantly."

The convention will adopt a program of action dealing with effective participation of women in their own unions; support for social and labor legislation; development of international understanding and organization, and the League's part in implementing the objectives of women workers.

AUXILIARIES AT WORK

Active support to the CIO's legislative program and its drive against anti-labor laws is being given by the Congress of Women's Auxiliaries, which is urging its affiliates throughout the country to throw all their forces into the campaign. Branches and members are urged to write to their Congressmen and State legislators, and to help win the support of other women's groups.

WHEN BOY MEETS GIRL

Even though we may think of it as "puppy love," let's not joke about it. Pairing off and having special friends should be regarded not as an amusing spectacle, but as a wholesome part of growing up. Teasing and jeering are apt to disturb boys and girls who are in the process of building natural healthy attitudes toward each other. Wise are the parents who invite boy friends and girl friends into their homes, casually and affectionately, on the footing of welcome guests.

Sprucing Up

YOUR MAKE UP

By HANNA SHERMAN

MODERN make up is one of the minor arts. With it, most girls can have the look of natural health and beauty. And the clever girl can make her face seem to be perfectly proportioned. It's a far cry from the days when grandma used pink rice powder and applied colored pomade on the sly.

The modern girl employs many different beauty aids—eye shadow, mascara, foundation cream—and yet manages to keep that natural look. The nice thing about it is that when Joe Beau comes calling, he sees only a smooth looking sparkling face, with lipstick the only obvious artifice.

We still see some sad holdovers from the recent past. Pencil line eyebrows, for instance, which tend to give the face a vapid, expressionless look. Another is too much rouge which will make even the youngest and prettiest face look hard and artificial. And, too, we sometimes see lips made up in a small rosebud shape. Shades of Clara Bow!

One more complaint and we're through. Notice how many women wear shades of powder that are too light for their skin coloring and age. These are all fuddy duddy and old fashioned. Avoid them by all means.

HERE'S what to DO. Keep your eyebrow line natural looking and pluck only those hairs from under the brow which grow too far down to be brushed up into the natural line. Use eye make up. It can make your eyes appear lovelier and larger. Correctly applied and in the right choice of colors, you'll fool even yourself.

Use brown, gray-line or blue. They are the colors that come closest to the natural shadows on your own eyelids. Mascara, too, gives a wonderful lift to the face. Brown is the best choice of color for most people since it can hardly be detected.

Dark brunettes may use black mascara as well, and will probably like the exotic effect of blue mascara in the evening. As for eyebrow pencil or mascara on the lower lids. Don't—you'll look "made up."

Of all your beauty aids rouge should be used most sparingly. When in doubt use less rather than more. It should help to brighten the eyes, give you a healthy look, and sculpt the shape of your face and enhance its proportions. Experiment with your rouge. See what it can do for you.

Making up takes a little time but it's well worth it if it stays with you. For a face job that will stay put for several hours, you must use a foundation base. Choose a cream or a liquid type foundation. Not hand lotions or vanishing creams, please. They are NOT foundations.

THE right base will help keep your skin soft, your powder from flaking off and your rouge from disappearing. It will also give a pretty glow to your complexion. Here again experiment to discover just the amount you need. Usually a very small amount of make up base is necessary. You need even less on the nose and chin.

You'll find that a darker foundation cream than your actual skin tone is usually more flattering. This is especially true if you are over 25 or if your face is round and full.

Resolutions

The following resolutions were adopted unanimously by the Natl. CIO Legislative Conference, which met in Washington, D. C., April 13.

Anti-Labor Legislation

Our nation is in the grip of a serious and crucial crisis.

Prices and cost of living have run amuck. Profits of American industry have reached extortionate levels. The living standards of the American people are being steadily degraded.

In 1946, American workers, suffering a serious wage cut due to loss in weekly earnings and a continued rise in the cost of living, sought wage increases to protect their living standards. For this, they were castigated and condemned.

In 1946, the National Association of Manufacturers succeeded in pressuring Congress into enacting the repeal of the OPA. This was accomplished under the guise that the elimination of price control would result in a lowering of prices and the cost of living. But every American housewife today knows how false that promise has proven to be.

LIVING COSTS

The cost of living has skyrocketed since the repeal of OPA. The profits of the food corporations have become fantastic. The meat, dairy and other food companies have doubled and tripled their net profits in 1946 as compared to 1945.

Though corporate profits, after taxes, between 1942 and 1945 averaged $9.5 billions; they had increased in 1946 to approximately $12 billions. And it is estimated that they are now at the annual rate of $17 billions.

The nation is being threatened with economic disaster by these business interests which are pursuing the "rule or ruin" policy.

The answer of Congress to this situation has been to date greater protection to monopoly profits and a sinister, deadly attack upon labor unions for daring to challenge this unholy conspiracy directed against the interests of the common people.

A tax bill has been passed by the House of Representatives to really grant "relief not for the needy, but for the greedy." Under this measure a married worker with two dependents earning $2500 a year will have his tax reduced $19 a year or 5c a day—not even enough to buy a glass of milk. On the other hand, a married corporate executive with two dependents earning $100,000 would have his present tax reduced $12,000.

There is the drive in Congress to eliminate or emasculate rent control and thereby add to the many burdens of millions of low income families.

Angered by the fact that labor unions, expressing the feelings of millions of Americans, have challenged the right of monopoly business to exploit the people in this unconscionable fashion, Congress has embarked upon a campaign fostered through hysteria and witch-hunting to enact vicious anti-labor legislation.

These measures represented by the Taft and Hartley bills would destroy the rights and protections given to labor under all of the legislation of the past 50 years. These bills deliberately and carefully take the very laws intended for the protection of the working man and woman and turn those laws around and aim them at destroying unions.

These bills deliberately say not only that employers are to be free to attack unions in all of the ways they attacked the unions 50 years ago; they set up government agencies with power to put the government squarely in support of the employer and make the government a means of regimenting, crippling and hog-tying the entire labor movement.

PEOPLE VS. TRUSTS

We firmly believe that the American people do not desire to see their destiny rest in the control of corporate monopoly. We firmly believe that the American people oppose the arrogant effort to destroy the labor movement which has proven both in peace and war to be a bulwark in the defense of American democracy.

We firmly believe that the American people are more determined today than ever before to march forward in unity to enjoy their heritage so eloquently expressed by Franklin D. Roosevelt in the historic Economic Bill of Rights.

But time is short. Reaction is on the rampage. Labor is first to be attacked because it stands in the front ranks of the opposition to the diabolical program of monopoly business.

It must be the immediate task and duty of the American people —of all progressive groups—to battle the policy of reaction and set forth a program which will move America forward and not backward.

We call upon the members of Congress—as the elected representatives of the people—to address themselves to the crucial needs of the people — not to shackle them and degrade their living standards for the benefit of a monopoly few.

To this end, we earnestly propose:

(1) The defeat of all pending anti-labor legislation.

(2) The enactment of a minimum wage law establishing a minimum wage of 75c an hour.

(3) The enactment of housing legislation to provide decent housing for the American people at prices which they can afford, and the continuation of effective rent control.

(4) The enactment of legislation abolishing the poll tax, to establish a permanent FEPC, outlaw lynching, and to protect the civil rights of all Americans.

(5) The enactment of legislation expanding social security, including adequate provision for health and medical care.

We pledge to spare no effort in the mobilization of the American people in every community throughout the country in support of this program. Congress must be made aware in unmistakable terms that the American people are hungry and thirsty for progress—that the American people vigorously reject reaction.

Wage Policy

Economic hardship is felt by millions of people, and the threat of mass unemployment looms ahead for America. These twin economic danger signals fly over our country because wages lag behind soaring, profiteering prices.

A year ago the CIO fought together with other representatives of the people to preserve price stability by continuing OPA. The lobby of big business, bent on gaining the high prices and profits of today, fought against price stability and the OPA. Congress listened to the big business lobby and ignored the people's lobby, which CIO led. OPA was killed. Prices and profits soared. The standards of living of the American Common Man began to fall. And the fertile seeds of depression—a grossly distorted distribution of our national income—were sown.

Out of these economic necessities both for our CIO members and for the health of the national economy, the CIO projected its demands for substantial wage increases. The fact that the major corporations have thus far refused to meet these demands has caused working people to suffer and stands as a major reason why we are beginning the national descent into depression.

Substantial wage increases for American workers must be had at once. This is required not only for the working people but for all who fear the tragic repetition of depression and economic insecurity in America.

Tour Cancelled

THUGS THREATEN WFTU DELEGATES IN 'U.S. KOREA'

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

A WORLD labor mission to Korea cancelled its tour of the American zone of that Far Eastern country after encountering threats from armed company thugs, beatings of Korean workers seeking to greet the delegation, and wide-scale arrests of union leaders.

Charging that the incidents encountered during March 31 resembled activities in the "fascist states," the World Federation of Trade Unions delegation filed a strong complaint with Major General Lerch, commanding U. S. forces in Korea.

Willard Townsend, CIO member of the mission and head of the Transport Service Employes, together with four other unionists from England, France and the Soviet Union, complained that they were threatened by armed company police dressed in Japanese military uniforms. Rifles were being cocked for action, hysterical thugs were surrounding their cars and two workers were beaten almost to death in front of their eyes.

Details of the threat to the lives of the union leaders was contained in the letter sent to General Lerch by Chairman Louis Saillant, WFTU secretary; Ernest Bell, Great Britain; Willard Townsend of the CIO; Michael Tarasov, USSR; and Patrick Waldberg, WFTU staff official.

A full report on their observations in the two zones of Korea and in Japan will be made public at a WFTU general council meeting in Prague, Czechoslovakia, early in June. Occurrences at Seoul were in marked contrast with the mission's treatment in northern Korea and Japan, where they received friendly, cooperative assistance from occupation authorities, government officials and representatives of company managements and labor.

THE incident occurred at the Kyung Bong textile plant, just outside Seoul, capital of Korea. No American military authorities were present at the factory during the WFTU visit.

Although the management of the plant knew the group was planning a visit, there was nobody on hand to greet them when the union leaders reached the textile factory. It was not until they walked through a dormitory for workers at the plant that they encountered the manager and director of the plant.

These two Korean officials refused permission to visit either the factory or the living quarters of the workers, although the group were official guests of the American authorities and had flown to Korea from Japan in Gen. MacArthur's private plane.

"Meanwhile, a group of five men dressed in Japanese uniforms had come closer to our group and had begun molesting the Korean trade union members of our party," the delegation wrote to General Lerch.

After further discussion, Chairman Saillant of the WFTU delegation told the company executives that since they could not inspect the plant freely, they would return to Seoul and report the matter to U. S. military authorities.

"As we were about to enter the cars," the official WFTU report continued, "our attention was caught by shouts. We then saw that a man in the courtyard who was walking towards us had been attacked, thrown to the ground and dragged back by his hair, while at the same time he was being kicked in the face.

"He was then taken by his feet and his shoulders and dragged along the ground into the building which adjoined his factory gates. The same brutal treatment was being given to a second person."

Both the men were members of the Chung Pyung labor union group of Korea "who had followed us to the factory in order to give us leaflets of welcome which had been printed for distribution by this trade union organization," the WFTU letter continued.

When WFTU Sec. Saillant demanded of factory officials that the two beaten men be placed in the American army cars, "the director answered that this was his business and not ours, and he refused to let us provide these men with protection," the report said.

A couple of minutes later, a dozen armed policemen and several armed civilians appeared at the scene inside the plant gates.

"In the face of this situation, which we considered as a very serious insult to the WFTU mission, we decided to leave the factory at once," the WFTU group wrote to Gen. Lerch.

"When we were about to enter our cars, we saw one of these policemen about nine yards from us cocking his rifle, while a civilian armed with a rifle had approached us from the right side and was standing next to the car of the president of the WFTU delegation.

"The delegation felt at this point that it was in a state of complete insecurity. As the delegation drew out of the factory courtyard, a group of company guards ran around the cars in a high state of excitement, screaming epithets and demonstrating deep hostility."

After leaving the Kyung Bong plant, the delegation cancelled visits to other factories since it had no guarantee that similar incidents would not be met.

"The members of the delegation can only liken the incidents which they visited at this factory to things which occurred in the fascist states," the WFTU report declared.

"The delegation was later informed that during the course of the morning, the Korean police had arrested many members of the All-Korean Congress of Trade Unions who had been distributing messages of welcome in honor of the WFTU delegation."

WFTU TO MEET IN JUNE

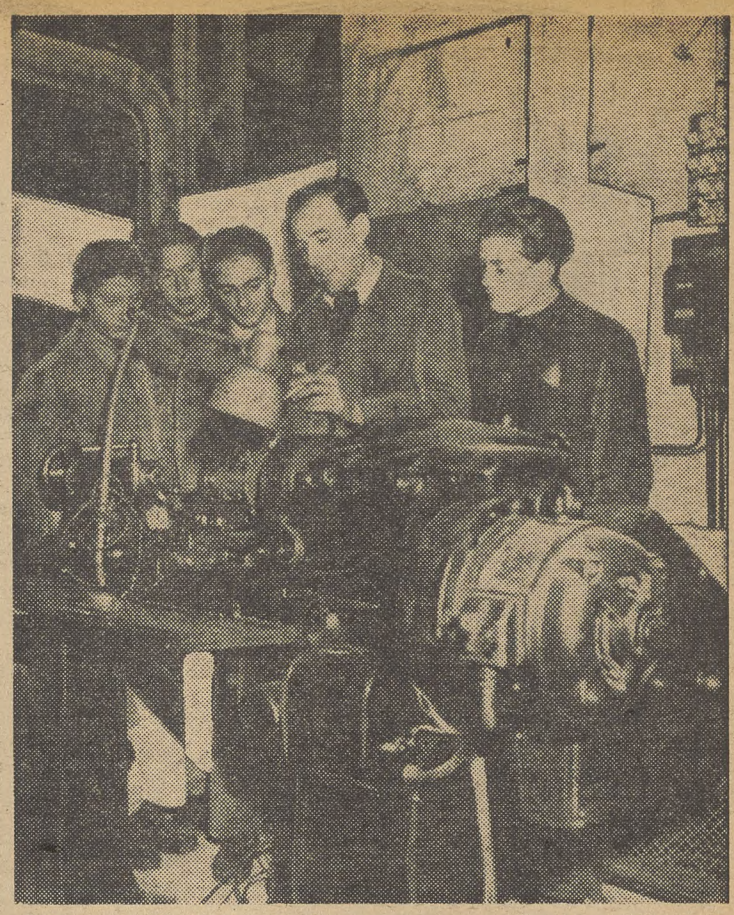
VITAL questions affecting organized workers in every nation will come up for discussion when the World Federation of Trade Unions holds a series of three important meetings in Prague, Czechoslovakia, early in June.

The WFTU's 9-man executive bureau will have its regular quarterly meeting, starting June 2 and winding up June 5. CIO Vice Pres. Frank Rosenblum, of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, is a member of the bureau. On June 6 and 7, the 26-man executive committee will meet.

From June 9-14, the WFTU's big General Council will hold its first meeting since the organization was established.

The General Council, as set up under the WFTU constitution, contains representatives from every national labor organization affiliated with the world union movement. The constitution provides that it meet at least once a year, and it has supreme power to make policy decisions for WFTU in between the biennial meetings of the world labor congress.

Peeling potatoes is one of the many chores the boys do for themselves in the rest homes for young workers maintained by the trade union organization in Austria. The American Friends Service Committee helps out by providing one supplementary meal a day.



An instructor is showing the boys how to work a machine in this trade union metal workshop for apprentices in Vienna. The shop runs only every other week due to shortage of electricity.

Quakers Aid Young Workers In Two War-Torn Cities

AUSTRIAN and Hungarian trade unions are cooperating with the American Friends Service Committee in Europe to help relieve the hardships suffered by teen-age boys and girls who are apprentices and workers in the mills and shops in Vienna and Budapest.

Aid to this group is being given by the Quakers on the basis of a survey made by a group of their workers in the two cities. These young people, between 12 and 18, are beyond the scope of the school feeding programs and generally do not qualify for relief under any of the special adult projects.

The American Friends Service Committee, the first relief organization to be given permission to send permanent relief workers to operate in Hungary, reports that there are some 37,000 young workers and apprentices in Budapest, many of them homeless war orphans.

Some sleep in empty houses or the shops where they work. Their diet is mostly black bread. What clothing they have is ragged and worn. Half of the youngsters have no winter coats and about one out of ten is bare-footed. Pay for apprentices runs from 14½ to 25 forints a week, or the equivalent of 96 cents to $2. A pair of shoes costs from $20 to $24.

In an attempt to relieve the housing problem, the trade union Youth Organization has set up a homes-for-apprentices program and is obtaining unused villas, damaged houses and other available buildings. A Quaker relief worker reports that in one such home he visited, 20 boys were living in three unheated rooms. There were no windows in one room and in another one wall had been shot away. A pipe in the yard was the only water supply.

The Friends Committee is distributing food to these young workers at 20 designated places in Budapest, mostly in factories, where rations are distributed three times a week. The food is distributed uncooked because most of the apprentices work on rotating shifts with only a 15-minute break, which does not allow time for a hot lunch.

IN Austria where conditions in some instances are even harder, the trade union organization has opened seven rest rooms for under-nourished young workers. The Quakers are supplying the rest homes with one supplementary meal a day. One Quaker worker acted as an advisor in a training school for rest home leaders, where courses are given in first aid, problems of community living, and dietics, which consists mostly in instructions on how to cook the unfamiliar American food.

A Quaker worker who visited the rest home for girls in Steiermark reported that there was a lack of recreational facilities and a dearth of reading material. The few books the home had were read until they fell apart.

The most serious deficiency was the lack of shoes. Most of the girls had only one badly worn pair and did not dare use them for hikes. The Committee therefore procured 400 pairs to be used only for hiking. These are carefully checked in and out before and after a hike.

The Friends Committee also provided skiis, balls, 12 phonographs, chess sets and modeling clay, and furnished transport to and from the homes by making their trucks available to the union leaders.

A supplementary meal of 600 calories a day, "the little extra that enables the kids to gain weight," reported a Quaker worker, is considered the most important contribution.

The Friends Committee has been able to aid only 5,000 of the 31,000 young people in Budapest. In Vienna, only the most needy get to the rest homes and then only for one month.

Big Business Lobbyists Helped Cook Hartley Anti-Labor Bill

By IRVING RICHTER
Legislative Representative, UAW-CIO

ONE day late in March, William Ingles, who reports a $20,400 annual salary as a lobbyist, walked into the office of the House Labor Committee.

He carried a heavy suitcase. Nobody asked questions.

"Good morning, Bill," said Rep. Ralph Waldo Gwinn, the hard-working, sour-looking Republican member from the ritzy town of Bronxville in Westchester County, New York. Ingles opened his suitcase, hauled out a pile of reports, and they both went to work.

This company lawyer helped Gwinn put the finishing touches on the "Hartley" anti-labor bill.

Ingles represents: Allis-Chalmers Co., Fruehauf Trailer Co., J. I. Case Co., The Falk Corp., and Inland Steel.

THESE aren't the only anti-union companies that helped out the Labor Committee. "Patrioteer Theodore R. Iserman put aside his rich Chrysler law practice for two full weeks to assist it.

Another volunteer in the anti-labor cause is Jerry Morgan, whose law offices in Washington serve a variety of big corporations.

To fill out the picture, a half-dozen lawyers from the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the U. S. Chamber of Commerce were constantly coming into the committee rooms to help Rep. Gwinn.

This group of high-priced lawyers quietly worked up the most vicious labor bill yet produced. Democratic members of the Labor Committee were ignored.

Then the threatened telephone strike was announced. Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R. N.J.), Labor Committee chairman, called reporters. The tight-lipped, florid-faced Hartley waved his fine cigar; his diamond ring sparkled as he announced:

"The majority of the Committee has approved a bill to stop the telephone strike. It will be ready Monday, but if the strike is called off, the bill will not be pushed."

John Lesinski, ranking minority member of the Labor Committee, was asked by labor people here: "Did you agree to this bill?"

"No," he said, "and I didn't know about it until I read about it in the papers." None of the Democratic members had been consulted by Hartley before he issued this blackmail threat!

IN one of the most blistering attacks ever issued by a group of Congressmen against a Committee chairman, Lesinski, Powell & Klein (N.Y.) Madden (Ind.), Kelley (Pa.), and Kennedy (Mass.), stated publicly:

"The Republicans have inaugurated a new policy by eliminating the two-party system and are holding meetings of the Republican members only . . .

"We believe that Chairman Hartley's proposed bill can only serve to convince thousands of workers in industry that the Republican leadership is committed to an anti-labor, strike-breaking program.

"We are deeply concerned over Chairman Hartley's unfortunate press conference because it created the inference that we too shared the chairman's strike-breaking views. We take this opportunity to disassociate ourselves from those views . . ."

WARNING ON 'LOYALTY'

PRES. TRUMAN'S executive order for the dismissal of "disloyal" government employes robs American citizens of their rights to due process of law and threatens a "thought control" police system strange to American traditions.

That was the nub of criticism of the Order—No. 9835—voiced last week by CIO Pres. Philip Murray, in a letter calling upon Pres. Truman either to make major, drastic changes in the new government policy document or to repeal it altogether.

"As carefully as I have read this Order, I cannot find clear guarantees of due process, whether with respect to specific charges being made available, or to the opportunity to confront accusers and cross-examine witnesses, or to any of the traditional protections afforded all our citizens under the laws of the nation," Murray wrote.

"Furthermore, I am alarmed at the prospect that any organization of citizens, gathered together to express their ideas on matters of mutual interest, may be declared 'subversive' without any specification, definition or limitation of the meaning of that term," he wrote.

"There is no assurance in the Order that fraternal or religious associations, labor or consumer groups, literary or educational organizations or institutions, may not be so labelled forthwith."

Pres. Murray wrote that he feels certain "there should be no room in our Government for those who are disloyal to it, or those who would overthrow or subvert it."

But, he emphasized, there should be a requirement for a clear definition of disloyalty, and due process should be accorded accused individuals.

The CIO Public Workers Union, which has formed a citizens committee to defend civil rights of government employes, charges that the Order deprives federal workers "of elementary legal rights afforded even the most depraved criminals."

The union warns that the Order will lead to creation of a "huge investigating police staff to probe the private lives, thoughts, associations and even the school days of every government employe."

NORTON RAPS HARTLEY

Rep. Fred A. Hartley (R. N.J.), sponsor of HR 3020 to kill labor unions, may be a hero to the NAM, but to at least one colleague in Jersey's Congressional group, he's a dodo.

Rep. Mary Norton (D. N.J.), for 10 years the House Labor Committee chairman during the Roosevelt era, bluntly told Congress why she had resigned from that committee when the 80th Congress opened.

"I could not serve with a chairman for whom I had no respect," she said.

"My reason for that is that during the 10 years I was chairman of the Labor Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Rep. Hartley) who is now chairman of the Labor Committee, and who comes here before you and talks about labor as if he knew something about it, attended exactly six meetings in 10 years.

"That was my reason for leaving the Committee on Labor."

WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS

Part of CIO's vast People's Lobby marching from the Capitol to the House Office Building. This group from Philadelphia was matched by scores of others who flocked to Washington to tell their Senators and Representatives that anti-labor bills will cut consumer purchasing power and help hustle the nation along the road to another '29. CRUCIAL WEEK IN SENATE

THIS is the crucial week for organized labor in the U. S. Senate. On top the agenda is the Taft Bill to curb labor's freedom.

The bill (S. 1126) is scheduled for considerable debate, with a vote expected in the first part of May.

From every indication, the bill will pass the Senate. The question will be the size of the liberal opposition to the Taft-Ball proposals to hamstring unions. A maximum of 33 votes will be needed to uphold a veto if Pres. Truman refuses to sign the measure.

The Hartley bill (HR 3020), an even stronger bill than the Senate version, has already passed the House. If and when the Taft bill is approved by the Senate, a joint conference committee of the House and Senate will work out a compromise measure. Once that joint effort is approved in House and Senate, the bill will go to the White House—probably about the middle of May.

PARLIAMENTARY fireworks on the Senate bill, approved 11-2 by the Labor Committee, opened april 23 with an oratorical display by Sen. Robert Taft (R. Ohio).

"It is not an anti-labor bill," Taft declared, with a fine disregard for the facts.

Continuing his fiction - like speech, the Ohio Senator said: "It is not a bill inspired by a desire to wreak vengeance on anyone because of what he may have done. It simply proposes to deal with the causes of labor trouble and the injustices and inequalities of the present law."

BUT a Senate Labor Committee three-man minority flatly contradicted the conservative Ohio would-be Presidential candidate.

In a joint statement Senators Pepper, Murray and Thomas (Utah) attacked the fundamental basis of the Taft anti-union proposals.

"In the name of 'fairness,' many of them would give more to those who have, and less to those who have not," the Senators declared. "In the name of 'equality' they would increase maldistribution of wealth; masquerading as protesters against monopoly, they would weaken the remaining barrier to concentration of industrial power."

While some of the very worst of the provisions were removed from the Taft bill in the Senate, it still is a disastrous measure, far worse for workers than the Case Bill which Pres. Truman vetoed a year ago.

Taft, preparing to write in a group of toughening amendments on the Senate floor, announced he had won the support of two reactionary Southern Democrats —Byrd (Va.) and George (Ga.)— to support amendments giving injunction powers to employers and placing greater restrictions on union welfare funds.

Meanwhile Sen. Joseph Ball (R. Minn.) will probably seek support for an amendment to outlaw industry-wide bargaining —one of the principal sections removed from the bill in committee.

Other reactionaries will also try to make the Taft bill a close facsimile of the House-approved Hartley proposal.

Don't Kill Goose To Get Egg!

Benefits of the widely-hailed CIO contract with U. S. Steel Corp., would be impossible to achieve if the Taft-Hartley bills passed, leaders of the United Steelworkers bluntly told all Senators.

Pres. Murray and Sec.-Treas. David McDonald, in wires to all members of the Senate, said the pact showed what can be accomplished "through free collective bargaining.

"Under legislation now proposed in the Congress of the U. S.," the wire said, "this achievement would have been obstructed, the improvement of the conditions and solution of the problem of the steel workers would have been prevented, and our organization thwarted and crippled in the exercise of our legitimate functions.

"In the name of 'fairness,' stability and preservation of free trade unionism and democratic rights, we urge you to vote against vindictive legislation now being urged."

PROFESSORS BLAST 'SAVAGE ATTACK' ON LABOR

THE Hartley anti-union bill, passed by the House, represents a "savage and unconcealed attack upon organized labor," according to a group of more than 50 college professors of economics.

Their statement, issued in Washington, charged that the bill "would virtually abolish national unions by forbidding collective bargaining on other than a local basis, save in isolated cases. Such national unions are today the hub of the labor movement."

The group of professors said they hoped the Senate and Pres. Truman will "repudiate" the House bill, and that "Congress and the President will establish a joint commission to study the underlying causes of labor unrest and prescribe remedies for proven abuses."

During the war, the statement added, "American labor made a signal contribution to our war efforts; it should not be fettered with a measure which so patently denies democratic liberties."

Among those signing the statement were Prof. Colston Warne, Amherst; Prof. Wilburt Snow, Wesleyan; Rev. Wilfrid Parsons, Catholic Univ.; Prof. Dorothy Douglas, Smith; Prof. Emily C. Brown, Vassar; Prof. James Cusick, Dartmouth, and Prof. Robert Rockafellow, Rhode Island.

TAFT BILL TEETH COULD RIP YOUR UNION

DON'T let the papers fool you into thinking that the Taft anti-labor bill (S. 1126) is "mild." It's got teeth enough to rip your union to bits. And it's apt to be even sharper after the Senate tacks on a few more amendments.

Here are a few indications of how the Taft bill, if passed, would affect your union:

1. PREVENTION OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING.

The bill creates a number of new ways of preventing a union from getting bargaining rights or of preventing it from holding on to rights already gained. Here are a few examples:

A. Even after the union has been certified and is operating under a contract, a "decertification" election can be called for at any time after one year, in an effort to throw the union out.

B. Company unions are given the right to be on the ballot and not to be disestablished.

C. If a union loses an election, employes cannot get another election in the plant for a year no matter how unrepresentative the first election was, and even if all the workers now want the union.

D. Unions are required to file volumes of material with the Secretary of Labor; and the Board may refuse any election unless satisfied that all technicalities in the filing have been complied with.

2. BREAK-UP OF COLLECTIVE BARGAINING UNITS.

A. "Professional" employees are required to be voted separately at all times.

B. Craft units must be voted separately, even where the Board has previously determined that an industrial unit is appropriate.

3. GROUPS EXCLUDED FROM BARGAINING RIGHTS.

A. Supervisors are denied collective bargaining rights. They are also prohibited from getting collective bargaining rights under any state law.

B. Employes in "agriculture" excluded—contrary to present law and practice which permits collective bargaining by those who are employed by large employers in industrial-type farm operations.

4. UNION SECURITY.

A. Closed shop is outlawed.

B. Contract can provide for all other forms of union security, union maintenance, union shop, etc., only if (1) majority of all employes in unit (including those who don't come out to vote) vote in secret ballot to authorize union security clause, and (2) only nonpayment of dues can be grounds for expulsion. (Union can't get rid of company spy, disrupter, etc.)

C. Any group of employes can get a new vote at any time after one year to take away right to union security.

5. RESTRICTIONS ON RIGHT TO STRIKE.

A. Where Attorney General finds that a strike affects "substantially an entire industry" and may "imperil the national health or safety" he can get an anti-strike injunction. After 60 days the NLRB takes secret ballot of employes of each employer to decide whether they will accept the last offer made by employer. Anti-strike injunction lasts for at least 75 days.

B. In any strike, those strikers who have been replaced lose right to vote in NLRB election. If employer can replace enough strikers with strikebreakers, he can call for a vote and get rid of the union.

C. It becomes an unfair labor practice for union workers to refuse to handle scab goods or goods made under sweatshop conditions, or to refuse to work for an employer who is helping another employer break a strike.

D. It becomes an unfair labor practice, if the NLRB finds a union "has refused to bargain". Thus, if the Board disapproves union bargaining tactics, it might issue an order directing the end of a strike.

E. In all unfair labor cases, the Board has power to go to court, as soon as it issues a complaint (before it has held any hearing or issued any order) and get a preliminary injunction, without regard for the Norris-LaGuardia Act.

6. ADMINISTRATION OF CONTRACTS BY NLRB AND COURTS.

A. Violation of collective bargaining contracts is made an unfair labor practice. This means that all present arbitration procedures are tossed aside. Grievance adjustment is tossed into the long delays of Board procedure. Decisions will be delayed for months or years.

B. Suits under all collective bargaining contracts may be brought in Federal courts, regardless of normal jurisdictional requirements. This will encourage employers to throw collective bargaining enforcement into the red tape of court litigation.

7. ENCOURAGES RAIDS ON UNION TREASURIES

A. Permits suit against any labor organization, not only in the district where it maintains its principal office but in any district in which it has any "officers or agents." Thus a national union can be harassed by law suits brought against it in any part of the country where it has a local union.

8. INTERFERENCE WITH ADMINISTRATIVE EFFICIENCY OF BOARD

A. Packs the NLRB by raising membership to seven.

B. Forbids Board to retain present staff of "review attorneys" who analyze voluminous records. The bill would require each member to analyze hundreds of thousands of pages of record at a time when the Board is already from 6 months to a year behind in its docket.

C. Forbids Board to hire economic analysts necessary to study records and statistics on discriminatory discharges, etc.

D. Places 6 months' statute of limitations on filing of charges. Thus if employer sets up company union, it is free from attack once it has been in existence for 6 months.

STEELWORKERS WIN RAISE OF 15c PLUS

U. S. Steel Employes Get $42 Million Hike a Year

THE CIO Steelworkers this week signed a contract boosting the wages paid by United States Steel by slightly better than 15c an hour. U. S. Steel is the bellwether of the steel industry.

The agreement provides a 12½c an hour increase with the remainder of the 15c plus to cover elimination of inequities, improvement in vacations, reduction in the Southern differential, and institution of severance pay.

The annual pay increase for 140,000 U. S. Steel employes will aggregate more than $42 million.

Since Feb., 1946, the Steelworkers have won increases of more than 38½c an hour for U. S. Steel employes, including 18½c won by last year's strike and 5.18c agreed to this February to help wipe out wage inequities.

Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray hailed the new contract as a model guide to industrial stability which well might be followed by unions and companies in other mass production industries.

He said that he was thinking particularly of the two-year period of the contract and of the provision allowing for wage reopening in a year.

MANY CIO unions in mass production industries have signed contracts, but the CIO signed contracts.

The CIO Auto Workers and General Motors this week reached an agreement giving employes slightly more than 15c an hour considering six paid vacations and other economic benefits.

UAW is negotiating with Chrysler and will soon open talks with Ford.

The CIO Oil Workers have obtained increases averaging 22c hourly for most workers and last week the Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers won an increase from GM amounting to 15c an hour including the time paid for holidays not worked and other economic adjustments.

A similar agreement was made with GM for members of the Rubber Workers in its employ.

The Rubber Workers signed a contract last month with Goodyear, Goodrich, Firestone and U. S. Rubber granting an 11½c hourly increase, and containing a 120-day re-opening clause.

The Packinghouse Workers, the Textile Workers and the Amalgamated Clothing Workers and the Paper Workers and the Glass Workers are among the unions in the mass production industries which signed contracts either this year or late last year granting wage increases and other benefits.

THE U. S. Steel contract covers employes in Carnegie-Illinois, American Steel & Wire, Columbia Steel, National Tube, and Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad. The wage increase is retroactive to April 1.

Features of the contract include maintenance of membership and the check-off, reduction of the Southern differenetial by 3c an hour; increase of increment in each classification from 3½ to 4c an hour.

Under an improved vacation clause 3 weeks vacation with pay is provided for employes with 25 year's service.

For the first time a severance pay clause is included. This provides that anybody displaced by the shut-down or discontinuance of a department receives severance pay ranging from 4 weeks pay for 3 years continuous service to 8 weeks for 10 years.

The safety provision and the scheduling of work clause to assure greater degree of regularity in work are clarified. Any employe reporting for work must receive a minimum of four hours' pay instead of two.

THE company also agreed to join with the union in making a study of social insurance programs covering death, disability, sickness, hospitalization and medical care. The study is to be completed not later than Nov. 1.

The USA-U. S. Steel negotiations started late in January. That month Murray announced that the corporation had agreed to give about $32 million in back pay and about $17 million in annual wage increases through a new wage rate plan. The union then agreed to the extension until April 30 of the contract, due to expire Feb. 15.

Negotiations were completed early April 20 after a skeleton committee headed by Murray for the union and John A. Stephens, vice-president, for U. S. Steel had been in almost continuous session for more than three days in Pittsburgh. Other members of the Steelworkers committee were Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald and General Counsel Lee Pressman.

The contract was ratified this week by the 175-man policy committee which had been called by Murray a few weeks ago when prospects for consummation of the contract were not too bright.

UAW, GM AGREE TO OVER 15c HIKE

THE CIO Auto Workers this week agreed a new contract with General Motors which UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther estimated would give the workers slightly more than 15c an hour.

Agreement followed a turbulent week during which the Auto Workers abandoned their demand for a 23½c hourly increase but insisted that arbitrators determine how 3½c of the 15c wage boost be allocated.

The agreement provides an 11½c increase effective April 24, provided it is ratified by the union by May 5, and six paid holidays for workers having 6 months or more experience.

The pact which runs for a year also provides pay in lieu of vacation on the basis of 40 hours' pay for those with one year's seniority on July 1; 60 hours for those with 3 years, and 80 hours for those with five or more years.

Call-in pay was increased from 3 to 4 hours.

The union said the negotiations would continue on UAW's demands for social security and old age benefits. The UAW's 200-man representative group voted to recommend ratification to the locals.

Wage talks are continuing with Chrysler, and are scheduled to open soon with Ford.

CIO SEA UNIONS WARY OF SHIP OWNERS' PLANS

REPRESENTATIVES of five CIO maritime unions discussing joint action on renewal of contracts expiring June 15 decided at Washington this week to reject the demands of ship-owners to extend present agreements through September and pledged to support one another's demands.

The group agreed on a statement of "all-out support by all participating unions to guarantee that the shipowners will be defeated in their game of trying to isolate individual unions fighting to secure a satisfactory contract." They decided to hold future meetings "of all CIO maritime unions to carry out the necessary strategy and tactics against the shipowners for June 15."

Participating unions included the Natl. Maritime Union, Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. and American Communications Assn., all members of the CIO Maritime Committee.

The union spokesmen also adopted a resolution on the Texas City disaster demanding that Congress "immediately provide all necessary funds and relief to assist survivors and their families who suffered any hardship in the disaster."

They asked that Congress investigate the cause of the explosion and fire, and follow up with "legislation designed to guarantee the safety of life and property in the maritime industry, oil industry, chemical industry and every other field where the Texas City disaster affected life or property."

A committee from the meeting called on U. S. Maritime Commission officials and demanded an immediate halt to the transfer of ships owned and operated by American shipowners to Panamanian and Honduran registry. These vessels were termed "runaway ships," and the commission was told the unions "were prepared to take action to protect their members against this vicious form of lockout."

Highlights of Steel Pact

OUTSTANDING features of the CIO Steelworkers-U. S. Steel contract signed this week are:

- A $1.00 a day increase, or 12½c an an hour.
- Severance pay included for the first time provides pay ranging from 4 weeks for 3 years' continuous service to 8 weeks for 10 years.
- Agreement to run for two years with wage re-opening after one year.
- Maintenance of membership and check-off.
- Southern differential cut by 3c an hour.
- Increment between job classification increased from 3½c to 4c to further eliminate inequities.
- As long as employes receiving high out-of-line rates stay on their present jobs they shall receive their present pay plus the general wage increase.
- Three-weeks vacation for 25-year employes, and continuance of present vacation period of one week for one year and 2 weeks for 5 years.
- Safety provision clarified, with union and management to work more closely on a health and safety program.
- Scheduling of work clause clarified to assure greater degree of regularity.
- Pay for reporting time raised from two to four hours.
- Grievance machinery speeded up to provide quicker settlements.
- Seniority section clarified, the Steelworkers and U. S. Steel agreeing to a joint study of seniority.
- U. S. Steel agreed in a letter to make a joint study of a social insurance program covering death, disability, sickness benefits, hospitalization and medical care, to be completed not later than Nov. 1.

NO NIGHTMARE BUT REALITY

IF YOU lie awake at night sometimes, worrying about what would happen if you lost your job, if your wages were cut, if you were shifted to a lower-paying job or bumped down the seniority list, if an unfriendly boss were free to vent all his spite on you, if your work were speeded up still more, etc., etc.—then you are liable to have dreams that will give you a rough idea of what can happen to American workers under the Hartley-Taft legislation.

Union organization is our chief protection against such evils. It has raised wages, shortened working hours and checked undue speed-up.

It has established seniority and grievance procedure to protect workers against unfair discriminations. It has won paid vacations and countless other benefits. It has given workers some independence, security and democracy.

All these rights and benefits will be endangered, if the legislation now before Congress is enacted. For its cold-blooded aim is to weaken, if not completely destroy, the unions which have secured them.

THERE IS hardly any form of union activity that is not attacked by the Hartley and Taft bills.

They would make strong national unions impossible, by breaking them up into weak and isolated company units forbidden to cooperate against the under-cutting of wages.

They would restore open-shop conditions by outlawing arrangements to protect the union against the introduction of non-union labor.

They would give employers every possible excuse to refuse to bargain, would interfere with the workers' rights to choose their representatives and run their unions as they wish, and would promote company unionism.

They would effectively destroy the right to strike and picket—the workers' weapon of last resort, without which they have little bargaining power.

And these are but a few of the things this anti-labor legislation would do to destroy practically all union protections and leave workers at the mercy of wage-cutting, open-shop employers.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

IT CAME as a surprise to most radio listeners to learn how painfully sensitive an NBC vice president can be.

Millions of radios were made to observe a period of silent tribute to the wounded dignity of the radio moguls, when comedians Allen, Hope and Skelton attempted to twit them.

It was a lesson to the common herd to show more respect to corporation executives and the way they make their living. After all, something should be sacred in this frivolous world!

WE OF the common herd tend to be rather brazen about our wages. We don't even blush when every detail about them, down to the last half-cent, is spread all over the papers.

So, perhaps we don't appreciate the delicacy of feeling of the captain of industry who tries to keep such vulgar details a secret—even from the income tax people at times.

OF COURSE, once a year the government is so lacking in refinement as to expose the salaries of industrial big-shots—and we can think we know how many hundred thousands our bigger bosses make.

But there's where we get fooled. For salaries are only so much cheese to the corporation upper-crust.

Concealed in corporation reports are all sorts of perquisites that go with their jobs (fringe issues, if you please), such as bonuses, options for stock purchase, pensions, profit-sharing, etc.

And what they get from their directorships of other companies, and from their many investments, is none of our business, they think.

THE ABOVE may help to explain the embarrassment which big businessmen are reported to be suffering at the present time.

Maybe you and I wouldn't be embarrassed if a few cool millions of dollars were suddenly deposited in our savings accounts.

But that's just because we don't have the sensitivity and delicacy of those born and bred to bear the embarrassment of riches with blushing and retiring dignity.

THIS YEAR every financial sheet is bewailing the fact that corporation profits are "embarrassingly high."

As each company reports its earnings for the first quarter, its directors are so embarrassed they almost hate to mention them.

(During the war, total corporate profits after taxes rose to a record annual average of 9½ billions. But in 1946, they jumped to $12 billions, and this year they are coming in at the annual rate of $17 billions.)

SO WHAT'S all the embarrassment about, we of the common herd may wonder.

If a corporation is embarrassed because its profits are so high, it can easily reduce them by increasing the wages of its employes and lowering the prices of its products.

But that is just what the corporations don't want to do. In fact, the chief source of their embarrassment is that folks may draw this rather obvious conclusion.

One of the business sheets explains that the present enormous profits are embarrassing because they show up "price profiteering" and give the unions new arguments for wage increases.

IT SEEMS big business wants everybody to share its embarrassment—in different ways.

While it's embarrassed with too much money, it wants the workers to be embarrassed with too little, and the general consuming public to be embarrassed by too high prices.

(Retail prices of consumers' goods, rents and services advanced by about 2% between mid-February and mid-March to an all-time high, according to the U. S. Bureau of Labor Statistics).

IN FACT, big business seems rather to enjoy the general embarrassment, and the thrill of teetering on the edge of another depression.

It gets annoyed at any proposals for raising wages and lowering prices. It prefers to accumulate more and more unsold goods in its warehouses, rather than to sell them at prices people can pay.

And it's pushing a compliant Congress into destroying the labor movement, the one force capable of relieving all this embarrassment.

Maybe this will explain why radio comedians are cut off the air at the first faint crack about corporation big-shots. There's so much more they might crack wise about!

DEMOCRACY IN ACTION

"THIS IS a demonstration of what can be accomplished through free collective bargaining in a democratic society," said CIO Pres. Philip Murray of the agreement just won by the United Steelworkers with the U.S. Steel Corporation.

The agreement, which was won without a strike, raises wage standards substantially and secures many other improved conditions for the steelworkers. It also benefits the whole country by increasing mass purchasing power, preserving the workers' democratic rights and assuring continued industrial peace.

And the same can be said for the similar agreements similarly won in recent weeks by the CIO electrical, auto, rubber, packinghouse, textile, glass, oil and paper workers, and by many other CIO unions.

Yet this type of free and peaceful collective bargaining, with all the benefits that flow from it, is now threatened by the labor-baiters who are trying to enact laws to cripple unions and destroy collective bargaining.

"Under legislation now proposed in Congress," Murray said, "this achievement would have been obstructed, the improvement of the conditions and solution of the problems of the steelworkers would have been prevented, and our organiaztion would have been thwarted and crippled in the exercise of its legitimate functions."

CIO OPENS UNITY TALKS ON MAY 1

DISCUSSIONS on unified action and the possibility of eventual merger between CIO and AFL will be undertaken Thursday, May 1, by five-man committees representing each of the two organizations.

In the latest interchange of correspondence between the heads of the two labor groups, Murray explained that a meeting on April 24—as proposed earlier last week by AFL Pres. Green—was impossible because a number of CIO representatives were engaged "in important wage scale negotiations."

Murray suggested the Statler Hotel in Washington or some suitable place as a site for the discussions.

The AFL's invitation was an outgrowth of a letter sent on Dec. 6, 1946 by Murray to Green, Pres. A. F. Whitney of the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen and Pres. Thomas C. Cashen of the Railway Labor Executives Assn.

In that letter, Murray pointed to the fact that a "deliberate and monstrous movement" is under way to cripple the American labor movement. He called for unified action by the various labor groups as "imperative and of vital importance" to halt the anti-labor drive in Congress.

The AFL replied in the latter part of January with a suggestion that only a discussion of complete merger would be feasible. In a second letter, on Feb. 18, Murray sounded a warning that no "words or cliches" should prevent labor from making immediate action against legislative dangers.

SEVERAL weeks later, in early March, Murray said that the CIO united action committee awaits word from the AFL as to the date and place for an early meeting.

"It is inconceivable that once we meet we would not, in the face of the stark, pressing danger confronting American labor, determine upon immediate protective measures in addition to engaging in a discussion for the achievement of organic unity," Murray wrote.

Members of the CIO committee are Murray and Presidents Albert J. Fitzgerald, electrical workers; Walter Reuther, auto; Emil Rieve, textile; and Jacob Potofsky, clothing.

The AFL committee consists of Green, Sec.-Treas. George Meany, and Presidents John Lewis of the miners, William Hutcheson of the carpenters, and Dan Tobin of the teamsters.

Slums like these within view of the nation's Capitol point up the need for passage of the Taft-Wagner-Ellender Housing Bill. Letters and wires to your Senators will help. The picture, entitled "Where from Here?" won first prize in a Washington, D. C. photo contest sponsored by the Citizens Council for Community Planning. It was made by Ralph Lawrence.

Savings Drop; Truman Warns of Crash

HIGH prices have contributed to a 42 per cent drop in savings from $35 billion in 1945 to $19 billion in 1946, the Dept. of Commerce announced this week.

The announcement was followed by a statement from Pres. Truman, speaking to business, that prices must be brought down.

Declaring that "profits in the aggregate are breaking all records," Truman said:

"There is one sure formula for bringing on a recession or a depression. That is to maintain excessively high prices. Buying stops; production drops, unemployment sets in; prices collapse; profits vanish; businessmen fail."

Truman criticized by indirection the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, which predicted that when price controls were removed, prices would drop.

"This has not taken place," the President declared. "On the contrary, prices rose sharply after controls were taken off and they have continued to rise."

THE latest government reports show that prices reached a new record as of March 15, climbing 2 per cent in a month. The Bureau of Labor Statistics said prices then were more than 58 per cent above those of August 1939.

Despite wide publicity given the current "Newburyport plan" for cutting prices, Pres. Earl Bunting of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers openly predicted that prices will rise even higher. He claimed that despite hugh profits, business could not absorb wage increases.

But new facts this week came to light to support CIO's general contention that price increases have far outstripped amounts necessary to offset wage increases.

A detailed analysis of the cost of making a shirt was submitted by CIO Textile Workers Washington representative John Edelman to Sen. R. A. Taft, who was urged to investigate who gains most from inflated prices.

The survey, made by Textile Research Director Solomon Barkin, showed that "the total labor cost of making sufficient unfinished fabric for a man's ordinary white shirt increased 6½c between 1939 and 1947, while the retail selling price of this shirt went up from $1.65 to $3.95."

In urging Taft to extend the study to other fields, Edelman wrote:

"If Congress assists the citizens in really getting at the facts about what makes prices high, it may be possible to finally nail the lie that labor is responsible for increased costs.

"Moreover, it may be possible to develop sufficient popular understanding of what is at stake here to enable Congress to take the needed steps to correct a highly dangerous inflationary situation, which, if not checked, will obviously bring a real depression in its wake."

Soap Profits Doubled

Profits of the Colgate-Palmolive-Peet Co. in 1946 have almost doubled those of the previous year.

Pres. E. H. Little, in his annual report to stockholders, said the company's net income in 1946 was $14,443,835 or $7.14 a common share, compared with $7,036,054, or $3.34 a share for 1945. The company made its record profits despite a continuing scarcity of the principal raw materials for soap.

HOUSING BILL FACES FIGHT

THE Taft-Wagner-Ellender long-range housing bill faces a hard battle in the Senate and even stiffer opposition in the House.

Approved last week by a 7-6 vote of the Senate Banking Committee, the bill (S. 866) has been placed on the Senate calendar to follow the anti-labor legislation and other pending matters.

Sen. Taft (R., O.), a sponsor of the bill, has been attacked by the real estate lobby as a "socialist" for his endorsement of the proposals, which public housing experts call the only possible method of getting construction of homes for low-income families.

The bill squeaked through committee. The deciding vote, from Sen. Maybank (D., S. C.), came in the form of a proxy phoned in from Annapolis, Md. Others supporting the measure were two Republicans—Tobey (R., N. H.) and Flander (R., Vt.); plus five Democrats — Maybank, Taylor (Ida.), Wagner (N. Y.), Sparkman (Ala.) and Fulbright, (Ark).

My bill would solve the housing problem.... It puts all the men back in the army...

On page one it was a "war against high prices" but in the back of the paper readers learned this week that the chief spokesman for industry predicted even higher prices!

1,050 NAM Programs!

As if the NAM hadn't got the country into enough trouble already, the big business organization has launched a nationwide radio propaganda campaign.

NAM is sending a 15-minute transcription broadcast each week for a year to 1,050 stations in the U. S. and Hawaii. It will feature talks on "topics of the day" and reports on developments in the industrial world.

NAM set up plans at its last convention for a propaganda fund of close to three million dollars.

Eleven Nazi gangsters like Goering (who committed suicide) paid the death penalty for their crimes against humanity. Admiral Karl Doenitz (rear) got off with 10 years.

The men who helped Hitler murder millions, crush labor and plunder Europe are being called to account for their crimes. Leaders of the financial and industrial interests behind the Nazis are up for trial, either before U. S. military tribunals or German de-Nazification courts. They are charged with enslaving labor, plundering occupation territory, robbing Jews and supporting membership in Hitler's brutal storm trooper gang. This background story on how they operated is told by a former U. S. official who played a leading role in American Military Government's early postwar attempts to oust Nazis from positions of influence.

BIG INDUSTRIALISTS MAY BE NEXT

By RICHARD SASULY

IN THE broken city of Nuremberg today some of Germany's worst union-busters await trial before a U. S. military tribunal. The industrial big shots who backed Hitler can look out of their cell windows at the rubble which they helped to create. There is nothing they can do to repair the damage of war in Great Britain or Poland or even in Germany, but they can finally look forward to being brought to justice for their crimes.

The Nuremberg trials began with the prosecution of Goering and the other top Nazis. Those trials were held before an international court, with judges from the United States, the Soviet Union, Great Britain and France. Goering and the generals were convicted but Hjalmar Schacht, who organized business support behind Hitler, went free.

When Schacht was acquitted it seemed as if all the German industrialists who had committed war crimes were safe. But the case against the German industrialists is going ahead, now solely in American hands.

On February 7, the first indictment was brought in. Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor, the U. S. chief of counsel for war crimes, indicted Friedrich Flick and four of his henchmen on five counts as war criminals.

WHAT has happened here is something new in history. It is worth taking a close look at this man Flick. While he was not a headline figure like Hitler, Goering or Goebbels, he was the behind-the-scene boss of the German steel industry. He was easily one of the dozen most powerful men in Germany. He was the kind of powerful man who generally keeps his nose clean and stays out of trouble, leaving glory and risks to the front men and satisfying himself with profits.

It is worthwhile to go back into the record and see what kind of men Flick and the other industrialists were, what they did, and why they now end up in the prisoner's dock, indicted for crimes against the world.

Go back to 1925. In that year a man named Carl Duisberg said:

"There is no doubt that the German economy can only exist and fulfill its duties if the burden of salaries, wages, taxes, freights and—not least—impositions for social security, which it must carry, are limited.

". . . German trade unions. . . must from now on hold as their primary duty giving consideration together with employers to increasing production. . . then the wage and salary question (will not be) of exclusive importance as it unfortunately still is today. . ." The words have a familiar ring.

Duisberg was the head of the central federation of German industrialists. He was the founder of IG Farben, biggest of German monopolies. American prosecutors are also preparing a case against IG Farben at Nuremberg. Duisberg himself is dead, but his successor, Hermann Schmitz, is in a prison camp in Germany and he will follow Flick before the Nuremberg tribunal.

Hugo Stinnes was another German industrialist who organized some of the biggest combines the world has ever seen. In the midst of juggling corporations like rubber balls he found time to harrangue German labor to give up its eight hour day and sweat out a daily ten hours.

Take Hjalmar Schacht, the man who escaped with his life in the first Nuremberg trials. He was worried about the eight hour day too. And in a book which he wrote for the American public in 1931, he argued against social insurance because, he said, it weakened the moral fiber.

FROM 1918 up to 1933, German industrial leaders like Schacht and Flick and Duisberg fought against the labor movement. But the unions were strongly organized. They had a total membership of more than 8 million.

The right to organize was not just protected by a law like the Wagner Act, it was stated positively as a part of the Weimar Constitution. A special law passed in 1920 guaranteed collective bargaining by the setting up of works councils, with shop stewards as delegates, in every plant in the country.

Then in the last months of 1932 the German industrialists made their big decision. The worldwide depression had hit Germany hard. Among people who had nothing to look forward to but more despair, Hitler and his goons began to make headway.

In national elections held in the summer of 1932, Hitler made his best showing. He was near to clean-cut control of the government. But then something happened. The Nazis started to slip. People began to think that maybe beerhall thugs and professional Jew baiters might not make the best leaders for a country after all.

In the elections held in the fall of 1932 the Nazis lost heavily. The labor parties gained ground. And at this point the leaders of German industry made their big decision.

A few of the industrialists, like Thyssen and Kirdorf, had supported Hitler from the early days after World War I. Now the whole top group decided to back him.

After the war, a high official of IG Farben, Baron Georg von Schnitzler, told an American investigator about the fateful meeting at which the decision was made. Early in 1933, he said, "four directors of IG Farben. . . were asked by the office of the President of the Reichstag to attend a meeting in his house. I went to the meeting which was attended by about 20 persons who I believe were mostly leading industrialists from the Ruhr."

Among those whom von Schnitzler listed as being present were Schacht, Krupp and Albert Vogler, an associate of Flick in the steel trust. Von Schnitzler continued: "Dr. Schacht acted as a kind of host. While I had expected the appearance of Goering, Hitler entered the room, shook hands with everybody and took a seat at the head of the table. In a long speech he talked mainly about the danger of com-

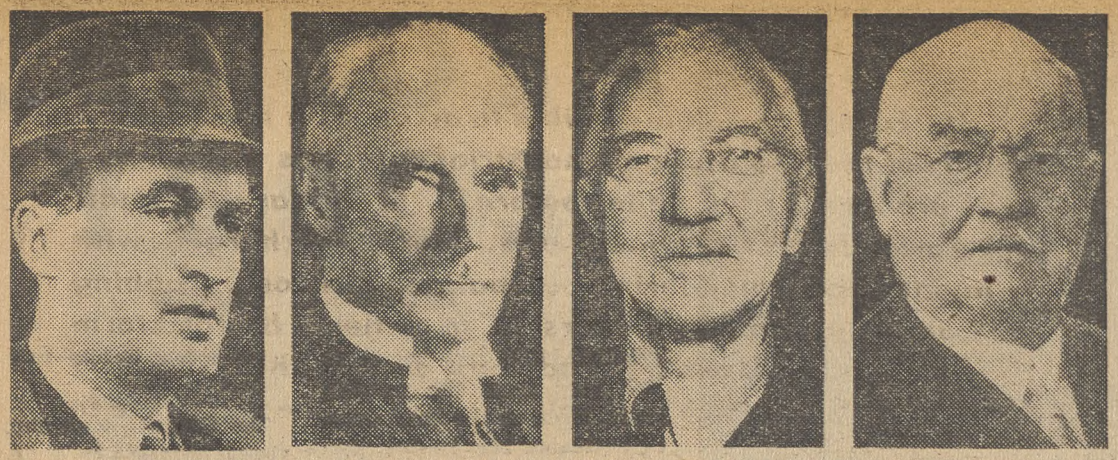
Big question today is whether industrialists who backed Hitler will get their share of justice. Friedrich Flick, described by U. S. authorities as the greatest single power behind the Nazi war machine, directly financed the work of Hitler's brutal storm troopers.



Big guns behind the Nazi war drive were (l. to r.) Alfried Krupp, his father, Gustav Krupp von Bohlen und Halbach, Hjalmar Schacht and Carl Duisberg, who is dead. The Krupps controlled a large part of German steel, Schacht was the master-mind behind German finances, and Duisberg found IG Farben, the biggest monopoly in Germany. His successor, Hermann Schmitz, is scheduled to stand trial along with the others.

munism over which he pretended that he had just won a decisive victory.

". . . Krupp von Bohlen thanked Hitler for his speech. After Hitler had left the room, Dr. Schacht proposed to the meeting the raising of an election fund of three million marks."

The money was raised and turned over to Hitler. The Nazis won the next election with the full support of the big industrialists. That was early in 1933 and there has never been a free election on a national scale in Germany since then. Hitler was given complete power.

IN A MATTER of only a few months Hitler started to pay off the industrialists for the help they had given him. In less than two months, May and June 1933, the Nazis took over and wrecked the entire organized labor movement. Unions were abolished and replaced with the fascist "labor front". Union leaders were beaten and thrown into the concentration camps to die. As for political action, there was none. There was only the Nazi party.

It was clear sailing now for the German industrial leaders. The work-week went above 60 hours, even before the war. The industrial accident rate jumped from 34 per thousand workers in 1932 to 60 in 1938. Wages stayed where they had been at the bottom of the depression in 1932, and for a good reason: there could be no strikes under the Nazis.

Hitler claimed he had solved unemployment because he set the unemployed to building military highways, but when the German housewife complained that there still wasn't enough food to set on the table, Goering made his famous reply. "Guns instead of butter!"

IF GERMAN industrialists had only produced armaments—although they knew that they were helping to start an aggressive war—they would never have had to face the Nuremberg court. Actually, their war services to the Nazi regime went far beyond mere production.

Here are a few of the charges which American investigators have proved against the boss of the steel trust, Friedrich Flick.

● Flick directly financed the work of the SS, Hitler's picked killers.

● Flick worked with top Nazis like Fritz Sauckel and Albert Speer (both found guilty of war crimes at the first Nuremberg trial) to enslave and deport to Germany upward of five million workers from such countries as France, Poland and Russia.

● Flick and his confederates "aryanized" property, that is, they stole the property of Jews under cover of the violent propaganda of Jew-baiters like Rosenberg.

● Flick followed directly behind the advancing German armies in the first years of the war to seize and plunder industrial plants in the conquered countries. The German soldier stole and sent home sausages and silk stockings. Flick and his friends stole whole factories and mills.

And what was behind this record of violence and robbery? Partly of course, there were handsome profits to be made, wealth to be acquired. But the design ran further. In the language of the U. S. War Department, Flick and his fellow-industrialists "aimed at securing the permanent economic domination of the European continent."

THE German industrialists cannot defend themselves on the ground that they merely took advantage of the war situation after the outbreak of hostilities. Far beyond the simple production of armaments, they shared with the Nazi party and the General Staff of the army in the planning and preparation of the total war which they knew would come. On this score, the case of IG Farben, which will follow the Flick case in the Nuremberg court, gives complete evidence.

IG Farben was Germany's most powerful monopoly. It was the most important producer of synthetic chemicals in the world. It was IG Farben which made the synthetics which allowed the Wehrmacht to fight six years without good sources of raw materials. German trucks and tanks ran on Farben synthetic rubber. The Luftwaffe flew with Farben's synthetic gasoline. Whenever the General Staff had a supply problem they came to IG Farben and Farben solved the difficulty by making a new synthetic or by developing, say, a new light metal.

At the same time, IG Farben carried the war beyond the boundaries of Germany, long before the first shots were fired. IG was the king-pin in the whole structure of cartels which kept a grip on world trade in the years leading up to the second World War.

U. S. Department of Justice investigators have proved that IG Farben used its control of cartels to paralyze war production in this country at the same time that German production was increasing under forced draft. For example, evidence in the files of several Senate Committees indicates that IG, operating through its cartel link with Standard Oil of New Jersey, could go back to Hitler and claim a large share in the credit for our having nearly lost the war on account of the rubber shortage.

IG held synthetic rubber patents. They were making synthetic rubber as fast as possible for the Wehrmacht. At the same time they operated effectively to keep the synthetic rubber know-how from their American cartel partners.

As a result, six months after Pearl Harbor and the loss of the natural rubber supplies of the Far East, the United States was still struggling desperately to get a synthetic program going.

AS ANOTHER part of its war behind the scenes, IG Farben helped the Nazi party and the German army by setting up a world-wide espionage organization. The man who ran the IG spy ring was named Max Ilgner. Ilgner is now under arrest, waiting his turn in Nuremberg.

After much interrogation in prison, Ilgner gave American investigators a complete sketch of the way his espionage system worked. He had picked men scattered throughout the world. These agents appeared to be merely sales representatives of IG. Actually, they used their regular business as a cover-up ferreting out information and channeling it back to Ilgner's head office in Berlin.

In the United States, Ilgner received information from special a industrial intelligence organization called Chemnyco, Inc., of New York.

Esponage and cartel warfare could be carried on under cover of normal business operations. But the leaders of IG Farben, in the same way as Flick and Speer and the rest, were not afraid to take a direct hand in atrocities.

For example, IG was responsible for all production of poison gas for the Wehrmacht. But for tactical reasons gas was not used during the war. Therefore IG could not use the battlefield as a testing ground for the effectiveness of its newer gases. One of these new gases, called Tabun, was supposed to be the most deadly ever developed. But how to try it out? The IG scientists solved this difficulty by trying the gas on inmates of the concentration camp at Auschwitz—where it was pronounced a complete success.

When asked about the use of Tabun on human guinea pigs, Fritz Ter Meer, a top Farben executive, answered with a shrug of the shoulders: "They probably would have died anyway."

And now the wheel of justice has turned. The German industrialists who committed war crimes await their turn in the Nuremberg court. It was a strange and sinister path which these industrialists followed: their trail led from union busting at home, to support of the Nazi regime, to death camps like Auschwitz, and finally to their own trial at Nuremberg.

Nazi Purge Called Flop

The U. S. Military Government de-Nazification program is a flop. That flat statement was made by Field Horine, reporting from Munich for the newspaper PM.

Writing of the "many loopholes" in the German de-Nazification law, Horine declared that "statistics published in PM and other newspapers demonstrate beyond doubt that neither the spirit nor the letter of the law is being obeyed."

"The masses of the German people don't want to get rid of Nazism because they are themselves shot through with it," Horine wrote.

Horine said that the branch of Military Government entrusted with supervision of the de-Nazification is hampered by a top brass rule that it can only "observe, report and recommend." Giving orders to German authorities is "verboten."

6,000 AT MEXICAN LABOR PARLEY

STRENGTHENING and unification of the powerful Confederation of Mexican Workers (CTM) were set as principal goals of the organization at its impressive fourth National Congress, held in Mexico City in April.

With six thousand delegates and a host of fraternal representatives in attendance, the convention demonstrated that Mexican labor is a force of primary importance in the country, according to reports published in the CTAL News, organ of the Latin American Federation of Labor.

Among the guests of the convention was Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers Union, who brought greetings to the Mexican conference from CIO Pres. Murray.

"We of the CIO recognize that in the CTM, Mexican labor has created a powerful union force with which to combat poverty and to assert the rights of the working class," Knight told the delegates.

Some 3,426 affiliated organizations were represented at the meeting. Among them were spokesmen from Mexican groups in important agricultural areas of the country.

One highlight of the sessions was a mass march to the Presidential palace, where promises of sincere collaboration in improving Mexican conditions were given to Pres. Aleman. The President in turn expressed his confidence in the unions' cooperation with the government's economic program.

Elected secretary-general of the CTM was Fernando Amilpa, of the Mexico City Federation.

IN a series of resolutions the convention went on record in favor of additional protection for workers' rights, along with encouragement to higher living standards and increased industrialization of the nation; called for modernization of present Mexican industry; urged improved housing and social security for workers; and commented on the nation's foreign policy and international economic relations.

Earlier the convention had heard a long analysis of Mexican conditions from Vicente Lombardo Toledano, head of the Latin-American Federation and vice-president of the World Federation of Trade Unions.

Toledano declared that improved living standards and gradual national economic improvements. The CIO are the immediate goals of the Mexican workers. He urged CTM to maintain absolute independence from government, but to cooperate closely with it in reaching objectives sought by the unions.

The CTM, Toledano said, had been attacked because of its strength, rather than because it was weak. He said that removal of some corrupt officials could be done only by the members inside the organization, rather than through outside agencies or through a split in its ranks.

CIO representative Knight told the delegates that Pres. Murray had asked him to bring "sincere congratulations to the assembly and his best wishes for the great Mexican leader, Fidel Velasquez (retiring CTM sercetary), and the great international labor leader, Lombardo Toledano."

Strike Against Franco

SPANISH WORKERS defied Falangist terror to conduct a "wave of strikes" during December, 1946. Reports reaching the World Federation of Trade Unions in Paris said that the walk-out occurred at ten textile plants in Barcelona, six iron and steel works in the same city, and at the gas and electric plants—the latter plunging the city into darkness for four days.

At the Girona factory in Barcelona, the workers staged a sit-down strike, which lasted until they were forced out of the building by police armed with machine guns. But troops then sent in to work the machines flatly refused to do so.

PEOPLE'S LOBBY

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

NEXT STOP—CONGRESS. All set for talks with their Congressman and Senators, CIO union members from Pennsylvania and Maryland and Delaware head for Capitol Hill. They're leaving a "briefing session" conducted by CIO legislative officials on "do and don't" questions in connection with the visits. The hall, used for several days, is property of an AFL local—a short distance from the Capitol.

CONGRESS has begun to hear from the people's lobby. Even as the most drastic anti-labor bills in American history were being rushed through the House and Senate, workers from industrial plants in a dozen states moved into the Capital to voice their bitter complaints against the injustice of the Taft-Hartley proposals.

They gave Congressmen and Senators a piece of their mind. And they heard both words of encouragement and some of the fanciest doubletalk ever to come out of the House Office Building.

CIO union members from Pennsylvania were told by Rep. Francis Maloney, a Republican lawyer from Philadelphia, that he's against anti-labor legislation. But, he hastened to say, the Hartley Bill—which would chew unions to bits—isn't anti-labor!

The delegates came away convinced their job in '48 is to let Rep. Maloney do his double-talk off the public payroll.

They found that Rep. Ivor Fenton, a Republican from the coal areas of northeastern Pennsylvania with a spotty voting record, was playing true to form.

In this case, Fenton voted right but talked wrong. Although he was one of 22 GOP Congressmen who voted against the Hartley Bill, Fenton didn't sound very friendly to labor when the delegation of workers talked to him.

One CIO union member reminded Fenton that Pres. Murray had called the Hartley bill a step towards fascism.

"What's fascism, and what's wrong with it?" Fenton replied. The delegation knew right then and there what is wrong with Rep. Fenton.

REACTION of the workers from Pennyslvania and from every other state which sent delegations to the Capital ran along similar lines:

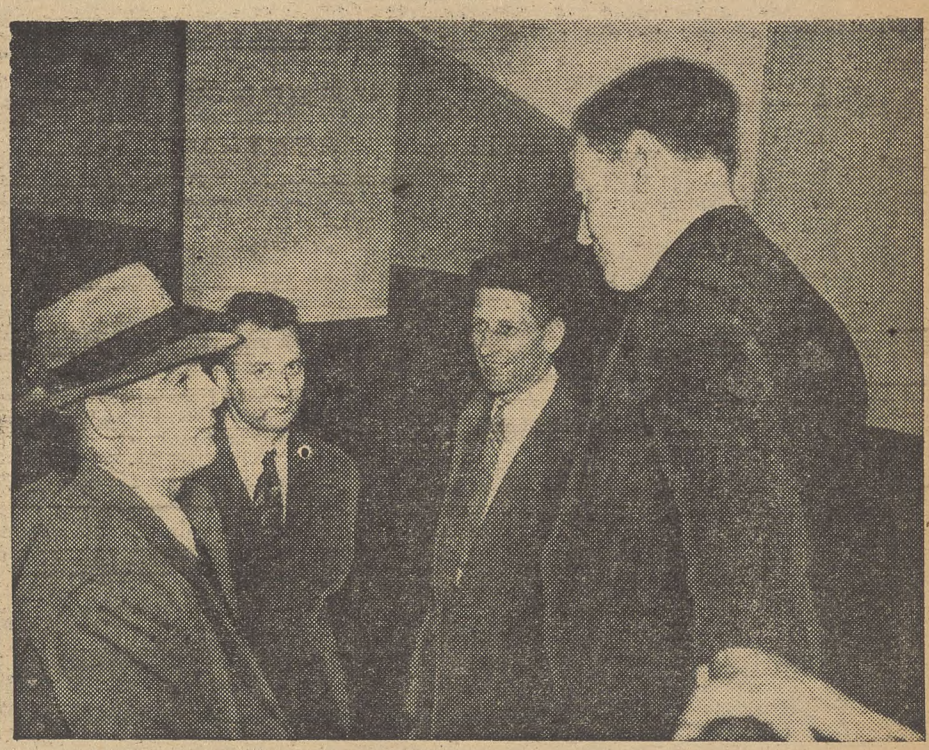
"We didn't know how bad things really are in Congress. There's just one way to change them—by seeing that the people who didn't vote in '46 come out to the polls in '48 and vote for liberal candidates. We've got a real PAC job to do."

In all, a couple of thousand union members will have talked with their representatives on Capitol Hill, under the program worked out by the CIO Legislative Dept.

In addition some 50 workers from plants organized by the CIO Food, Tobacco & Agricultural Workers, led by Pres. Donald Henderson, circulated through Washington on similar missions.

HERE'S THE WAY WE SEE IT." Straight talk from the folks back home was given Maryland Congressmen by CIO members from Baltimore and Cumberland. Reps. D'Alesandro, Meade and Sasscer talk with CIO Regional Director Frank Bender and Maryland Workers.

"WOMEN'S ANGLE" was just the same as the "men's angle" during Congressional visits. Both sexes agreed anti-labor laws are strictly no good. Here Mary Matleska of UE Local 635, Johnstown, Pa., reports on her talks with Congressmen.



WORD OF ADVICE is given to out-of-town-CIO delegates by Bob Lamb, legislative representative of the United Steelworkers. Pin them down, don't take weasel words—he told the delegates planning talks with Congressmen .

This CIO Defend Labor rally held by the CIO Packinghouse Workers in Chicago is typical of scores of demonstrations being held in large and small communities throughout the United States to protest anti-labor bills pending in Congress.

The Packinghouse Workers—who used their lunch period to hold the demonstration in front of Swift & Co.'s general offices—also paid tribute to the memory of Franklin D. Roosevelt and his ideals.

NATIONWIDE LABOR RALLIES

By FRED ROSS

TWO hundred thousand strong, the largest crowd in the history of organized labor in Detroit this week converged from three directions on Cadillac Square to protest anti-labor bills pending in Congress.

The rally was sponsored by the CIO Auto Workers, but the AFL took part in the demonstration as well as the American Veterans Committee and a number of independent unions including the Mechanics Education Society of America, the Foremen's Assn. and the Brotherhood of Railroad Trainmen.

This was only one of a score of rallies held throughout the United States in cities, large and small, as the CIO took the offensive against reaction rampant in the Nation's and the states' capitals.

Work in most of the Detroit auto plants vitrually stopped as the workers left their benches and assembly lines to march to the square carrying banners of protest and shouting union songs to the accompaniment of sound trucks. There UAW Vice Pres. Richard Leonard declared:

"This is no phony cry of wolf. I don't know how to convey to you the terrible danger that confronts us at this moment in Washington. The CIO has never made a more important call upon your time or energy."

UAW Vice-Pres. R. J. Thomas charged that "giant monopolies of industry" are seeking to destroy the labor movement "which stands first and foremost in opposition to the destruction of American living standards."

UAW Sec.-Treas. George Addes declared that the pending legislation would "establish industry-controlled unions— company unions—the policies of Hitler's Reich," and represent "an attempted resurrection of the doctrine of reaction of 200 years ago."

Busy with negotiations with General Motors, UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther was unable to attend the rally, but his brother, Victor Reuther, UAW educational director, spoke.

At the conculsion of the rally thousands marched to the Michigan Bell, Telephone Co. building to join the pickets.

LABOR unity to fight reactionary bills was also the theme of the rally in Madison Square Park, New York City, attended by 75,000 who marched to the meeting carrying banners urging defeat of the Hartley-Taft "Slave Labor" bills and warning, "Hitler Smashed Unions in Germany, Don't Let it Happen Here."

Chaired by Pres. Michael J. Quill of the CIO Transport Workers, the rally cheered and applauded appeals by speakers for "one big, strong united labor movement."

New York State CIO Pres. Louis Hollander predicted that the anti-labor bills would bring greater unity among the CIO, AFL, and the Railroad Brotherhoods and urged workers to lead a two-front battle "on the political front as well as on the economic front."

"We won't permit our government to became a strikebreaking agency for the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers and the big monopolies," he said.

His remarks were followed by the adoption of a resolution wiring fraternal greetings for CIO Pres. Philip Murray and AFL Pres. William Green and praising their efforts "to unite all the organizations of labor in the struggle against the rise of reaction and special privilege."

TWO Defend Labor rallies were held in Chicago.

Thousand of CIO Packinghouse Workers used their lunch period to honor the late Franklin D. Roosevelt and to demonstrate against anti-labor legislation. Accompanied by sound trucks blaring forth marching music, the workers poured out of their plants and gathered in a large square facing Swift & Co.'s general offices.

They bared their heads as a huge portrait of Roosevelt was unveiled to the sound of taps and then listened to a recording of FDR's famous speech calling for a new economic bill of rights.

Van A. Bittner urged united effort to fight anti-labor bills at another Chicago rally sponsored by the CIO Regional Office, the Illinois and the Chicago CIO Councils.

Pres. Ralph Helstein of the CIO Packinghouse Workers charged big business is out to destroy the labor movement and "turn the clock back 50 years." Pending anti-labor legislation, he warned, "is—in the words of Philip Murray—a development toward American fascism."

Another Chicago rally, sponsored by the CIO Regional office, the Illinois CIO and the Chicago CIO Council, brought 4,000 union stewards and officers not only from the metropolitan area but from all parts of the state. Every CIO International union was represented despite a heavy downpour of rain.

The principal speaker, Van A. Bittner, head of CIO's southern organizing drive, called upon members of the CIO in Illinois "to band together in one mighty force and fight, fight, fight for our unions in this, the greatest country on earth." CIO Regional Director Michael Mann was the chairman.

ONE hundred thousand CIO, AFL and Railroad Brotherhood members took part in a one-day work stoppage in the predominantly agricultural state of Iowa.

Twenty thousand of them came by buses, autos and special trains to the state capitol at Des Moines to stage the greatest labor demonstration in Iowa's history.

Although Gov. Blue said that he would not speak, he changed his mind when he saw the crowd. His declaration that "this legislature is not unfriendly to union labor" brought lusty boos.

A few hours later the house defeated by 75 to 30 a move to kill the open shop bill masquerading as a right-to-work proposal.

Director of Orangization Allan S. Haywood told a CIO Defend Labor rally in Cleveland that the reactionary anti-labor measures pending in Congress were fathered by labor's traditional foes, monopolies.

After a leader of the telephone strikers declared that the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. is "a $7 billion monstrosity," a resolution was adopted in support of the strikers.

A. E. Stevenson, organizing secretary of the Cleveland CIO Council, left the meeting for Washington with petitions bearing 20,000 signatures and calling on Sens. Taft and Bricker to end their attacks on labor.

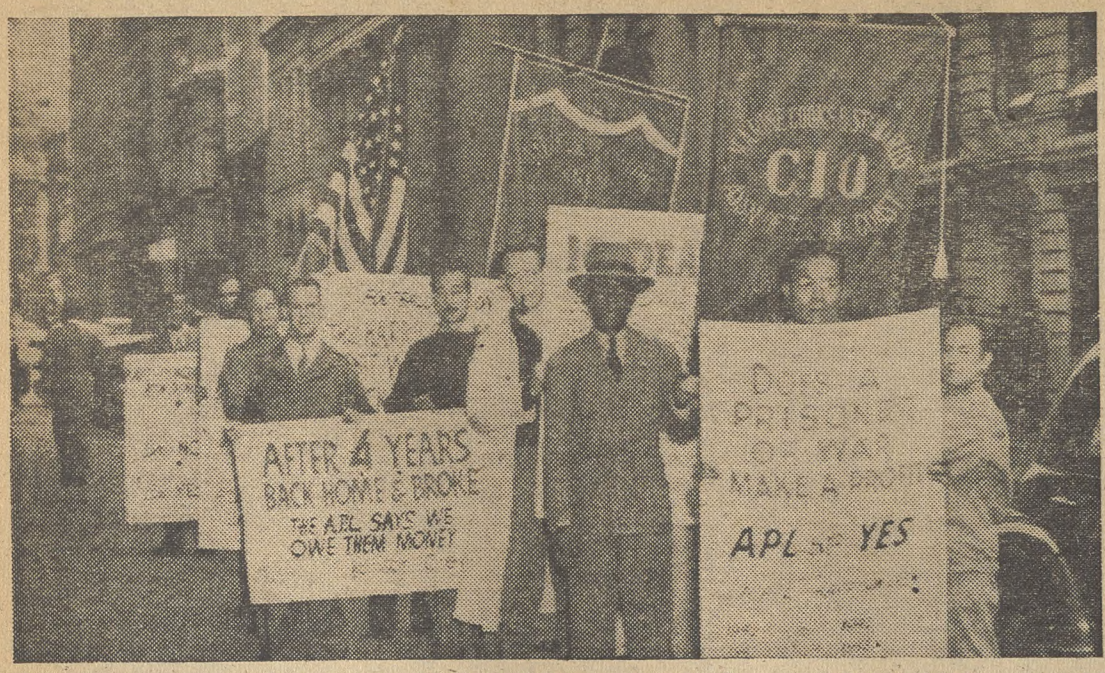
TEN rallies in Texas last weekend took an historical turn. The meetings were held on the 111th anniversary of the second battle of San Jacinto, which won Texas her freedom.

Resolutions were passed against national and state anti-labor measures. Five restrictive anti-labor bills have already been passed by the state legislature.

The Western Maryland Labor Union Conference in Cumberland devoted this week to a series of activities in protest against anti-labor legislation.

In the Republican stronghold of Lancaster, Pa., the Lancaster County CIO Council sponsored a rally at which federal and state anti-labor bills were denounced and a message was sent to Henry Wallace supporting "what you say and your right to say it."

46 YEARS YOUNG!



These men were captured when their ship fell into the hands of the Japanese at the start of the war. The CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards won settlement of their claim for wages during four years in a prison camp.

By LOUIS PINSON

THE CIO Union of Marine Cooks and Stewards, which will hold its second convention as a national union at San Francisco, is 46 years young.

Seventy-year-old Eugene F. Burke, MCS secretary, was one of the six men who gathered around a table in the convention city in 1901 to set up an organization of galley men, pantry men, stewards and cooks.

Today the union has branches in New York City, Baltimore, New Orleans, Wilmington, Portland, Oreg.; Seattle and Honolulu, and is just out of its swadling clothes.

MCS had its first strike in 1901, when its members left their ships to support the San Francisco teamsters in their wage demands. A year later MCS won the first contract for American merchant marine galley men.

Constantly growing, the union won $45 a month for galleymen in 1914—when dollars went farther. During the years of fink hiring halls in the Harding Administration, MCS grew, fought, struck, even built a new union hall in 1921.

MCS LEAD the way for CIO affiliation in 1936, was the first sea-going CIO union.

Seven hundred members lost their lives in World War II helping to keep the troops of the United States and its allies supplied throughout the world. Many workers were taken prisoners of war.

In 1945, MCS called its first national convention, became a national CIO union, hammered out a program for political action, wrote a new constitution for broad rank and file democracy, called for a new unity organization among all maritime unions.

Wages for MCS members range from $159 to $441 a month. Overtime increases and other gains were obtained this year.

Forty-six years young, MCS has plenty reasons to celebrate its birthday.

Another MCS Victory! Focsles like these aboard the big ships have been replaced with modern, clean, quarters.

ACA-CIO comes through with another victory! Pres. Joseph P. Selly of the CIO American Communication Assn., reports the ACA won a NLRB election among 12,000 telephone operators in Northern California and Nevada. The voting as follows: ACA-CIO 5602; TWIU 3291; UBTW 418; no union 118. Joseph F. Kehoe, Int. Secy-Treas., ACA-CIO; Intl Rep. William Burke; and Marie A. Demartini, General Chairman Local 120 assisted in this victory.

George Craig, CIO Reg. Dir., Philadelphia, Pa., reports: Bowers Battery & Spark Plug Co., Reading, Pa., UERMWA-CIO 134; Bowers Independent Employes Union 40; against 62.

Thomas J. Gallagher, Dir. of Orgn., CIO Shipbuilding Workers, reports: Rundle Corp., Pennsauken, N. J., IUMSWA-CIO 154; independent union 99; no union 4.

James J. Leary, CIO Reg. Dir., Kansas City, Mo., reports: Sonken-Galamba Corp., Kansas City, Kans., USA-CIO 209; against 29. The organizational and electrical campaign was conducted by the CIO Steelworkers and the CIO Regional Office. Employes of the Squirt Bottling Co., St. Joseph, Mo., have been organized by the CIO Brewery Workers. Business Agents Holmes of Local 116 and Widick of Local No. 93 assisted in the organization work.

Irwin L. DeShetler, CIO Regional Dir. for Southern Calif., reports: American Gas Asso., Inc., Los Angeles, Calif., UOPWA-CIO 11; against 6. UOPWA Rep. Bernard Lusher was in charge. Robinson Orifice Fitting Co., Los Angeles, Calif., USA-CIO 9; against 1. USA Rep. Bob Ratner was in charge.

The employes of the National Rayon Company, Cleveland, Ohio, voted for the CIO Textile Workers 62; no union 11. Rep. Mary Cross was in charge of the drive.

Following the emergency meeting of the National Legislative Conference on April 13, 1947, and the meeting of the staff and council officials the following day, field activities were intensified and protest meetings are being held throughout the nation. Many public spirited people are joining with us against this unwarranted vicious attack now being made upon labor.

The writer addressed a "Defend Labor" meeting in Cleveland April 23, and will address another meeting in Akron on April 28. Other officials of the CIO and international unions are addressing similar meetings in Texas, Indiana, and many other states.

The Hartley Bill is now before the United States Senate. The House of Representatives having done all the damage it can in a typical, fanatical, hate-labor way.

The telephone strike at this writing is still unsettled. The company is refusing to bargain collectively in a proper way and refusing to make an adequate wage adjustment. The CIO throughout the nation is supporting these workers.

The CIO Steelworkers came through with a great victory in its new agreement with the United States Steel Corp., that will benefit the whole nation. It is a demonstration of what proper collective bargaining can do. Congratulations to President Murray, his associate officers, the Steelworkers and membership. The CIO electrical, Radio and Machine Workers have made a settlement with General Motors and Westinghouse. The CIO Auto Workers are now in negotiations with GM.

The best answer to all those who would destroy labor is to organize the unorganized, continuing with all the zeal that we possess.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

BLAME THE MONOPOLY: The CIO Oil Workers' Research and Education Dept. this week asserted that a 70c rise in the price of crude oil is due to the control of production by a few major companies, and not to wage increases negotiated by the union. In a pamphlet on "Petroleum Prices" the union asserts:

"The 25c wage demand of the OWIU would represent only 4.2% of this price increase. To meet the 22c wage increase (average received by most workers) would only require a rise of 2.7c a barrel in the price of crude, whereas the actual rise was 70c."

PICKET BAN DISMISSED: Four hundred members of the CIO Chemical Workers are continuing their strike against the Citizens Gas and Coke Co., Indianapolis, Ind., with renewed vigor this week after persuading an Indiana court to dismiss an injunction banning picketing.

The strike began April 2 when 17 workers were discharged, 12 of them World War II veterans.

HEADS CITY COUNCIL: The Sheboygan, Wis., city council re-elected trade unionist LeRoy Gartman as its president here by a vote of 8 to 7 after he was returned to the body without opposition. Gartman is a member of the executive board of Local 325, Fur & Leather Workers.

MORE MAY CONVENTIONS: The conventions of two more CIO unions, the Marine Engineers Beneficial Assn. and the American Federation of Hosiery Workers, will open May 5, the former at Washington, D. C., and the latter at Durham, N. C.

Other CIO conventions scheduled to start May 5 are: Packinghouse Workers at Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland, Ohio; Utah Council, Newhouse Hotel, Salt Lake City; Montana Council, Eagles Hall, Butte, and Marine Cooks and Stewards, San Francisco.

The convention of the Maine CIO Council will be held May 24-25 in the Elwood Hotel, Waterville.

Murray Asks AT&T To Go Half Way

CIO Pres Philip Murray this week asserted the telephone strike now entering its third week "can be quickly settled" if the American Telephone & Telegraph Co. shows "a spirit of willingness to go halfway."

Murray said that the telephone strike "can be settled by the American Telephone and Telegraph Co., one of the country's largest and most wide-spread corporations, meeting with the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers and engaging in collective bargaining on a national basis.

"The economic facts of the case are clear—the telephone employes are entitled to wage increases. Increased living costs affect the girl at the switchboard just as severely as they affect the steel worker, the automobile worker, the electrical workers or any other wage earner in America. The Bell System has a public responsibility; it cannot ignore the needs of its employes, nor brush them aside with continual statements in high-priced newspaper advertisements."

New York locals and joint boards of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers this week contributed $5,000 to the telephone strikers as ACW Pres. Jacob Potofsky declared that "the telephone strikers deserve every support from the trade-union movement, and the public generally."

Meanwhile, Pres. Joseph A Beirne of the Natl. Federation of Telephone Workers charged the affiliates of AT&T were indulging "in some more dodging of the issue." He disclosed that the New Jersey and the Northwestern Bell Companies offered to boost wages if they were assured that the offer need not be approved by the top union policy committee.

WHILE the AT&T and its subsidiaries were saying "no" to the demand of 300,000 telephone workers for wage increases, the AT&T annual report this week disclosed that during 1946 almost $100,000 in increases were handed out to 9 top officials, Vice-Pres, Leroy A. Willson getting a pay hike of $25,000.

The CIO American Communications Assn. locals representing 12,000 telephone workers in northern California and Nevada have voted in referendum to support the telephone strike and have set up their own picket lines.

Pennsylvania Delegates

MARCH TO STATE CAPITOL TO PROTEST ANTI-LABOR BILLS

DELEGATES to the Pennsylvania CIO convention at Harrisburg this week joined AFL members in a demonstration at the state capitol against anti-labor bills patterned after the Taft and Hartley bills.

More than 2,500 convention delegates and AFL members from all parts of the state cheered as their leaders and railroad brotherhood representatives scored the bills at a hearing before a joint legilslative committee.

Asst. Pres. George Elliott of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce admitted "we helped draft the legislation," as union members in the galleries booed.

"It was a thrilling example of labor unity," Director of CIO Councils John Brophy told the convention later. "It is an indication that labor is going to be more united to face the challenge of the future."

State Sen. John H. Dent, leader of the Democratic minority in the State senate, charged that not only the state Chamber of Commerce but the state Manufacturers' Assn. joined with the Republican party in supporting the bills.

Speakers at the convention included Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the CIO Steelworkers; CIO Director of Organization Allan S. Haywood; Asst. PAC Director Tilford E. Dudley and Frank Fernbach of the CIO Committee for Labor Extension.

50 CIO MEMBERS KILLED IN TEXAS BLAST, PROBE URGED

THE Texas City, Texas, disaster—which occurred when a ship's cargo of ammonium nitrate exploded—last week claimed the lives of approximately 50 members of the CIO Oil Workers and of at least two members of the CIO Natl. Maritime Union.

About 250 OWIU members were injured, and a half-dozen NMU members were missing.

The OWIU sprang to action, contributing $1000 to the relief fund of Local 449—to which the deceased and the injured belonged—and appealing to other locals to rush contributions.

Members of the OWIU and its auxiliaries and NMU members assisted in rescue work. Both international unions, the CIO Maritime Committee and a CIO Defend Labor Conference at Fort Worth, Texas, called for a thorough investigation of the disaster which claimed a total of 400 lives, most of them union members.

THE majority of OWIU members were either members of a fire fighting crew battling flames on the nitrate-loaded S. S. Grandcamp or were watching from the dock. When the ship blew up with an explosion comparable to an atomic bomb, flaming debris set off explosions in the Monsanto chemical plant.

OWIU Pres. O. A. Knight joined the stricken town's mayor, C. J. Trahan, an OWIU, member, in demanding that federal authorities investigate whether the burning ship was carrying munitions and why the second ship, filled with explosives was allowed to remain at the terminal an entire day after the initial blast.

The NMU's national office demanded a Congressional investigation, improved federal legislation and enforcement of existing statutes relating to ship safety, and adequate insurance coverage for crew members on vessels carrying dangerous cargoes.

SEC.-TREAS. MORRIS AKIN of the Texas CIO Council told a Defend Labor rally at Port Arthur that while the legislature had been busy passing an open shop law, a petroleum safety code presented by the OWIU, had been totally neglected.

The Fort Worth CIO rally asked Gov. Jester and the assembly to set up a special commission to study the disaster and provide funds for the enforcement of adequate safety legislation.

NMU Natl. Director William McCarthy was sent from N. Y. City to the scene by the union's national office to coordinate aid to the seamen victims and their families.

CIO OIL Workers are on the job to aid relief work last week at disaster-stricken Texas City, Texas. Left to right, OWIU Vice Pres. A. R. Kinstley discusses relief needs with Roy E. Brown and George L. Moore, members of OWIU Local 23, Port Arthur, Texas, and Mrs. E. J. Galbreath, OWIU Auxiliaries vice president. Mrs. Galbreath, Brown and Moore are members of a Red Cross motor corps which left Port Arthur a few hours after news of the disaster was received.

HARVESTER STRIKE VOTED

The CIO Farm Equipment Workers this week announced that all local unions involved have voted for a strike against the International Harvester Co. in support of the union's demands.

Meanwhile, negotiations continued this week in behalf of over 30,000 workers represented by FE. Sec.-Treas. Gerald Fielde said:

"Over four months of company stalling on issues vital to Harvester workers have passed. Every step short of strike has been resorted to by the union. Unless an entirely different attitude develops in current negotiations, International Harvester must accept sole responsibility for agitating a national stoppage."

SHIP OWNERS PLAN LOCKOUT

Pres. Harry Bridges of the CIO Longshoremen and Warehousemen this week characterized the notification by the ship owners of their intention to re-open the West Coast Longshore agreement as "the first step in an attempt to force the union to agree to changes or face a lockout June 15."

CIO Adds Something New To Historic Natchez

FROM a CIO standpoint, Natchez, Miss., is a prime example of the old Deep South and the New South, with both factors adding to its worth, Director Van A. Bittner of the CIO Organizing Committee said this week.

"This old is exemplified," Bittner said, "in its nationally famous ante-bellum plantation homes and the fact that one of its points of interest is the Mississippi River front here that was popular with river pirates years ago. Natchez also has the oldest operating sawmill in the United States.

"The new is pointed up by the modern plant of the Armstrong Tire & Rubber Co., and the way in which local workers have poured into the CIO in the past year.

"A year ago there was only one CIO local union in Natchez. Today the CIO represents some 2,000 workers there—practically all the industrial workers in the area's larger plants.

"NATCHEZ has a population of approximately 16,000, many of the residents catering to the tourist trade which has as its principal attraction the annual 'Pilgrimage' to visit the plantation homes here.

"During the past year the CIO has won National Labor Relations Board elections in six plants.

"These are the General Box Co., J. M. Jones Lumber Co., R. F. Learned & Sons Lumber Co., Natchez Hardwood Lumber Co., and Wilson & Co., all won by the Woodworkers, and the Natchez Stove Co., won by the Steelworkers.

"And the winning of these elections has meant not only job security for the workers, but the wage increases won through union contracts have meant much to the city and entire area.

"The substantial hourly raise won last year for the Armstrong employes by the Rubber Workers adds more than $300,000 to the city's industrial payroll, much more if the tire and the tube builders work more than 40 hours a week.

"FOLLOWING the winning of elections in other plants by the Woodworkers, contracts between the workers in the lumber industry and the employers were negotiated which call for other wage increases.

"And all this has been accomplished through peaceful union-management negotiations. Said Charles Reed, executive secretray of the Natchez Association of Commerce: 'I believe we have as good industrial-labor relations in Natchez as there are anywhere in the nation. To my knowledge, there has not been a labor stoppage here in the past two years.'"

VOTE TO SMASH UNIONS

This is the vote on the House bill to smash your union — the Hartley Bill (H.R. 3020).

Keep this page for future reference. For this was more than a bill "to correct labor abuses"—it was a proposal to destroy the functioning of unions. The Congressmen knew that fact when they voted.

As Pres. Murray of CIO said, the Hartley bill is "the first step toward the development of fascism in America." Note how your Congressman voted on a proposition such as this.

The vote, taken on April 17, was 308-107. 215 Republicans and 93 Democrats voted for the bill. Their votes are marked with a "W" for Wrong.

Eighty-four Democrats, 22 Republicans and one American Labor Party member voted against the bill. Their votes are indicated by an "R" for Right. Congressmen absent but paired are marked P-R (Right) or P-W (Wrong). Not voting is indicated by NV.

BEST SELLERS

A QUARTER of a million copies sold in one week! That's the record of "Crisis," special CIO NEWS supplement reporting President Murray's warning that anti-labor legislation is the first real step toward fascism in the U. S.

Another sensational seller prepared by the CIO Publicity Dept. has been "Defend Your Union." More than half a million copies have been sold.

Biggest orderer of both publications was the CIO Auto Workers Legislative and Political Action Dept., headed by Richard Leonard. The UAW bought 100,000 copies of each.

"Crisis" is publication No. 147. "Defend Your Union" is publication No. 145. Prices for each are: 1,000 for $12; 500 for $7.50; 100 for $2. Order from CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl., N. W., Washington 6, D. C.

CIO union women from York and Johnstown, Pa., compare notes after talking with their Congressmen about the omnibus anti-labor bill which the CIO is fighting bitterly. The women were part of a delegation of several hundred CIO members from Pennsylvania, Maryland and Delaware, which with a number of other state delegations from all over the U. S., have been coming to Washington during April in answer to the CIO's call for a Defend Labor Month drive. Back row, left to right, are: Betty Miller, Mary Matleska, Ann Baird, and Francilia Wolf. Sitting, Ruth Lau, Margaret Bishop and Beulah Grove.

Sprucing Up

YOUR INDIVIDUAL MAKE-UP

By HANNA SHERMAN

HOW many people are there in the world with perfect faces? Very few indeed—and we should be glad of it. For how dull it would be if everyone had the same monotonously regular features. We live in a time when our individuality is important, when no particular type is considered the "only" true beauty.

Of course, sometimes a feature that is too large or too different from the norm makes us feel unhappy. It is here that modern make-up tricks step in to modify and change these handicaps into assets that give the face piquancy and character.

Let's take a look at some of the things you can do to play down your problem feature. For instance, here's one that's used by the best Hollywood and New York make-up experts. They've found that a darker shade of powder used on a large or a broad nose will make it appear smaller. Use your lighter toned, regular shade on the rest of your face. This trick is also good for slimming down a heavy jawline and for making a jutting chin seem less prominent.

Perhaps you don't like the shape of your mouth. Work magic changes with a lipstick brush. Make your lips look fuller by drawing the shape you desire with the brush and then apply lipstick generously over the entire surface. Using bright colored lipstick helps here too.

To make very full lips look more delicate, apply the color more heavily near the center of the lips, blending it lightly out toward the corners. Use less on the lower lip than the upper and avoid carrying the color out to the very edges.

Mouth lines that droop will make you look sad and unhappy. It's easy to give your face a happy and more cheerful look by drawing an upward line at the corners of the lower lip.

NO ONE can deny the appeal of large, widely spaced eyes. We don't all have them, but any girl with a little make-up know-how can have sparkling pretty eyes, just the same. If your eyes are small or deeply recessed, apply a bright toned foundation cream, livelier in color than you use on the rest of your face around the eye socket area. It's a slick trick.

Strive for enough spacing, too, between the eyes and brow, by tweezing stray hairs from underneath and by darkening the brows at the top. To heighten the effect, extend them upward by brushing your brows in an upward line, coloring them with your mascara brush. And mascara on your eye lashes, of course, will increase the apparent size of your eyes.

Apply the mascara, beginning at the center of the lids and continue it from that point to the outer corners. Avoid using it on the lower lashes. Another technique that takes considerable skill but is well worth it, is to pencil mark the eyes at the outer corners a fraction of an inch. Apply the pencil at the line of each eyelid and use your fingers to blend the markings into a soft shadow. This is a good trick too for making the eyes look wider apart.

Another for eyes that are too closely set is to pluck the brows to achieve a wide space between them. Mascara only the outer halves of the eyelids and put it on heaviest at the extreme corners.

BACK BILL FOR FEDERAL AID TO EDUCATION

THE AMERICAN school system is in the throes of an unprecedented crisis, CIO Director of Research & Education Kermit Eby told the Senate Labor & Public Welfare Committee this week in a statement urging support for the Federal Aid to Education bill.

Here are some of the alarming facts Eby gave the Committee:

Since 1940 more than 60,000 classrooms have been abolished and the work of the teachers formerly involved thrown upon other teachers.

Since 1939 more than 350,000 teachers have left the profession.

In 1940, some two million children from six to sixteen were not in any kind of school.

Ten per cent of the class rooms of the country, covering two million of the Nation's children, actually spend less than $500 a year for all classroom expenses, including teachers' salaries.

A STATEMENT submitted to the Senate Committee by Sara T. Walsh, director of the Natl. Teachers Division of the CIO Public Workers, also called attention to the breakdown of the educational system.

Arising basically from the inability of some of the States to finance a decent minimum education program, she said, the situation had now reached disaster proportions, due to the wartime neglect of schools.

Federal aid to education by this Congress, she said, "is indispensable to the educational needs of millions of children and to the future productive ability of our nation."

In the name of the CIO teachers, Miss Walsh urged the 80th Congress to pass S. 472 "to establish a realizable and necessary federal foundation program for education."

Book Review

A WORKER AND FARMER FACE THEIR COMMON PROBLEMS

By HOLLACE RANSDELL

A FRESH approach to the vital problem of the relationship between farmers and workers, now being so strongly stressed by the CIO, is taken in an outstanding new book, "Soil and Steel" by P. Alston Waring and Clinton S. Golden.

"Soil and Steel" is not a lot of well-meaning but glib generalities and smooth sermons about what should be done to bring farm and industrial labor into closer understanding. It is a down-to-earth examination of the subject as simple and fundamental as the title of the book.

The fact that the two writers know well what they are talking about gives their book a tone of authenticity which makes it a valuable contribution to a problem of growing importance in America.

Waring, who writes for the farmers, has himself been a Pennsylvania farmer for more than 20 years—a socially minded and philosophical farmer to be sure. Digging into ideas comes as naturally to him as digging into the soil.

ALL CIO'ers know the important role Clint Golden has played in the CIO, both in its formation and later as International Vice-President of the United Steelworkers of America; and of his work during the war when he so ably upheld labor's point of view as Vice-Chairman of both the War Production Board and the War Manpower Commission.

In his work for the CIO, Golden drew upon the rich experiences of his many years in the pre-CIO labor movement. He has belonged in the past to the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers, the Intl. Assn. of Machinists, and has long been active in the union movement in various ways.

It is from this record that Golden distills the essence of his contributions to the book as a spokesman for labor.

The theme of the book in brief is that farmers and workers are blood brothers whose interests are "interwoven into a seamless web." Throughout our history, the flow of working people to and from farms and cities has been a "two-way traffic."

THE evils that befall both farmers and workers come from the same source—maladjustments of our economic system. The misunderstandings and antagonisms between the two groups come from fear—fear of unemployment, of poverty, of a black and hopeless future.

Both farmers and workers are caught up in the trend of the times and neither group knows just where it is headed. The book seeks to describe the trends, show where they are leading and warn of hidden dangers.

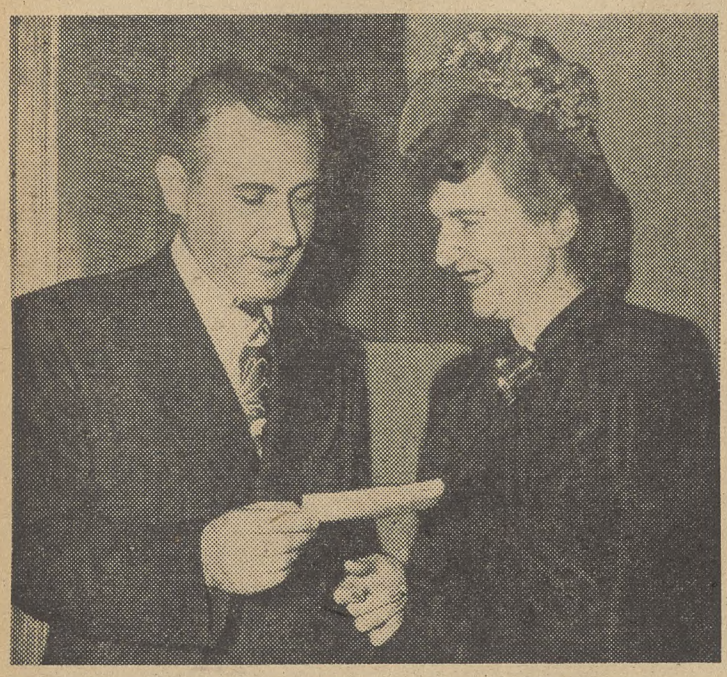
The authors approach their problem by exploring why farmers and workers are what they are, showing what economic forces play upon them both. Of particular interest is a discussion of the full employment program vital to a solution of farm and labor problems, but which is "only the base on which we must build a more healthy, equitable and democratic life."

"TECHNIQUES of unity" for the future and the influence of the war in bringing out the great potentialities of farm-labor cooperation are other subjects discussed with common sense and understanding.

"Soil and Steel" is a satisfying book to read because it says so well the things that many thoughtful CIO'ers think and believe, but can not express so aptly. It is full of terse, simple and wise remarks, and is as quotable as some of former President Roosevelt's best speeches.

Soil and Steel by P. Alston Waring and Clinton S. Golden; 240 pp., $3, Harper & Brothers.

Members of the New York CIO Teachers Union Elementary Schools Committee look over the 28,000 names signed to petitions to the Board of Education urging a full lunch period for elementary school teachers. At present these teachers are forced to give up most of their lunch period in order to patrol the halls, yards and school streets and to supervise children eating in the lunch rooms. Left to right are Molly Rosen, Sally Shatinsky, Dora Jacobson, Leona Abrams, Lillian Elenkrieg, Harriet De Felcie and Polly Sachs.



Irving Abramson, chairman, CIO Community Service Committee, presents a check for $29,489 to Mrs. Maurice T. Moore, national chairman of the YWCA Round the World drive. The funds will be used for a special YWCA center in Italy. CSC Director Leo Perlis said the gift was "another example of CIO-YWCA cooperation in the interest of human welfare throughout the world."

EDUCATION • FILMS • RADIO

THE STEELWORKERS Chorus, famous from coast to coast for the part it played in the network program, Wheeling Steel, is now winning local honors in CIO union circles. It is made up of members of United Steelworkers Local 1190, Steubenville, Ohio. The chorus made a big hit at a recent legislative conference in Steubenville.

A NON-PROFIT national film center for the promotion and distribution of suitable motion pictures for labor and other community groups is being planned by a committee in New York, reports the Shipyard Worker. Education directors of two CIO International unions—Elwood Peoples of the Marine & Shipbuilding Workers, and Victor Reuther, United Auto Workers are on the provisional committee set up to formulate the program. Film distribution centers in New York, Chicago and Los Angeles are part of the plans discussed.

INDIANA CIO's education committee announces plans for a one-week seminar to be held at Indiana University in August. The proposed seminar is part of an overall program being drafted by the Committee, headed by Howard Peck of the CIO Glass Workers in Muncie, to carry out the State CIO convention's mandate to assist local unions in workers education.

"LOOK HIM IN THE EYE" is the title of a stirring new pamphlet on race prejudice issued by the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

Dedicated to "the conscience of the American people," the pamphlet carries a full-page picture of a weary war-worn Negro soldier, one of more than a million who fought in the war and urges white Americans to "look him in the eye" and ask him what he wants now that the war for freedom and justice he helped to fight is over.

Although hate-mongers do it, no real American, says the pamphlet, can tell these Negro soldiers "that they must not expect courtesy and respect—who do they think they are anyway?"

A forceful and moving plea for extending the privileges of American democracy to our Negro citizens, the pamphlet would be a valuable aid to union anti-discrimination activities.

Single copies are 10 cents. Reduced prices are offered for quantity orders ranging from $5 for 50 copies to $75 for 1,000. For further information write to Southern Conference of Human Welfare, 808 Perdido St., New Orleans 12, La.

CAREY TO SPEAK: Is labor getting a fair share on the air? A discussion on this question will be one of the highlights of the four-day Institute for Education by Radio sponsored by Ohio State University, May 2-5. CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey will be one of the major speakers on the panel discussion on labor scheduled for 3:30 p.m., Sunday, May 4 at the Dreshler hotel in Columbus, Ohio.

COLLEGE STUDENTS are given the opportunity to learn about labor-management relations firsthand under a work training program instituted at Cornell University by the N. Y. State School of Industrial and Labor Relations.

The school was founded to provide trained personnel for government, labor and management agencies concerned with industrial and labor relations.

A comprehensive report on the 1946 summer program under which 102 students were employed in supervised work-training programs with government, labor and management groups is given in Personnel Bulletin No. 1, first of a series to be issued by the school.

The bulletin contains selections from the students' reports telling their own stories of summer work-training experiences, and gives employers' reactions. An evaluation of the program concludes that the work-training enables students to choose their occupations more realistically.

CIO Helps Farmers Win A Strike

Farmers around Ottumwa, Iowa, took some lessons from the CIO Packinghouse Workers and won a strike earlier this month, against four major dairies.

The farmers, members of the Ottumwa Milk Producers Cooperative, rebelled when the dairies tried to force them to take the entire burden of a 1c reduction in the retail price of milk by lowering the amount the farmers received from $4.10 to $3.65 a hundred pounds.

To show their appreciation for the help they received from the union, the farmers ran a quarter-page ad which said in part:

"We're glad we found out that the CIO is interested in the farmers' problems. We're glad the CIO helped us win. We've been told a lot of things about labor unions that we now find aren't true. We're glad we had a chance to meet representatives of the trade unions."

Cut Taxes on Low Incomes

TO BUILD MORE BUYING POWER

WHAT should be the objective of a fair tax bill?

CIO this week gave its view to the Senate Finance Committee in no uncertain terms. It said the government's tax policy should be used to promote maximum buying power essential to attaining "levels of full employment at a fair wage and full production."

Appearing before the Senate committee, which is studying the House-approved HR 1, were Stanley Ruttenberg, CIO assistant director of research, and Russ Nixon, Washington representative of the CIO Electrical Radio Machine Workers. Both spoke out vigorously against the bill as a measure to relieve the "greedy and not the needy."

AS passed by the House, the original 20% across the board tax cut was amended to provide for a 30% cut on low incomes, 20% on most incomes, and a 10% cut on very high incomes. But in terms of dollars, the bill still hands out big tax relief to the rich and only trifling sums to low income earners.

Ruttenberg called upon the Senators to indulge in less talk about an over-all 20% tax cut and to give more "intelligent thinking" to necessary changes which would promote full production and jobs.

How income and hidden taxes hit you is told simply in "The Case of the Vanishing Paycheck"—a picture booklet prepared by tax experts and issued by the CIO Publicity Dept.

Order Publication 140 from CIO Publicity Dept., 718 Jackson Pl. N. W., Washington 6, D. C. 10c a copy; 100 for $7.50; 500 for $25; 1000 for $35.

Noting that profits are now running at an annual rate of nearly $15 billion a year, the CIO official ridiculed "fallacious" ideas that the lightest burden should be placed on profit-making corporations.

Lower taxes and higher wages for low-income earners, Ruttenberg told the committee, lead to higher buying power and greater demand for products. And this, he said, "is greater encouragement and incentive for business to invest and expand production than any tax cut on high income individuals or corporations could possibly be."

On that score, he added, HR 1 is a complete bust.

The CIO tax program—published in the current Economic Outlook and presented to the Senate Committee—calls for greater exemptions for persons earning less than $5,000; a closing of loopholes through which companies and wealthy individuals evade taxes; a 38% tax on corporation earnings, in the case of firms earning over $25,000 a year; taxes on undistributed and excess profits; and tighter capital gains taxes.

THE program and the arguments were reiterated by Nixon of the UE.

He charged that the country's "long-range economic security" is affected by the tax bill. For the 25 million taxpayers earning less than $2,000 a year, he pointed out, the burden of taxes is becoming intolerable.

"More or less taxes for these groups means more or less milk, more or less meat, more or less clothing, more or less medical care," he said.

Nixon warned of the danger of increasing unemployment throughout the nation, and charged that "HR 1 drives us toward unemployment because it under-cuts the mass market in our country."

"There is the gravest need for every reasonable force in America immediately to become aroused and active about the threatening return to mass unemployment," he added.

For The Greedy, Not The Needy

MISSOURI FLOOD AND POWER PLAN BEFORE CONGRESS

CREATION of a Missouri Valley Authority, to harness the waters of the big Missouri river for the benefit of people living in a dozen northwest states, was proposed last week in Congress.

The MVA bill (S. 1156) provides for a single program of water control and development of the entire area, along the same lines as the highly successful TVA experiment fathered by the late Sen. George Norris.

The bill—which has strong CIO support—was introduced by five Senators: Murray (D., Mont.), Taylor (D., Ida.), Langer (R., N. D.), Pepper (D., Fla) and Johnston (D., S. C.).

Floods and droughts, Sen. Murray told the Senate, threaten the "future wealth and productivity of our country."

"We cannot afford to permit any selfish economic or political consideration to interfere with the sound solution of an issue which holds such tremendous consequences."

It would be "blind stupidity," the veteran Montana liberal added, not to profit from the experiences of the Tennessee Valley project by creating similar public projects in other areas of the nation.

Same Time For ABC; CBS Show Shifted

Labor-USA, CIO's sprightly 15-minute radio broadcast on the ABC network, will continue to be heard at its regular time despite daylight saving in many states.

The show originates in New York at 6:45 P. M. Saturdays. ABC will transcribe the broadcast for stations in localities staying on standard time, so that the program may be heard at its usual hour.

Cross-Section USA, CBS's public service program run in cooperation with CIO and eight other national organizations, will be heard at a new time starting May 3.

On that date, the program will be moved to the period between 5:00 P. M. and 5:30 P. M., Eastern daylight time, on Saturdays. Consult local papers for the time of broadcast in your area.

N. C. VICTORY

TWO labor-endorsed alderman candidates, one of them the first Negro to gain such a post since 1900, were nominated this week at Winston-Salem, N. C., in the city Democratic primary.

The election shook this monopoly-ridden city to its political roots and provided a nationally significant triumph for the newly-formed United Labor Committee of Forsyth County.

The ULC, composed of CIO, AFL and independent union representatives, formally endorsed the Rev. Kenneth Williams, progressive Negro minister, and two other aldermanic candidates.

Williams, running in a predominantly working-class ward, defeated five opponents. His vote almost equalled the total combined votes of the other candidates.

Nomination in the Democratic primary here is virtually equivalent to election.

Also nominated with labor support was Alderman Candidate Fred C. Denny.

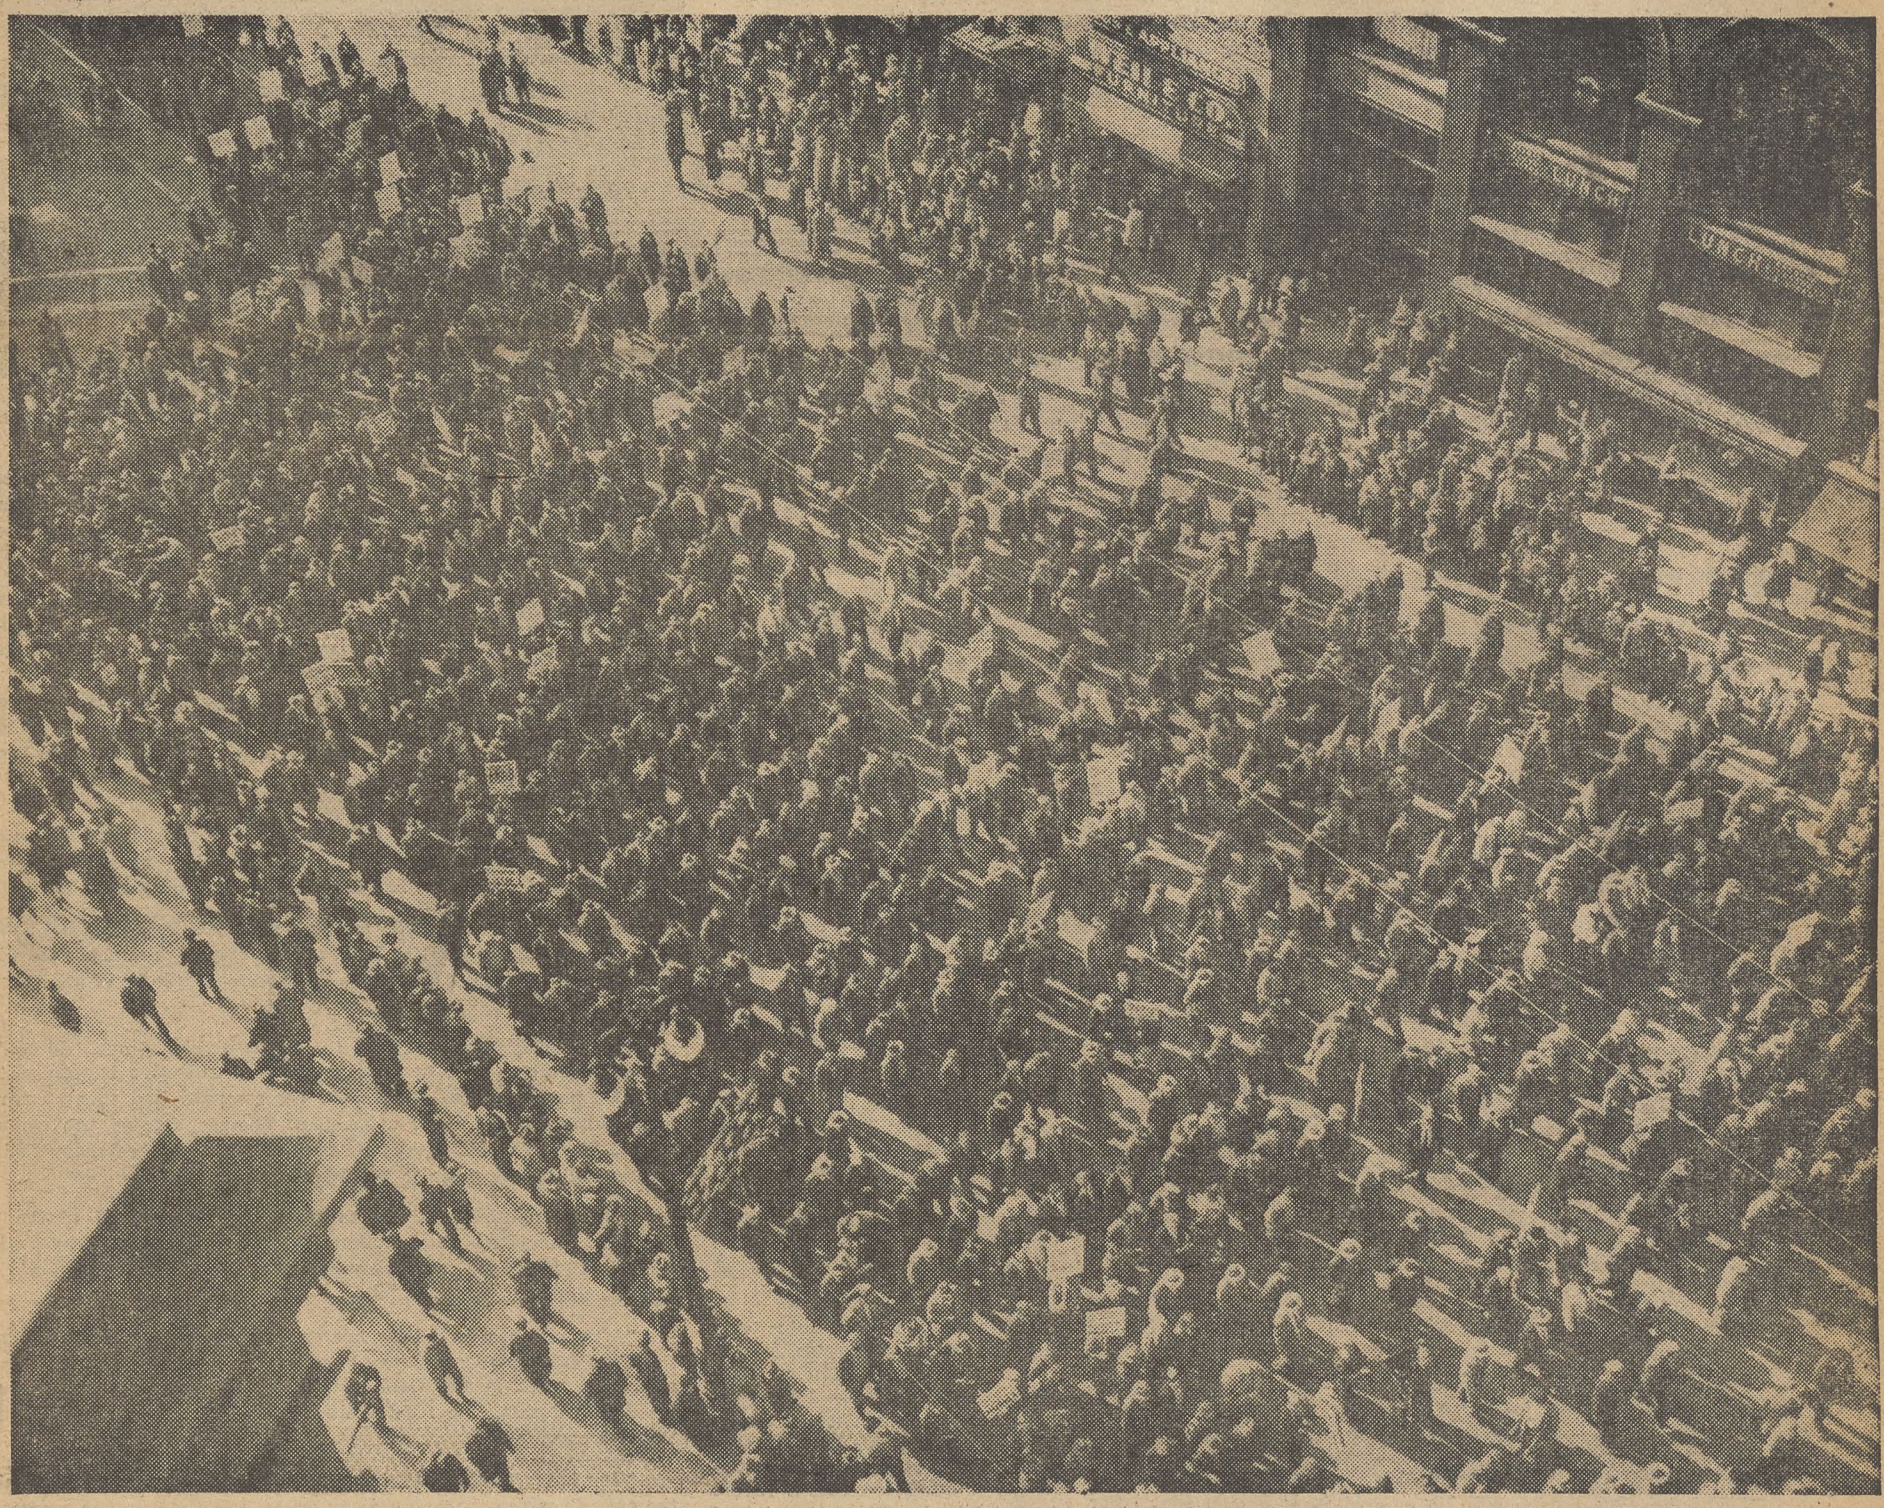
WEEKLY PUBLICATION OF THE CONGRESS OF INDUSTRIAL ORGANIZATIONS



This striking photo caught the essence of Detroit's militancy as thousands of CIO Auto Workers from Ford's giant River Rouge plant marched to Cadillac Square, joining scores of other thousands in a mighty demonstration against anti-labor bills in Congress. More pictures—page 3. (Marty Pierce photos).

VOTE DUE ON TAFT BILL

A conversation that started on the weather this week reached torrid summer temperature as CIO unionists from Minnesota interviewed Sen. Joseph Ball, a spearhead of the anti-labor drive in Congress. Ball (l.) searches the ceiling for the right answer while (l. to r.) Earl Bester, Francis LaBrosse, Glenn Simonson, Joseph Kretche, Russell Munson, Walter Smith, John Wyant and Oscar Olson wait with impatience. The Senator didn't like to be reminded that the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers supports his proposals. "We've got to preserve the right to strike," he said. . . . "But," said Bester, "you're putting it in a bottle!" Ball said he's in favor of the "fundamental" right of a worker to take a job (without joining a union, of course) but he's not in favor of a full employment bill which would guarantee a job to every capable worker. "I'm not for government control," he said . . . And Bester added: "Only of unions!" The Senator revealed what he thought of the people's opinions by declaring: "I don't vote by the Gallup Poll. I wouldn't give a damn if it were 75% against my position." He did not say whether he paid more attention to opinions of the NAM.

MR. LABOR COMES TO WASHINGTON

TO THE DISGUST of a lot of Congressmen seeking to knife the people's interests, several hundred CIO rank-and-file members from the east, mid-west and south poured into Washington last week on lobbying expeditions.

Well over a thousand union members visited the Capitol, talked with Representatives and Senators, left petitions and scrolls, and headed home determined to spread the word that now is the time to prepare for the '48 elections.

STATEMENTS from members of the groups showed the way the winds were blowing.

Said Luther Slinkard, UAW-CIO official in St. Louis, who spoke for a group of 32 Missouri unionists visiting the capital:

"Our visit with Missouri Congressmen showed a shocking lack of recognitioon of the seriousness of the Hartley Bill. The Congressmen, with the exception of Reps. Cannon and Karsten, are either uninformed or badly misinformed, both as to labor practices and as to the very terms of the bill on which they voted last week."

From Ohio came 150 CIO'ers, led by State CIO Sec. William Lavelle. Fifty of them, crowding into a committee room for an interview with Sen. Taft, were told by the Senate GOP leader that labor was "exaggerating" the seriousness of the bill, and that he has no objection to industry-wide bargaining—in fact found it very "desirable". The Ohio Senator has gone to great lengths to keep that view out of the public eye.

Conclusions of Lavelle and the Ohio group: "We found . . . many Congressmen who voted for the Hartley bill and didn't know what they were voting for." Few of the Congressmen had any expert idea of day-to-day industrial relations problems, the group declared.

INDIANA sent two groups of CIO Hoosiers to make life difficult for Senators Capehart and Jenner and for many GOP members of the state's Congressional delegation.

In a three-hour session, Capehart tried to tell the union group that he had a mandate from the Republican voters—only to be challenged by several workers who said they were registered Republicans who had given the party no anti-labor mandate.

Contradicting the Senator's claim of wide public support for the anti-labor bills was a petition from the steel center of Gary. Collected in 10 days by 12 steel union locals and other unions in the city were 10,000 signatures, including those of the entire city council and many businessmen.

Said Ray Muncy of Fort Wayne: "I'm a working fellow. I don't hold an office in the union. I think these labor bills would take away our rights. I hope you will vote against the Taft bill and all such legislation."

Biggest hand of the day went to Rep. Madden (D. Ind.), who voted against the Hartley Bill. Madden told the Indiana folks that "95% of the employer witnesses appearing before the Labor Committee never made a sincere effort to bargain collectively at any time."

Other groups came into town from the South, Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Illinois, New York, New Jersey, the New England States, Pennsylvania, Maryland, Kentucky, and West Virginia. And judging from what the delegates promised they'd report to the folks back home, a lot of Congressmen must be having a bad case of red ears.

FOR THE RECORD

ANOTHER link in the anti-labor record of the daily press was forged last week.

The Twohey Analysis of Newspaper Opinion reported that "support of stiff legislation on labor has crystallized and strengthened."

The Analysis—an objective survey of comment in the major daily papers—said that 48% of editorial opinion last week concerned federal labor legislation.

Of the comment on this subject, 29% favored the stiff House anti-labor bill, while 22% preferred the equally vicious Senate bill—although these papers considered the Senate version milder.

Nineteen percent of the comment warned Pres. Truman against vetoing any bill that passes, and the remaining 30% held that labor should help cut its own throat by suggesting the type of law that Congress should pass.

Three Democrats Hit Anti-Union Plan

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

UNDER HEAVY attack by a minority group of Senators, the Taft anti-labor bill (S. 1126) moved rapidly this week towards a decisive vote.

With criticism of the measure pouring in from labor and civic groups across the nation, the bill received a severe dressing down on the Senate floor from Senators Pepper, Thomas and Murray—members of the Labor Committee minority which filed a written report against the restrictive proposals aimed as tying up legitimate union activities. Other Senators also pitched into the battle.

One proposal—by Sen. Morse (R. Ore.), an advocate of milder legislation—was defeated by a 59-35 vote. Morse had recommended that the bill be broken up into four separate measures.

Sen. Alben Barkley (D., Ky.), Democratic Senate leader during the 79th Congress, had pleaded with his colleagues to support the four-for-one proposition. He argued that it would make it easier for Pres. Truman to approve at least some of the anti-labor legislation, and that a veto was more likely if all the proposed ties on labor came to the White House in one package.

WITH the decision to keep the anti-labor proposals all wrapped up in the Taft bill, Sen. Taft indicated he would press for "strengthening amendments" to make the bill an even more vicious anti-union instrument.

The Ohio Republican said he would seek curbs on industry-wide bargaining, on union security and union health and welfare funds. Passage of such amendments would make the bill little less severe than the Hartley bill already passed by the House.

In its present form, the Taft bill runs the gamut of restrictions on labor organizations. It provides for compulsory cooling-off period of long duration, opens the way for widespread use of injunctions against unions, makes possible the use of suits in federal courts as a means of wrecking union treasuries, bans the closed shop and restricts other forms of union security, contains sweeping amendments to the Wagner Act, and would tie the Labor Board in such quantities of red tape as to make it of little value to any union.

THE Congressional attack on the Taft bill took many forms. Sen. Pepper pointed out in considerable detail that it would incite, rather than cut down, bad feeling and strife in industral relatons.

Sen. Thomas, a former member of the LaFollette Civil Liberties Committee, quoted at length from official documents to show that principal supporters of the bill had long records of hostility to labor.

Earl Reed of Weirton Steel, the Senator pointed out, had told the Labor Committee that he wanted "perfect collective bargaining" but had said nothing about the $23,000 the company had spent for industrial munitions and labor spies. Sen. Thomas derided the claims of Harold Story, an Allis-Chalmers executive, that the company had bargained collectively prior to the Wagner Act.

"But he omitted entirely to state that the record of the Civil Liberties Committee showed that for years his company had utilized the most notorious of labor-spying and strikebreaking services," Thomas noted wryly.

"After one has served for five or six years on a committee such as the Civil Liberties Committee, listening to testimony of witnesses day after day, week in and week out, piling up evidence running into a hundred volumes, one feels a little bit sick of the whole business," Thomas continued.

"One hates to think that our country will ever slip back again to the evils to which it was formerly exposed in the common practices of labor and industry. Yet there is before us a bill containing amendments which will invite a return to those days."

A thumping majority of the City Council of N. Y. this week urged Congressmen from that city to vote against "any legislation that would be unfair to labor or against the interest of the public welfare".

In a resolution introduced originally by Councilman Michael J. Quill, the Council declared that "the only adequate preventative of strikes and other labor disputes is the guarantee of living wages to workers, and decent working conditions."

Nearly 200,000 organized workers jammed Detroit's Cadillac Square last week to tell Congress that they don't want anti-labor laws. Banners, placards and lusty singing added color to the auto city's biggest rally. Columns up to a mile long and 10 abreast converged on the Square to hear leaders of CIO, AFL and independent unions warn that labor's very life is threatened.

FOR A FREE AMERICA!

THE CIO this week joined with the AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods, independent unions and civic organizations to make its protests heard in Congress against anti-labor legislation.

Scores of rallies were held from coast to coast.

AT BALTIMORE CIO Sec-Treas. James B. Carey told his audience at City Hall Plaza that they should hold their Congressmen and Senators responsible for their actions. Carey pointed out that Rep. D'Alesandro was the only Congressman from the state who had voted against the Hartley bill. CIO Pres. Philip Murray wired:

"It is good to know that all Baltimore unions, regardless of affiliation, and civic groups are joining to protest these vicious, unwarranted bills."

AT LOS ANGELES 15,000 gathered in front of city hall to listen to speakers and to write Sens. Downey and Knowland urging them to vote against anti-labor measures.

Placards declared: "Taft-Hartley bills mean breadlines." "No letter today, no union tomorrow." "No labor front in America!"

IN MEMPHIS striking telephone girls helped CIO members get 40,000 signatures on petitions to Congress protesting anti-labor bills. CIO, AFL and independent unions set up a committee, which held three protest rallies.

And IN MIAMI, a united Defend Labor meeting was attended by 5,000, representing not only the CIO, AFL and independent unions but also the Franklin D. Roosevelt Club, the Jewish Peoples Fraternal Order, the American Veterans Committee and the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

A resolution accused Congress of launching "a sinister and deadly attack upon labor unions," while "protecting Wall Street monopoly profits."

Size of the rally proved its success. An even better indication was the vicious press attack against the peaceful demonstration. The daily mouthpieces of the auto manufacturers called the rally "irresponsible." But Pres. George Edwards of the Common Council said that Cadillac Square is "the seat of Government, the place where union people should come for their grievances."

GETTING RESULTS

NEW WAGE agreements are being signed so thick and fast these days that it is hard to keep pace with them.

Already the number of CIO members covered by these agreements in the steel, automobile, electrical, rubber, farm equipment, textile, oil, glass, paper and other industries runs into the milliions.

No one has yet estimated the total amount of the substantial wage increases won for all these workers. But it certainly runs into hundreds of millions.

These are not only dollars-and-cents results for the CIO members concerned—an improvement of their living standards—but they also portend higher wages for millions of other workers as well, for whom the CIO fights the battle and sets the wage standards in the basic industries on which most others depend.

More than this, these results are a great contribution to the economic welfare of the whole American people—an increase in the purchasing power of the millions who buy most of the farm products and other goods and services for which there must be an effective and increasing demand if we are to have increased production and greater general prosperity.

BUT THIS is only part of the great and encouraging story of these CIO agreements.

The wage gains won are not the only new benefits secured for the workers through these contracts. Each agreement has scores of other clauses for the protection and advancement of their interests.

The new U. S. Steel contract, for example, includes for the first time the principle of severance pay for laid-off workers.

It particularly benefits Southern workers by reducing the differential between their wages and those in the north. Its new and fairer job classifications mean more money to countless workers.

It has improved provisions for paid vacations, holidays, safety on the job, grievance machinery, seniority rights, pay for reporting time, and work scheduling to assure more regular employment.

It provides for a joint study of a social insurance program covering death, disability, sickness benefits, hospitalization and medical care.

In this and other CIO contracts, union security provisions have been maintained or improved, through maintenance of membership and similar clauses, despite all the open-shop demands of the employers.

ALL THESE, and many other fine results, have been achieved without strikes through the orderly processes of free and peaceful collective bargaining.

Free unions and collective bargaining have shown the great benefits they can bring to the workers, to industry and to the general public.

They have given this splendid demonstration in face of the worst drive ever launched in Congress to destroy unions and make free bargaining impossible.

The kind of benefits secured for labor and the country through the recent CIO agreements would be impossible under the Taft and Hartley bills, which would give the whip-hand to anti-union employers and deprive the workers of anything approaching equal opportunity to get a square deal.

WITH THESE agreements, the CIO reaches a new peak of influence and prestige, as well as of numerical strength.

It has once more demonstrated its leadership on behalf of all American labor, by leading the fight for higher wages, by getting better results than any other organization, and by setting new standards in the basic industries tries from which all other workers will also benefit.

It has also demonstrated its initiative, its agressiveness and its sense of public responsibility in promoting the national welfare.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

It was one of these spring mornings. The streetcar was full. But the only passengers I really noticed were two goodlooking girls—you know how spring is.

They were joshing with a young follow—sounded like the usual boy-meets-girl line. But the streetcar slowed down near a picket-line, and the two girls rose to leave.

At the door one of them turned. Her cheeks dimpled. Her lips parted in a provoking smile. "We don't care what you say," she said. "We like the union. We love it."

It made me think of love and marriage and unionism, and how some members feel who are "married to the union."

SHE WAS like a green young tree that sparkles in the dew and sunshine of a May morning. Slim and supple, she moved with the grace of leafy branches swayed by the breeze.

When she smiled, her face was like a firm round bud that suddenly bursts into a beautiful flower.

At least, that's how she looked to him—though the closest he got to saying so was, "Hiya, goodlooking?"

He was passable, for a young man. A bit awkward. But strong and vigorous, with a stubborn chin, a hard-worker, and a fighter.

To her, he was a handsome gentle knight, come to rescue her, to protect her. In his eyes she saw sincerity, high ideals, great plans for the future.

In short, they fell in love.

Some neighbors thought he was a bit uncouth, too outspoken, inclined to be rambunctious. "Why couldn't she have married the boss's son, or some other rich fellow?"

("I don't know why you had to take up with the CIO?" said the banker. "The better class of people in this community don't think much of it. It's stirring up trouble. The company will look after you)."

BUT EVERYONE had to admit he was a good provider. He brought in more money, gave her a more comfortable life than before.

Not that they didn't have a struggle, particularly at first. Some folks thought she was pretty calculating when she married him. But she didn't mind going short those days. She believed in him, trusted him, knew the struggle was worth while.

It wasn't just a matter of money, she said, she loved him.

(In Portsmouth, O., they told me about a man on a long strike who wouldn't take the union relief money he was entitled to. "I can manage without it," he said, "and anyhow I didn't join the union for what I can get out of it. I believe in it.")

He GOT into some fights on her account. He wouldn't stand for anyone trying to take advantage of her.

She had been rather timid as a girl—afraid of the boss and of "what people would think."

But, married to him, she became self-confident, sure of herself, not afraid to stand up for her rights.

(Said a Virginia textile worker: "Since the CIO came in, we're free, we're not afraid.")

THEY DIDN'T really live happily ever after. They had their family spats at times. But, deep down, they knew they needed each other, were made for each other.

And as the family grew larger, she appreciated more and more what a good provider he was. It wasn't only the money, but the way he tried to make things easier, to reduce the housework, give her more leisure, vacations, more opportunities for the kids, savings and insurance to make the future more secure.

(Besides substantial wage increases won for millions of workers, recent CIO agreements have many provisions like these in the Steelworkers' contract:

(More paid holidays. Longer paid vacations. Severance pay when laid off. More regular employment through improved work scheduling. Pay for reporting time. Safety provisions. More secure seniority rights. Plans for social welfare, health and insurance.)

ONE WAY to get him and her closer together than ever—and fighting mad—was to try to separate them, to break up their home. They were that way about each other.

("Anyone'd think you were married to the union," cracked the young fellow on the streetcar. Said the girl: "We like the union. We love it.")

CIO WAGE GAINS SOAR

Joint CIO - AFL Statement

FOLLOWING is the joint statement adopted by the unity committees of the CIO and AFL, which met at Washington, D. C., on May 1-2:

It is the unanimous opinion of the representatives of the CIO and the AFL that organic unity should be established within the American labor movement. We are firmly convinced that the economic, social and industrial interests of labor can be best served through the establishment of a united labor movement. This decision is based upon the modern trend of economic, social and industrial life. It now becomes our duty to lay a sound foundation upon which a super-structure of organic unity can be erected.

In order to accomplish this purpose we will now proceed to deal with the details incidental to the formation and establishment of a strong united labor movement in the U. S. We will deal with this and other mutual problems at future meetings of the representatives of the two organizations herein named. We shall devote our energies and purpose toward the realization of this common objective.

In the meantime, we shall continue our efforts to prevent the enactment of highly objectionable anti-labor legislation now being considered in the Congress of the U. S.

LABOR UNITY TALK

THE need for "establishment of a united labor movement" and continued efforts to fight anti-labor legislation was unanimously agreed upon at a two-day meeting of CIO and AFL representatives in Washington May 1-2.

"It is the unanimous opinion of the representatives of the CIO and AFL that organic unity should be established within the American labor movement," a joint statement declared. "It now becomes our duty to lay a sound foundation upon which a super-structure of organic unity can be erected."

The CIO-AFL committee stated it would deal with "details incidental to the formation of a strong united labor movement" and "other mutual problems" at future meetings, in the meantime continuing "our efforts to prevent the enactment of highly objectionable anti-labor legislation."

THE CIO delegates, headed by Pres. Philip Murray, submitted a program calling for a joint CIO-AFL legislative committee and other united action against anti-union legislation as a "first step towards organic unity."

Secondly, it called for an agreement between the two labor organizations to eliminate jurisdictional disputes, raiding and boycotts of goods manufactured at plants organized by another labor union.

Thirdly, the CIO called for recognition of the principle of industrial organization in "any new organizational structure," respect for the autonomous rights of all international unions in the new organization and creation of effective labor political action machinery.

The CIO proposals were not accepted by the AFL representatives, who countered with a proposal that the CIO unions "affiliate with the AFL on the same basis as the United Mine Workers of America—i. e., come in as they are now organized with their full membership" and that "this jointure" be completed at the AFL convention in

Official CIO Position

FOLLOWING is the CIO proposal placed before the CIO-AFL unity meeting, but not adopted:

Recognizing the profound dangers facing organized labor, we, as representatives of the AFL and the CIO, have met to consider effective measures for joint action looking towards organic unity.

The future welfare of all Americans is being threatened by those who seek to destroy the right of free association of American labor. Our enemies are united. They seek through the enactment of anti-labor legislation, in Congress and in the state Legislatures, to eliminate the gains which workers have achieved over many years through union organizations.

The Taft-Hartley anti-labor program threatens our country with another depression. If enacted it will pave the way to a national economic disaster, exceeding that of 1929-32. And if our economy falls from the great heights reached by our all-out efforts in World War II into the pit of economic disorder, the American way of life is at stake.

WE HAVE come together to consider organic unity within the American labor movement. We believe that by such discussions within the ranks of labor we can make our contribution towards national unity. We propose to move towards organic unity by joint action.

1. As a first step towards organic unity we have agreed, for the defense of our membership against vicious legislation to destroy labor's rights,

(a) to establish a national joint emergency legislative committee to give direction and coordination to an over-all legislative fight against anti-labor legislation;

(b) we propose to establish similar state-wide and community-wide committees:

(c) to effectively launch this program Presidents Green and Murray agree upon a joint nation-wide radio program;

(d) we have also agreed upon the following joint committee to call on President Truman, and upon the leaders of the Republican and Democratic parties regarding bills directed at labor;

While we are jointly fighting against the forces of reaction in the legislative field we propose to proceed with further explorations of organic unity between our great labor bodies.

2. As a second step towards creating the basis for organic unity, we propose that an agreement be perfected between AFL and CIO to eliminate jurisdictional disputes and to cover the following:

(a) There shall be no raiding by either organization of a plant organized by the other organization and where either negotiations are under way or plant organized by the other a contract is outstanding.

(b) Neither organization is to issue a charter to any group of employes who had been members of or had been covered by a contract held by another organization.

(c) Where two rival unions are conducting organizational campaigns, but neither has had a previous contract, the collective bargaining representative shall be designated through an election to be held by the Natl. Labor Relations Board, which decision shall be final.

(d) There shall be no boycott of or interference with the use of goods manufactured at plants organized by another labor union.

(e) Any jurisdictional dispute shall first be submitted for disposition to the international unions involved and, in the event of a failure to agree, the matter shall be submitted to an arbitrator mutually agreed upon who shall be guided by the foregoing rules and whose decision shall be final and binding.

3. As a third step the AFL and CIO agree to accept the following democratic trade union principles as the basis for further discussion of organice unity:

(a) Any new organizational structure shall give full and complete recognition to the principle of industrial organization.

(b) The autonomous rights of the existing international unions shall be full respected within the framework of the principles of the new national organization.

(c) The new organization shall provide for the creation of effective labor political action machinery for advancing the legislative objects of organized labor, between elections and at election time. We regard the exercise of the rights of citizenship as a cornerstone of democratic trade unionism.

4. As a fourth step, parallel with the efforts outlined above, we propose further that committees of AFL and CIO unions operating in the same field should also meet to explore the possibility of joint action in the carrying out of the AFL Statement

FOLLOWING is the AFL proposal placed before the CIO-AFL unity meeting, but not adopted:

It is proposed:

1. That the national unions of the CIO affiliate with the AFL on the same basis as the United Mine Workers of America, i. e., come in as they are now organized with their full membership.

2. That this jointure be complete and effective as of the date of the October Constitutional Convention of the AFL with full privileged participation by the delegates from the new existent CIO national unions.

3. That this sitting joint committee of ten retain its functioning status ad interim, for the purpose of:

(a) Implementing this policy by adjustment of details and making recommendations on all matters of recurring importance.

(b) To pool the influence and resources of both organizations in the most effective manner for the purpose of fighting the enactment of pending legislation, designed to weaken the economic strength of America's wage earners, destroy their unions and bargaining rights; and to impose comparative serfdom of free men.

PAY HIKES FOR HALF MILLION

MORE than a half-million CIO members in mass production industries received wage increases of slightly better than 15c an hour under agreements reached within the past week. The total receiving the pay increases to date is well over a million CIO members.

The wage hikes follow the pattern set by CIO's big three—the Steelworkers, Auto Workers, and Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers—within the past three weeks.

The increases are from 11½ to 12½c an honr, but with other improvements such as elimination of wage inequities, improved vacations and paid holidays the total "package" amounts to better than 15c an hour.

Agreements negotiated this week with Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Crucible, and Colorado Fuel & Iron by the Steelworkers alone benefit approximately 205,000, bringing the total in the steel industry benefiting from new agreements to an estimated 375,000.

Every day brings word of new agreements. Main contracts negotiated within the past week follow:

STEEL: Contracts with Bethlehem, Republic, Jones & Laughlin, Crucible and Colorado Fuel and Iron follow the general lines of the contract negotiated last week with U. S. Steel. Sec.-Treas. David J. McDonald of the Steelworkers said that the Bethlehem and the Republic Steel pacts were identical with one exception. The Republic Steel provided an additional 3c an hour increase in the Southern Plants at Gadsden and Birmingham, Ala., to reduce the geographical wage differential at these plants.

An agreement reached late this week with the Aluminum Co. of American follows the general pattern except that the actual wage increase is 12c an hour instead of 12½c. The company agreed last year to boost wages by 19c an hour instead of 18½c because of bookeeping difficulties. This year the union decided to concede a half cent.

AUTO: UAW signed a contract with Chrysler similar to the one signed with GM and providing for a wage increase of 11½c an hour in addition to six paid holidays, four hours call-in pay instead of three, and a more liberal vacation plan.

ELECTRICAL: The agreement reached by UE with General Electric this week provides a 15c-an-hour overall wage and salary increase and is similar to earlier contracts signed with Westinghouse and GM's electrical division.

WORLD LABOR

A WARNING against mistakes made after World War I in turning economic power back to German monopolists was sounded recently at a conference of trade unions in the British and American occupation zones of Germany.

The meeting, held at Frankfurt, passed a resolution noting with "consternation" that nominations for trustees of the key industries in the British zone have been postponed. The trustees would administer the properties in behalf of the public.

As in 1919, the resolution said, "the beginnings of a socialization of the key industries were prevented by similar practices—with the result that the key industries were to become the breeding place for Nazism and military preparations.

"If these events are not to repeat themselves, the first step towards socialization must be taken immediately, and without regard to any sectional interests, through the nomination of German trustees for the key industries."

Reason for the delay, according to press reports cited by the union officials, is the "protest of the French government and the financial claims of allied owners in industrial enterprises of the British zone."

SOMETHING NEW took place at Dakar, West Africa, early this month, as the World Federation of Trade Unions convened the first Pan-African Trade Union Conference—first of its kind on the continent.

Presiding at the meeting was Adolph Germer of CIO, WFTU assistant secretary-general in charge of colonial affairs.

Eighteen national and territorial union groups, with a membership of a million, sent delegates, Allied Labor News reports.

All areas of Africa were represented with the exception of Egypt and the colonies of Portugal, in which as in the mother country unions are virtually outlawed. Chief item on the agenda were questions of union rights, labor and social legislation, and working conditions.

IS BUCKINGHAM PALACE an essential piece of reconstruction? British building workers unions are contacting King George VI, now in South Africa, to demand that extensive repairs on the palace be deferred until homes can be built for millions of bombed-out families.

The statement, passed by the London Council of the building union, described the repair job on the King's home as "an affront to public decency."

Czech unionists welcome food and clothing sent from the U. S. through CARE (Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe). Chairman Antonin Zapotocky of the Central Council of trade Union (1) examines a CARE package.

CIO Head Sends Aid to Britisher

TAKING advantage of new facilities to send CARE packages to Great Britain, CIO Pres. Murray has purchased one of the new relief packages for the benefit of a British union member.

The packages, weighing 21 pounds and selling for $10, are distributed by CARE—the Cooperative for American Remittances to Europe—to points in Britain and practically every European country. In buying the package, Murray urged CIO union members to speed sending of the relief packages to needy, persons abroad.

Persons desiring to send CARE food, cotton, woolen or blanket packages to friends overseas should send $10 for each package, together with the name and address of the intended recipient, to CARE, 50 Broad St., New York 4, N. Y.

CIO ASKS HAVEN FOR HOMELESS

THE CIO this week urged Congress to uphold America's tradition as a haven for the homeless.

Both CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey recommended passage of H.R. 2910, a bill providing for entry into the U. S. during the next four years of 400,000 displaced persons.

In a statement released by the Citizens Committee on Displaced persons, Murray said that the U. S. "should take the lead in offering to these survivors of Nazi concentration camps a new life in a country where there is freedom of speech, freedom of worship and freedom of movement."

"The preamble to the Constitution of the CIO points out that our country is a nation of immigrants and children of immigrants. We of the CIO are the sons and daughters of ancestors who came to this country to escape absolutism in government, bigotry in religion and economic exploitation," Murray stated.

Carey added:

"Wholly aside from the moral factors involved, there is a practical aspect which Americans should consider. Our country needs the intelligence and the willing hands of many more persons if we are to achieve our expected goal in improving the earth for the use of all men. Conversely, it might be pointed out that the continued insecurity of these homeless people constitutes a menace to the security of all nations"

PARLEY TO AID PALESTINE

MORE than 300 delegates of labor unions from the U. S. and Canada will meet at a three-day National Trade Union Emergency Conference on Labor Palestine in Atlantic City, N. J., next month.

The Conference is being called to express the solidarity of all wings of American labor with their sister organization, the Palestinian Jewish Federation of Labor, in its work of building Palestine.

The CIO and the AFL have gone on record repeatedly demanding that Great Britain, the mandatory power in Palestine, honor the terms of its mandate, and permit the free entry of Jewish people into Palestine.

AN IMPORTANT part is being played in the building of Palestine by the Palestine Federation of Labor—known as the Histadrut.

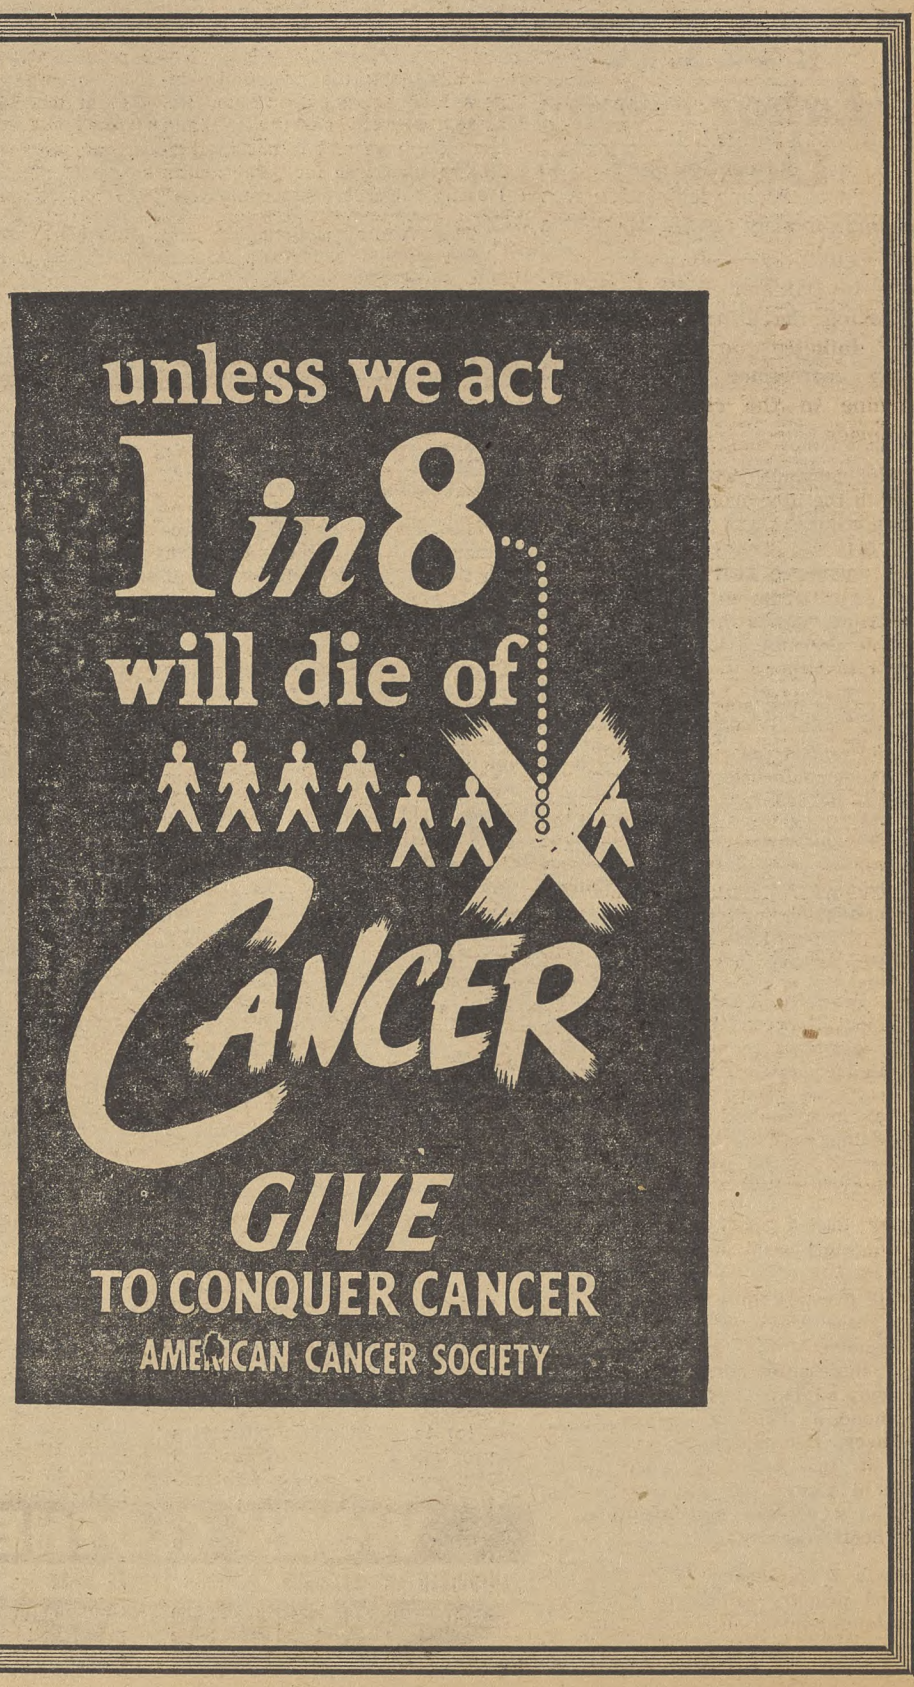
Histadrut has 170,000 members Together with their families they make up over 40% of the Jewish population of Palestine.

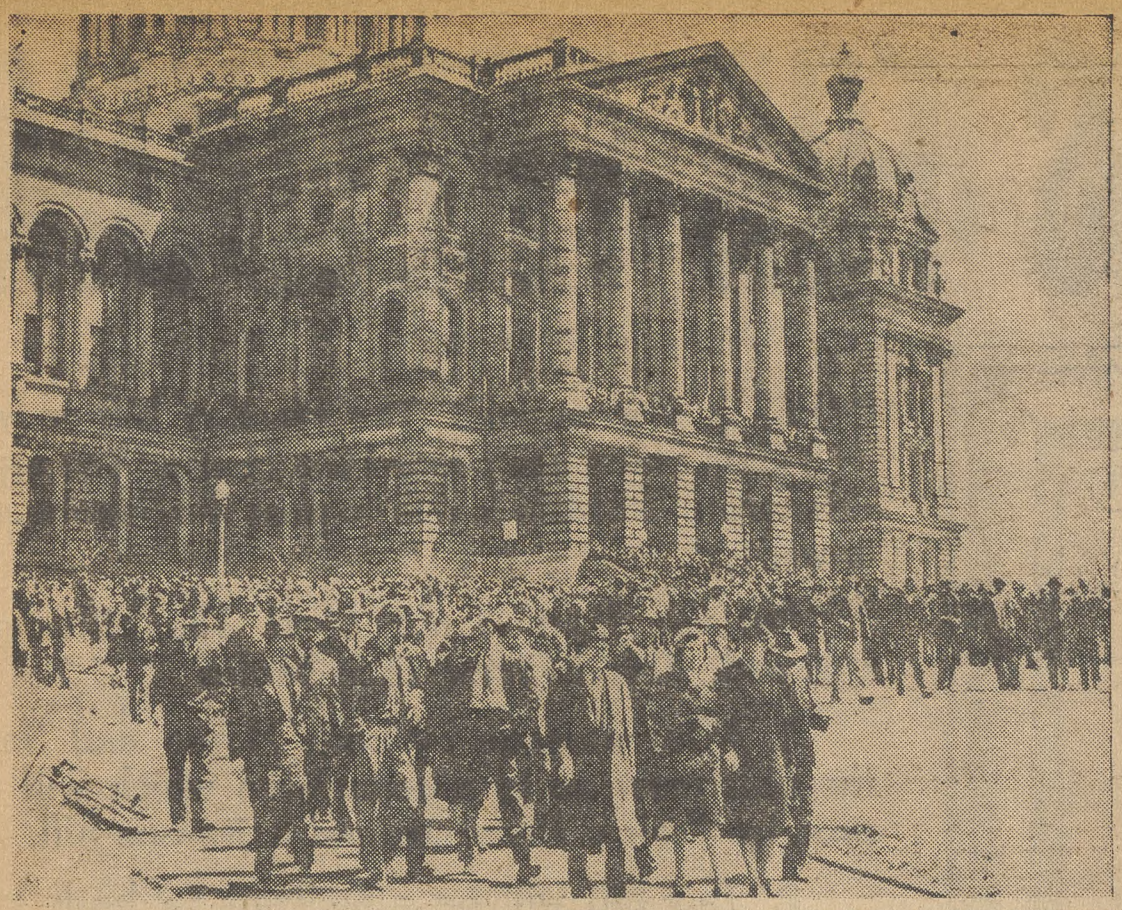
It is Histadrut which prepares jobs and homes for refugees who manage to enter Palestine. But the activities of Histadrut cover every part of the Palestinian scene.

It maintains a cooperative building organization, owns modern businesses which cover all of Palestine, and maintains cooperative buying and selling organizations, both wholesale and retail.

The buying organizations help Histadrut members dispose of their industrial and agricultural products, and the cooperative selling organization brings the products of Palestine and of the whole world to its members at advantageous prices.

Histadrut's program endorsed by CIO and AFL—calls for abolition of the British White Paper of 1939, which had the effect of cutting Jewish immigration to a mere trickle and forbade further Jewish land purchase.





Despite a demonstration of nearly 20,000 members of all branches of organized labor, the Iowa legislature this week passed a bill outlawing the union shop. The measure was signed by Gov. Robert D. Blue. A bill prohibiting secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes has been passed but has not yet reached the governor.

3 MORE STATES HIT UNIONS

THREE more states slapped anti-union laws on the books this week—Iowa, Minnesota and Texas.

Iowa became the 11th state since 1944 to outlaw closed and union shops. Other states enacting such legislation this year include: Arizona, Arkansas, Georgia, North Carolina, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee and Virginia. In Ohio and New Mexico, bills provide that constitutional amendments outlawing the union shop be submitted to the people. Previously, legislatures in Florida and Texas had banned the union shop.

Iowa also passed a bill prohibiting secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes.

The Minnesota legislature last week passed an anti-secondary boycott bill which contains provisions that can in effect outlaw the closed shop and other forms of union security and can prevent peaceful picketing. Idaho previously had passed an anti-boycott bill.

Minnesota also passed a bill making it illegal for hospital employes to strike, and another which encourages court actions against unions and may involve them in costly, time-consuming litigation.

And in Texas this week, Gov. Beauford H. Jester signed a bill drastically limiting picketing rights.

The bill defines "mass picketing" as the spacing of pickets closer than 50 feet apart, and limits the number of pickets at any gate of a struck plant to two.

Other bills restricting picketing have been passed in Georgia, South Dakota and Virginia.

IN most of the states where laws against unions were passed, proposed legislation benefiting the people get rough treatment. Minnesota was a sample of this, according to Federated Press.

Measures advocated by labor to liberalize the present inadequate unemployment and workmen's compensation laws were killed, as were bills to establish a fair employment practices committee and to set minimum salaries for teachers.

All provisions for emergency housing for veterans were cut out of an emasculated housing law.

Just before adjournment, the legislature passed a rent increase bill in the name of rent "control". The new law will permit 15% increases if federal controls are removed.

Savage In Comeback Try For Congress

Pledging unqualified opposition to all proposals to cripple labor, former Rep. Charles Savage announced at Shelton, Wash., that he will be a candidate for the congressional seat made vacant by the death of Rep. Fred Norman, Republican.

Norman's last official act was to vote for the Hartley bill.

The vacancy can be filled only by a special election called by Gov. Mon C. Wallgren (D).

Hillman Fund Drive

An industry campaign on behalf of the $1 million Sidney Hillman Foundation to perpetuate the ideals of the late president of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers was launched in New York at a luncheon of 200 New York men's clothing manufacturers last week.

The employers gave pledges of $142,300 at the luncheon to meet the industry goal of $250,000. Manufacturers in other areas will raise a similar amount. The foundation has already raised $500,000, half its total.

Labor's Ringing Those Oakland Doorbells!

ORGANIZED labor's doorbell ringers are out in force in Oakland, Calif., consolidating the stinging defeat they inflicted on Oakland's long-entrenched Republican machine in the city council primaries.

The camapign battle of five seats in the nine-man council will be determined in a run-off election May 13. The run-off is almost unheard-of in Oakland politics. Only once before has any opposition candidate made a good enough showing to win a nomination in the April primaries.

This time five labor-backed candidates of the Oakland Voters League topped the vote lists, giving the machine the most severe upset in its history.

The badly-shaken machine, controlled by Publisher Joe Knowland, his son, Sen. William Knowland, and Gov. Earl Warren, was reported ready to throw $500,000 into the fight against the up-and-coming coalition of the Voters League and the Alameda County Joint Labor Committee, representing CIO-AFL and rail unions.

The progressive coalition is mobilizing 1,600 precinct workers to get out the vote and lead the campaign to victory.

THE united labor candidates emerged with pluralities over the incumbent GOP councilmen in all five districts, although in each case there were at least three men in the running. The five successful nominees were Vernon Lantz, a CIO member; Raymond E. Pease, a locomotive engineer; Ben Goldfarb, a member of the American Veterans Committee; Joseph Edward Smith, a veteran and attorney, and Scott Weakley.

National significance is attached to the primary campaign, which was fought solely on a communist scare basis by the Knowland-Warren machine. The Knowlands' paper, the Oakland Tribune, repeatedly told the voters they were faced with two choices—returning the GOP party hacks to office or handing the city over to the communists.

In reply, the city voters gave a total of 131,239 to the united labor slate.

The platform on which the labor-backed candidates campaigned called for fair treatment of labor disputes, no strike-breaking, honest taxation, low-cost housing and modernization of the present city charter.

Atom Film

"One World or None," a new 16 mm animated drawing film giving a vivid summary of the development of atomic energy and the atom bomb and stressing the need for world control by the United Nations, may now be obtained from the National CIO at a rental price of $1.

Unions wishing to rent this film or others available from the CIO are requested to send two alternative showing dates ten days apart when sending in orders. Pamphlet material, "I'm a Frightened Man!" and "12 Atomic Facts," will be sent with film. Send orders to the Film Division, Dept. of Research and Education, 718 Jackson Pl., Washington, D. C.

ASKS BREAKS FOR VETS

MEYER Bernstein, CIO Veterans Committee representative, this week urged Congress to give ex-servicemen taking on-the-job training an even break.

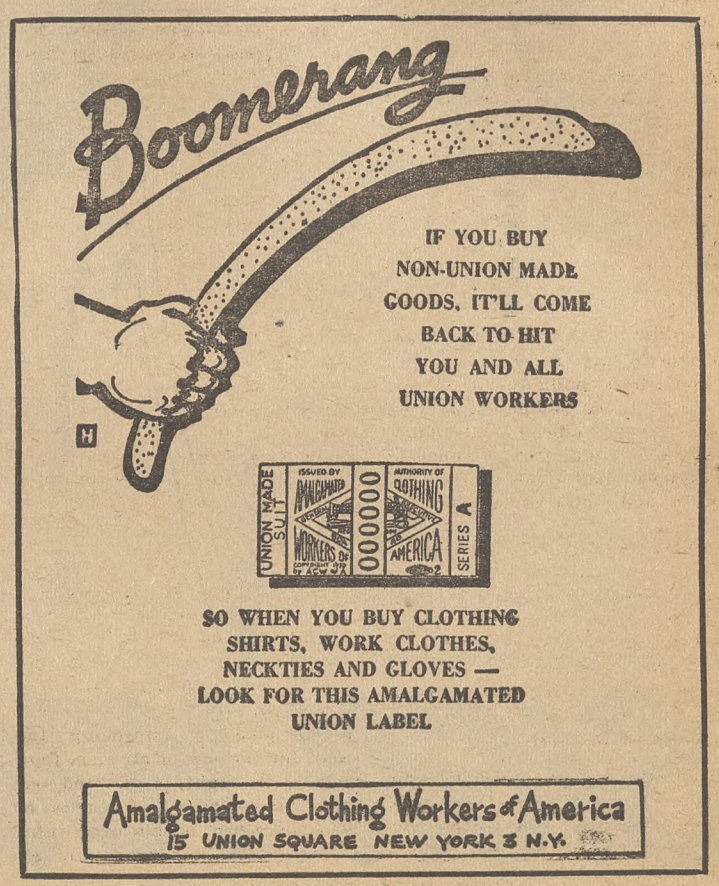
He pointed out that they could do so by signing Discharge Petition No. 4, designed to bring to the floor the bill boosting the maximum monthly ceiling on salary and U. S. benefits for veteran trainees from $200 to $350.

One hundred and thirty-five additional signatures were needed late this week to make the House Rules Committee report out the measure, which received the unanimous approval of the House Veterans Committee.

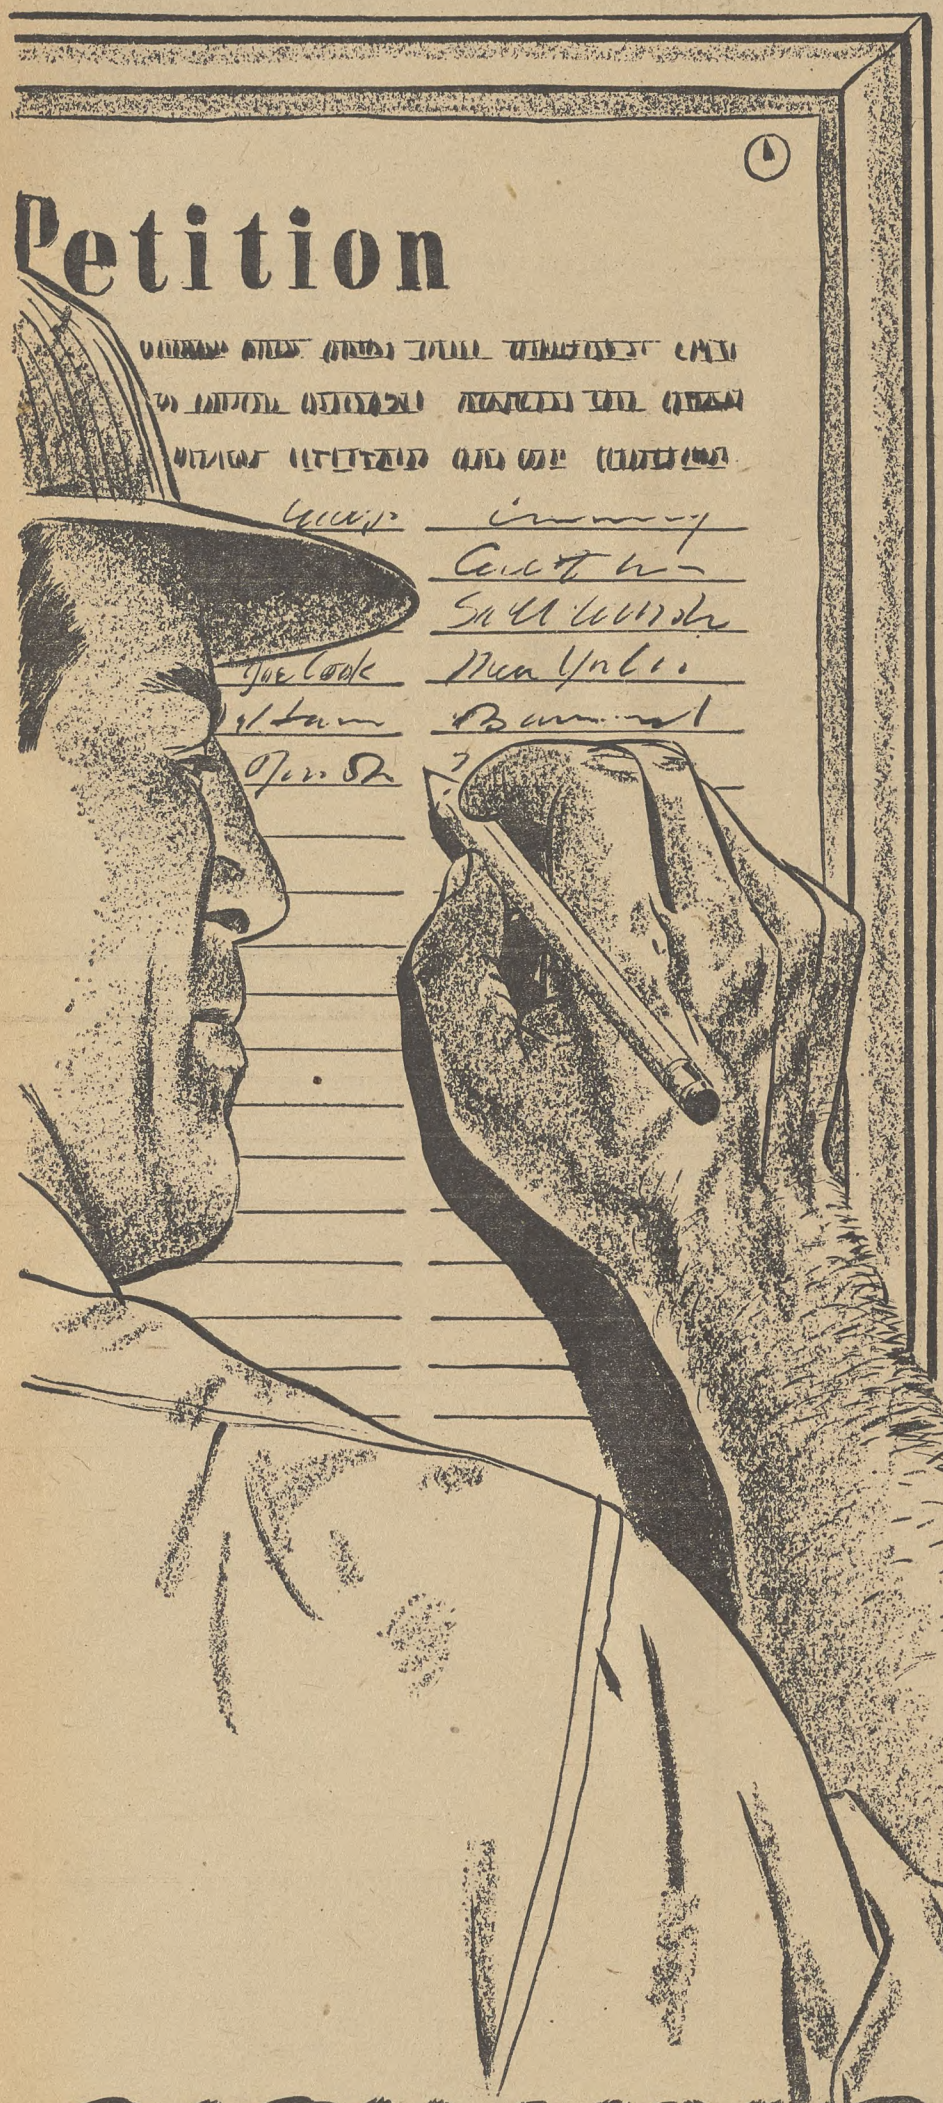
Bernstein said that "the new apprenticeship rate in steel is $1.09 an hour," and that "on a 177 hour months basis this amounts roughly to $193."

Under the law limiting pay to veterans without dependents to $175 and those with dependents to $200, the former will not receive any U. S. benefits and the later will be limited to $7 a month.

Bernstein pointed out that this restriction defeats the purpose of the benefits, which was "to make up the time veterans had lost in the armed services."



SIGNATURES FOR FREEDOM!



THIS is the payoff! The Hartley bill to wreck YOUR union has passed the House. The equally dangerous Taft bill is due to pass the Senate as this is written.

But the fight is not over! The bills can be stopped. This is their time table:

1. After passage by both House and Senate, the bills must go to a committee which will compromise their differences and write one bill.

2. This bill will be submitted to both House and Senate. Quick passage will be certain.

3. The bill then will go to President Truman—for either his signature or his veto.

Right now—today—President Truman needs to hear from you, from your shopmates, from your neighbors, from your grocer and butcher and every other small businessman who's on your side.

That's what the petition on the opposite page is for.

HERE'S how to use it: Just as soon as the Senate has passed the Taft bill (which may have been done before this reaches you) begin circulating this petition.

Use both sides of it. And if you haven't enough space for signatures of a few hundred extra people, simply paste a blank piece of paper on the bottom of the printed page.

Most important, be sure to watch the daily papers so you'll know when President Truman will get the anti-labor bill. Be sure you send him all petitions—Air Mail Special Delivery—so that your protests will be registered in time!

Packing Union Says

REACTION, RECESSION THREATEN AMERICA

WAGE policies for the coming year and a program to combat repressive legislation pending before Congress and state legislatures will highlight the fourth constitutional convention of the CIO Packinghouse Workers. The convention will open May 5 at the Hollenden Hotel, Cleveland.

The union, which had won nation-wide prominence for its fight for price control during the past meat shortages, represents 200,000 workers throughout U. S. and Canada. Some 400 delegates attending the convention will formulate the union's program for the coming year.

"This convention meets at a significant time when the powerful forces of monopolies are at work trying to shackle the American labor movement through restrictive legislation," Pres. Ralph Helstein said.

"Recognizing, as they do, that the American trade union movement presents the major obstacle in their path, the forces of reaction have unleashed their full arsenal of weapons in an attempt to destroy it." Turning to the immediate problem of wages, Helstein commented:

"It is to be remembered the meat packers were among the leaders of the drive to kill OPA. Their organized campaign to withhold livestock last Fall was the final blow against price control.

"We were promised that normal competitive forces would bring prices down once OPA was destroyed.

"That promise has not been kept. What we have instead is a continuation of price rises and only a totally unrealistic plea from our government for voluntary price cuts by American industry.

"Since OPA was destroyed, living costs have risen more than 20% and the government, as yet, has not taken any firm action against unlimited profiteering.

"The present disparity between wages and prices contains the seeds for an economic catastrophe which would exceed any experienced by our nation.

"Now more than ever before the people of America must work together in order to bring economic stability and assure the continuance of our democratic freedoms."

Farmers and Union Charge

CAMPBELL SOUP CO. GAMBLES WITH TOMATO CROP

THE Campbell Soup Company is "deliberately gambling with the farmers' tomato crop" in its refusal to negotiate a contract with the union representing the workers in its plants in Camden, Chicago and Salisbury, Md. That is the opinion of farm and labor union leaders.

A joint statement, issued this week by Waldo McNutt, president of the Eastern Division of the National Farmers Union and Lewis Bentzley, Regional Director of the Food & Tobacco Workers declared:

"The union has been trying to negotiate with the Campbell management since early February. Twenty-seven meetings have been held here and in Chicago. The sole answer of the Campbell's management to every union proposal has been 'no'. Campbell's management has torn up the union contract and has offered nothing in return.

"Now the Campbell Co. has decided to end a 7 year record of peaceful relations. The motive behind this refusal to renew or even continue the contract is plain—Campbell Soup is out to destroy the union and doesn't care what it costs the farmers.

"Farmers who have signed or about to sign agreements with the Campbell Soup Co. to raise tomatoes should know these facts. They should also know that while Campbell's officially agrees to pay them the same price as last year, the cost of raising tomatoes has gone up 15%.

CAREY MAKES AVC 'ALL-AMERICAN'

CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey and 38 other Americans were honored last week by the American Veterans Committee as members of the "AVC All-American Team".

Honored with him, among others, were: Generals Dwight Eisenhower and Omar Bradley, Henry Wallace, Wilson Wyatt, Fiorello LaGuardia and James F. Byrnes.

Hosiery Workers

Celebrate 35th Year

MORE than 200 representatives of 80 local unions of the CIO Hosiery Workers from Massachusetts to California will gather in Durham, N. C., for the 35th annual conveniton on May 5.

Plans will be made to meet the challenge of the enemies of labor and to overcome any attempt to destroy the gains unions have made.

The great record of union democracy of the Hosiery Workers in 35 years of annual conventions is a stirring demonstration against the falsities being peddled about labor unions, Hosiery Workers' leaders pointed out. The union has brought peaceful and progressive labor relations to the industry with a minimum of strikes.

The convention, in keeping with the peaceful history of the union, will consider a proposal to renew its current two-year agreements due to expire August 31, 1947. A substantial 13c an hour increase is included in the new agreements.

Significantly, the convention is being held in Durham, N. C., one of the union's strongholds in the South. It is expected that a strong organizational drive to enroll Southern hosiery workers will be launched. Emphasis will be placed on the need to improve political action and to maintain a continuous campaign in the legislative field.

FUR & LEATHER WIN LONG STRIKE

A 20-month strike against fur factories of Fromm Bros., in New York City and in Merrill, Wis., has been won by the CIO Fur & Leather Workers Union.

The agreement embodies the same terms which now prevail in the New York fur market under the general Furriers Joint Council contract. Only exception is that the Fromm agreement provides for 2-week vacations with pay, instead of one week, for all those employed by the firm one year or more.

The Wisconsin factory, which had been chartered by the AFL during the strike, now passes over to the jurisdiction of the CIO union.

Employers' Group Demands 10c Hour Pay Reduction

EVER hear of an employer in the year 1947 demanding a 10c an hour wage cut for his workers?

That's just what that Distributors Assn. of Northern California asked this week during negotiations with CIO Longshoremen & Warehousemen.

That cut was demanded for employes with less than one year's service. The companies were willing to give only a 5c hourly wage cut to those with less than two years' service, and would maintain the present wages for all other employes.

But that is not all. Other employer demands included the right to hire help from outside union ranks and a $25,000 bond from the union to guarantee observance of the contract not only by ILWU and any of its members.

The union, in effect, said "nuts," and asked for 10c hourly increases, employer-paid health and welfare funds, correction of several classifications of sub-standard wages, and improved health and vacation clauses.

There has been a great response to the call of CIO's Defend Labor Month. Workers are turning out for these meetings in numbers beyond expectations. The writer has addressed meetings in Cleveland, Akron, and also the Pennsylvania State Industrial Union Council convention.

Our people were stunned to learn about the vicious attacks being made upon them in the State Legislatures and Congress, this while profits are soaring higher than ever. Meanwhile, successful collective bargaining is taking place in Steel, Auto, Electrical, Rubber and Textile and others. Hundreds of thousands of workers are involved in these statesmanlike settlements.

Keep up the good fight. Let your Congressman and Senator know promptly how you feel about the anti-labor bills.

SHORT BUT SIGNIFICANT

TWO MORE STATE CIO CONVENTIONS: The Arkansas CIO Council convention will be held in Robinson Memorial Auditorium, Little Rock, June 14-15, and the Ohio CIO Council convention will meet for three days beginning Sept. 18 at the Commodore Perry Hotel, Toledo.

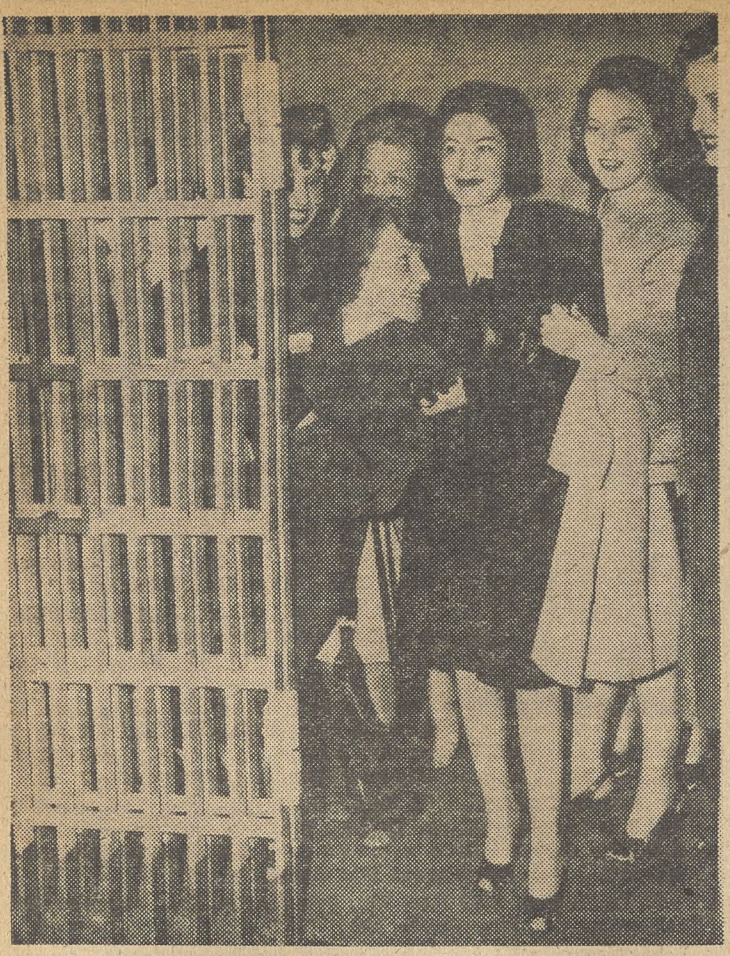
STILL BARGAINING AGENT: Pres. Henry B. Anderson of Local 20, CIO Retail, Wholesale and Department Store Union this week declared that the local is "still the legal bargaining agent" for Montgomery Ward workers in Chicago. The firm had written the local that if it still claimed to represent the workers it would have to "present reasonable evidence" to support its claims.



Jail holds no terror for these pretty pickets arrested by San Francisco police when they swooped down on the 2000-man—and woman—picket line of the CIO American Communications Assn. at the Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Co. building.

Swing It, CIO!

Prospects are bright that you will learn to rhumba from a CIO dancing instructor.

The CIO Office & Professional Workers this week notified the Arthur Murray dancing studios, N. Y. City, that the overwhelming majority of their 350 dancing instructors have designated UOPWA as their collective bargaining agent.

Arthur Murray had threatened his instructors for organizing and declared that he would close his business in New York May 31. Seeing that such coercion did not work, management planned to meet with the union.

Washington Strike Leader Murdered

JAMES E. HARRIS, CIO Cafeteria Workers business agent in Washington, D. C., was murdered in his bed April 28.

He was a founder of the Cafeteria Workers, CIO Public Workers affiliate and the largest union in the nation's capital.

Police have been unable to find his assailant after five days' investigation. They have ruled out robbery as a motive as well as revenge for his activity as leader of the seven-week-old strike at O'Donnell's Restaurants, but have offered no substitute.

His terribly mutilated body was found a few hours after he had returned from early morn-strike duty at O'Donnell's Restaurant.

Has was a former member of the national executive board of the CIO Federal Workers and was vice-president of the Washington, D. C., CIO Council. He was also on the executive boards of the Washington Urban League and the Washington Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

When the strike began at O'Donnell's in a fight against the 38c an hour wage, lowest paid by any restaurant in the city, O'Donnell hired more than 50 scabs, some of them with police records, UPW leaders say.

James E. Harris

These strike-breakers attacked pickets several times in recent weeks.

Look Who Wants

WAGNER ACT CHANGED

NLRB Member Reynolds in an amazing opinion this week called for amending the Wagner Act.

He declared that the "only redress" for workers fired from a closed shop because they wanted to be represented by another union is "legislative action."

That was his opinion in the case of three members of the CIO Amalgamated Clothing Workers fired by Lewis Meier & Co., Indianapolis, at the request of the AFL United Garment Workers, holders of the closed shop contract.

NLRB Chairman Herzog and Board Member Houston, however, thought otherwise and in a majority opinion ordered the firm in no uncertain terms to re-instate the discharged employes.

They said that to allow the company to get by with such firings would mean that an employer and a union "could maintain one labor organization in perpetuity as the bargaining agent of its employes.

Reynolds held that a closed shop contract gave the union the "status of an employer," making it subject to the restraints imposed by the act on any other employer."

Reynolds concluded that it was "necessary to advise those injured by" a closed shop contract "that their only redress lies in legislative action."

LABOR UNITY TALK

October. This proposition was not acceptable to the CIO representatives.

Both sides, however, agreed on the joint statement looking toward labor unity and on a continued fight against anti-labor legislation.

Pres. Murray emphasized that they had "met in a spirit of amity and were seriously attempting to solve these tremendous problems. "As a result of our discussion," he said, "we have a greater appreciation of our mutual interests in the national problems, particularly as they affect labor." Pres. Wm. Green of the AFL expressed similar sentiments.

The AFL committee consisted of Green, Sec.-Treas. George Meany, and Presidents John L. Lewis of the miners, Daniel Tobin of the Teamsters and William Hutcheson of the carpenters.

The CIO group includes Murray, and Presidents Walter Reuther of auto, A. J. Fitzgerald of UE, Emil Rieve of textile, and Jacob Potofsky of clothing.

It was the fourth series of unity talks carried on with the AFL during the 12 years of CIO's existence. The previous meetings, in 1937, 1939 and 1941-43, all ended without agreement on any major problem.

The current sessions grew out of a letter from Pres. Murray to the AFL and the railway unions on Dec. 6, 1946. At that time, the CIO President suggested that the oncoming drive against labor in Congress required united action to preserve union rights. The AFL replied with a suggestion that merger would be the only satisfactory step.

In further correspondence, CIO suggested that fast action on anti-labor issues was the only immediate practicable program for the conferences.

WORKERS' PAY

The CIO Public Workers this week announced that it has again requested members of Congress to sponsor legislation for salary increases for Federal employes. The demand for Federal salary increases was previously raised at the union's international executive board meeting in New York last January.

The union's legislative representative, Donald Murray, stated that a new brief, demonstrating the need for pay raises, has been supplied a representative group of Congressmen with the request that a bill be introduced providing a lump sum annual increase for all Federal workers—both those paid under the Classification Act and postal workers.

UNSETTLED NLRB CASES 33% MORE THAN YEAR AGO

WHILE the Senate appropriations committee this week debated how much money to give the NLRB to carry on its work for the coming year, that agency announced its backlog of unsettled cases had grown to 5,407 in March, 33% over the number pending a year ago.

The CIO continued to be the popular choice of the workers, receiving 19,333 votes in elections held during the month compared to 17,232 for the AFL.

4,000 Join CIO In One Year In Laurel, Miss.

"I KNEW that when the industrial workers of Laurel (Miss.) decided they wanted CIO unions they would have them. This is 'old country' around here and the people are individualists.

"The workers would not let an employer tell them what to do if they did not want to do it and it wasn't right.

"And by the same token, I knew that if they did not want unions, no representative of the CIO could tell them and make them join."

Those were the words of a Laurel citizen who holds a high position in the public life of the city, but wouldn't be quoted.

The workers obviously wanted the CIO to represent them.

"A year ago there was not a member of the CIO in Laurel," said Mississippi State Director R. W. Starnes of the CIO Organizing Committee, who has been spending much of his time directing activities there.

"Today the CIO represents more than 4,000 workers in this city of 30,000 population.

"In the latest election held here by the NLRB at the Mengel Company (sawmill, veneer mill and furniture parts plant) the workers voted 464 to 51 for the CIO Woodworkers. This was about the same overwhelming ratio as in the previous elections.

"THE CIO now represents, in addition to the Mengel employes, those at the huge plant of the Masonite Corp., the Gatlin Lumber Co., Continental Turpentine & Resin Co., Green Lumber Co., Bailey Lumber Co., Laurel Hoe Works, Union Fork & Hoe Co., and the Wells Furniture Co.

"And the outlook for CIO unions in the few remaining unorganized plants is good. In them the workers are forming CIO unions and NLRB elections are expected in the near future.

"The outlook is bright in other ways. A huge new natural gas field has been opened up a few miles east of Laurel and this, together with markedly peaceful industrial relations, is expected to attract many new industries to the area.

"The Masonite Corp. is reported as already planning large new additions to its plant."

RELATIONS between the local CIO unions and the city officials, ministers and the general community are good. This is due, at least in part, to the fact that respected local men have been elected union officers.

J. E. Dicey, business manager of Woodworkers Local 443, which has a membership of some 2,800, is a deacon in the Beacon Baptist Church. Because of the press of business, Dicey recently had to give up the leadership of a Boy Scout troop.

A. D. Posey, president of Local 443, is manager of the Masonite softball team, an ex-serviceman who is well known in this area as a basketball player.

We, as representatives of our respective organizations, have arrived at these preliminary joint understandings not only for the defense of labor's rights, but in the interest of our nation and our democratic institutions.

It is our firm belief that if America's political leaders will give heed to the wishes of all Americans, Congress will turn its attention to a program for preserving productive prosperity and strengthening American freedom. Political freedom and economic opportunity for all should be our goal.

If America is to maintain its position as the world's leading democracy, Congress must repudiate the Taft-Hartley program which threatens to enslave the working men and women of America. By rejecting such a dangerous experiment with totalitarian controls, Congress can clear the decks for a new unity in America, to squal and exceed our wartime achievements by expanding production in a peaceful world.

Labor-USA Program Shows:

WOMEN DON'T LIKE SEX DISCRIMINATION LAWS

A FLOOD of favorable comments from all across the country poured into the National CIO office in response to the Labor-USA radio program urging support for the new Women's Bill now pending in Congress. (Congressmen and Senators, please note.)

The great pile of cards and letters gave a significant sampling of opinion among the Nation's women—and quite a few men—showing almost 100% approval of the Women's Status Bill, which has strong CIO support.

On the program, Helen Blanchard, organization director for the CIO Women's Auxiliaries, said the Women's Status Bill is unlike the older Equal Rights Amendment opposed by the CIO. The new bill aims to remove legal and other types of discrimination against women without destroying minimum wage and other labor laws which protect women in industry.

The communications expressing support for the Women's Bill came from such widely scattered places as Pasadena and Richmond, Calif.; Denver, Colo.; Youngstown, Ohio; Fort Wayne, Ind.; Detroit, Mich.; Nelson, Nebr.; Bois D'Arc, Mo.; Hawthorne, N. J.; Woodstock, Syracuse and Brooklyn, N. Y.; Woodside, L. I.; Baltimore, Md.; Winston-Salem, N. C., etc.

HERE are some excerpts from the letters:

From Nelson, Nebr. — "Please count me a supporter of the bill . . . hope you received thousands of inquiries; invite people to write regularly. A lot can be done in the next three months."

From Denver, Colo.—"This is to register my approval of the bill for equal status for women." Another from Denver said: "I was somewhat surprised to learn that some of our states are still in the 'horse and buggy' stage as regards the status of women . . . God speed the day when we grow more intelligent and understand better the meaning of liberty and freedom."

From Bois D'Arc, Mo.—"I am interested in the passage of the legislation discussed in your program . . ."

From Woodside, L. I.—"I listened to your very interesting program . . . I am writing to let you know I am in favor of the bill."

From Woodstock, N. Y.—"We are in favor of the new proposed law . . . and thanks for your good radio programs."

From a man in Brooklyn, N. Y.—"I wish to express my greatest support of the measure . . . Such a bill is long, long overdue in the U. S., and I hope that the CIO may in some way exert its influence to force through a passage."

From Richmond, Calif.—"I am writing to add my support to the bill."

From Pasadena, Calif. — "The point of particular interest to me was the enumeration of the number of states still imposing limitations on legal rights of women. For example, in 16 states women cannot sign a legal document without their husbands' consent."

From a man in Youngstown, Ohio—"I am in favor of the bill . . . Why not? Women who proved themselves in our last war owe us nothing. Indeed we owe them the rights of an undiscriminated minority."

LEARNING TO SHOP EARLY

Children develop taste and judgment just as they do body muscles—through repeated use. From three on, they often know what they want to wear. At six clothes are apt to be important in their lives. If their gang is wearing sturdy, practical clothes, that's what they will select. If the others have party clothes, they'll "need" some too. Respect their color likes and dislikes. From earliest years, help them learn to spend and select wisely. (Monkmeyer photo.)

Sprucing Up

YOUNG AS YOU FEEL

By HANNA SHERMAN

OLDER women who are alert to the world around them and have a modern progressive point of view are often younger in spirit than some staid and settled 20-year-olds. There is no reason why the older woman should not match her high spirits and maturity of mind with an appearance equally as pleasing.

It is very wrong for the woman who is past the fifty mark to feel that she is too old for the flattery that the right clothes, make-up, hair-do and grooming can give her. Any woman is bound to miss a lot of the fun in life if she stops thinking of herself as an attractive human being and lets herself look older than she should. And this does not mean that we recommend clothes and make-up designed for the very young.

First of all, even though you have never used make-up or cut your hair, I would suggest that you begin to do these things now. Wear your gray hair in a soft becoming style close to your head, parted on the side, either swirled in back or with a row of curls. Try curls rolled back from the face in front. They are usually very flattering because bringing the hair up on the sides of the face gives a young uplifting look to all the features.

A little observation will prove to you that parting the hair in the middle and drawing it down on either side of the face definitely adds years. You'll also find that severely shingled locks are very masculine looking and too old-fashioned for you.

YOU'LL discover too, that with your hair cut short your hats become much less of a problem. To give your hair character try a blue or a violet rinse. Ordinary laundry bluing will do. A little in the final rinse when you shampoo your hair is all you need. Good grooming will do so much for your morale and appearance and a neat, pretty head contributes much to that look.

Make-up, if subtly applied, is your greatest ally. Use very little rouge and no matter how light your skin, use a fairly dark shade of powder with pink tones in it. Don't tweeze your eyebrows to a pencil line but do pluck those straggling hairs. If your brows seem light looking, pencilling them slightly will give accent to the features. Shaggy brows can be kept neat looking with a little soap applied with moist fingertips.

Experiment with eye shadow, too. Discreetly used, it will give that dark luminous look to the eyelids. Or try a touch of vaseline for the same effect.

By all means use lipstick. But choose a light color—pink tones here, too—and make your lips up full. It is better not to use lip rouge at all than to smear it on inside the natural line and then rub it off.

AS for your clothes, wear simple tailored costumes such as dress and jacket, or dress and coat ensembles. Make sure that your clothes fit you properly, have them adjusted for neat hemlines, good fit across the back, waistlines that really fit. Your skirts should be in the current length, remembering that they're growing longer. Wear pretty, feminine hats.

HAPPY ENDINGS

By GEORGE WEISSMAN

HOLLYWOOD is probably the closest thing to heaven on earth—at least as far as its celluloid products go. In 99 out of 100 pictures turned off the assembly lines, a happy ending is tagged on to the streamlined model. And in the 100th, Bette Davis or Joan Crawford usually makes the noble sacrifice by walking into the ocean.

A typical case in point is where a major studio plunked down $275,000 worth of the green stuff for J. P. Marquand's "THE LATE GEORGE APLEY," which had tremendous success as a book and later as a play.

The original was a biting satire on Back Bay Boston's stodginess and almost fanatical adherence to tradition. The late George was a snob, an iron-handed ruler of his family and an old autocrat who thought "social disease" meant a break with tradition.

The picture version has changed all this. Everything is sweetness and light in the Apley clan. The old man, Ronald Coleman, isn't so bad—he merely is a little fuzzy with age-old tradition. And the son, who in the book meets the unhappy fate of marrying his upper-class cousin, triumphs on the screen by marrying into the family of a Worcester tradesman. The charming daughter, Peggy Cummings, even manages to wangle final approval of her splicing the knot with an alien from Yale, New York and all points outside the close-knit Boston circle ruled by Apley.

The picture is good comedy and family entertainment. It could have been better if the barbs were left in and the knife-edges kept sharp. As it is, Coleman is a pleasant polished Boston Brahmin, while Edna Best is excellent as the dutiful wife.

THE "heaven on earth" attitude is also evident in "THE FARMER'S DAUGHTER", a sparkling comedy now making the rounds of the nation's screens. Instead of a traveling salesman trying to live up to the film's misleading title, there are only congressmen, politicians and the swell performances of Loretta Young and Joseph Cotten.

And any resemblance to any living congressmen—with some notable and too few exceptions—is in Hollywood's own phrase, purely coincidental. "The Farmer's Daughter" is a healthy, breezy, humorous lesson in democracy with Miss Young winning a seat on Capitol Hill and a husband in one election.

Intent on being a nurse, Swedish-accented Loretta Young leaves her Minnesota farm for the big city. Losing the money she had carefully saved for this education, she takes a domestic job in the household of Congressman Cotten and his dry, sharp-witted mother, Ethel Barrymore.

When the political machine puts up a hack for Congress, Loretta finds herself embroiled in the campaign—as the opposition candidate. She trades her pots and pans for a soapbox and with some swift jabs at the politicians running the nation wins the election. "The Farmer's Daughter" is as healthy as the Democratic Farmer-Labor Party in Minnesota—and delightful as good happy comedy. If it were only true today in every state!

ANOTHER healthy slug for democracy was recently tossed by Frankie Sinatra when he put the cooler on a Hearst columnist who allegedly made some slurring references to the ancestry of the bobby-soxers' idol. This one-two against intolerance took place in Hollywood, not in "IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN," Sinatra's latest film.

Both are pleasant items to report. The picture is an old-routine musical comedy story, enlivened by some happy performances and sparkling numbers.

Take Sinatra in the casual charming role of a returned vet anxious to become a crooner; Jimmy Durante as the janitor of a Brooklyn school who gives Frankie a room; Kathryn Grayson a lyrical music-teacher with an eye towards the opera stage, and good-looking Peter Lawford as an Englishman learning Brooklynese—and you can't miss. Especially when Durante, ably abetted by Sinatra, runs wild on the screen with his mad-hat gags and rasping voice.

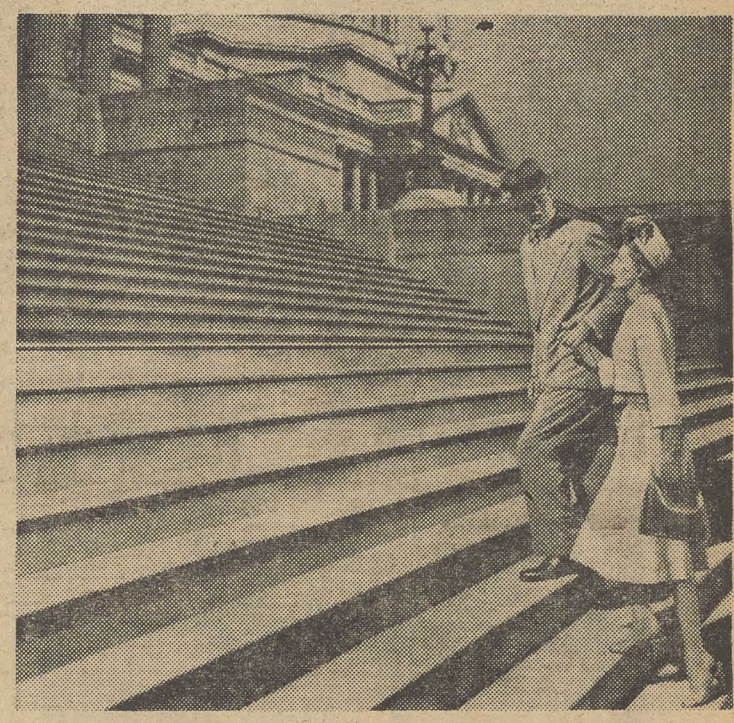
Sinatra turns in an excellent comic performance as well as singing in a number of languages—all native to Brooklyn. Durante who has his schnozzola in everybody's business manages to set the cast on the path to fame, success and love.

Brooklyn may be a much maligned borough—but this picture makes up for a lot of the abuse the home of "dem bums" has taken.

ALSO in a light vein and just as funny is the latest Bob Hope-Dorothy Lamour parody on crime thrillers, "MY FAVORITE BRUNETTE." For an hour and a half, Hope manages to talk tough out of the side of his mouth and act like a version of one of Raymond Chandler's heroes. Knives hurled by Peter Lorre and the goon-like antics of Lon Chaney fail to stop the Hope gags. Sometimes one wonder whether he uses a script.

The picture opens with Hope awaiting execution and telling his story to reporters gathered in the death cell at San Quentin. He relates how, as a baby photographer, he was taking care of the offices of his next-door neighbor, Sam McLeod, the hot shot "private eye." In walks this slinky, South American beauty, Lamour, and thinking he is McLeod, asks him to locate her kidnaped uncle. Always plagued by a secret ambition to act like Alan Ladd, Hope accepts the assignment.

A map of a uranium mine (what else?) is involved and the chase leads our hero to a nut-house where he finds himself perfectly at home with a golfer who makes par by playing without a ball. Hope rescues Lamour, loses the Uncle, finds himself accused of murder and about to die, when——— Lamour digs up the evidence that clears him. The only person disappointed at the eleventh hour reprieve is the executioner—you guessed it, Bing Crosby.



Joseph Cotton, who plays the role of Congressman Morley, leads successful candidate, Loretta Young, up the steps of the Capitol. Scene is from "The Farmer's Daughter," the story in which Loretta comes off a Minnesota farm to beat the political machine and deliver a lesson in democracy.

TALK of Alan Ladd brings up the unpleasant topic of "CALCUTTA," his latest slug-'em, beat-'em straight-faced performance—wrapped up in a turban for good measure. The dialogue as woodenly spoken by Gale Russell could easily lead this to fall in the same class with "My Favorite Brunette." But they mean it seriously—and so it is a "thriller" with apologies.

Before it gets too far in the theatres, I hope the movie-makers see fit to cut out an offensive scene where Ladd brutally slaps his girl friend around. No one is trying to be a chivalrous knight in white armor, but such scenes leave a bad taste and don't come under the heading of good sense or good entertainment. The American people are not sadists who have to be treated to scenes of sheer slug-happiness.

Incidentally, William Bendix does a neat job as Ladd's sidekick. And a cigar - smoking blowsy blonde would make a wonderful partner in some future film with Sidney Greenstreet. And as for "Calcutta," it should have been left on the shelf where it reportedly has been resting this past year and a half.

ANY attempt to compare "SMASH-UP" with "The Lost Week-End" point by point will wind up with a loss for the former. Such comparisons, while inevitable, because both pictures deal with alcoholism, are unfair.

"Smash-Up" considered by itself is a good picture. It is well-acted, well-directed and has inherent values that will satisfy the average audience. Whatever fault can be found will be with those who see it and can't resist the child-like urge to laugh when they see a dipsomaniac hit the bottle too hard. Perhaps if enough "Smash-Ups" are served up, the public will realize that alcoholism is an illness, not a joke.

House Passes:

'SWISS CHEESE' RENT BILL

THE HOUSE of Representatives, content to shadowbox with the spectre of inflation, gave its approval May 1 to a "swiss-cheese" version of a rent control bill.

Sponsored by Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.), one of the group which led the fight to kill OPA a year ago, the bill contains a batch of loopholes to make enforcement of a "hold-the-line" rent control program impossible.

Included in the bill is a favorite proposal of the powerful Natl. Assn. of Real Estate Boards—permission for landlords to up rents 15% and be free from further controls if they sign a one-year lease with their tenants.

Final passage was on a 204-182 vote, with supporters of real rent control solidly opposed to the bill.

Earlier in the day the House had snowed under a proposal by Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas (D. Calif.) that controls be continued on an "as is" basis until June 30, 1948. The suggested amendment of the California Congresswoman was buried in a 195-52 vote.

Also voted down was an amendment offered by Rep. Javits (R. N. Y.) to forbid evictions for a six-month period if the tenant is unable to find a place in which to move; and a suggestion by Rep. Hardy (D. Va.) that the 15% "voluntary" increase in rents be barred on housing projects constructed by the government during the war.

AS finally passed and sent to the Senate, the bill would extend rent controls at their present national levels until Dec. 31, with a proviso that Pres. Truman can extend the lid on rents for an additional three months, until March 31, 1948.

State, county and city authorities, however, were given a green light to remove controls before the end of 1947 if they feel inclined to do so.

At the same time, the bill deals a crippling blow to many phases of the veterans housing program by repealing sections of the Patman Act which provide for allocation of materials on a priority basis to homes constructed for war vets.

EARLIER, Chairman R. J. Thomas of the CIO Housing Committee had voiced strong opposition to the 15% voluntary rent increase feature of the bill, which was inserted during the Banking Committee's study of the measure by Rep. Fletcher (R. Calif).

The Fletcher amendment, Thomas said, "is the real estate lobby proposal publicly advocated by them for months. It will lead to complete destruction of rent control."

Dam Funny—But Not For The Republicans

WHY BE PIKERS? That question was put last week to GOP Senators busy repealing the acts of the late Pres. Roosevelt in favor of ex-Pres. Herbert Hoover, by liberal Sen. Glenn Taylor (D. Ida.), one of labor's staunchest friends in the upper house.

Taylor taunted the Senate Republican majority for changing the name of Boulder Dam to Hoover Dam, and threw in a few additional suggestions just to make Republicans with long memories a little unhappy.

"I have no objection to honoring former Pres. Hoover, but I think we could find a more appropriate monument to him than a dam, in view of the fact that he was not, to put it mildly, outstanding as a supporter of public power," the Idaho senator commented.

Some Taylor suggestions to the GOP:

- That the dam be decorated with a "large H superimposed upon a shiny apple. The apple will remind us of the numerous apple sellers who lined the streets during Mr. Hoover's administration and who served so well to illustrate the solution of the great engineer and economic wizard to the unemployment problem of his day."

- That on the dam there be inscribed one of Hoover's famous statements: "For the federal government deliberately to go out and build up . . . a power and manufacturing business . . . is destruction of equality of opportunity amongst our people; it is the negation of the ideals upon which our civilzation has been based."

WASHINGTON ROUNDUP

First Anti-Labor Bill

Pres. Truman will find on his desk this week the first anti-labor bill to be passed by the 80th Congress—the Wiley-Gwynne Act to amend the nine-year-old Wage-Hour law.

The measure moved rapidly through Senate and House for a second vote after a joint conference committee brought out a new bill reconciling differences between the two versions passed several weeks ago.

As approved by Congress, the bill cuts to two years the time in which a worker can sue for back pay and damages under the Wage-Hour law. It gives a wide escape door to employers, who can argue under the proposed law that they violated wage-hour regulations in good faith.

CIO witnesses appearing before Congress pointed out that in effect this will give almost every employer an opportunity to escape any penalty for evading the law.

Sen. McGrath (D. R. I.), a dissenting member of the conference committee, called the bill a "backward step" and predicted there was "grave danger of doing harm" to not only the Wage-Hour laws but other statutes written to protect workers from low-wage chiselers.

The bill was sold to the public and to Congress as a measure aimed at banning the rash of portal-portal suits filed throughout the winter and spring. But a similar bill was passed in the House in the summer of 1946 before the portal question had reached the headlines.

The bill to wreck the Wage-Hour Law must be defeated. Write—there isn't time to write — President Truman today urging him to veto it!

Sitdown Strike

The House Banking & Currency Committee, which has sat inactive on a long-range housing bill to aid low income families, was advised last week to get on the ball.

Rep. Jacob Javits (R. N. Y.), sponsor of a House version of the Taft-Wagner-Ellender Bill, described the proposed law as "the real hope of a solution" for one of the nation's most pressing problems.

"A whole year of the big push in housing has been lost because the last Congress failed to take action on permanent housing legislation," Javits wrote to Banking Committee Chairman Wolcott (R. Mich.). He said there is "ample time to get action" if the committee starts hearings at once.

The House Banking Committee has been operating a sitdown strike against the bill, which provides for government support and loans to spur the creation of big low-rent housing developments and slum-clearance projects during the next few years. The T-W-E bill was passed last year in the Senate, but was similarly pigeonholed in the House.

Two weeks a similar bill squeaked through the Senate Banking Committee with a 7-6 vote of approval.

School Lunch Aid

A strong request for an increase in federal funds to support the school lunch program throughout the country was sent last week to Chairman John Taber (R. N.Y.), economy-minded head of the House Appropriations committee, by Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald of the CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers.

The UE head suggested that the program for the fiscal year beginning July 1 should be jumped from 75 to 125 million dollars both in order to offset higher food prices and to extend the entire program.

Some seven million children in 45,000 schools now benefit from the lunch program, Fitzgerald said, but there are additional millions of pupils who "urgently need its protection."

Not only would the program help the children, Taber was told, but the enlarged program would help stabilize farmers' markets for food products.

10,000 AGAINST REPRESSION

BACK TO '27 WITH C. of C.

THE U. S. Chamber of Commerce, which recently held its 35th convention in a fancy headquarters building in Washington, has banished the cares and worries of the New Deal years. In fact, the Chamber talked more 1927 talk than has been heard in the Capital for many a month.

With heads soberly turned backward for a final glimpse of the free enterprise conditions that led to the 1929 crash, the Chamber hoped fervently that the ideas of 15 New Deal years' duration would vanish from the public mind.

Pres. Truman's appeal to businessmen to reduce prices was obviously The Most Unpopular Idea in Its Class. The Chamber's resolution on the subject agreed that there was an opportunity to apply the formula of more goods at lower prices but it could only be applied if everyone joined in, not just businessmen. The businessmen themselves would cut prices "where and when business costs permit."

But, the Chamber hastened to add, wage boosts (and by the same reasoning, price reductions) "cannot be taken out of profits, because profits are too small."

Everyone took his turn swatting at the Truman proposal. William S. Street, chairman of the Chamber's Committee on Economic Policy, asked with a smirk, "Is the President's suggestion that in order to avoid a recession now, all we have to do is to raise wages moderately and reduce prices generally, an adequate solution to this problem?"

The Chamber quickly talked itself into believing that Truman has talked us right into a recession.

Earl O. Shreve, new president of the organization, recognized a good line when he heard it. He picked up Street's theme in his first statement after his election:

"Talk alone will not bring prices down. Nor will the American people be fooled by attempt to make businessmen scapegoats and to blame business alone for the wage price spiral."

THE CHAMBER zipped through its list of resolutions, including one on labor policy which paralleled the Hartley bill on every point, with admirable precision and unanimity.

In a speech beating the devil out of the Wagner-Ellender-Taft housing bill, Norman P. Mason, president of the Natl. Retail Lumber Dealers Assn., took time out to explain why residential building starts have fallen off so badly in the first three months of this year. To the Chamber, it's the result of alleged Government propaganda on the line of: "Don't build now—Don't take essential building materials away from the veteran—costs of building are too high."

People who can afford to build have been talked out of it, the Chamber solemnly decided.

"Thoughtful people in our industry," Mason wondered out loud, "are beginning to ask to what extent this propaganda may have emanated from sources interested in overturning the established living habits of the American public.

"It has frequently been said that persons with foreign ideologies have gazed longingly at the control of our housing as the first step in controlling the economy of our nation.

"Can it be that they have hoped, through hamstringing the private building industry in its efforts to provide housing, to produce a crisis giving them an apportunity to gain this control with a program of publicly built and operated housing?"

It could be—but it's pretty doubtful!

A DOLLAR FOR PAC TO HELP HIT BACK!

GOT an anti-labor Congressman, up for re-election in 1948? Then get aboard the band wagon, brothers and sisters—here's the ticket to his political funeral!

Take it from the CIO Political Action Committee—your dollars will do the job. And PAC needs plenty of them, in its 1947 voluntary contribution campaign to change the complexion of the U. S. Congress.

The drive starts June 15, according to PAC's Executive Board, and will run to October 15 under the banner warning: "'48 Is Coming!"

"FUNDS collected in this campaign will be devoted to building and strengthening local PAC organizations throughout the nation to fight back against anti-labor congressmen who are seeking to eliminate American unions from the American scene," PAC Director Jack Kroll said in Washington.

"The task of strengthening existing PACs or building groups where none now exist for 1948 must begin immediately," Kroll continued. "We must begin now, today, to establish ward and neighborhood organizations and to develop PAC structures along congressional district lines.

"The CIO Executive Board clearly recognized this pressing need when it called for a strengthening of the CIO Political Action Committee and an immediate start of a 1947 voluntary contribution campaign.

"It is an established political fact that if CIO's political organization is to succeed, it must have the necessary finances. There is no alternative.

"AS IN past campaigns," Kroll stated, "the chief responsibility for the drive will rest in the hands of CIO's international unions. It will be their task to bring to their membership the imperative need of building PAC on a local level. Half of each dollar collected will be forwarded to the National PAC office and the other half will be divided locally.

"While international unions have the main responsibility to collect the voluntary contributions, all of the departments of CIO will be urged to cooperate. Requests to state, county and city PACs to act as a liaison with local unions in their respective areas have been already dispatched, and the full assistance of CIO Regional Directors is anticipated."

Kroll said a full-scale publicity campaign will spark the campaign.

A meeting of all labor editors with members of the PAC Executive Board will be held in Washington on May 15 to discuss means of stimulating membership interest in the campaign.

Demos Take Balto. Negro Wins In N.C.

Two signficant victories were won by liberal politicians last week. In Baltimore, Rep. Thomas D'Alesandro led a Democratic sweep to win the majoralty. In Winston Salem, N. C., the Rev. Kenneth R. Williams was elected as a city councilman—the first Negro to win the post since Reconstruction days.

FATE OF RENT UP TO SENATE

THE last line of defense for national rent control rests in the U. S. Senate.

With a weasel-worded measure passed by the House more than a fortnight ago, the Senate will soon consider the wishy-washy Buck Bill (S. 1017). Like its House companion measure, it offers little protection for hard-pressed tenants.

To add starch to the campaign for real rent control, Senators Wagner (D. N.Y.) and Taylor (D. Ida.) last week issued a forthright statement criticizing the Buck Bill and calling for passage instead of the Wagner-Murray measure (S. 538). The Wagner-Murray bill would extend controls on an "as is" basis until June 30, 1948.

The Buck bill, already approved by the Senate Banking Committee, would run only until the end of 1947. It also contains a variety of provisions permitting the lifting of controls on a regional basis.

Never Missed 'Til They're Gone!

Rent controls were lifted last week on the eastern shore of Maryland, a non-industrial area. Local rent control offices at Salisbury reported a flood of protests against rent increases. A Republican state legislator announced he would seek immediate federal action to place the area under rent control once again.

CONGRESSIONAL delay in acting upon extensions of rent controls has brought about a dangerous situation, the two liberal Senators warned. "There is grave danger that by the time a workable rent control law is enacted and its administration established in new hands, the existing administrative machinery may be crippled beyond repair," they said.

Equally bad is the fact that the Buck Bill permits only an 8-month extension of remaining controls, so that the rent problem will come to the fore in the middle of next winter.

Two major economic facts justify "as is" extension along the lines of the Wagner-Murray bill, the senators pointed out: (1) the general economic position of property owners has remained "favorable"; and (2) the "rise in the cost of living has far outstripped the purchasing power of the average American."

The House Bill, sponsored by OPA-hating Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R. Mich.), offers even less protection to tenants than the Senate version, since it paves the way for 15% rent increases and complete lifting of controls in any case where a landlord and tenant sign two-year leases.

The Wolcott Bill, while preserving the theory of rent control, also cuts out the last remaining sections of the Patman veterans housing act.

FIGHT PLAN TO KILL HOUSING BILL

SUPPORTERS of the Taft-Wagner-Ellender housing bill are bitterly fighting attempts to pigeonhole it. The bill would throw government support behind a long-range home building program for low-income families.

This week the Senate Banking and Currency Committee okayed the proposal (S. 866) by a 7-6 vote. But Sen. Taft (R., O.) dropped the bill from a listing of GOP "must" legislation. The matter was due for consideration by the Republicans' powerful Senate steering committee.

In a wire to Taft, who is both the GOP leader in the Senate and sponsor of the bill, CIO Housing Committee Chairman R. J. Thomas voiced strong demands for action to move the bill onto the calendar for debate and vote.

Even greater obstacles face supporters of the bill in the House, where it was introduced by Rep. Jacob Javits (R., N. Y.). Rep. Jesse Wolcott (R., Mich.), one of the prime attackers of OPA at the last session of Congress, has refused to bring the bill up for study in the House Banking Committee, which he heads.

Attempting to force action by the committee, CIO and 18 other organizations — labor, housing, civic, religious, educational — wrote Wolcott that the "greatest sin against the greatest number of families today" is the attempt of the House leadership to delay consideration of the housing bill.

Senators Warn:

DON'T TURN BACK THE CLOCK!

SENATORS fighting the anti-labor provisions of the Taft bill laid down powerful arguments during debate on the measure. Some highlights from the debate:

SEN. HARLEY KILGORE (D. W. Va.): "It is indeed tragic that an organization as wealthy and as powerful as the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers should be working day and night to promote industrial strife instead of industrial peace . . .

"I hate to think of what the political and economic consequences will be if the NAM is successful in its battle to turn back the clock to the days when a few powerful industrialists played with the lives of workmen as if they were so many pawns on a chess table."

SEN. THEODORE GREEN (D. R. I.): "This bill, instead of being a mild measure to curb certain abuses, is a harsh measure cleverly and carefully designed to kill labor organizations—not directly by outright prohibition or repeal, but indirectly by the use of certain devices which, while they may be legal, are nevertheless deadly . . .

"This legislation treats labor as a gigantic and inveterate culprit. No responsibility is attributed to those industrialists or big corporations who have flouted governmental recommendations and have forced the country to endure costly and needless strikes."

SEN. BRIEN MCMAHON (D.-Conn.) "It is up to our citizenry who have knowledge of violations by labor leaders or by union leaders of either state or national laws to go to the district attorney and make their complaints.

"The talk about racketeering in labor is usually indulged in by people who express their opinions in the newspapers and other public forums, instead of calling the matter to the attention of the district attorney."

SEN. CLAUDE PEPPER (D.-Fla.): "I is my opinion that the welfare fund [based upon collections from employer and/or employees] is as justifiable a levy upon a commodity as are payments under the workmen's compensation law . . ."

"This amendment (outlawing union-controlled welfare funds) is designed to carry out the policy of the other amendments, to shake the confidence of the workers in their own leadership, to break down discipline in labor organizations, to impair the collective bargaining power of labor's representatives, and to weaken labor in its effort to live."

SEN. OLIN D. JOHNSTON (D. S. C.,); "I again warn the members of this body of the unjust amendments of this omnibus labor bill, so-called, and that it is utter folly to attempt to secure industrial peace through the enactment of such vindictive legislation."

TAFT BILL TOUGH; PASSAGE SEEN

Have you written or wired your protest against the anti-labor bill? If not, do it NOW. Ask your representatives and Senators to vote against the Conference Anti-Labor Bill, coming up shortly. And write or wire to Pres. Truman to veto any and all anti-labor bills, DO IT TODAY!

THE Senate has been upset only once in a plan to make the Taft anti-labor bill a dead ringer for the House-passed Hartley bill. Passage of the Taft bill by a substantial margin is expected when the vote comes during the first half of this week.

The one stumbling block to the program of Sen. Robert Taft (R. O.) was a 43-44 vote to reject an amendment outlawing industry-wide bargaining. The Hartley bill already contains such a ban.

On other points of his amendment program, designed to toughen the bill reported out by the Senate Labor Committee, Taft had greater success.

An open invitation to employers to tie up unions with charges of "coercion" or "restraint" in gaining members was passed by a 60-27 vote. A second amendment, outlawing union-controlled health and welfare funds and permitting the checkoff of dues only when authorized by each individual union member, passed by a thinner, 48-40, margin.

The final section of the Taft "toughen-up" program—an amendment to permit the filing of damage suits by employers in federal court in cases of jurisdictional strikes and secondary boycott—was voted on May 9. The vote was 65 to 26 in favor of its passage. A proposal by Sen. Ball (R. Minn.) to permit employers to get injunctions in cases of jurisdictional strikes or secondory boycotts was defeated earlier 28 to 62.

TAFT'S defeat on the industry-wide bargaining ban came from two groups: the Senators who are against any crippling restrictions on unions; and those Senators—mostly Republicans—who wish a bill just "mild" enough to convince Pres. Truman that it should not be vetoed.

In the midst of some sharp debate, Sen. Ives (R. N.Y.) and Morse (R. Ore.) argued that passage of the amendments would spoil all chances of getting the bill enacted into law at this time.

THE Senate bill will go to conference committee after passage. The conference committee will have to smooth out differences between the Hartley measure adopted in the House and the Taft bill as it finally comes out of the Senate.

The effect of popular pressure against the "kill-unions" attitude of many of the legislators was clearly seen in the debate and vote on the industry-wide bargaining amendment. Into the record went messages of protest from employer groups in manufacturing and retailing trades, which said that long-established and effective bargaining practices would be smashed, with chaos taking the place of present stable relations.

Throughout the country, meanwhile, vigorous protests came from liberal and labor groups demanding that the proposed law be junked.

Some 430 members of Local 65, Retail & Wholesale Employes, visited the Capital, saw New York Congressmen and urged Senator Taft to drop the bills on the basis that he had no mandate from the public for such action. A group of 200 Office & Professional Workers disputed with Congressmen the argument that only "labor leaders" oppose the bill.

The Office Union has charged that passage of the bill will bar the right of collective bargaining to thousands of technical and scientific workers.

In the south, meanwhile, textile mill owners are already taking a cue from the bills and refusing to bargain with their employers, the CIO Textile Union reported. A union study of 30 mills where NLRB elections have ended in CIO victories, showed increasing delay and stalling tactics, the Textile Workers Union said.

AS it now stands, the Taft bill goes far beyond the provisions of the Case Bill which the President vetoed last summer. In the conference committee sessions, spokesmen for the House will probably ask for insertion of many of the even stiffer sections of the Hartley bill.

Thus, it is expected that the final "compromise" bill which will be submitted for passage by House and Senate later this month will be more severe than the Taft bill itself.

To overthrow a Presidential veto, anti-labor groups would need a two-thirds vote in both House and Senate. The Senate votes have indicated a nip-and-tuck contest between the two blocs.

BOX SCORE ON ANTI-LABOR BILLS

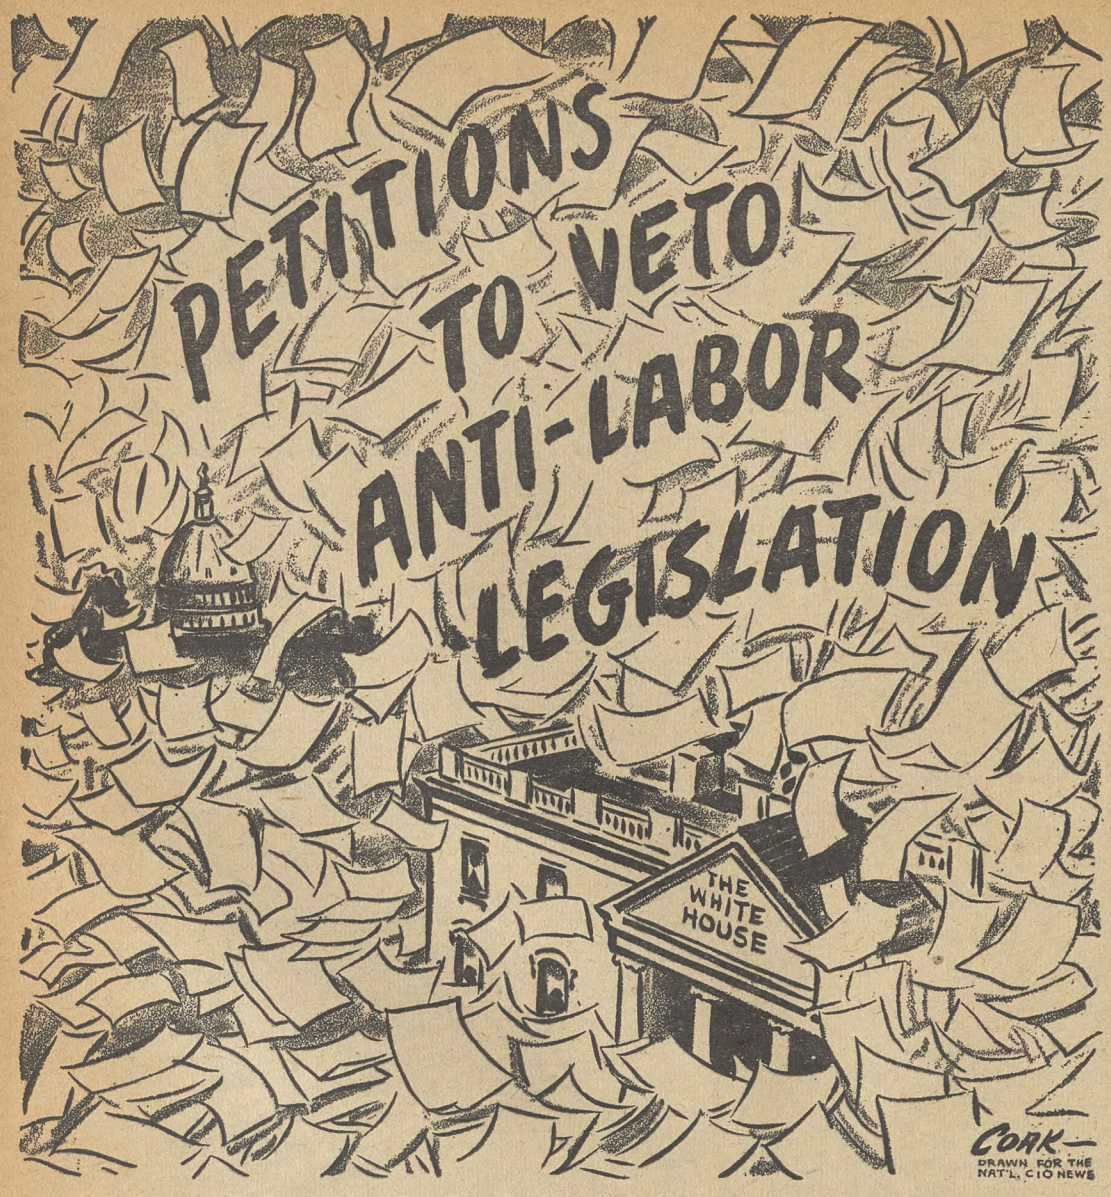
Taft bill near passage in Senate. Three "toughening" amendments adopted, but ban on industry-wide bargaining defeated by one-vote margin.

Hartley bill passed House two weeks ago.

Conference committee will compromise House and Senate bills within next week or two. After second vote in House and Senate, the final measure will go to White House for President Truman's veto or signature.

What you can do: Write or wire Representatives and Senators to oppose bill in conference, and to uphold President Truman if he vetoes bill.

Write or wire President Truman to veto any anti-labor bill.



LET FREEDOM'S VOICE BE HEARD

THE HOUSE has passed the Hartley slave-labor bill, which would deprive American working people of nearly all their union rights. The Senate is in process of passing a union-crippling bill of its own. It will presumably be passed by the time this is read.

Due to differences in the details of these two anti-labor bills, they will be referred to a Conference Committee of representatives of both Houses.

This Committee's duty will be to iron out differences and to prepare a single bill which its members believe will be satisfactory to both Houses.

Since the provisions of both bills are designed to restrict labor's rights, to undermine unions and to weaken the workers' bargaining power, little can be expected from this Conference Committee.

Its members may differ on the exact point at which labor's limbs should be cut off. But, given the bills on which they have to work, they are bound to bring out some kind of crippling legislation.

AT THIS critical moment, the duty of all freedom-loving Americans is two-fold:

(1) To urge their Senators and Representatives to vote against the bill reported out by the Conference Committee, to call for a veto if it is passed, and then to vote to uphold the veto if that is forthcoming.

(2) Immediately to flood the White House with wires, letters, petitions, resolutions, etc., asking President Truman to veto any anti-labor legislation that Congress places on his desk, regardless of its final details.

DESPITE the large anti-labor majorities revealed in both Houses, the surprise reversal administered in the Senate to one of Senator Taft's vicious amendments (on industry-wide bargaining) shows that labor's fight is having its effect.

Even in the House, many Congressmen who voted sight-unseen for the NAM-drafted bill presented by Rep. Hartley have had some opportunity to learn its poisonous contents and to react to the wave of public protest.

Though it may be too much to expect the Senate and House to reject a bill based on their previous actions and recommended by their Conference Committee representatives, it should be possible to roll up an imposing opposition vote—if every member of Congress is made aware of sufficient demand for this from his constituents.

The size of the opposition vote will have a strong influence on the President's decision whether or not to veto the bill. And the larger it is, the better will be the prospects of upholding such a veto.

BUT THE time is too short, the danger too critical, and the previous behavior of Congress too bad, to place too much reliance on influencing Congress alone.

When Congress tramples on the people's rights, our Constitution vests in the President the power of veto.

It is to the President therefore that the American people must now turn, calling on him to defend our liberties against the assault which Congress is now perpetrating.

The White House must hear at once from every true friend of freedom. Petitions must be circulated and signed by millions of Americans, asking a veto of the anti-labor legislation.

Wires, letters, resolutions must be dispatched to President Truman, urging him to stand by labor and the people.

Now, as never before, let freedom's voice be heard.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

"SURE TOLD those birds where to get off," said Congressman X, leaning back in his chair.

"We sure did," came an answering voice.

A little flushed after arguing with a CIO delegation, X felt better now. He hadn't come out of it so badly, he reflected.

He had been courteous but firm. He had told them he would not be pressured, that he always voted as his conscience dictated and in accord with his election pledges.

But who the devil was this in his office after the CIO people had left? And where did he get this "we" stuff?

The fellow certainly looked familiar, very familiar. Must be a fellow-Congressman, who'd be offended at not being recognized.

"About those campaign pledges of ours?" he was saying, a little dubiously.

X CHUCKLED as he thought back over his campaign. He'd been smart, careful not to make any specific promises people could hold him to.

He'd told the voters he stood on his party's platform—something in that for everyone, he was sure, good glittering generalities.

He was going to represent all the people, he'd said, not any special interest. He was against bureaucracy and monopolies. He was for a fair profit for business, good prices for the farmer, and a square deal for labor.

Yes, he'd said he was for unions and collective bargaining, but against labor abuses.

He was for lower living costs. End OPA, let free enterprise function freely, and prices will come down.

He'd work for fair wages, fair prices, fair profits and prosperity for all. What could be fairer?

Nothing in his campaign pledges that those CIO birds could catch him up on, X reflected. Or was there? What had they said?

"YES, WHAT about that?" said the fellow, as if he'd been reading X's thoughts. Or was I thinking aloud, X wondered uneasily.

Sure, they'd said the Hartley bill was written by NAM lawyers—so what? When I voted for it, was I representing all the people or a special interest?

They'd said the bill would break up unions, make free collective bargaining impossible and lead to wage-cuts. Was that favoring unions and fair wages?

As to monopolies and a fair profit. X glanced at the documents left on his desk. Doubled, tripled profits. Was that fair? And that Congressional report on the growth of big business monopoly. Hadn't he promised to oppose such things?

"AND HAVE prices come down, like we said they would, if only we got rid of price control?"

Damn the fellow, thought X, he's mocking me—and he keeps talking as if I'd been talking to him.

Everyone knows prices have gone sky-high and don't show any sign of dropping, short of a depression.

What did those CIO birds say about exorbitant profits and prices and too-low purchasing power leading to depression, and strong unions being needed to correct the balance? And I promised to work for prosperity for all.

"Yes," said the irritating fellow, "and about our party's platform. Wasn't there, just for one thing, a pledge for a permanent FEPC? Where's that?" He paused, then added:

"Not to change the subject, did you notice that news item about the mayor of Havana, Cuba?"

X GLANCED at the paper in front of him. Sure, he'd read the item. It said the mayor committed suicide in despair over his failure to fulfill a campaign pledge. And that was just one pledge—about a water-works!

But X was furious by now. "You get to hell out of here," he said. "Who are you anyhow?"

"Just your conscience. Remember, you said you voted as I dictated. I thought for a moment I had some influence. But I guess I don't even exist any more."

And, sure enough, X realized he was alone—just thinking and mumbling to himself.

P. S. Don't count on any American Congressmen following the example of the mayor of Havana. Suicide isn't legal, anyhow, and most political suicides are unintentional.

The best way to make Ex-Congressmen of Congressman X and his like is through political action. A dollar to PAC will help.

MARCHING AHEAD TO REAL SECURITY

WHAT is in the "better than 15-cent package" which CIO unions have negotiated for millions of workers in the past few weeks?

The 11½-12½-cent hourly wage increase add substantial sums to workers' annual pay. Harder to estimate than the pay gains is the balance of the package which spells security and better health.

Things, for example, like severance pay which the Steelworkers got for the first time. Less than a generation ago a steel worker would have thought you crazy had you told him that the day would come when he would receive from four to eight weeks' pay—depending on his length of service—if his department or a substantial portion of his department was shut down or discontinued.

Another Advance

Another great advance won by the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers and the Auto Workers is payment for holidays not worked. Unions have been fighting for paid holidays for years so that workers could really enjoy these days of involuntary idleness. UE and UAW won not only one paid holiday but six. Other items in the package are:

- Improved vacation clauses.
- Better wage equity.
- Lessening of geographical differentials.
- Maintenance of membership and check-off.
- Better call-in pay.
- Improved grievance machinery.
- Better safety provisions.

MOST of these benefits were obtained by contracts signed by CIO's big three—the Steelworkers, the Auto Workers and the Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers.

plants is growing daily. Here is the picture:

STEEL. Not only has Big Steel—the U. S. Steel Corp.—agreed to the "better than 15-cent wage package"—but Little Steel also agreed to accept the pattern.

Little Steel includes Bethlehem Steel, Republic Steel, Youngstown Sheet & Tube, Inland Steel, and Jones & Laughlin.

Others agreeing to the U. S. Steel contract pattern are the Kaiser Co., covering the Fontana, Calif., steel mill, and Washington (state) aluminum plants, the Sharon Steel and Copperweld Steel Companies.

Outstanding features of the U. S. Steel contract in addition to the 12½-cent hourly increase are:

Severance pay included for the first time, two-year agreement with wage reopening after the first year, maintenance of membership and check-off, southern differential cut by 3 cents an hour.

Increment between job classifications increased from 3½ cents to 4 cents to further eliminate inequities, three-week vacation for 25-year employes and continuance of present vacation period of one week for one year and two weeks for five years.

Safety provisions clarified, clause to provide greater regularity of employment, call-in time boosted from 2 to 4 hours, grievance machinery speeded up, seniority provision clarified.

Hundreds of steel companies have signed agreements with the CIO Steelworkers, and the list grows daily. CIO Steelworkers Pres. Philip Murray told the union's wage policy committee:

"I am hopeful and feel quite sure that all of the companies in the basic steel industry will readily accept the pattern set in the five U. S. Steel companies."

AUTO. The CIO Auto Workers have reached wage agreements with two of the auto industry's Big Three for the 15 cents plus package.

Both Chrysler and General Motors have agreed to a flat 11½ cents an hour increase, six paid holidays a year and other economic concessions, and the workers represented by the UAW have ratified both settlements.

Negotiations are proceeding with Ford, Kaiser-Frazer, Briggs Manufacturing and other automobile and auto parts concerns.

Bargaining Works

UAW Pres. Walter P. Reuther described both the GM and Chrysler settlements as proof "that free collective bargaining can be made to work and that it must work if we are to maintain democracy in America.

"These agreements should demonstrate to members of Congress that voluntary negotiations between free labor and free management are the answer to the problem of eliminating industrial strife. The answer is not repressive, punitive legislation that restricts the freedom of either labor or management."

Norman Matthews, director of UAW's Chrysler department, said in a joint statement with Robert W. Conder, Chrysler's director of labor relations:

"We have negotiated these contracts and wage adjustments in a friendly and constructive spirit, and both the union and the company earnestly intend to see to it that during the next two years in our day to day relations these purposes are kept in mind."

In addition to the hourly wage increase and paid holidays, the GM agreement provides an improved vacation pay clause that gives GM workers an approximately 35% increase in vacation allowances. As part of the settlement, the company also agreed to discuss and negotiate the questions of an old age retirement plan and a social security insurance program to provide medical, hospital, sickness and accident benefits for GM workers and their families.

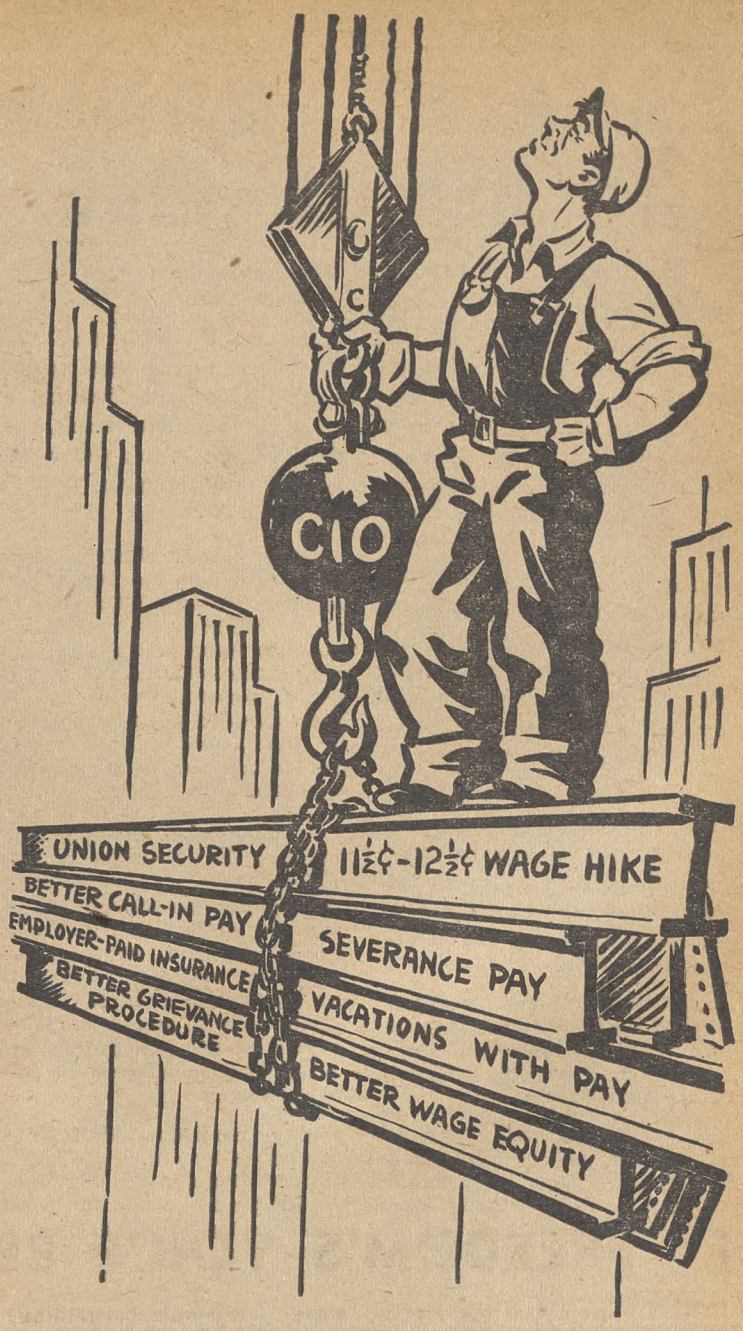
Won From Chrysler

The Chrysler settlement included equalization wage increases for workers in about 80 classifications. Matthews estimated that this provision will give 6,500 workers an average 5 cents an hour increase over and above the 11½ cents.

The Chrysler agreement is for two years, although either party may reopen wages once only during the life of the agreement. General Motors signed a two-year agreement with the UAW last year with the proviso that wages could be reopened this year.

Approximately 225,000 General Motors workers and 70,000 Chrysler workers are represented by the UAW-CIO.

ELECTRICAL: The CIO Electrical, Radio & Machine Workers has won in recent weeks annual increases of $93,560,000 for approximately 300,000 workers.



These increases have been obtained in settlements with General Electric, Westinghouse, General Motors electrical division, and with 300 smaller companies which gave "down payment" wage boosts.

One hundred and twenty-five thousand workers benefit from the most important agreement signed last week with GE. The contract provides for an 11½ cents hourly wage increase—which with other economic items brings the total increase to 15 cents an hour.

The GE agreement and pacts with Westinghouse Air Brake Co. and United Switch & Signal Co. follow the pattern set by UE with GM and the Westinghouse.

Under the agreement GE workers receive in addition to the flat wage increase:

Six paid holidays—New Year's Day, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Thanksgiving and Christmas.

Three weeks' vacation for 20-year hourly and salaried employes.

Salaried workers receive overtime payments.

Salaried workers receive an increase of 12½ cents an hour or $5 a week in view of the fact that they will not benefit from the vacation clause as they have been paid for the six holidays.

Continuance of maintenance of membership and the check-off.

Improved machinery for settling grievances.

Improved overtime provisions for employes on continuous service.

UE Pres. Albert J. Fitzgerald said:

"By granting 15-cent-an-hour wage and salary increases as well as other benefits the General Electric Co. thus follows the pattern already established in the electrical manufacturing industry as a result of UE agreements recently reached with General Motors and the Westinghouse Electric Corp.

"By these settlements, achieved through the processes of free collective bargaining, UE has pioneered the way for a new wage increase pattern in the nation's basic industries.

"By winning six paid holidays for the workers of such giant corporations as General Electric, Westinghouse and General Motors, we feel that we have firmly established, for the first time in industrial history, the right of working men and women to enjoy their holidays without loss of pay."

"Our major industries have for years followed the practice of closing down for holidays and their workers have had to 'enjoy' the holidays by having their wages docked at the end of the week."

Steel Pact Provides $8,000 Free Insurance

FOR the first time in the basic steel industry a social security program was actually blue-printed in a collective bargaining contract signed by the CIO Steelworkers and Allegheny-Ludlum Steel Corp., this week.

Money to be applied by the company for social security is in addition to basic hourly wage increases approximating 15c.

The agreement covers 12,000 employes in five Allegheny-Ludlum plants in Brackenridge and Leechburg, Pa.; Dunkirk, Waterville and Buffalo, N. Y.

All full-time employes now on the company payroll and future employes after 3 months' services are to be covered by $4,000 in life insurance.

Coverage of $4,000 is also provided for accidental death and dismemberment.

The weekly sickness and accident benefit for all classes of employes is $15 beginning the eighth day of sickness and the first day of accident, for 13 weeks.

A $5-per-day hospitalization payment is provided for employes, and $4 for dependents, for a maximum of 31 days in any one disability. An allowance of $50 is made for "extras" if the use of operating facilities is required.

The agreement provides a surgical benefit of $150 in any one disability.

For female employes, 14 days' hospitalization is provided in maternity cases and surgical benefits up to $100 are provided.

Executive Board To Meet May 16

CIO Pres. Philip Murray this week called a meeting of CIO Vice-Presidents in Washington, D. C., for May 15, to be followed by a meeting of the CIO Executive Board May 16. Both meetings will be held at CIO Hdq.

Convention Mandate

PACKING UNION TO ASK 15c HIKE

By NORMAN DOLNICK

THE CIO Packinghouse Workers' convention this week was unanimous in its decision to reopen contracts with the nation's packers for a 15-cent hourly wage increase. UPW's fourth constitutional convention was held in Cleveland.

The convention resolved "to make effective immediately a program on how to deal with the impending danger of depression," and adopted a program recommended by UPW Pres. Ralph Helstein. The program included:

A 30-hour week without pay reductions, reaffirmation of the union's goal of a guaranteed annual wage, stabilization of wage rates to eliminate geographic, sex, inter and intra-plant inequities.

Employer-financed medical, health and hospital programs, severance pay, liberalized vacations and time and half pay for Saturday work.

The union hit high prices, declaring the packers have "made higher profits than ever before in their history" and calling on them to reduce prices to the level the public can afford. Immediate government action also was demanded to reduce living costs.

Calling for united action, the convention unanimously adopted a statement of policy which pointed out that "repression of any sort which attacks civil liberties is the weapon of reaction."

The policy stated that "our movement is dedicated to the task of raising the standard of living of our membership, improving their educational opportunities and bringing them a better life . . .

"Those who for whatever reason attempt to influence our actions in other directions will receive no aid or comfort from us. We will make our own decisions free from any outside influence. The surest way of promoting our way of life is to give our people a program for peace, progress and plenty that is superior to any offered elsewhere.

In preparation for the 1948 elections the convention unanimously passed a resolution urging all local unions to "nominate for public office in local, county and state elections independent candidates dedicated to the interests of the electorate" and to join with other groups at the proper time in establishing an independent political party.

Other resolutions called for a national conference of CIO, AFL, Railroad Brotherhoods and bona fide independent unions to combat anti-labor legislation, and for a national farm-labor conference to discuss mutual problems.

The convention demanded that Congress enact a national tax program providing tax relief for low-income families and shifting the load to wealthy individuals and corporations.

Ship Owners Warned

PRES. HUGH BRYSON of the CIO Marine Cooks & Stewards this week told 150 delegates at the union's second biennial convention at San Francisco that the ship owners had terminated the contract that was scheduled to expire June 15.

"No contract by June 15, no work," Bryson declared in his keynote address. He pointed out that the ship owners had not only ended the contract but had made no new proposals. He added that "we have many good friends and we don't hesitate to mention the WFTU with which the CIO is affiliated and which will back us up."

Bryson hit the Truman foreign policy, declaring that the U. S. government ignored relief for those countries where workers are represented in the government. He criticized the government's friendly attitude to China, Turkey, Greece, Argentina and Spain, and called for convention action to help remedy these conditions.

Sec. Paul Schnur of the San Francisco CIO Council said that a third party is being formed in this country but will not be ready for action by 1948.

The convention extended shipping cards from 30 to 45 days to meet the unemployment problem, called for more rank-and-file participation in the Voice, the union's paper and for extension of education aboard ships to develop new union leadership.

Tribute was paid to 72-year-old MCS Sec.-Treas. Eugene F. Burke, who helped found the union 46 years ago.

MILITANT GLAMOR

These pretty girl instructors at Arthur Murray dance studios, N. Y. City, are militant CIO members. (Above) Because their boss is slow in recognizing their union, the Office & Professional Workers, they did the rhumba in a demonstration in front of his Madison Ave. studio.

(Right) Margaret Erickson, studio committee representative, a teacher at the studio two years, declares, "There wouldn't be any question of scab labor, if we struck. The pupils are really ours, not Arthur Murray's. And it would take a long time to train new teachers."

The union last week notified management that the majority of its 350 dancing instructors have designated UOPWA as their collective bargaining agent.

CIO Means Better Living In Danville, Va.

"WHEN you have the story of textiles in Danville you have the entire story of the CIO there," said Virginia Director Ernest Pugh of the CIO Organizing Committee.

What Pugh meant was that the only industry of consequence in this city of 34,000 is the textile industry. About 10,000 persons work in the huge Riverside and Dan River Cotton Mills, and all of them are represented by the CIO Textile Workers.

He also meant that the spirit of almost the entire city is CIO.

Even the city's 50 bus drivers belong to the Textile Workers. When they requested membership they were asked if they didn't want to be part of a more appropriate CIO affiliate. The drivers said "No."

"Nearly all of the people we haul are textile workers, so we want to be in the same union," they said.

They were admitted to TWUA membership in Sept., 1945, and contracts between them and the Danville Traction & Power Co. have meant increased pay and many other union benefits.

DANVILLE textile workers won their first union contract through a decision of the War Labor Board in June, 1943, according to Lewis M. Conn, director of the Pittsylvania County Joint Board, TWUA-CIO.

This and subsequent contracts have added some $13,000,000 to Danville's industrial payroll, according to Conn.

"Between March, 1946, and February, 1947, a period of 11 months, the union added 32c an hour, on the average, to the wage scale," he said. "This represents an increase of $7½ million in annual pay rolls as a result of wage negotiations in this period.

"Primarily as a result of this, the city of Danville was rated by the Federal Reserve Board as the fifth city in the nation in respect to percentage increases in bank clearances. This, of course, is an accepted index to a community's prosperity."

The contracts between the TWUA and the Riverside and Dan River mills provide, at company expense estimated at $250,000 annually, a full program of medical, surgical, and obstetrical care for the employes and their dependents.

And all of this has made a profound impression on the community.

SAID The Richmond News-Leader last August 23, in a story by Gerald Tetley, editor of The Danville Bee, Danville, which for generations was known as a 'non-union' city, one in which trade unionism was started under great employer hostility (so-called 'Citizens Committees' fought the formation of the union in 1942), has undergone a great change in the past two years.

"In 1942, the CIO came to Danville in a small way and laid foundations for what was to be the spearhead of the Committee for Industrial Organization in the South. Today there are close to 11,000 textile unionists, and the CIO is spilling over into other ununionized groups who see wages increased for textile unionists, shorter hours, abundant privileges and a new sense of independence."

Said The Danville Register in the spring of 1946, "There can be no doubt that textile unionism in Danville has enriched the workers and provided the textile employe with a higher living standard and a more attractive life."

These newspaper statements were echoed by Danville merchants and community leaders. The merchants told a CIO public relations representative of greatly increased sales; others said the union "had stimulated interest" in community campaigns for social services, had "produced a new interest in politics, gotten more people to register and vote, and on the whole the people have used their votes well."

BACK TRANSPORT WORKERS

THE full force of CIO's 300 local unions and 600,000 members in the New York metropolitan area was mobilized this week in support of the demands of the CIO Transport Workers Union. The union is asking the Board of Transportation for wage increases, shorter hours and a sound labor relations plan for the 30,000 city transit employes.

The TWU received the backing of the Greater New York CIO Council at its May meeting. Joseph Curran, National CIO vice president and president of the CIO Council, declared:

"It is high time the people of this city were afforded a decent, honest and modernized administration of their transit system.

"Only a sound labor relations policy, based on the needs of the transit employees, will bring this about. The labor relations plan proposed by Commissioner William H. Davis and endorsed by Mayor O'Dwyer is the answer.

"The CIO will give every support necessary to assure the city's transit workers that their rights no longer will be trampled upon, and that their wages be adjusted to permit a fair standard of living in the face of the continuing rise in prices."

NAVY AID ASKED

CIO Pres. Philip Murray and Pres. O. A. Knight of the CIO Oil Workers this week urged Navy Sec. Forrestal to use the Navy in recovering the bodies of 300 persons still missing in the Texas City, Tex., fire and explosion.

Knight in a wire to Forrestal said that civilian divers have reported many bodies still pinned under the wreckage of the exploded ships and that companies in the area are "not equipped to recover these bodies."

CIO ORGANIZING COMMITTEE

CIO Organizer John Henry Hall conducted a week-long membership drive at Clorox Chemical Co., Atlanta, Ga. He held only one meeting for the employes, who later voted 23 to 0 in favor of the CIO Packing-house Workers.

In the election among the shop crafts workers on the Pennsylvania Railroad, the CIO Railroad Workers retained everything they had previously by a larger majority than before. The independent union retained one small group.

The AFL is completely eliminated from the run-off ballot which will be held on four crafts heretofore held by the independent union. The run-off will be held between the CIO and the independent union. The CIO is in an excellent position to be victorious in this election.

The Packinghouse Workers convention is in session this week in Cleveland, Ohio. It is the largest ever held by the union, and a spirit of unity and determination to defend labor prevails. The writer had the privilege of bringing the message of the CIO to the convention.

CIO UNION DEFEATS AFL IN RAIL CRAFT ELECTIONS

THE CIO Railroad Workers last week received the largest number of votes in a three-cornered contest to determine the collective bargaining agent for Pennsylvania Railroad shop craft employes.

The CIO union in the election conducted by the Natl. Mediation Board not only retained its right to represent the boiler makers, molders, power house employes and shop craft laborers, but won the right to participate in a run-off elections among carmen, electricians, sheet metal workers and machinists. The company-dominated Brotherhood of Shop Crafts won the blacksmiths, but the AFL was completely eliminated from the run-offs.

The CIO and the Brotherhoods will appear on the ballots in the run-offs. The CIO received 18,410 of the total number of votes, the company-union 17,560 and the AFL 6,648.

Company-inspired "race issue" failed to keep these white workers (above) from joining their fellow Negro workers on the picket line at Winston-Salem, N. C., plant of R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Co., makers of Camel cigarettes. Another example of inter-racial cooperation is to the right where Co-Chairman Clark Shepperd (l.) of the CIO Food & Tobacco local talks things over with Co-chairman Robert C. Black (r.) and other strikers.

Tries To Print The Hard Way

The striking members of the CIO Newspaper Guild at the Camden Courier and Post are conducting a campaign to convince the purchaser of the papers that he has a ready-made staff.

Most of the strikers served on the two Camden papers 10 years before the former publisher, J. David Stern, refused to bargain in good faith.

The new publisher, Harold A. Stretch, former advertising director of the Philadelphia Inquirer, has inserted ads in the Philadelphia papers for all job categories formerly held by Guildsmen.

In their Guild-published daily, the Camden Free Press, the strikers have won public support in their demands for jobs with the new publisher through a series of front page editorials.

South Jersey labor leaders, CIO and AFL, have urged Stretch to recognize the Guild. Stretch met with a Guild committee late this week.

TEXTILE SIGNS 6th PLANT IN TOWN

The Gold-Tex Fabrics Corp. this week became the sixth mill in Rock Hill, S. Car., to sign a contract with the CIO Textile Workers.

Features of the contract are employer-paid medical and life insurance, paid vacations up to 2 weeks, 2 hours' pay or 4 hours work for call-in time.

MAKERS OF 'CAMELS' FAIL TO PUSH WORKERS AROUND

By C. W. FOWLER

WINSTON-SALEM, N. C., used to be a company town, owned and dominated lock, stock and barrel by the R. J. Reynolds Tobacco Company, the firm that sells all the Camel cigarettes.

It isn't just a company town any more. The workers who make the Camel cigarettes, some 10,000 of them, white and Negro, have stood up to defy the stranglehold that Reynolds used to have on Winston-Salem.

They have gone on strike for a living wage in a city that showed the highest rise in food costs of any city in the U. S., except one. They have gone on strike against a company that seeks to destroy the living standards and the security built up over five years of union organizing.

The workers are members of the CIO Food & Tobacco Workers. They walked out of Reynolds' sprawling plants on the dot of midnight, May 1, when the company's "final offer" was given to the negotiating committee, headed by FTA Pres. Donald Henderson.

The "final offer" was 5½c an hour wage raise, in face of the workers' demand for a 15c raise in line with the national wage policy set by CIO. Coupled with the company offer was a flat refusal to continue union security clauses that have been in the contract since 1942.

On top of that, the company insisted on a cut in overtime earnings for seasonal workers, to be done by lengthening the straight time work week from 40 to 45 hours.

Final signal for the strike came when members of the negotiating committee leaned out of a Reynolds executive window on the stroke of midnight to shout at workers beginning to leave the plant across the street. More than 7,000 workers had previously voted to strike, if necessary, at Winston-Salem's largest mass meeting in history.

Picket lines formed in a matter of minutes. As they formed, they began to sing—the way FTA workers especially like to sing. Winston-Salem has a city ordinance against singing on the streets at night. It was ignored. The soft Carolina air was alive with "Solidarity Forever," "Gonna Roll FTA On," and adaptations of favorite hymns and spirituals.

The Reynolds plant has 73 gates. All are picketed, on a 24-hour watch. The company is hoping and plugging for a "race incident" or at least for "racial tension." There is none.

NAZI BOSSES UP FOR TRIAL

By Federated Press

THE first U. S. move to indict as war criminals the industrialists who sparked the Nazi machine formally got underway at Nuremberg when chief U. S. war crimes prosecutor, Brig. Gen. Telford Taylor, filed charges against 24 top I. G. Farben officials for planning and carrying out aggressive war, mass murder and plunder.

The indictment charged Farben officials with using cartel agreements and other devices to soften up foreign countries in collaboration with the Hitler government in order to prepare the way for marching Nazi armies. The indictment set a world precedent of holding industrialists responsible for war crimes.

FARBEN officials, the indictment declared, took the initiative in financing the Hitler movement in 1932 with the ultimate aim of industrial world domination even then in mind.

Farben, which became an economic arm of the Hitler government, entered into extensive cartel agreements, curbing the production of these chemicals in other countries. In return for certain limited strategic advantages, many U. S. corporations entered such agreements and severely hindered U. S. development of essential war products.

IN PRODUCING its war-essential chemicals and other products Farben took full advantage of the slave labor herded together by Hitler. In the words of the indictment: "During the period here involved Farben's total number of workers reached 200,000, of which approximately 50% were slave labor. . . . Many died and were replaced and many were 'exchanged.' "

The concentration camps also provided human subjects upon which Farben tested the efficiency of its poison gases, vaccines and other products.

Farben itself constructed concentration camps to house its own workers. The working conditions, especially at the Farben buna plant near Oswiecm, were such that workers were often driven to suicide by hurling themselves into high-tension electrically charged barbed-wire fences. Over 100 people a day dropped dead at their work from sheer exhaustion.

Among the industrialists indicted are: Carl Krauch, Herman Schmitz, Georg von Schnitzler, Heinrich Hoerlein, and Fritz ter Meer.

BASQUE STRIKERS DEFY DICTATOR FRANCO

By Allied Labor News

RISKING their lives to defy the Franco regime's absolute ban on strikes, 50,000 Basque workers in Bilbao are continuing their walkout called May 5, according to reports. Stoppages have spread to Madrid and other Spanish cities, the reports state, with workers' handbills demanding a "fight against the tyrants" and the return of a democratic government.

The Basque strike started under the direction of local resistance leaders, it is reported, when Franco's authorities ordered that 14,000 workers who took part in a May Day demonstration be fired from their jobs. The decree allowed workers to re-apply for their jobs within eight days, but deprived them of seniority and all other rights.

Even though troop reinforcements have been sent to Bilbao and many arrests have been made, more workers joined the walkout in its second day and industry is at a total standstill, reports state. Bilbao, about 200 miles north of Madrid, is an important manufacturing center and seaport.

Although the Bilbao walkout is one of the largest strikes that has occurred in Spain since Franco seized power 10 years ago, it comes after a year of developing workers' resistance to the dictatorship. During 1946, according to the General Workers Union (UGT) which operates openly from here and underground in Spain, about 200,000 workers were involved in strikes.

These strikes, UGT spokesmen state, were neither isolated nor spontaneous but were the result of careful coordination by underground labor and political groups which are fighting to restore the Spanish republic, overthrown with the help of Hitler's and Mussolini's armies.

WORLD LABOR

A GROUP of four CIO union officials will leave New York May 24 to attend meetings of the World Federation of Trade Unions, to be held in Prague, Czechoslovakia, during the first half of June.

The group will include CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey; Sec.-Treas. Frank Rosenblum of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, who is a WFTU vice-president; Michael Ross, director of international affairs for CIO; and John Abt, general counsel of the ACW.

Three WFTU meetings are scheduled: the nine-man executive bureau, the 26-man executive committee; and a larger General Council, on which each national affiliate of the world labor organization has a voice.

Up for discussion will be reports on trade union developments in Germany, Japan and Korea which have been prepared by WFTU missions visiting those countries; a discussion of the organization's relations with the UN; and a variety of other subjects facing labor movements throughout the world.

At the same time, Pres. Milton Murray of the American Newspaper Guild will visit Prague for a meeting of the Intl. Organization of Journalists, to which the Guild is affiliated.

A MAJORITY OF JAPAN'S population is "enthusiastically embracing the principles of democracy," according to Willard Townsend, president of the CIO Transport Service Employes and CIO member of a recent World Federation of Trade Unions mission to Japan and Korea.

Japanese workers, Townsend told a Chicago press conference upon his return to the U. S. late in April, are "eager to develop an effective trade union movement." Only a small number of unemployed are getting jobs, however, because of complete disruption of industry, inadequate housing, a food shortage, inflation and black markets, Townsend reported.

The workers, he said, are anxious to have labor unions "incorporating the best features of those in the western countries," and a "Wagner Act" similar to its American model has already been adopted.

LABOR AND LIBERAL leaders in the U. S. have joined in a last-minute effort to save the lives of two Spanish anti-fascists condemned to death by the Franco regime.

Wires sent to the State Dept. and the Spanish Ambassador in Washington assailed the death sentence levied on Amador Franco and Antonio Lopez, charged with resisting arrest. The statement charged that 2,000 Spanish workers have recently been arrested on "suspicion of illegal activities."

Signing the statement were more than a score of persons, including CIO Vice-Pres. Frank Rosenblum; Pres. Samuel Wolchok of the Retail & Wholesale Employes; and Michael Ross, CIO international affairs director.

We've decided to reduce our next price increase by 10 per cent.

MONOPOLIES BLAMED FOR HIGH PRICES

THE blame for high prices was laid firmly on the doorstep of big business monopoly this week by a member of the Federal Trade Commission.

At the same time, the Dept. of Agriculture reported that average prices of food—paid to producers, wholesalers, and retailers—are at a record high.

"There is no indication of an immediate marked decline in prices," the Department stated.

And in Philadelphia, the Securities and Exchange Commission reported that corporations are at peak strength, with net working capital reaching a new record of $57.3 billion as of last Dec. 31.

THE FTC spokesman who took monopoly over the hurdles was Robert E. Freer. Speaking before a beer wholesalers meeting at Atlantic City, he said:

"More mergers in the manufacturing and mining industries took place in 1946 than in any of the previous years."

He pointed to the "great wave of corporate mergers and a wild speculation in their securities" that took place prior to the 1929 crash, and said the same thing is happening again.

Freer said that one result of the corporate mergers, which eliminate both large and small competitors, is the remove many prices from the competitive field.

He said that in the last depression monopoly agreements held prices at artificially high levels. Production was cut and workers were laid off in the effort to keep prices up.

Today, Freer said, monopoly interests may be repeating the "blunder," which "can cause a great deal of economic suffering to the many."

HALT MONOPOLIES' GROWTH, CIO SPOKESMEN URGE

MONOPOLY'S fast-moving march to complete control over the nation's economy last week came in for some severe criticism from CIO.

Legislative Director Nathan Cowan lashed out at false economy which would weaken the powers of the Dept. of Justice Anti-Trust Division. He also criticized a $30,000 budget cut recommended by the House Appropriations Committee which would endanger collection of up to a billion dollars which the government claims it was over-charged by the country's railroads during the war.

Meanwhile, Seth Levine of the Natl. Maritime Committee, called upon the Senate Judiciary Committee, in the name of CIO, to give speedy approval to S. 104, a bill aimed at preventing mergers of corporation. The bill together with H.R. 515 in the House, would bar companies from acquiring the assets of competing firms.

"Mergers are the classic means of eliminating competition," Levine pointed out to the Judiciary group. "We are now in the midst of one of the largest merger movements in our history. Large corporations emerged from the war with enormous liquid funds which they promptly brought to use by acquiring their smaller competitors."

CAREY ASKS SQUARE DEAL FOR LABOR ON THE AIR

LABOR has been in the forefront of the fight to prevent one of our last natural resources—the air waves—from falling into the power of the monopolies, CIO Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey told the Institute for Education by Radio held last week at Ohio State University, Columbus.

"Labor's interest in radio as a medium of education is based on the democratic principle of free discussion," Carey said, "the right of all groups to offer different opinions over the air. Democratic education can best be developed when a full and open discussion of all issues, controversial as they may be, is presented. In fact such a procedure is the best safeguard of any democracy."

Another CIO speaker at the radio institute was Allan Sayler of the United Auto Workers who took part in a seminar on the subject, "Should Radio Stations Editorialize?"

Carey charged in his speech that the radio industry has failed in completely fulfilling its function of public service through restrictions imposed by the Natl. Assn. of Broadcasters on so-called controversial matters, in which category discussions of labor were placed.

"Labor believes that its voice must be heard on the air," Carey declared, "because labor organizations represent a large segment of the American public and it is vital to the public welfare and understanding and the growth of our people that the views of this segment be heard. It is radio's responsibility to offer time for such programs as part of a well balanced program structure."

Dismissals and curtailments of the programs of liberal-minded radio commentators such as William L. Shirer, Carey asserted, are a clear indication of the present unfair attitude of the radio industry.

STATION UAW-CIO: Have you heard about the very interesting plans of the United Auto Workers in the radio field? These include the operation of FM stations in Detroit and Chicago; a one-week radio school at a leading eastern university this summer, and an international project arranged through the British Broadcasting Co.

UAW locals are supporting the Detroit FM station by buying membership certificates in the non-profit corporation which will operate the station, reports the union's Education Dept. Plans now under way will have the Chicago station on the air before the end of the year, states AMMUNITION, UAW educational monthly. Applications for permits to operate the two stations were approved some time ago.

The radio school project calls for courses to be taught by men from national networks in an intensive week's training in everything having to do with radio, from writing and announcing to sound effects and programming.

Under the international program arranged through the BBC, interviews with auto workers and cooperators in England will be recorded for the CIO auto union which will distribute them to its affiliates for local broadcasts.

USEFUL GADGET: The UAW Education Dept. also tells of an interesting gadget it is planning to use at the union's summer schools this year. This is a wire recorder set which can be used for recording choruses, debates, plays or any union program that can be delivered before a microphone. Turning a switch sets the recording apparatus in motion. Turning it back gives the recording immediately. The recording can be kept, or wiped out and other recordings made on the same wire.

The wire comes in 7,500-foot spools that will play for an hour and is practically indestructible. The spools sell for $4 each. The wire recorder, says AMMUNITION, enables radio committees to rehearse, to hear themselves before they go on the air, and to make corrections at almost no cost or effort.

CIO unions interested may write for further information to the UAW-CIO Education Dept., 28 West Warren, Detroit 1, Mich.

HERE'S A TIP for CIO groups looking for material for their local radio broadcasts or union meetings.

Transcribed 15-minute interviews with liberal Congressmen, writers and union officials may be obtained at reasonable prices from Mrs. Reba Lewis, Ellicott City, Md. The interviews were originally recorded for use on WQQW, a Washington station.

Two types of records may be obtained: straight phonograph records, for use on phonographs, public address systems, etc.; and special records for broadcast purposes.

Among the interviews are talks with Sen. Kilgore (D., W. Va.), on anti-labor bills; CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman, on the same subject; Rep. John Lesinksi (D., Mich.), and Rep. Javits (R., N. Y.), on the anti-labor bills; Murray Latimer on the guaranteed annual wage study which he conducted for the government; and Rep. Kefauver (D., Tenn.), on problems of monopoly.

CIO SCHOOL AT HIGHLANDER

AGAIN this year the CIO will hold a month's institute during June at the Highlander Folk School, Monteagle, Tenn., for local union members from all over the South.

The days between June 1 and 28 will be crammed with classes, discussions and exchanges of experiences between the various union representatives and many other activities.

There will be opportunities to talk with leaders from every division of the National CIO, who will be there to give the latest information on labor legislation, suggest programs locals can undertake to defend labor's gains, and discuss education techniques and action on the local level.

Tuition for the full term of four weeks is $75. Arrangements can be made to attend for two weeks for $40. Applications to attend the school should be accompanied by a deposit of $10.

Fifteen half-scholarships are being offered to encourage union attendance. The local union must pay the balance of the tuition. These scholarships will be awarded on the basis of need of the local union for assistance in sending members and on the basis of the contribution the students will make to future work of their locals and the CIO.

"The CIO term at Highlander offers an opportunity to train potential local leaders to assume their share of union duties and responsibilities," says Asst. CIO Education Director George Guernsey. "We can't have too many trained leaders for the job that lies ahead. So send in your contributions now."

Requests for scholarships with $10 deposits fee enclosed should be sent at once to the CIO Dept. of Education and Research, 718 Jackson Place, Washington 6, D. C.

Prof. Snider Backs Guaranteed Wages

LABOR'S demand for guaranteed wages gets authoritative support in a new book by Professor Joseph L. Snider of the Harvard School of Business. In his book, "The Guarantee of Work and Wages," Professor Snider says bluntly:

"Although the guarantee of work and wages has become an important management issue, the great majority of business managers have not given it the attention it deserves. Business men generally need to make a mental readjustment, involving a willingness to study the issue, and also to develop a conviction that they must do everything possible to increase the regularity of wages."

The book includes an analysis of existing plans and also devotes attention to the reasons for labor's demand. Unlike some writers who focus their attention on the difficulties of satisfying labor's request for security, Professor Snider recognizes that "ultimately employment security should mean that everybody who wants a job should have one or be able to find one in a very short time, preferably in private industry, but if not there, then in government works."

True, he is more cautious and patient than labor unions would wish, but his analysis is popular as well as constructive. He advises further study by unions too, and especially commends studies made jointly by management and labor.

This is in line with the thinking of our organizations, but unfortunately many companies absolutely refuse access to their employment records on which effective analysis often depends.

Guaranteed Wage Report

The Latimer report on guaranteed wages prepared for the Advisory Board to the Office of War Mobilization & Reconversion will be released about May 15. It may be obtained from the Supt. of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., price $2.

A resolution passed by the CIO Executive Board called the report "a noteworthy contribution to understanding of the need for genuine employment security and the means by which it can be achieved," and urged that it be given the widest possible publicity.

Fighting The War Against Jim Crow

"I AM a white war correspondent, and the war I'm reporting is going strong," writes Earl Conrad in an author's note which sets the tone of his new book, "Jim Crow America." The book is a forceful and earnest study of race prejudice in America, and although written in easy journalistic style, shows the result of years of long and thoughtful study of the subject.

Conrad is a columnist and bureau manager in New York City's Harlem for the well-known Negro newspaper, the Chicago Defender—the only white man ever employed full-time in such a capacity.

What he tells about in his book, Conrad says "is war correspondence just as surely as the dispatches that came from Tarawa and Normandy. In fact my office is a kind of foxhole. From it I look out on the great 'racial fight' of America, and whenever I can, I take pot shots at 'the enemy'."

"Jim Crow America" digs into the background of the Negro question to throw light "on the story of what is going on in the Negro-white world at this moment," and traces the direct connection between the earliest slave ship and present day interracial clashes.

It shows how and why Negro labor has been exploited for cheap labor and used as a pawn in a fight against unionism, and maintains that the first step in solving the Negro problem is application of the principle of equal pay for equal work without race discrimination.

Of particular interest is an examination of certain myths and misconceptions about what are considered distinctive characteristics of Negroes such as that they are predominantly "lazy, musical, and lighthearted."

Writing of the role of organized labor in the leadership of American Negroes, Conrad believes that trade unionism is "the centrifugal force around which Negro advancement is now circling." As for Negro leaders, these are followed "to the extent that they have the confidence and following of labor. He who leads the Negro toward integration with white labor carries weight in the Negro community."

The book ends on a note of confidence that racism in America, the land of democratic principles, can be vanquished. The issue of Negro rights is pivotal and decisive, Conrad says. "America cannot be a free land and at the same time the land of Jim Crow."

Urban League's 1947 Appeal

Pres. Jacob Potofsky of the Amalgamated Clothing Workers, and Pres. Willard S. Townsend of the United Transport Service Employes have accepted the co-chairmanship of the CIO Sponsoring Committee for the Natl. Urban League's 1947 Trade Union Appeal, the League announced this week. CIO Pres. Philip Murray has been named Honorary Chairman.

The Urban League, one of the few national welfare organizations which traditionally has taken an official stand in behalf of organized labor, went on record at its 1946 national conference in support of the southern organizing drive. Through its branches strategically located in 56 industries cities in 29 states and the District of Columbia, the League has developed close relationship with CIO unions in the common interest of fighting racial discrimination.

Sprucing Up

THAT IMMACULATE LOOK

By HANNA SHERMAN

SPRING is in the air. Your heavy woolens have been put away and you are again learning the flattery that the spanking clean look of a freshly-laundered blouse can give you. It's the time when the dry cleaner is getting less of your business and the wash basin is getting more.

We've done a little research and experimenting on the blouses in our own wardrobe. Here's the laundering method that produced the best results for us and took the shortest time.

First thing we did was to make short shrift of the shoulder pad problem. You can do this too. Simply sew snaps on the three points of the shoulder of the blouse and on the shoulder pad itself. That way, the pads can snap off and be put back, in no time at all—without the bother of sewing and pinning.

THE ACTUAL job of laundering is simple. Use plenty of rich suds and several, not too warm, rinsings. Ironing too is a matter of minutes when the blouse is dried properly. You'll get the best results if you do your washing and ironing at the same session. If it's a rayon blouse, roll it first in a bath towel. Then hang it to dry on a hanger for from ten minutes to half an hour. Most rayons respond best to pressing when they are slightly damp all over.

With a fabric to be ironed for the first time, experiment with the heat in your iron on an inconspicuous part of the blouse. The seam might do. Have the blouse slightly damp. If you have a heat control iron, try the "silk" setting.

If the fabric sticks to the iron or becomes roughed up, the setting is too high. So use the lower setting marked "rayon." The cotton setting is usually right for cottons unless they are starched and white. Then use a lower setting to avoid scorching.

For rayons that give you lots of trouble, you might try this trick. Roll them, damp, in a towel, then in wax paper. Put them in your refrigerator to cool thoroughly. You'll find them much more docile.

THE ACTUAL ironing process took me ten minutes for a long sleeved white rayon blouse even though I am not a particularly good laundress. You might find that it takes you even less time. First turn the blouse inside out and go to work on the most difficult part—the sleeves.

Iron the sleeve cap by adjusting it over the narrow end of the ironing board. Better still, use a sleeve board, a wonderful gadget for avoiding a pressed line down the center of the sleeve itself. Next iron collar and ties. Start at the ends and iron toward the center of the neckband. Then as you work on the front of the blouse (still inside out, remember) be sure to press down the darts evenly.

Iron the back of the blouse last. Then snap in your shoulder pads. Turn the blouse right side out, and give it those finishing touches where it needs them and it's done.

SELECTING TOY TRAINS

Practically all children like toy trains, but too many of them are designed to appeal to adults. Usually those that leave a lot to the imagination are more satisfying to ittle children than those that are worked out in elegant detail. Trains of the kind pictured are more readily put together and taken apart and there are fewer parts to get lost and broken than on the more perfect models. Block trains like the above will offer all the play possibilities and thrill that two and three year olds want and need.

New Kind of Job

PINCH-HITTING FOR MOTHERS

WHAT'S a woman to do when she wants a job and has never done anything except make a home? That's what she is good at, and what she likes to do.

A job opening up for her is that of homemaking, says Maud Morlock, consultant on the social service staff of the U. S. Children's Bureau. More and more social agencies, both public and private, are employing women of such capacities to go into homes in emergency situations and pinch-hit during the mother's absence or when she is incapacitated.

For instance, a mother may need hospital care for a few days, or for weeks or months, but there is no one with whom to leave the children. The father cannot stay home from work—though until a homemaker is found he sometimes has to do so.

The oldest girl should not be kept home from school, as used to be done. And there may be no woman relative anywhere who is able to come in and give a hand.

HELP is not as easy to get from the neighbors in these days of apartment house living. Even in rural areas women who in other years might have been counted on to come in, either have a home to look after, or they have a job.

Yet there are women whose "job" is homemaking, and it is they who are being employed by agencies to do just that. They go in and take over—cooking, cleaning, looking after the children and getting the man off to work with his dinner-pail packed.

Because they are on the job the mother is relieved of her family worries, the father can stay on his job with an easy mind and the children can stay in their own home.

The arrangements work out well for the homemakers, too. They are paid regularly, and hours and working conditions are set. They are their own bosses on the job—one of its great attractions for them, and they are highly respected and their services appreciated.

IN BOTH public and private agencies some supervision is exercised so that the family is assured that a responsible person is coming into the home, and the homemaker in turn has her responsiblities clearly outlined. Training, too, is given the homemakers, for there is far more to the job than cooking and cleaning.

Up to now, homemakers' services have been generally limited to families in the low-income group, but as Miss Morlock points out, families in the middle-income groups are often just as hard put in emergencies as those who have no resources.

Those interested in getting such services established in their community are referred to a pamphlet prepared by the Children's Bureau as a guide. Called "Supervised Homemaker Service, a Method of Child Care," it is available free upon request to the U. S. Children's Bureau, Federal Security Agency, Washington 25, D. C.

CIO Asks Veto

WAGE-HOUR AT STAKE

By HENRY C. FLEISHER

ON President Truman's desk last week lay a bill to amend the heart out of the Wage-Hour Act and a growing stack of requests that the President veto the proposal.

With a May 14 deadline for either signing the measure into law or returning it to Congress with a note of disapproval, the Chief Executive had given no indication of his position as the CIO NEWS went to press.

The bill, which moved through Congress on a wave of phony hysteria over portal-to-portal suits, would shrink enforcement of the Wage-Hour Act almost to the vanishing point.

Coupled with recommended cuts in the budget of the Wage-Hour Division already half-approved by Congress, the bill would leave little but the memory of the Fair Labor Standards Act.

URGENT requests for a veto of the amendments came from CIO Pres. Murray, from a group of independent citizens, from presidents of a number of unions who signed a joint letter, and from the Amalgamated Clothing Workers.

All agreed that enactment into law of the measure would leave wage-hour legislation merely a "sham and a pretense." The bill is sponsored by Sen. Wiley (R., Wis.), and Rep. Gwynne (R., Iowa).

Pres. Potofsky of the Amalgamated predicted that its effect would be to "nullify one of the proudest achievements of the Democratic administration and to strike a blow against the livelihood of the lowest paid and most under-privileged section of the American working people, both organized and unorganized."

Pres. Murray's appeal to the White House charged that the title of the wage-hour amendments—the so-called "Portal to Portal Act of 1947"—savors of deception.

The bill as finally passed would affect not only the Wage-Hour Act, but two others—the Bacon-Davis Act and the Walsh-Healy Act, both of which regulate wages paid to workers employed on contract jobs for the government.

AS SENT to the White House, the Wiley-Gwynne measure carries three important restrictions:

1. It cuts the period during which a worker may sue for unpaid back wages down to two years.

2. It permits employers to evade the law by reliance upon any administrative ruling—whether written or oral—issued by an employee of any government agency.

3. It sets up an alibi of good faith and past practices which allows almost any employer to get out from under wage suits.

With these conditions, Murray wrote to Pres. Truman, the law is more severe on employers with a background of liberal wage customs, and less severe on chiselers who have cut corners in building their wage schedules.

The five union presidents who called for a Truman veto constitute the CIO Executive Board's committee on wage-hour problems. They were Pres. Potofksy of the clothing workers; Pres. Rieve, textile union; Pres. Wolchok, retail and wholesale union; Pres. Curran, maritime union; and Pres. Henderson, food and tobacco union.

"The effect of the bill would be to strike a telling blow against the livelihood of workers employed in the industries within the jurisdiction of our unions," the joint letter said, and would make the wage-hour act "extremely difficult if not altogether impossible to enforce."

The letter noted that none of these unions have been particularly involved in portal suits, against which the Wiley-Gwynne Act was in theory directed.

CIO To Congress:

FOREIGN TRADE KEY TO PROSPERITY

THE CIO stands flatly opposed to any hedging on the international trade program worked out by the late Pres. Roosevelt and former Secretary of State Cordell Hull, a House committee was told in blunt words by Sec.-Treas. James B. Carey at hearings last week.

At stake, the CIO official warned the House Ways and Means Committee, is the question whether the U. S. takes the road to developing trade and full employment or slumps back to the old "devil take the hindmost philosophy of high tariffs."

Carey spoke in opposition to House Resolution 52, which would prevent the President and the executive branch of the government from taking further action on adjustment of tariff duties, at least pending a Congressional study of the matter.

"Candidly, we consider this merely a back-door approach to the destruction of the Trade Agreement Act," Carey told the Congressmen. American labor has consistently supported the lowering of tariff barriers, and has no stomach for seeing such questions as the trade agreements, full employment and general living standards treated like "political footballs," he added.

The Reciprocal Trade Agreements do not threaten the living standards of American workers, as "misleading statements" of high-tariff supporters would induce the public to believe, the CIO officer told Congress.

Russ Nixon, testifying for the CIO Electrical Workers, backed up Carey's plea for expansion of the trade agreements and for creation of an effective Intl. Trade Organization as part of the United Nations.

Warning that a recession with mass unemployment is a strong and present danger, Nixon predicted that maximum trade with other countries would go far to maintain adequate jobs for U. S. workers. Exports provide jobs for one out of 10 electrical workers, and account for one-third of total output of such items as machine tools, he said.

Labor Dept., NLRB Funds Still in Doubt

THE SENATE robbed Peter to pay Paul last week as it voted an okay of the new appropriation bill for the Labor Dept., the Natl. Labor Relations Board and the Federal Security Agency.

Restored to the Labor Dept. were some $4,300,000 in operating funds, and the NLRB was granted $941,000 more than the House had approved for the two agencies in an earlier vote.

The bill (HR 2700) is now in a conference committee for compromise of differences, and will come up for a second vote in both wings of Congress within the next few weeks.

While adding a total of about 12 million dollars to the operating funds of the three important Government agencies, the Senate cut a total of 20 million dollars from the appropriation bill. Some 14 millions were sliced from the federal funds available to support the U. S. Employment Service in the states, and the Nat'l Cancer Institute, which performs valuable research work on a dread disease, lost five million.

Thus, the Senate's net cut from the funds for the three agencies was about 8 million dollars less than the amount approved by the House. The House had earlier trimmed several millions from the original budget request of Pres. Truman.

Efforts to restore the President's full request were snowed under in an avalanche of votes from the familiar GOP-Southern Democratic alliance. The vote on one such amendment was 57-23 against the President.

TAFT BILL SHOWDOWN

HERE'S the showdown vote on Senate anti-labor legislation —the roll call on the Taft Bill. The vote, on May 13, was 68-24 for passage.

DANGER SIGNAL: Supporters of anti-labor legislation rolled up six more votes than needed to over-ride a possible veto by the President.

HOPEFUL OMEN: Some Senators who voted for the Taft bill indicated that they will vote against a stiffer "compromise" conference bill, and will support a Presidential veto if such a bill is finally passed by Congress.

YOUR JOB TODAY: (1) Congratulate Senators who opposed the Taft bill and Representatives who voted against the Hartley bill in the House. (2) Write and wire your Congressmen and Senators to vote against the joint House-Senate "conference" bill or any other anti-labor measure; and to support President Truman if he vetoes anti-labor legislation. (3) Write and wire President Truman to defend free labor unions and our democratic system by vetoing all anti-labor bills.

REMEMBER: You've got to swing at least seven Senators who voted for the Taft Bill to support a Presidential veto, if the bill is to be killed. Write your letters, send your wires—NOW!

DETAILS OF THE TAFT BILL VOTE: 47 Republicans and 21 Democrats voted against labor (W) by voting for the bill. 21 Democrats and 3 Republicans supported labor (R) by voting against the bill. Two Senators were paired for and against the bill (P-W and P-R). Senator Tobey (R.N.H.) did not vote but indicated he favored the bill.

WHAT TAFT BILL WOULD DO TO YOUR UNION

What the Taft bill would do to your union is told below. These are excerpts from a report prepared by CIO General Counsel Lee Pressman.

THE Taft bill is a measure calculated to extract all strength and vigor from the labor movement of the nation, to undermine at every possible opportunity the basic principles of collective bargaining, to promote disruption and break-up of labor organizations.

The following summarizes some of the major items accomplished by the bill:

ABOLITION OF UNION SECURITY

1. The closed shop is prohibited.

2. The bill pretends to preserve other forms of union security such as union maintenance, union shop, etc. However, in order to be able to secure such a clause, a union must not only have won an election and been certified as the collective bargaining representative (as the law now provides), but must in addition request and secure from the NLRB another vote on the union's authorization to make an agreement with the employer containing a union security clause.

3. Even after the union has cleared all of the preceding hurdles, won all the necessary elections, and signed a contract, then at any time after one year has elapsed from the ballot on the union's authorization, any minority group of employees can secure a new ballot to take away the right to union security.

4. Regardless of any vote and regardless of any contract requirement, there may be no check-off for payment to the union of any items other than union dues; and even with respect to union dues there may be no check-off except on the basis of individual written assignments from each employe.

PREVENTION OF BARGAINING

The bill creates a large number of new devices by which employers can evade collective bargaining obligations, and new obstacles which the Labor Board and the employer can throw in the way of union organization.

1. While the union is engaged in organizing, the employer will now be able to go to the NLRB with the charge that the union is "restraining" or "coercing" employes in their rights of self-organization.

2. Even if a majority or all of the employes clearly indicate their desire to be represented by a union, the employes will not be permitted to have an election or even to have the Board investigate the question of representation if the particular organization in question has not satisfied all technicalities established by the Secretary of Labor with respect to the filing of the constitution and by-laws of the organization, reports on its officers and employes and their compensation and allowances, their election and appointment, the dues and fees, the total finances for the current year, and has distributed to all members copies of such financial report.

3. Even if all employes have selected a labor organization as their representative, certification may not issue and the employer is free to refuse to bargain collectively if he can discover even one officer either of the local union involved in the certification, or of the national union with which it is affiliated, as to whom he can make the contention that the individual in question has engaged in "the active and consistent promotion or support of the policies and doctrines of the Communist Party."

There is probably not a union in the country which does not have an officer who has at one time or another been accused by an employer of promoting "Communist policies." Once any officer of a national union is thus accused, all collective bargaining with all locals of that national union throughout the country must break down.

The officer in question may represent a majority group; he may represent a minority group; he may have been elected on a national basis, or by a territorial sub-division.

4. While pretending to preserve the present prohibition on company-dominated labor organizations, the bill attempts to guarantee that even such a company-dominated union will have the right to be placed on the ballot and to benefit thereby from the employer's assistance.

5. If a union should finally secure an election and be defeated, the bill makes every effort to be certain that the absence of collective bargaining will be preserved for at least a year.

6. In the event that the union clears all these hurdles and manages to get a certification, its collective bargaining rights are made as weak and insecure as possible. Following the certification the union may have been forced to go through additional delays while it got from the Board the necessary vote for authorization on union security and while it engaged in collective bargaining. Regardless of how long a time may pass before a contract is finally signed, the union's collective bargaining rights may nevertheless be ended a year after its certification.

BREAKING UP BARGAINING UNITS

While erecting the elaborate scheme described above to prevent unions from getting recognized at all and to prevent any collective bargaining from taking place, the proposed bill also takes steps to make sure that if collective bargaining does occur it will be on a carved-up basis least beneficial to the employes.

1. The new bill would require that so-called "professional" employes vote separately in all Board elections.

2. For approximately 12 years the NLRB has been engaged in the process of analyzing and determining the unit most appropriate for collective bargaining in the many industries. Without rhyme or reason the proposed bill declares that all of this body of Board experience and decision must be disregarded and may be given no consideration in the event of any efforts by isolated, splinter, craft groups in mass production industries to separate themselves off from the main unit of the employes.

BARGAINING RESTRICTED

Even if a union is able to secure certification, and recognition, and collective bargaining becomes possible, the bill sets up certain matters on which the parties are prohibited from reaching agreement.

1. If the employer and the union representing the employes wish to agree on a union security clause, they are prohibited and restricted.

2. If the employer and the union representing a majority of his employes wish to agree on a provision whereby the employer gives to his employes the convenience of the check-off as a means of payment of dues, they are forbidden to arrive at such an agreement except by getting separate assignments from each of the thousands of employes who may be involved.

3. If the employer and the union representing the majority of his employes wish to reach an agreement whereby a welfare fund will be established, to be financed by the employer but to be administered by the union, the proposed bill would prohibit such an agreement.

INTERFERENCE WITH RIGHT TO STRIKE

1. The bill aims very direct blows at the right of workers to strike in various instances. It does this by setting aside the Norris-LaGuardia Act to permit the issuance of court injunctions. It empowers the government even more directly acting through the NLRB to issue restraining orders equivalent to anti-labor injunctions. The right to strike is attacked by making even peaceful strike activity the subject of damage suits by employers. The attack on the right to strike is contained in an open and blunt prohibition of certain strikes. In other instances there is a general restriction on union activity which can and may be expected to be interpreted to include a prohibition on strike action.

The following are a few examples:

1. Where the Attorney General decides that a strike affects "substantially an entire industry" and may "imperil the national health or safety" he can appoint a board of inquiry and thereafter can disregard the Norris-LaGuardia Act and apply to the courts for a strike-breaking injunction. Such an injunction may remain in operation for at least 75 days.

After 60 days, and before a strike may take place, the NLRB is required to take a secret ballot of the employes of each employer to vote on whether they will accept the last offer made by the employer.

2. In any strike the strikers who have been replaced would under the bill be denied the right to vote in NLRB elections. If the employer can replace enough of the strikers, he or the strike-breakers would then be able to call for a vote and cancel the union's collective bargaining rights.

3. Where workers refuse to handle scab products or products made under sweatshop conditions or where workers refuse to work for an employer who is helping another employer to break a strike, such activity is made an "unfair labor practice" for which the Board may issue a restraining order. In addition, even before hearings to decide whether to issue an order, the Board may apply to the Federal courts for an injunction. Furthermore, the union involved may be sued by the employer for damages.

4. It is made an "unfair labor practice" for a union to "refuse to bargain." It is also made an unfair labor practice for a union to "restrain or coerce" employes in connection with the union membership. These are words which have a very definite meaning in themselves and as spelled out in decisions during the past ten years as applied to employers.

It is an unfair labor practice, for example, for an employer to offer higher wages if his employes will stay out of the union. Is it now to be an unfair labor practice for a union to promise a drive for wage increases if the workers join the union?

GROUPS EXCLUDED FROM BARGAINING

While obstructing collective bargaining and making collective bargaining rights extremely difficult to obtain for all employes, the bill goes further as to certain groups and makes it impossible for them ever to engage in collective bargaining with their employers.

1. Supervisors are denied any right to certification for collective bargaining and any protection against unfair labor practices.

2. Employes "in agriculture" are excluded from any right to certification or from any protection against employer unfair labor practices.

3. Employes of non-profit hospitals are denied collective bargaining rights and protection against unfair labor practices.

RED TAPE AND COURT PROCEEDINGS

1. Violation of collective bargaining contracts is made an unfair labor practice.

2. Suits under all collective bargaining contracts may be brought in the Federal courts regardless of the normal jurisdictional requirements that would apply to any attempt to sue in the Federal courts under any other types of contracts. This provision, absolutely unnecessary for any legitimate reason since there is a perfect right to sue under these contracts in the state courts, is intended to and will have the effect of encouraging employers to throw collective bargaining enforcement into the red tape of court litigation.

OBSTRUCTION OF NLRB OPERATION

1. The Board membership is packed and made unwieldy and cumbersome by raising the number of members from 3 to 7.

2. At the same time the Board is forbidden to retain its present staff of "review attorneys" who analyze voluminous records for the Board.

3. The Board is forbidden to hire economic analysts whose services are needed to study company records and statistical data in order to help analyze charges of discriminatory practices, or in order to help compute back-pay obligations.

4. The Board is forbidden to take action on any charges which are filed more than six months after the unfair labor practice occurred. Thus if an employer sets up a company union or otherwise interferes with the self-organization of his employes and his violations do not come to the attention of a bona fide labor organization or his employes are not advised of their rights for six months, the company union and the employer are free from any effort to undo the illegal act.

RAIDS ON UNION TREASURIES

Under the guise of permitting suits against labor organizations (an action for which no legislation is needed since such suits may be brought in state courts), the bill permits employers to sue unions in Federal courts, not only in the district where the union has its principle office but in any district in which it has any "officers or agents."

Thus a national union may be harassed by lawsuits brought against it in any part of the country where it may have a local union. Such suits may be brought not only for alleged violations of contract, but even for any damages resulting to the employer from a perfectly peaceful and otherwise lawful strike resulting from a refusal of employes to work on scab products, products manufactured under sub-standard conditions, etc.

CIO To People

TAFT BILL MUST BE BEATEN!

Other Board Stories On Page 13

FACED with the prospect of action on anti-labor legislation in the next two or three weeks, the CIO Executive Board prepared last week to encourage an all-out struggle on the part of the American people against the vicious Taft-Hartley bills.

Action by the Board was slated for May 17, after the CIO NEWS had gone to press, but it was certain that the CIO would issue a sharply-worded statement condemning the legislation and asking for its defeat or veto.

A joint conference committee of the Senate and House has already started to examine the two versions of the bill, with an eye to producing a compromise which its sponsors hope will attract sufficient votes to overcome a possible Presidential veto.

Meanwhile, CIO Pres. Murray, in a speach broadcast May 16 over the NBC network, charged that the two bills have "struck a blow at the foundation of our confidence . . . in an expanding American way of life." (See Page 5).

Congress, he said, "has served notice on the American people that we must endure a man-made crisis, perhaps deeper and more threatening to our institutions than anything we encountered during the Great Depression."

Reiterating earlier charges that the bills set the nation "upon the road to repression and the threat of fascism," the CIO president predicted that national conflict will result "as the average American attempts to throw off the shackles of monopoly control which this bill will fasten first upon labor and then upon every other group of consumers."

Murray urged the public to let Congress and the President "hear your united protest against these proposals to injure labor and the public welfare."

The Senate and House acted under the pressure of "a national propaganda program organized under the leadership of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers," he charged, "but the propaganda for these bills does not conform to the facts."

MEANWHILE, Washington was in the midst of a wave of speculation over future action on the bill. The joint Senate-House conference committee of 10 members held its first meeting late last week.

Indications grew that the House representatives on the joint committee were prepared to compromise many of the points in the Hartley bill in order to get a bill which they thought the President might sign more readily.

After the committee's first meeting, Hartley predicted the House group would yield on two issues contained in the House bill but absent from the Taft proposal: the ban on industry-wide bargaining and the right of employers to get injunctions against strikers in cases of jurisdictional strikes or secondary boycotts.

Hartley's "soft attitude" was explained in a statement to reporters that he would make concessions "in order to get an ultimate bill that would have the votes to pass the Senate and override a Presidential veto, if there is one."

Of the Senate conferees, Ives, (R. N. Y.), Ellender (D. La.), and Murray (D. Mont.) have opposed such a move to smash industry-wide bargaining and national unions, while Taft and Ball worked hard though unsuccessfully to get such a provision in the Senate bill.

The House conference group consists of Hartley, Landis (R. Ind.), Hoffman (R. Mich.) and Barden (D. N. C.)—all of whom voted for the Hartley bill—as well as Lesinski (D. Mich.), who voted against it.

If the House group compromises quickly and permits a bill substantially like the Taft proposals to go to the White House, Washington observers feel that it will require great popular pressure to get a veto and a sufficient number of votes in the Senate to uphold such a veto.

THE vote on the Taft bill found only three Republicans casting votes against adoption—Langer (N. D.), Malone (Nev.) and Morse (Ore.). The Democrats split evenly, 21-21, with most of the votes for the Taft bill coming from the southern polltax group.

An effort by a group of liberal Democratic Senators to push through a much milder bill than the all-embracing Taft proposals was defeated overwhelmingly, 73-19.

In votes during the previous week the Senate rejected the ban on industry-wide bargaining by a 43-44 vote, but approved amendments to outlaw union-controlled health and welfare funds, to permit damage suits against unions in cases involving secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes, to bar "coercion" or "restraint" in union organizing campaigns, and to ban such Wagner Act rights as are left to labor to unions with Communists or former Communists in any positions of leadership.

As a result the Taft bill, billed widely in the press as a "moderate" measure, had taken on most of the Hartley bill features, and become far more tough to labor than the Case bill approved by the Senate last year.

Schacht, Hitler Aide, Convicted

Justice caught up with one of Hitler's biggest industrial backers this week.

Financial wizzard Hjalmar Schacht was acquitted last October when tried as a major war criminal by the Intl. Military Tribunal. But this week a German de-Nazification court found him guilty of similar charges.

Schacht was sentenced to eight years in prison—at hard labor, if he is physically able. He said he will appeal the sentence.

All Schacht's property except 10,000 marks was confiscated. He was deprived of his civil rights. He must pay trial costs, estimated at 250,000 marks.

PUBLIC ENEMY

This is Sen. R. A. Taft (R. O.). The Bill that he fathered is aimed to crush your union, and thus help your boss set lower pay scales. The Taft Bill threatens your right to join with your fellow workers in demanding a better deal from your boss. If you don't want the Taft Bill to become law, sit down right now and write Pres. Truman, urging him to veto it. Write your two Senators too, asking them to uphold the veto. Do it now!

'HARSH, PUNITIVE, UNFAIR,' SAY LIBERAL SENATORS

THIS is just a brief sampling of some of the most potent remarks, made by a few leading Senators, against the Taft Bill.

SEN. ROBERT WAGNER (D. N. Y.): "This bill (the Taft proposal) is an unfair bill. It singles out workers and their unions for harsh and punitive treatment, at the very time when the wrongs which need to be corrected are elsewhere in our economy.

"It is based upon the idea that unions have acquired too much monopolistic power. But the truth is that business monopoly — the concentration of economic power in finance and industry—is now, even more than before, the real evil.

"Today, the whole country recognizes that workers, even with the help of their unions, cannot keep pace with the increasing cost of living caused by excessive prices and exorbitant profits. It is not labor but the opponents of labor whose greed is endangering our prosperity and threatening a depression. It is not labor, but the opponents of labor, who have too much power.

"The present Congress is the first one elected since the close of World War II. It has been confronted with an opportunity unique in our history, to help build a stronger and better America—to expand social legislation, to provide better housing for the people, to maintain economic stability, and to protect and advance the welfare and contentment of the average American family.

"But the record of the present Congress on all these fronts is as barren as the sands of the Sahara. The present Congress has not only stood still; it has moved steadily backward. New pages in this record of reaction are being written every day."

SEN. ALBEN BARKLEY (D. Ky.): "The closed shop was in existence long before I ever ran for office, in the town where I live, in the railroad shops, among the carpenters and joiners and the plumbers and painters.

"By agreement between employes and employers, they had the closed shop; and it was advantageous to the employers because it gave stability to employment and it enabled them to deal with an organization in an official way.

"So far as I can recall, none of the great strikes that have disrupted business and brought about shortages or stoppages of work has been produced by the fact that there was a closed shop in any community or throughout the U. S. in any particular industry."

SEN. GLEN TAYLOR (D. Ida.): "This bill reminds me of one of the more popular ditties that used to delight us back in the prewar thirties.

"As I recall it, the refrain went something like this: 'Oh, the music goes round and round—round and round—and it comes out here'.

"Over 12,000 words and 59 pages of tricky, legalistic clauses go round and round — and come out with no answer to the vital problems facing our country today in regard to how to maintain industrial peace, full production and employment under a democratic, free-enterprise system."

Citizens Groups Urge Veto

THIRTY citizens groups, with a membership running well into the millions, are flatly on record against the Taft-Hartley bills and other anti-labor legislation.

Meeting at the call of three liberal Senators, spokesmen for the groups said that the bills would affect not only labor but also the economic welfare and civil rights of the American people. Sponsors of the meeting were three Senators who voted against the Taft bill: Pepper (D. Fla.), Elbert Thomas (D. Utah) and Magnuson (D. Wash.).

Among the 30 organizations represented were the Natl. Farmers Union, the United Council of Church Women, the Natl. Negro Congress, the Natl. Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, the American Friends Service Committee, the American Slav Congress, the American Veterans Committee, Progressive Citizens of America, Amvets, Natl. Religion & Labor Foundation, the Congress of American Women, the League of Women Shoppers, Natl. Consumers League and a large group of religious organizations.

TO HELP HIT BACK!

A WILFUL majority of the present Congress have done a shameful job on labor.

They have passed a bill to undermine the wage-hour act and other bills to deprive working people of most of their union and collective bargaining rights.

In passing the legislation demanded by the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers, they have acted as if they had a mandate from big business, not from the people. And big business is acting on that same assumption.

The NAM is raising a $3,000,000 slush fund "to carry industry's message to the American people." This is only a drop, however, in the overflowing bucket of big business advertising funds, press and radio control, political contributions and other resources for maintaining and increasing its political influence.

A move is even under foot in Congress to lift the lid on the political contributions of the rich, while clamping the lid still tighter on union political contributions.

Labor must hit back where it can hurt, on the political field. The CIO's chosen instrument for this purpose is its Political Action Committee, which is now launching a fund-raising campaign.

Working people cannot make the huge political contributions of rich reactionaries. They cannot hope to match the slush funds of big business. But they do have numbers and votes on their side, if they can mobilize their political power, as PAC is trying to do.

PAC must have funds to do this job. It cannot depend on a few big contributions. It must have many small contributions. That's why it's asking a dollar from each worker.

Give a dollar to PAC, to help hit back.

IT'S THE SAME POISON

NOW that the Senate and House anti-labor bills are under consideration by a Conference Committee representing both Houses, it is important to warn against any illusions as to the "milder" character of one bill as against the other.

The trick of the anti-labor forces is to make it appear they are making concessions to labor and public opinion, if the Committee reports out a bill more along the lines of the Senate Taft bill than along those of the House Hartley bill.

Actually the Taft bill represents about the maximum possible damage labor's enemies feel they can inflict. It is designed to accomplish exactly the same purposes as the Hartley bill. It is simply more carefully drafted and more subtly presented.

The choice for labor between the slick poison of the Taft bill and the brutal violence of the Hartley bill is merely a choice between different methods of being murdered.

Don't let's be fooled therefore by the publicity with which labor's enemies will seek to dress up the bill finally reported by the Conference Committee.

Given the character of the two bills which the Conference Committee is appointed to reconcile, there is no hope that it will report out any but vicious anti-union legislation.

Urge your Senators and Representatives to vote against the bill reported by the Committee, and to vote to uphold a veto. And don't delay in flooding President Truman with requests to veto any anti-labor legislation passed by Congress, regardless of the details of its final formulation.

LOOKING AHEAD

BY LEN DE CAUX

LET'S NOT be nasty to the NAM, Columnist Peter Edson advises us. Likewise, he says, the NAM should not be horrid to the CIO with which we certainly agree.

So, for the sake of Pete's stomach, which is upset by the way the two organizations "jaw at each other" in their respective publications, we'll try to be nice and turn the other cheek.

IN OUR Wall Street Journal is an advertisement placed by the manufacturers' association, pointing "the road to freedom for the American worker."

Swell. The American worker wants to be free. The CIO wants him to be free. And so does the NAM, it says.

That ought to soothe the Edson ulcer.

THE NAM ad is for the worker's "Bill of Rights," his "right to get a job," to select his own representatives," to "speak his own mind," etc.

Wonderful. We turn our unslapped cheek to the NAM and at once feel a tender kiss from its rosebud lips.

Does the NAM now favor labor's bill of rights, the Wagner Act, which grants such rights as it mentions?

And the right to a job! What names the NAM once called us, when we said the unemployed had that right, during the last depression!

BUT BEFORE we sing "the NAM's our leader" and march down the road to freedom behind the crusading corporations, perhaps we should read the less conspicuous parts of the ad.

Aw shucks! The NAM doesn't mean the Wagner Act after all, but an un-named bill that passed the House by 308 to 107.

The only bill recently passed by that vote is the Hartley bill, which incidentally was drafted by NAM lawyers. And this would take away nearly all the rights granted workers by the Wagner Act.

It would restore open-shop conditions, break up unions, restrict the right to strike, revive the anti-labor injunction, and make it hard for workers to select any but representatives of the employer's choosing.

But—alas for our efforts to be kind to the NAM and Edson's digestive processes!—the CIO membership doesn't like such legislation; and it expects its publications to say so, even if it hurts the NAM's feelings.

ONE CRACK which Edson makes should not sit too well with the Scripps-Howard papers in which his column appears.

"Good newspapers," he says, "today know they have to give both sides."

The Scripps-Howard and most other daily papers have been campaigning for months for what the CIO and all labor consider anti-union legislation.

We hadn't noticed that they were giving both sides of this question.

Are we to conclude that none of these are "good newspapers"?

Or, perchance, do they consider that a few occasional inches of news space to labor statements, as against acres of anti-labor editorials, cartoons, columns, headline-display, feature articles etc., is giving "both sides?"

COMPETENT analyses of the daily press show that it is about 90% opposed to nearly everything labor advocates, and for nearly everything labor is against.

This is not altogether surprising in view of the fact that the big-time press is a big-business operation, a big employer itself, and chiefly supported by the advertising of employing interests.

If labor had the hundreds of millions of dollars necessary to launch nationwide chains of daily papers of its own, it would assuredly give "both sides" in their news columns to a much greater extent than is done by the existing employers' press.

But all the press labor has, as things stand, is comparatively small weekly and monthly publications, in whose limited space it is hard enough to give adequate expression to labor's side.

For the other side, readers do not have far to look. It is daily dinned into their eyes and ears through an overwhelming chorus of anti-labor propaganda in newspapers, magazines and over the air.

'A MONSTROUS BILL'

President Murray, in Nationwide Broadcast, Warns People Must Rally to Demand Veto of Taft Bill

By PHILIP MURRAY
Excerpts From NBC Talk, May 16.

FOR the last 15 years, or ever since the first election of Franklin D. Roosevelt, we Americans have been able to look forward with confidence to an expanding American way of life.

But last month a large majority in the U. S. House of Representatives struck a blow at the foundation of our confidence, by passing the Hartley bill; and last Tuesday a large majority in the U. S. Senate repeated that blow by passing the Taft bill. By their action they served notice on the American people that we must endure a man-made crisis, perhaps deeper and more threatening to our institutions than anything we encountered during the Great Depression.

I do not use words lightly, as I think you will agree in the course of my remarks. Today the Taft and Hartley bills passed by the House and Senate are under study by a joint Congressional conference.

In a few days the resulting Taft-Hartley bill will rest on the desk of President Truman. Only his refusal to sign such a monstrous bill stands between the American people and the most serious difficulties for all of us. He will need the immediate rallying of support from millions of Americans outside and inside the ranks of labor to enable him to veto the bill and to secure a favorable vote upholding his veto.

Contributions of CIO members and leadership to victory over fascism were signally honored last week as Sec. of War Robert Patterson (left) presented to Pres. Philip Murray the Medal for Merit, highest government decoration awarded to civilians. An impressive ceremony at War Dept. headquarters in Washington hailed Murray's "exceptional foresight, energy and leadership." Patterson said Murray was a "constant and ardent advocate of the complete dedication of American labor to the war effort." The citation praised Murray's "exceptionally meritorious conduct in the performance of outstanding services" both in his capacity as head of CIO and as a member of many government boards and agencies. "Mr. Murray played a significant part in the great achievement of American industry and labor in the production of the goods and weapons without which victory would have been impossible."

WHAT is the relation of the Taft-Hartley bills to the coming recession, which even leading financial journals predict may bring seven million unemployed by Christmas? Will the bill put more money in your purse on Saturday night? Will it protect your job during the coming 12 months? Will it insure that you are paid a minimum wage, or decent prices for your crop? Will it provide you with adequate unemployment insurance if you lose your job, or higher sales for your shop?

No. On the contrary, the Taft-Hartley bill is an open invitation to every chiseling employer to start wage cutting.

Now, how in the name of common sense can a bill which threatens the bargaining power and wage-earning capacity of all American workers help solve a threatened recession or depression?

When you ask that question of the average Senator or Representative who voted for the Taft or Hartley bills, he answers you with a speech. That speech begins like this: "Last November the people of this country gave us a mandate to cure the abuses of labor. We did it by these bills." Then most Senators and Representatives add, "Of course, I didn't want to vote for anything as bad as these bills. But I had no choice. It was either this or nothing. And after all, the pendulum has swung too far in favor of labor."

Many of these same Congressmen said the same thing last June—that they had no alternative but to vote to kill price control and OPA. They covered their deeds with promises that prices would soon go down. We have learned to our bitter sorrow how wrong were those predictions about prices. Every American, in labor unions and out of them, will find that the arguments advanced in support of the Taft and Hartley bills are just as wrong.

THIS Congress is acting under the strongest impetus of a national propaganda campaign organized by the giant corporations under the leadership of the Natl. Assn. of Manufacturers. But the propaganda for these bills does not conform to the facts. Nor is this all. These corporations under the labor laws now on the statute books—the Wagner and Norris-LaGuardia Acts—have nevertheless found it to their advantage to negotiate in the last month or two moderate wage increases with workers in most of the leading sectors of industry.

Had the Taft and Hartley bills been in effect, such agreements could not have been reached!

The hard core of fact about our national economic problem is this: Prosperity depends upon buying power, and buying power depends upon the bargaining power of workers. Today we must depend upon continuous maintenance of high buying power among industrial workers and the general public. And in an age of giant corporations and staggering concentration of wealth in the hands of a few great companies in each industry, we can maintain proper income levels only by agreement between equals.

To meet this situation industrial unions have arisen during the last 15 years in all major industries. In every community of any size in this country today there goes on a continuous, orderly process of industrial democracy by which management and labor are organized peacefully to adjust differences. This is undramatic and it rarely merits the headlines or the excited words of news commentators—but it is the real stuff of industrial relations.

THE Taft and Hartley bills threaten to tear up all the collective bargaining contracts throughout the country under which this industrial democracy is practiced.

They do not merely destroy the rights and protection won by labor during the past 50 years. No, they deliberately and carefully turn the very laws adopted for the protection of working men and women into legislation aimed squarely at destroying unions. That is true of the Taft bill passed by the Senate and the Hartley bill passed by the House.

There has been an effort in the public prints to describe the Taft proposals as mild, as moderate, but the fact remains that this so-called moderate bill goes far beyond the Case bill of 1946 or any other measure acted on by Congress in the past several decades in its heavy restrictions on labor.

It should be remembered that the stern proposals have been smuggled into the bills under cover of criticism of secondary boycotts and jurisdictional strikes—a form of dispute that was involved in less than two percent of the man-days lost by strikes in 1946.

Both the Taft and Hartley bills put the government's power and prestige squarely behind big employers, to help them resist the fair demands of their employes. At the same time, the bills regiment and hog-tie the entire union movement. This is no accident. The sponsors of these bills seek control, operation and regulation of unions by government in the interest of private employers.

The Taft bill, like the Hartley bill, places outside the law many legitimate subjects on which employers and unions should negotiate and reach agreement. They encourage and assist the maneuvers of those groups which seek to defeat collective representation of workers and seek to compel workers to return to the day they bargained as isolated individuals, helpless in the face of strong corporate management.

Both bills foster the wasting of union treasuries on expensive law suits which are to be substituted for honest bargaining. They invite management to use arbitrary injunctions instead of common sense and fair play in the settlement of disputes. They increase the protection given to employers on charges of unfair labor practices and create for the first time a long list of so-called unfair labor practices by unions to form the basis for lawsuits and injunctions.

Indeed, the Taft and Hartley bills have seized upon every possible suggestion for limiting free collective bargaining between labor and management.

IT is my solemn judgment that these bills represent the most dangerous attack on the rights of American workers which any Congress has ever seriously considered.

If they become law, the entire fabric of our democratic institutions will be threatened, and we will be set upon the road to repression and the threat of fascism.

We will move down that road economically, politically, and socially. The Taft-Hartley bills invite depression, lower wages and mass unemployment. And they provide no constructive answer to our mighty problems.

Further, it is safe to predict that these economic disorders are bound to generate political conflict, as the average American attempts to throw off the shackles of monopoly control which this bill will fasten first upon labor, and then upon every other group of consumers. This in turn is bound to produce social conflicts of the most far-reaching kind.

The recent record shows that if the giant corporations are required to live up to the Wagner Act and the Norris-LaGuardia Act now on the statute books, peaceful collective bargaining can lead to the advance of democracy and an expanding American economy. Defeat of the Taft-Hartley bill can keep the country on this path to continuing improvements in our way of life.

This is the people's problem. Speaking in behalf of the Congress of Industrial Organizations and its six million members, I hope that you will let your Senators, your Representatives and your President hear your united protest against these proposals to injure labor and the public welfare.

U. S. Issues

GUARANTEED PAY REPORT

A THRILLING view of the future, in which American industrial workers could receive a guaranteed wage for their year's work, is contained in a fact-filled, statistics-laden volume just off the press at the big U. S. Government Printing Office in Washington, D. C.

Based on a year or more of study by a highly competent staff of experts, the volume points to three important facts of key value to every union member:

- A guaranteed wage, regardless of minor ups and downs in the economic cycle, is possible and feasible.
- Both workers and employers—in fact, the entire nation—will benefit from a guaranteed wage system.
- Guaranteed wages will help develop security in the economic machine of this country, and will be a force for peace and better understanding in the relations between management and labor.

The book is called "Guaranteed Wages." It was prepared by a staff headed by Murray Latimer, one-time chief of the Railroad Retirement Board, and in government and economic circles it is referred to as the "Latimer Report."

Copies of the volume can be obtained from the Superintendent of Documents, Washington 25, D. C., for $2. The report itself was forwarded to the White House by the Advisory Board of the Office of War Mobilization and Reconversion.

Valuable To Nation

"THE STUDY shows clearly that plans guaranteeing wages or employment, when suitably adapted to the needs and conditions of the industry or establishment, are valuable to the entire nation and afford a wholesome and desirable means for improving both worker and employer security," the Board said in sending the study to President Truman. Both CIO President Murray and AFL President Green are members of the OWMR Board.

Currently, the study has been referred by the White House to the Council of Economic Advisers—the government's top economic group—and to the Commerce and Labor Department for further study and comment.

After analyzing the numerous problems that are involved in guaranteeing wages, the study clearly showed many avenues open for sharing the cost of unemployment among the entire nation. It noted that when a plant shuts down, certain costs continue—salary of executives and administrative staffs, rent and overhead. The workers get stuck most severely by lay-offs.

As the study noted, the chief costs of seasonal fluctuations, general business declines, or mismanagement are borne by workers. The purpose of guaranteed wages is greater security for the workers, to assure them jobs and pay over stated periods of time, permitting them to work out household budgets, plan for the education of their children, and undertake purchases of homes and other major items.

How do we reach that goal?

Through collective bargaining, the Latimer Report recommends, rather than by legislation. But it quickly notes that the wage and hour law, taxes, government spending policies and particularly unemployment compensation programs must be geared closely to the guaranteed wage plans of industry and labor.

Successful Experience

FROM a study of 196 plans in effect early in 1946 and covering about 60,000 workers, the Latimer group concludes that "the experience with guaranteed-wage plans has been highly successful in many establishments."

Over forty plants were studied to gauge the probable gross costs of guaranteeing wages under employment conditions like those in 1937-1941. It was found possible to give a worthwhile guarantee to all permanent workers and yet to keep the cost below percent of payrolls per year, even for plants with greatest unemployment.

Some of the suggestions were limiting annual payments to 10 percent of the payroll and cutting the guaranteed working time to 44 weeks a year. In general the limitations proposed "will produce a minimum income of about 75 percent of full-time and an average income of 90 percent, taking unemployment insurance at present levels."

Guaranteed wages may well prove the stimulant that will help get rid of some of our industrial headaches, says the Latimer Report. If it costs a company money to pay for wages of idle men, management may look harder for work to keep them busy and productive. That in itself helps cut seasonal or temporary loss of jobs.

On the other side of the fence, the knowledge that wages—or some part of them—are guaranteed "will aid in removing the element of fear from labor-management relations" and may lead to the lifting of barriers in full production.

BLOW AT LIBERTY

U. S. Supreme Court OK's Search Of Private Homes Without Warrants

By Lee Pressman, CIO General Counsel

A VITAL American civil right received a serious blow last week.

The U. S. Supreme Court, in a 5-4 decision, held that FBI agents were privileged to search the home of a man they were arresting even though they did not have a search warrant. The decision was written by Chief Justice Vinson.

Since America's struggle for independence, a man's home has been his castle. The Fourth Amendment to the U. S. Constitution and the constitutions of all the states contain guarantees against unreasonable searches and seizures.

The mass invasions of private homes by polilitcal police in Fascist countries in recent years have emphasized by contrast the importance of our democratic guarantees.

In the case decided by the Court, the man involved was being arrested on suspicion of mail fraud.

Five FBI agents spent five hours searching his four-room apartment, supposedly looking for certain stolen checks. After lifting the carpets, stripping the bed-linen, turning over the mattresses, combing the contents of the linen closet and even looking into his shoes, they discovered a sealed envelope in a bedroom bureau containing a number of Selective Service cards illegally in his possession.

On the basis of evidence uncovered by this wholesale search of his home without a warrant, he was convicted for illegal possession of these cards. This was not the crime for which he had been arrested originally.

THE dissenting Justices pointed out that this went far beyond the right of the officers to search a man when arresting him.

Justice Frankfurter, who has almost never been on the liberal side in decisions of the Court, said:

"How can there be freedom of thought or freedom of speech or freedom of religion if the police can, without warrant, search your house and mine from garret to cellar merely because they are executing a warrant of arrest?

"How can men feel free if all their papers may be searched, as an incident to the arrest of someone in the house, on the chance that something may turn up, or rather be turned up? Yesterday the justifying document was an illicit ration book, tomorrow it may be some suspect piece of literature."

Justice Murphy said:

"It is likely that the full impact of today's decision will not be apparent immediately. . . . The principle established by the Court today can be used as easily by some future government determined to suppress political opposition under the guise of sedition . . .

"History is not without examples of the outlawry of certain political, religious and economic beliefs and the relentless prosecution of those who dare to entertain such beliefs. And history has a way of repeating itself.

"It therefore takes no stretch of the imagination to picture law enforcement officers arresting those accused of believing, writing or speaking that which is proscribed, accompanied by a thorough ransacking of their homes as an 'incident' to the arrest in an effort to uncover 'anything' of a seditious nature."

THE fears expressed in the dissenting opinion regarding political persecution are not unjustified.

The U. S. Supreme Court, in 1942, for example, had before it a case involving the prosecution of strikers who were engaged in a bitter strike against anti-union employers. In that case the FBI, in conjunction with certain local officials, following the destruction of government property in the course of the strike, arrested a group of the strike leaders, held them incommunicado for several days, and finally obtained alleged confessions which the men subsequently, in open court, completely repudiated.

This action of the FBI officials was acknowledged to be in complete violation of the law. The Court described the action of the FBI officials as follows:

"Unaided by relatives, friends, or counsel, the men were unlawfully held, some for days, and subjected to long questioning in the hostile atmosphere of the small company-dominated mining town . . . There was a working arrangement between the federal officers and the sheriff of Polk County which made possible the abuses revealed by this record . . ."

IT is to police officers with such standards that the majority of the Supreme Court has authorized unlimited searches and seizures of private homes without any warrant.

Mr. Justice Frankfurter took specific occasion to recall the happenings after the first World War when, with respect to the illegal practices of the U. S. Dept. of Justice, Chief Justice Hughes (then a private attorney) said:

"We cannot afford to ignore the indications that, perhaps to an extent unparalleled in our history, the essentials of liberty are being disregarded. Very recently information has been laid by responsible citizens at the bar of public opinion of violations of personal rights which savor of the worst practices of tyranny."

In recent years the Supreme Court has proven itself an important protector of civil rights. The Court's protection of the principles of the Constitution is needed more today than ever in our history.

It is certainly to be hoped that this decision does not indicate that even this vital institution is feeling the pressures of the attack on those principles which is being carried on so vigorously today on so many fronts.

This decision of the Supreme Court is a dangerous one because it uses the ax on a right which is part of our most cherished traditions of personal liberty. It substitutes for an atmosphere of freedom a destructive atmosphere of repression and fear which menaces all civil rights.

4 CITY VOTE VICTORIES!

CIO POLITICAL Action Committee Director Jack Kroll this week hailed results of municipal election contests in New Jersey, Minnesota and California as "proof of the American people's angry opposition to the labor legislation recently passed in Congress." Labor-supported candidates won in Minneapolis, Oakland and Hoboken and Passaic.

Kroll said that "a mandate has been given to Congress, a mandate which says 'cease your attempts to injure the American labor movement and get on with the job of solving the real issues of the day, the question of prices and housing.' The American people are tired of the slanderous attacks heard in the Halls of Congress against American workingmen and women. The election results show it."

Kroll pointed specifically to the election victory of the Good Government ticket led by Assemblyman John Grogan—a vice president of the CIO Union of Marine and Shipbuilding Workers—in the Hoboken race. He emphasized that this victory was scored despite a bitter labor-baiting campaign.

The Good Government fusion slate routed Mayor Bernard J. McFeely after a 22-year reign. Grogan was the target of attacks by the McFeely forces, whose propaganda warned that a victory for the Good Government ticket would mean control of the city by "labor and alien" forces. Grogan led his ticket and will probably succeed McFeely as mayor.

In Passaic, three of the four PAC-endorsed candidates, Michael Andrue, Julius J. Cinamon and Paul C. DeMuro, won handily in city elections. All candidates took a stand opposing the labor legislation in Congress.

IN MINNEAPOLIS, PAC forces worked successfully for the re-election of Mayor Hubert Humphrey to a second term in the primary election. Ward and precinct workers were active in Humphrey's behalf. This labor acticity was credited for the nomination of Robert Wishart, head of the Minneapolis CIO Council, to the Board of Aldermen.

Repeating its stunning upset of the Knowland machine in the April primaries, a labor-endorsed slate elected four of its five candidates in Oakland. This election has created especial interest because Oakland is the center of power for U. S. Senator William Knowland, who is assistant publisher of the Oakland Tribune. A joint CIO-AFL unity committee was influential in the victory, arousing popular sentiment against the incumbents. Vernon Lantz, a member of the CIO Chemical Workers, defeated Mayor Herbert L. Beach.

"AT A TIME when organized labor is being threatened by such repressive measures as the Taft and Hartley bills in Congress and other crippling bills in the state legislatures," Kroll said, "the election of candidates supported by labor, candidates who oppose the current anti-labor hysteria, demonstrates the falseness of the current political cry 'curb labor.'

"These election returns show clearly that the voters do not want legislation outlawing the legitimate activities of American unions. It does indicate that the people are anxious and willing to support candidates whose program and record reveal their interest in helping solve the great problems we face today.

"The results show, too, that there is a growing awareness on the part of industrial workers that the drive against labor can only be met through political action."

PAC Director Jack Kroll (under picture of the late Sidney Hillman) tells a Washington, D. C., meeting of CIO editors about the PAC '47 dollar drive. See story below.

SEE MISSOURI BAN ON UTILITY STRIKES

MISSOURI this week was slated to join the ranks of states passing anti-labor laws, and in Illinois Republicans at the last minute introduced legislation which would outlaw the closed shop.

The Missouri Senate passed 20-11 the King-Thompson bill banning strikes in public utilities. It goes now to Gov. Phil Donnelly (D.) for approval. Federated Press reported that he is certain to sign the bill since he recommended it at the start of the session.

The measure provides for compulsory arbitration, permits the governor to seize a utility if a strike is threatened, subjects the union to a $10,000 fine for each day of a stoppage in violation of the law, and imposes $1,000 fines on union officers who call such a strike.

CIO LEADERS CALL PAC DOLLAR DRIVE 'MUST' FOR '48 CAMPAIGN

CIO's political action machinery must be perfected to retaliate against anti-labor legislators in 1948, three major CIO leaders warned this week as the CIO Political Action Committee put the finishing touches on preparations for its big 1947 $1 voluntary contribution campaign. The drive gets underway June 15.

Statements from CIO Vice-Pres. Allan S. Haywood, John Brophy, head of the Council's Dept., and Nathan Cowan, CIO Legislative Committee director, said that a successful PAC dollar drive is the key success in 1948.

Meanwhile, labor editors from all parts of the nation met with the PAC Committee in Washington to plan means of stimulating the campaign through their news colums.
